Per RICHARDSON, J.—When possession is not given and the price is not paid till registration, the right of pre-emption arises upon registration and not before.

The mere fact that previous to the sale, the pre-emptor had refused to buy the property cannot in the absence of proof of the terms and circumstances of the offer made to him bar his right to pre-empt when the property is later on sold to a stranger.

CARNDUFF, J.—This would be so because the right of pre-emption under the Mahomedan Law does not arise out of an obligation on the part of an intending vendor to sell preferentially to the obligor if he offers as good conditions as any intending vendee, but because the obligation is attached to a particular status which binds the purchaser from the person obliged to hand over the subject-matter to the other party to the obligation on receiving the price paid by him for it.

KOOLDEEP SINGH v. RAMDEEN SINGH (2), MUSSTT. LADAN v. BHYRO RAM (4) not followed.

GOOR DOYAL v. TEENARAIN (3), MUSSTT. LADAN v. BHYRO RAM (4), SOONDER KOOER v. RAGHUBOR DYAL (5) and JEHANGEER BUKSH v. BHIKARI LALL (6) referred to.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—In the absence of any thing shewing that the pre-emptor had an opportunity to purchase the property at the price offered by the stranger or that he had sanctioned the sale to the vendee at that price, the mere fact that subsequently he himself was negotiating to purchase at a higher price did not constitute waiver.

JALU LAL v. JANKI KOER (10) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 11th of April 1911 against a decree of Babu Satya Charan Ganguli, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Faridpur, dated the 31st of January 1911, modifying a decree of Babu Annoda Kumar Sen, Munsif of that place, dated the 25th of September 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Baidya Nath Dutt (with Babu

(2) 24 W. R. 198 (1875).
(3) 2 W. R. 215 (1865).
(4) 8 W. R. 255 (1867).
(5) 10 W. R. 246 (1868).
(6) 6 B. L. R. 42n : s. c. 11 W. R. 71 (1869)
(10) I. L. R 35 Cal. 575 (1908).

BUDHAI SARDAR v. SONAULLAH MIRDHA.

Purna Chandra Ray) for the Appellants :—Plaintiffs' suit is barred by waiver and acquiescence. The Defendant No. 6 having first offered the property to the Plaintiffs and afterwards having actually executed a kobala in their favour and the Plaintiffs having failed to pay the consideration money, the suit is barred by waiver. I rely upon the rulings, Kooldeep Singh v. Ramdeen Singh (2) and Torul Komhar v. Musammat Achhee (1). The sale to Defendants 1 to 5 was complete when the kobala was executed. The rules in the Transfer of Property Act do not apply to sales under the Mahomedan Law. Musstt. Soonder Kooer v. Raghubor Dyal (5), Jahangeer Buksh v. Bhikari Lall (6) relied upon.

Babu Mohendra Nath Ray (with Babu Lalit Mohan Banerji) for the Respondents :—The right of pre-emption did not arise before the completion of the sale to the Defendants, e.g., before the registration of the kobala. So it does not matter if the registration of the Plaintiffs' kobala fell through before that owing to the Plaintiffs' fault. The Plaintiffs cannot be held to have waived their right of pre-emption before it actually arose. I rely upon a later case reported in Jadu Lal v. Janki Koer (10). I am also prepared to argue that the rulings relied upon by the other side are wrong.

Babu Baidya Nath Dutt in reply—I submit, the right of pre-emption arose with the execution of the Defendants' kobala and the Plaintiffs got their kobala executed in exercise of that right; for, they could not have got a kobala in any other way, in the face of the Defendants' kobala.

(1) 18 W. R. 401 : s. c. 9 B. L. R. 258 (1872).

(2) 24 W. R. 198 (1875).

(5) 10 W. R. 246 (1868).

(6) 6 B. L. R. 42n : s. c. 11 W. R. 71 (1869).

(10) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 575 (1908).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CARNDUFF, J.—This Second Appeal has been preferred against an Appellate decree declaring a right of pre-emption under the Mahomedan Law of saffa. The facts found may, for present purposes, be thus succinctly stated.

The right is claimed by one Sonaullah in respect of the share of a jote which his co-sharer Ansaruddi has sold to an outsider, Budhai. Some time previously Ansaruddi had offered to sell the share to Sonaullah, and Sonaullah had refused to buy. But when precisely this offer was made, and what were its terms, do not appear. After Sonaullah's refusal, Ansaruddi on the 14th December 1907 executed a kobala conveying the share to Budhai for Rs. 300; but no consideration passed then, and there was no delivery of possession. Having become aware of the execution of Budhai's kobala, Sonaullah approached Ansaruddi on the 23rd December and obtained another kobala purporting to transfer the share to him for Rs. 400. The latter transaction fell through owing to Sonaullah's failure to produce the purchase money at the time of registration; but the transfer to Budhai was completed by the payment of the consideration by Budhai and the registration of his kobala on the 3rd of the following January. Of this completion Sonaullah heard on the 6th January, and he thereupon duly performed the ceremonies prescribed by Mahomedan Law, and eventually brought the present suit to enforce his right.

The Court of first instance held that

BUDHAI SARDAR v. SONAULLAH MIRDHA.

Sonaullah had forfeited the right, first, by his initial refusal to purchase the share, and, secondly, by his failure to pay the purchase money stipulated for in the kobala executed in his favour on the 23rd December. The lower Appellate Court has reversed this decision and decreed the suit, holding that Sonaullah's right of pre-emption did not accrue until the transfer to Budhai had been completed by the registration of Budhai's kobala on the 3rd January, and that, therefore, Sonaullah could not have lost it by any thing done, or omitted, by him prior to that date.

In so far as the earlier offer and refusal are concerned, there seems to me to be no difficulty in accepting the Subordinate Judge's view. The Appellants rely on Torul Komhar v. Musammat Achhee (1) and Kooldeep Singh v. Ramdeen Singh (2). In the former case, it was held that, where a pre-emptor, on being asked as such to purchase, deliberately refuses to exercise his right of pre-emption, he cannot be allowed, on the incidental rule of Mahomedan Law that the pre-emptor's title to purchase is not extinguished until the property has actually passed, to take the property away from a third party who has purchased after having satisfied himself by careful enquiry that there is no other impediment. In the latter case it was laid down that a party must be deemed to waive his right of pre-emption when he declines the seller's offer and the property is afterwards sold to another with his knowledge. But the facts connected with these cases are not fully reported: the facts relating to the present case are, as I have already stated, but imperfectly known; and it is impossible to say whether the rulings referred to are or are not applicable. Moreover, these rulings are not consistent with the decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Goor Doyal v. Teknarain (3), or with the views expressed in Musstt. Ladan v. Bhyro Ram (4), Soonder Kooer v. Raghubor Dyal (5) and Jehangeer Buksh v. Bhikari Lall (6). On principle too, it would seem that the right cannot arise until there has been a sale to a third party; for the right of saffa recognised by the Mahomedan Law is not the right of pre-emption known to the Roman Law, that is to say, the right arising out of an obligation on the part of an intending vendor to sell preferentially to the obligor if he offers as good conditions as any intended vendee, but rather the obligation attached to a particular status, which binds the purchaser from the person obliged to hand over the subject matter to the other party to the obligation on receiving the price paid by him for it. And all the authorities appear to be clear on the point that the right accrues only when the property has passed from the original owner to a purchaser.

There remains the question whether Sonaullah lost his right of pre-emption by the course he took on the 23rd December when he had become aware of the execution of the kobala of the 14th in favour of Budhai and, instead of proceeding to perform the preliminary ceremonies of talab-in-mowa-sibat and talab-i-ishti shad, entered into rival negotiations for the conveyance of the share to himself as an ordinary purchaser. The answer to this depends on whether Sona-

(1) 18 W. R. 401 : s. c. 9 B. L. R. 253 (1872).
(2) 24 W. R. 198 (1875).

(3) 2 W. R. 215 (1865).
(4) 8 W. R. 255 (1867).
(5) 10 W. R. 246 (1868).
(6) 6 B. L. R. 42n : s. c. 11 W. R. 71 (1869).

BUDHAI SARDAR v. SONAULLAH MIRDHA.

ullah's right arose when he heard of the execution of Budhai's kobala which was, under the Mahomedan Law, sufficient to pass the share to Budhai or not until it came to his knowledge that the registration required by the general law to complete the transfer had been effected. For, so far as I can see, there is nothing in the facts found in this connection to raise any issue as to either estoppel or waiver.

The point whether or not the Mahomedan Law, pure and undiluted, is to be applied is one of considerable difficulty. It would seem from the judgment in Najmunnessa v. Ajaib Ali (7) to be accepted in the United Provinces, where cases of pre-emption are much more frequent than in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, as settled by the rulings of the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Janki v. Girjadat (8) and Begam v. Muhammad Yakub (9) that, in considering whether a right of pre-emption has arisen, the Courts should apply the Mahomedan Law alone and hold that, if and as soon as there is a complete sale under that law, although not under the general law, the right has accrued. But in one of the Full Bench cases referred to, Mr. Justice Mahmood raised a dissentient voice; in the other Mr. Justice Banerjee also differed from his brother Judges; and in each the agreement for sale had been followed by delivery of possession as well as payment of consideration. In Jadu Lal v. Janki Koer (10) this Court has recently referred to the difficulties that are likely to arise in applying the principle that, for the purposes of pre-emption, it is necessary to follow the Mahomedan Law relating to sale, and refused to extend the Allahabad rulings to a case, such as this, in which there had been neither payment nor delivery of possession. And I confess that the weight of principle and logic seems to me to be on the side of the contention that the general law, which is paramount and has superseded the Mahomedan Law, should govern the incident of sale in applying the law of pre-emption.

(7) I. L. R. 22 All. 343 (1900).
(8) I. L. R. 7 All 482 (1885).
(9) I. L. R. 16 All. 344 (1894).
(10) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 575, 599 (1908)

On one point there seems to be absolute unanimity, and it will be well to take it as the starting point. At the foundation of the Mahomedan Law on the subject lies the entire cessation of all rights on the part of the original owner; for, as I have already indicated, and as Mr. Justice Mahmood aptly put it in Janki v. Girjadat (8), the right of safa is a right of substitution, and it pre-supposes not only a sale, but the transfer of all the rights of the vendor to a vendee whose place the pre-emptor is entitled to take. That being so, it would seem to be contrary to the spirit of the Mahomedan Law itself to enforce the right in respect of a transaction which would be a complete transfer of the vendor's rights, had that law continued to prevail, but is not so in fact by reason of the general law now in force. In other words, those used by Sir Roland Wilson at p. 412 of his Digest of Anglo-Mahomedan Law, Ed. 4, "inasmuch as the general law embodied in sec. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, confessedly supersedes the Mahomedan Law of sale on the question of what is necessary in order to transfer the ownership of immoveable property to the purchaser, while the Mahomedan Law itself requires that, for the purpose of pre-

(8) I. L. R. 7 All. 482 (1885).

BUDHAI SARDAR v. SONAULLAH MIRDHA.

emption, there should be an entire cessation of ownership on the part of the seller, it would seem that we are defeating, rather than giving effect to, that law in the sphere in which we profess to preserve it, if we insist on ignoring a legislative change outside that sphere which has altered the legal procedure for transferring ownership."

No doubt, difficulties may arise in practice whether the Mahomedan Law or the general law be applied strictly. If the latter, the pre-emptor must, where registration is required, wait for registration, which may be deferred or dispensed with, and in the meantime he may be subjected to the evil which the Mahomedan Law of saffa is directed against. If the former, his right might apparently —see Musstt. Ladan v. Bhyro Ram (4)—be defeated by a rescission of the contract for sale at any time before delivery of possession. It is, however, hardly necessary to pursue the matter further or to say more than that this case is on all fours with Jadu Lal v Janki (10) and that we follow our learned brothers in distinguishing the Allahabad cases and holding that, in circumstances such as those before us now, the right did not arise until the pre-emptor became aware of the registration of the kobala conveying the property to Budhai. In this view I would dismiss the Appeal with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree that the Appeal should be dismissed. The main contention urged on behalf of the Defendants, Appellants, was that under the Mahomedan Law the Plaintiffs lost their right of pre-emption by waiting till the conveyance to the Defendants was registered. In support of this contention the case of Begum v. Muhammad Yakub (9) was relied on. In that case the vendor sold the property, received the price and delivered possession to the vendee. When the pre-emptor came on to assert his right, he was met by the objection that the claim was premature, because the sale had not been completed by registration. It was held in effect that under the Mahomedan Law the sale had advanced to a stage when pre emption might be claimed. It was urged at the time and might be urged now that to hold the contrary might lead in some cases to evasion and denial of the right of pre-emption. How long is the pre-emptor to wait for registration? If he waits too long, might it not be said that he had waived his right? While he waits, he suffers the inconvenience which the right of pre-emption was designed to obviate. The decision of the Allahabad High Court, however, was distinguished in this Court in the case of Jadu Lal v. Janki Koer (10), where possession was not given and where the price was not paid till registration. Reference was then made to an earlier case [Musstt. Ladan v. Bhyro Ram (4).] In that case it was held in effect in part reliance on the authority of a passage in the Hedaya (Ed. 177, Vol. III, Ch. XXXVIII, p. 5, 98) that when possession was not delivered, the parties to the sale might rescind it so as to defeat a pre-emptor who asserted his right after the sale, but before the rescission. A similar conclusion was reached in the case of Musammat Ojheoonissa v. Sheikh Rustum Ali (11). The facts in these two last mentioned cases are sufficiently stated in the judgments.

(4) 8 W. R. 256 (1867).
(10) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 575 (1908).

(4) 8 W R. 256 (1867).
(9) I. L. R. 16 All. 344 (1894).
(10) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 575 (1908).
(11) [1864] W. R. 219.

BUDHAI SARDAR v. SONAULLAH MIRDHA.

Apparently the price had not been paid in either case, but it is by no means clear that payment of the price would have affected the result. On the other hand, if possession had been delivered, the pre-emptor would probably have succeeded. No doubt some of the observations made in Ladan's case (4) suggest that the Judge might have been disposed to consider registration essential to a complete transfer of ownership. But for the purposes of the decisions it was unnecessary to go so far, and, however that may be, these two cases show at any rate the importance of delivery of possession under the Mahomedan Law, and the uncertainty attending a claim of pre emption made before possession is delivered [cf. Buksha Ali v. Tofer Ali (12)]. So too sales which are in their inception invalid under the Mahomedan Law are made valid and effectual by possession being given [Najmunnessa (7)], and the right of pre-emption arises then and not before.

There is no difficulty in applying the Mahomedan Law where possession is delivered, but if it is to be applied where possession is not delivered, inconvenience may be caused by the rule or supposed rule of that law that a sale is constituted by offer and acceptance unconditionally expressed. The Mahomedan Law of sale is not now administered in India except incidentally in connection with the subject of pre-emption, and it is doubtful to what extent and with what qualifications a principle so broad can ever have been accepted in practice. The question of the quantum of evidence reasonably necessary to prove a transaction as important as a sale of land cannot be altogether neglected.

(4) 8 W. R. 255 (1867).
(7) I. L. R. 22 All. 343 (1900).
(12) 20 W. R. 216 (1873).

Inquiry might disclose the existence of general and particular rules of evidence, which would be important in this connection. In Ojheoonissa's case (11) it was said at p. 220—"a sale is a complete sale in the eye of the Mahomedan Law when the seller says orally 'I have sold' and the purchaser says 'I have bought.' In the present case when a bill of sale has actually been written out and signed by the seller, he no doubt has done his part towards the completion of the sale; he has in fact proclaimed in a more solemn and formal manner than by word of mouth that he has sold, but if the bill of sale is still in the seller's hands, and has never left them, and nothing has been done by the purchaser, such as the payment of the purchase money or entry into possession, which would be tantamount to his acquiescence in the sale, one essential element for the constitution of a complete sale is wanting, for the purchaser has not said either directly or indirectly, 'I have bought.'"

The concluding sentence of this quotation really means that the purchaser's assent to the sale had not been proved. Any attempt to apply the Mahomedan Law strictly in all cases might involve great, if not insuperable, difficulties. What is really required is some simple rule or rules, easily understood and easily applied. In Jadu Lal's case (10), Brett J. suggested that a solution of the problem was to be found "in determining in each case what was the intention of the parties." A working rule might perhaps be founded on that with the addition that the intention of the parties to the sale must be manifested in some unequivocal way to the outside world. One effectual and acceptable mode of manifesting that intention may be delivery of possession: another may be registration.

(10) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 575 (1908).
(11) [1864] W. R. 219.

BUDHAI SARDAR v. SONAULLAH MIRDHA.

In the present case, however, we need go no further than the learned Judges actually went in Jadu Lal's case (10), distinguishing the case of Begum v. Muhammad Yakub (9) on the facts and holding that when possession is not given and the price is not paid till registration, the right of pre emption arises upon registration and not before. The result is that the contention that there was undue delay on the Plaintiffs' part in asserting their claim to pre emption must be rejected.

There remains the question of waiver. It is said in the first place that the vendor offered the property to the Plaintiff before he entered into negotiations with the vendee Budhai and that the Plaintiff deprived himself of his right of pre-emption by refusing the offer. The circumstances, however, in which the offer was made and the details of the offer are not disclosed and in my opinion there is no substance in this contention. It further appears that after the execution of the instrument of the 14th December 1907, the Plaintiffs themselves entered into negotiations with the vendor to purchase the property for Rs. 400. An instrument of sale was duly prepared, but was not registered, because the Plaintiffs did not pay the price. I cannot suppose that the failure of the Plaintiffs to purchase the property for Rs. 400 amounted to waiver of their right of pre-emption in respect of the sale to the vendee for Rs. 300. The cases of Torul v. Achhee (1) and Kooldeep v. Ramdeep (2) were referred to in this connection, but the facts being insufficiently reported, it is impossible to say precisely what was decided in those cases. The facts of the case before us do not bring it within such rulings as those in Sheo Tuhul Singh v. Ram Kooer (13), and Brojo Kishore v. Kirtee Chandra (14). On the facts found the present case rather resembles that of Jehangeer v. Bhikari (6), and in review Jahangeer v. Bhikaree (15). It does not appear that at the time of the original offer, the Plaintiffs had any knowledge of any agreement or even of any proposal to sell the property to a third person and it does not appear that they ever had any opportunity to purchase the property for Rs. 300 or that they ever sanctioned its sale to the vendee for that price [cf. Kanhai v. Kalka (16)]. In the result I agree that the Appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 18 W. R. 401: s. c. 9 B. L. R. 253 (1872).
(2) 24 W. R. 198 (1875).
(9) I. L. R. 16 All. 344 (1894).
(10) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 575 (1908).
(6) 6 B. L. R. 42n: s. c. 11 W. R 71 (1869).
(13) W. R. [1864] 311.
(14) 15 W. R. 247 (1871).
(15) 11 W. R. 480 (1869).
(16) I. L. R. 27 All. 670 (1905).

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES Nos. 2903 OF 1911 AND 31 OF 1912.

NEWBOULD, J.
RAY, J.
1913,
21, August.

MUSAMMAT GULAB KOER and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
RAMRATAN PANDE, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 103A—Draft record-of-rights, entries in, if admissible in evidence in rent suits.

Entries in a draft record-of-rights published under sec. 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act are not admissible in evidence

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, JUNE 15, 1914. [No. 31.

Contents.

NOTES.

Adjournments in Privy Council.

Lord Moulton, in refusing an application for the postponement of the hearing of an appeal from India in a case in which the summons was issued in 1907 and the decree appealed from was made in 1910, observed that in such cases their Lordships were most unwilling to show any indulgence to Appellants or allow any postponement of appeals.

Autrefois acquit.

The judgment of the Lord Chief Justice in the case of Rex v. Barron, a short report of which appears at p. clxxv of this issue, is an important pronouncement on the law of autrefois acquit. The prisoner was previously tried for an unnatural offence and convicted; but that conviction was quashed on the ground of wrongful admission of evidence. At the second trial he was convicted for gross indecency, his plea of autrefois acquit being overruled by the Court. In the Court of Criminal Appeal, the Lord Chief Justice held :— "The test was not whether the facts relied upon were the same in the two trials. The question was whether the Appellant had been acquitted of an offence which was the same offence as "gross indecency," i.e., whether the acquittal on the first charge necessarily involved an acquittal on the charge of gross indecency. It was quite clear that the jury could not have convicted the Appellant of gross indecency at the first trial. And it was clear that the acquittal on the graver charge did not necessarily involve an acquittal of the minor offence. Acquittal of the whole of an offence did not involve an acquittal of every part of it. Therefore the Appellant had never been in peril of being convicted of "gross indecency."

His Lordship stated the law on the subject as follows:—"The principle upon which the plea depended has often been stated. It was that the law did not permit a man to be twice in peril of being convicted of the same offence. If therefore he had been acquitted, i.e., found to be not guilty of the offence by a Court competent to try him, such acquittal was a bar to a second indictment for the same offence. That rule applied not only to the offence actually charged in the first indictment, but to any offence of which he could have been properly convicted on the trial of the first indictment. Thus an acquittal on a charge of murder was a bar to a subsequent indictment for manslaughter as the jury could have convicted of manslaughter."

The net result of the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice seems to be that the questions that arise on a plea of autrefois acquit are these :

Could the prisoner have been convicted at the first trial of the offence charged at the subsequent trial?

Was the previous trial by a competent Court?

The rule of law that a man should not be placed twice in jeopardy on the same facts has never been doubted or qualified, but as his Lordship observed, it has not always been found easy to apply the rule to the facts of particular cases. If we apply the tests laid down above to the facts of the recent case of Emperor v. Nirmal Kanto Roy, 18 C. W. N. 723, we at once realise the difficulty pointed out by the Lord Chief Justice. We must remember, however, that in this country the legislature has enacted the law on the subject in sec. 403 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, and it is on the interpretation of this and other relevant sections of that Code that the decision of Stephen, J., mainly rests. The principle of the English law and the provisions of the Indian Code do not seem, however, to differ materially.

Proposed Bar Association.

There is a movement amongst the members of the Bar in England to organise a Bar Association on more comprehensive lines than the Bar Council. The general body of the Bar seem to be dissatisfied with the limited scope and programme of work of the Bar Council. The latter usually confine themselves to matters relating to the etiquette of the Bar and legislation affecting the legal profession. But the prevailing feeling in the profession is that the Bar if better organised can make its influence much more felt in the framing of the law and in the proper administration of it to the immense benefit of the public at large. Then, the law and its administration will form the strongest tie between the different members of the Empire. None are more competent to advise Government in matters of legislation and adminis ration of justice than the members of the Bar.

But so long as the Bar of the Empire remains a scattered and disorganised body, such opinion is neither ascertainable nor can it be conveyed to the authorities after due deliberation. The new movement that has been set on foot in England proposes to include within it the members of the English Bar who practise in other parts of the Empire. This is a very ambitious scheme and we entertain serious doubts whether the Bar beyond the sea can be included within this organisation. But what seems to us practicable is that the Bar outside the British Isles should form organisations of their own with similar objects and these branch organisations may work independently in local matters, but as occasion may require they may be in communication with the central organisation in London in matters of moment affecting the legal profession and administration of justice. In this manner, the Bar as a body will be able to exert a healthy influence on the Bench, the legal profession and the Government in matters falling legitimately within their scope; and this would be also of great advantage to the general public. It is also suggested that a Conference of the Bar of the Empire should be held in London for the exchange of ideas and obtaining suggestions for the scope of the organisation and its programme of work. If such Conference is held in October, the members of the Calcutta Bar are sure to be well-represented. But we expect that this movement may have the indirect effect of making the Bar Council shake off its lethargy and expand its operations and programme of work for meeting the requirements of the Bar of the Empire.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CRIMINAL.)

Criminial Procedure Code, sec. 54—Credible information.

EMPEROR v. GOPAL SINGH, I. L. R. 36 All. 6.

One R was wanted on a charge of cheating by the Bombay police and a warrant for his arrest was issued to the Sub-Inspector, Baragaon, in whose circle the village of R was situate. The Sub-Inspector ordered his subordinate constables to be on the look-out for R and to arrest him wherever found. S, a constable, with a chowkidar came across R and proceeded to arrest him informing him at the same time that a warrant had been issued by the Bombay police under which R was wanted. On R calling for help the petitioners came up and assaulted the constable and the chowkidar and prevented the arrest of R. The Petitioners were convicted under sec. 353, I. P. C.

Held—That under sec. 54, cl. (1), Cr. P. C, every police officer is empowered to arrest without a warrant a person who has committed a cognizable offence on suspicion or credible information of the commission of the offence. The constable had information of the offence committed by R through the warrant issued by the Bombay police and such information may well be described as credible information. . . . . The constable and the chowkidar were within their rights and were discharging their duty in their attempt to arrest R and if in the discharge of their duties they were obstructed by the Petitioners the offence of the latter falls under sec. 353, I. P. C.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 244, 540. Supplementary list of defence witnesses—Affidavit, safeguards to be observed in connection with.

EMPEROR v. MUNGAL, I. L. R. 36 All. 13.

In a case under secs. 3 and 4 of Act III of 1867 the Magistrate before whom the accused was placed on his trial examined all the prosecution witnesses and after taking the defence adjourned the hearing. During the absence of this Magistrate the accused put in an application before another Magistrate praying that eighteen witnesses might be summoned for the defence. The application was granted.

Held—That the second Magistrate not being in seisin of the case had no power to issue summonses for witnesses.

Regarding affidavits to be filed in Courts, Knox, J., observed—

It may be the case that the care and precision with which affidavits are intended to be verified and sworn to by the persons who make them are not always observed by those who administer affidavits and those who prepare them. The intention of the law is and it cannot be too often repeated that an affidavit must contain nothing but bare facts known to the person who makes the affidavit either personally or upon information from a source which he believes to be a correct source and one on which reliance can be placed.

. . . . . .

I hope that those who make affidavits, those who prepare affidavits and those who are entrusted with the solemn duty of having affidavits sworn before them will take proper care to see that the provisions of the law are duly carried out. Carelessness on the part of any one of these may place the deponent in a very serious position.

Indian Penal Code, sec. 306—Sati.

EMPEROR v. RAM DOYAL, I. L R. 36 All. 26.

In a case of sati it appeared that after the death of her husband the widow announced her intention of committing sati. The male members of the family argued with her, but she persisted in her intention. Neighbours were called in to assist, but with no effect. Finally one of the village chaukidars was sent off to the local police-station to give word to the officer in charge. Arriving at the burning ghat the widow directed the funeral pyre to be built at a certain spot. The accused placed the corpse on the pyre. The widow after walking round it seven times mounted the pyre, sat down and placed the head of the corpse on her lap. She then demanded ghee which was supplied by one accused and she poured it over the pyre and her own person. She demanded more and one of the accused gave it to her. This also she poured over herself and the pyre. Then one of the accused poured some ghee over her and the pyre. The pyre was then fired, but the witnesses refused to state by whose hand this was done. All this was done before the arrival of the police.

Their Lordships in the judgment observed :

"Fully believing that the woman was determined to be burnt with her husband's body they did all that was necessary to enable her to commit suicide except the furnishing of fire. They and the witnesses deliberately conceal the truth as to the last act and concoct miracles for the purpose. They do not state that they took any steps to prevent her taking fire or matches. They took no active steps to prevent the suicide and they hastened a funeral which in the circumstances they ought to have delayed and would have delayed if they had been sincere in their remonstrances. Sati may or may not be forbidden by the Hindu religion, but it was once a common practice and the sympathies of the people, at least of the unenlightened people, are all with sati and it is looked upon as a meritorious deed.

I have no hesitation in holding that though the accused may in the beginning have sincerely remonstrated with the widow they finally gave way to her determination and intentionally aided the doing of the deed."

The High Court upheld the conviction of abetment of suicide.

Jurisdiction of Magistrate to revive case after discharge of accused.

EMPEROR v. W. C. KYMER, I. L. R. 36 All. 53.

One W lodged a complaint against K charging him with cheating and criminal misappropriation in connection with the purchase of a phæton and a motor car. The Magistrate discharged the accused on all the charges. Subsequently W complained to the police with reference to a sum of money paid by her to K in connection with the purchase of a motor car and which she charged him with criminally misappropriating. The case was reinstated in the Court of the same Magistrate, who after taking some evidence framed a charge.

Held—That it was open to the Magistrate having once discharged the accused to again enquire into the same charge on a second complaint.

Queen-Empress v. Umedam, All. W. N. 1895 86 followed.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL—Rex v. Barron. Before THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, LAWRENCE AND LUSH, JJ. 23rd March 1914.

The plea of autrefois acquit—Test of its application.

This was an appeal from a conviction for gross indecency. The prisoner was previously tried for an unnatural offence and convicted, but that conviction was quashed on the ground of wrongful admission of evidence. At the second trial he pleaded autrefois acquit, but the trial Judge ruled that the charge of which he stood indicted at the second trial was not a charge of which he stood in peril at the first trial, and found the accused guilty.

On appeal it was contended that the true test to apply the plea of autrefois acquit was whether the facts in both cases were the same. It was immaterial that the prisoner could not have been convicted of gross indecency on the indictment for the unnatural offence at the first trial. The Court decided against the appellant and dismissed the appeal. The Lord Chief Justice said as follows :—

The principle upon which the plea depended had often been stated. It was that the law did not permit a man to be twice in peril of being convicted of the same offence. [2 Hawk. P. C. (1824 ed.), c 35]. If, therefore, he had been acquitted, i.e., found to be not guilty of the offence, by a Court competent to try him, such acquittal was a bar to a second indictment for the same offence. That rule applied not only to the offence actually charged in the first indictment, but to any offence of which he could have been properly convicted on the trial of the first indictment. Thus an acquittal on a charge of murder was a bar to a subsequent indictment for manslaughter, as the jury could have convicted of manslaughter [2 Hale's P. C. (1800 ed.), 246]. The Appellant, having by order of that Court on his appeal from his first conviction had a judgment and verdict of acquittal entered, was in the same position for all purposes as if he had actually been acquitted. The question therefore they had to consider was whether the acquittal on the charge of the first offence involved an acquittal on the charge of gross indecency.

Mr. Blake Odgers contended that the true test by which this question had to be decided was this:—Were the facts which were in evidence at the first trial the same facts as those on which the prosecution relied in support of the second indictment? If they were, he said that the Appellant was "in peril" on the former trial, notwithstanding that the Appellant could not at the trial on the first indictment for the more serious offence have been convicted of the minor offence. He cited in support of this contention Reg. v. King, [1897], 1 Q. B. 214. The headnote stated that a Defendant, who had been convicted on an indictment charging him with obtaining credit for goods by false pretences, could not be afterwards convicted upon a further indictment charging him with larceny of the same goods, and Mr. Justice Hawkins was reported as having said:—"It is against the very first principles of the criminal law that a man should be placed twice in jeopardy upon the same facts; the offences are practically the same, though not their legal effect." It was quite plain that the learned Judge did not intend to lay down and did not lay down as a general principle of law that a man could not be placed twice in jeopardy upon the same facts if the offences were different. The statement obviously referred to a case where the offences were the same: "practically the same" the words were, and as the two offences in the present case were not either exactly or practically the same, it did not help the Appellant. The substantial identity of the offence was recognized in Reg. v. King, [1897], 1 Q. B. 214, as a condition to the validity of the plea of autrefois acquit, and that case made no change in the general and well settled principle of law applicable to these pleas.

The test was not, in their opinion, whether the facts relied upon were the same in the two trials. The question was whether the Appellant had been acquitted of an offence which was the same offence as "gross indecency," i. e., whether the acquittal on the first charge necessarily involved an acquittal on the charge of gross indecency. It was quite clear that the jury could not have convicted the Appellant of gross indecency at the first trial. And it was equally clear that the acquittal on the graver charge did not necessarily involve an acquittal of the minor offence. Acquittal of the whole of an offence did not involve an acquittal of every part of it. Therefore the Appellant had never been in peril of being convicted of gross indecency. The rule of law now affirmed had never been doubted or qualified, though it had not always been found easy to apply the rule to the facts of particular cases. The offence to which the Appellant eventually pleaded guilty at the second trial was not the same or substantially the same as that charged at the first trial.

Mr. Blake Odgers for the Appellant.
Mr. Du Parcq for the Crown.

B. D.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Wells v. Wells. Before LORD JUSTICES SWINFEN EADY AND PICKFORD. 15th May 1914.

Fees due to Barristers from Solicitors are not debts and cannot be attached as such.

This was an Appeal from a decision of the President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division, which is shortly reported at p. clxxix (infra). The Court dismissed the Appeal. Lord Justice Swinfen Eady said:—

In my opinion fees owing to counsel are not debts, and cannot be attached or garnisheed as such, nor can the garnishees be ordered to pay the amounts as debts, nor can execution issue against them in default of payment. I am quite aware that the solicitors are ready to pay, and, indeed, are desirous of paying, to the proper person, whatever may be due from them for counsel's fees earned by the judgment-debtor, but they cannot be ordered in garnishee proceedings to pay the amount to the judgment creditor. It is settled beyond all question that counsel's fee is not a debt, but an honorarium. The fees are payable as a matter of honour and not of legal obligation. See Kennedy v. Broun (32 L. J., C. P., 137) and In re Le Brassem and Oakley [(1896) 2 Ch., at p. 494]. It was, however, urged that where the Solicitor acknowledged that he had received from his lay client the money to pay counsel's fees, and that he actually had in hand the money, the position was different, that there was a legal obligation on him to pay, and that an action would lie against him for money had and received. This proposition is quite unfounded. These facts do not make the least difference as regards the right of counsel to sue. Counsel can no more sue for their fees when the Solicitor has received the money than when he has not received it. See Hobart v. Butler (9 I. C. L. R., 157). The case of Ex-parte Colquhoun, In re Clift (38 W. R., 688) was then pressed upon us, and it was insisted that unless a barrister had a legal right to recover his fees this case could not be supported. In that case an application was made to the Court of Bankruptcy by a member of the Bar, that a trustee in Bankruptcy of a Solicitor might be ordered to pay to him the amount he had received in respect of the counsel's fees comprised in bills of costs which the trustee had collected and got in. In my opinion, the case, so far as decided by Mr. Justice Cave, was quite rightly decided, but it affords no justification for contending that a barrister has any legal claim to his fees when the amount has been received by the solicitor.

The principle upon which the Court proceeded was that clearly stated by Lord Justice James in Ex-parte James, In re Condon (L. R. 9 Ch. App, 609), and frequently enforced subsequently in reported cases. The Court exercising administrative jurisdiction, and having control over its officers, will in proper cases order, and, if necessary, compel them to make payments which are honest and just, although such payments may not be recoverable either at law or in equity as between litigant parties. In that case money which had been paid to a trustee in bankruptcy under a mistake of law was ordered to be refunded. This was followed, and, indeed, extended, in Ex-parte Simmonds, In re Carnac (L. R., 16 Q. B. D., 308). There money had been paid to a trustee in bankruptcy under a mistake of law and had been applied by him in paying dividends to creditors: it had been paid away, but the Court ordered him to repay the amount out of other moneys coming to his hands, and applicable to the payment of dividends to the creditors. . . .

There is another case upon which I ought to say a word—that is the case of In re H. and C. Hall (2 Jur., N. S., 1,076), which was with reference to the right of counsel to prove in bankruptcy for fees. In that case the solicitor for the assignees of a bankrupt undertook to hand over in full as the counsel any fees which might come to the hands of the assignees. So far that was merely what the assignees would have been ordered to do by the Court, and is the same as Re Clift, Ex-parte Colquhoun. But in the same case Mr. Commissioner Fane held that as regards counsel's fees received by the bankrupt Solicitors before their bankruptcy, and admitted by them to have so been received, counsel could prove for this sum as money had and received to his use. This case is very shortly reported, but in our opinion the decision cannot be supported upon the ground on which it appears to have been rested. No action for money had and received would have lain against the solicitors at the suit of counsel, and no proof upon that ground could be sustained. The decision can only be supported, if at all, on the principle of Ex-parte James that the estate of the bankrupt's having been increased by the fees of counsel paid to and improperly retained by the Solicitors, and this amount having been mixed with and become indistinguishable from the rest of the bankrupt's property, all that the Court can do by way of acting honestly is to order the trustee to pay to counsel a sum equal to the dividend on the amount so received, rateably with the other creditors and as if he had a legal right of proof. As, however, it is not necessary to decide this question, I propose to say no more about it, but to leave it where it was left by Lord Justice Lindley in In re Le Brasseur and Oakley [(1896) 2 Ch., at p. 494].

Mr. Disturnal, K. C., and Mr. Le Bas for the Appellant.

Mr. L. Scott, K. C., and Mr. Willis for the Judgment-debtor.

Mr. D. Hogg for the garnishees.

B. D.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Re Benson G. H. Bower v. Sir G. Chetwynd. Before THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, LORD JUSTICE BUCKLEY AND CHANNELL J. 28th March 1914.

When once time has begun to run, is running suspended by bankruptcy proceedings?

A person before becoming bankrupt in 1890 incurred a debt from the Appellant which was proved in bankruptcy. The Appellant received some dividends, but was not paid in full. The bankrupt died in 1911 without obtaining his discharge. By his will he left a fund which became assets for the payment of his debts and which did not vest in the trustee in bankruptcy. The Appellant now claimed to realise the debt. It was held that the claim was barred by limitation. Mr. Justice Channell said as follows :—

The contentions of Mr. Hansell on this point on behalf of the Appellant were, first, that the exercise of the power of appointment which made the fund available as assets gave him a new right of action or proceeding which was not barred, and, secondly, that even if that was not so, the effect of the bankruptcy was to prevent the statute from running. To the first of these points the answer is that the words of the statute are six years "next after the cause of such actions or suits," and although the appointment and the death gave creditors a new fund from which to get payment, and a new mode of proceeding in order to get it, yet this was merely a new remedy and not a new cause of action, the cause being really the old debt. As to the second point, cases were quoted, beginning, I think, with Ex parte Ross, 2 Gl. and J. 330, which show that in the bankruptcy a debt does not become barred by lapse of time, if it was not so barred at the beginning of the bankruptcy, and of this there can be no doubt, but this is only in the bankruptcy. From the nature of the case, as there are usually no means of recovering a debt provable in a bankruptcy other than under the machinery of the bankruptcy, there is likely to be little authority on the point whether bankruptcy keeps alive the right to take such other remedies, if there are any, notwithstanding the lapse of time, and we find no direct authority on this point.

The real difficulty in the way of the Appellant is the well established rule that, if the statute once begins to run, it continues to run whatever happens. The only case we can find in the books where the running of the statute has been said to have been suspended is a decision of Lord-Chancellor Chelmsford in Seagram v. Knight, L. R. 2 Ch., 638, but that was a peculiar case on very special facts, and whatever view may be taken of it, it clearly is not an authority in the present case. The general rule is clear. Copley v. Dorkmincque (2 Lev., 16), where, after the time had begun to run, the Courts were closed owing to the rebellion and no action could be brought, is a very strong case. Rhodes v. Smethurst (4 M. and W., 42) is another strong case, where the whole matter was carefully considered. The principle of the rule, if on such a technical matter there can be said to be any principle, appears to be that if any man has a cause of action which is ripe so that he has an opportunity of bringing his action and does not do so, he thereby takes the risk of the happening of some unexpected event which takes away from him the possibility of bringing his action within the remainder of the period which he has under the statute. The rule may work hardship in particular cases, but it is so well established that no Court would now decline to follow it.

Mr. E. W. Hansell for the Appellant.

Mr. George Cave, K. C., and Mr. Mellor for the Respondent.

B. D.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Lucy v. Bawden. Before MR. JUSTICE ATKIN AND A COMMON JURY. 14th February 1914.

Landlord's duty to repair defective staircase—His liability when the tenant knows that the premises are defective.

The Plaintiff was the wife of a tenant of a house belonging to the Defendant. She alleged that by reason of defective steps leading from the pavement to the door of the house, she fell down and received injuries for which she claimed damages. The jury found that she was injured through the defect in the flight of steps, but also found that before the accident, she knew of the existence of the defect. On these findings it was urged that the landlord was under an obligation to take reasonable care to keep the premises safe. For the landlord it was contended that the findings of the jury shewed that there was no trap, and that the Plaintiff had no cause of action. The learned Judge dismissed the claim, and in the course of his judgment said as follows:—

Mr. Greer contended that there was an obligation upon the Defendant to provide a reasonably safe staircase for the use of the tenants and such persons as might lawfully use the stairs, relying upon Miller v. Hancock [(1893) 2 Q. B. 177]. He thought that the case of Miller v. Hancock, was an authority binding him to hold that if the landlord remained in possession and control of a common staircase, in the circumstances of that case he was under some obligation to persons lawfully using it. He could not distinguish this case from Miller v. Hancock. He was pressed by Mr. Haldinstein with the words of Lord Atkinson in the House of Lords in Cavalier v. Pope [(1906) A. C. at p 433]:—"In Miller v. Hancock and Hargroves, Aronson & Co., v. Hartopp [(1905 1) K. B. 472], the landlord was held liable, because control was retained by him." He was not satisfied in fact that the landlord had the power or the right to admit to or to exclude all people. He would suppose that such right did not exist at any rate in respect of the families of the tenants, including, therefore, the Plaintiff. But nevertheless, he considered that the circumstances did raise an implied duty on the part of the landlord towards persons using the steps.

The important question was what was the extent of such duty? He did not see how the duty could be larger than the duty of an occupier of premises, and those whom he invited to enter his premises for purposes of lawful business; Indermaur v Dames (L. R.. 2 C. P.). In Smith v. London and St. Katherine's Docks Company (L R, 3 C. P., at p. 333) Mr. Justice Byles said that there was a duty on the part of the Defendants to the Plaintiff not to permit the gangway to be insecure without warning the Plaintiff. It was urged, however, that in Miller Hancock the Court of Appeal had laid down the duty of the landlord as being an absolute duty to provide approaches reasonably safe and keep them so, and passages were read from the judgment of Lord Esher and Lord Justice Bowen which read apart from the context he (Mr. Justice Atkin) thought were capable of that construction.

The evidence in that case, however, was clearly consistent with the defects being in the nature of a trap, and the reference in Lord Bowen's judgment in Smith v. London and St. Katherine's Docks Company made it very improbable that he intended to state any proposition of law different from what was stated in that case as mentioned above. That this was a true view of the effect of Miller v. Hancock seemed to be established by the judgments of the Court of Appeal in Huggett v. Miers [(1908) 2 K. B., 278]. It was difficult to see how an obligation could be imposed upon a landlord larger than the obligation to avoid traps. It was plain that he was in the absence of express or implied agreement not liable at all for the consequence of letting a house in a state of even dangerous disrepair. His Lordship could see no difference between the use of an unlighted staircase (Huggett v. Miers) and the use of an unfenced staircase.

The finding of the jury that the defect was due to the negligence of the Defendant must be taken to assume that the duty of the landlord was to provide a reasonably safe access; and not merely to avoid having an access in the nature of a trap. If the duty were the larger one, his Lordship thought that there was evidence to support the jury's finding. In his opinion, however, the duty being what he had stated there was no evidence of negligence on the landlord's part. He could adopt the words of Lord Atkinson in Cavalier v. Pope at page 432 :—"It is, I think, clear that the case does not come within the principle of Indermaur v. Dames and the cases which followed it down to Earl v. Lubbock [(1905) 1 K. B., 253], because one of the essential facts necessary to bring a case within that principle is that the injured person must not have had knowledge and notice of the existence of the danger through which he has suffered." In the present case the fourth finding of the jury negatived the existence of the essential fact. The danger, if any, was patent to every one and the Plaintiff gave evidence that she herself had complained to the Defendant's agent about it. Mr. Greer contended that the Plaintiff could recover unless the Defendant could show that with full appreciation of the danger she voluntarily took upon herself to bear the risk. That contention was ill founded when once the duty of the owner was found to be limited. In such a case the true maxim seemed to be Scienti non fit injuria.

Mr. Greer, K. C, and Mr. May for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Haldenstein, K. C, and Mr. Bromley Eames for the Defendant.

B. D.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.—Wells (Judgment creditor) v. Wells (Judgment debtor). Slaughter and May (Garnishees). (Before THE RIGHT HON'BLE SIR SAMUEL EVANS, PRESIDENT.) 30th March 1914.

Fees due to a Barrister from a Solicitor are not debts, and cannot be assigned or attached by a creditor.

This case raised the question whether fees due to a barrister from a solicitor could be regarded as debts and be attached as such.

As the result of divorce proceedings by the wife against the husband, who was a barrister, alimony was ordered to be paid to her. The husband, thereupon executed a deed of assignment in favour of one Harry Nye of the fees due to him from the solicitor. The wife attached the fees in the hands of the solicitors by garnishee proceedings.

The Court held that the fees were neither assignable, nor could they be attached as debts by the judgment-creditor. The learned president in the course of his judgment said as follows :—

I have said that the assignment deals with a barrister's fees as "book debts." Now it is clear on the authorities that these fees are not properly to be described as debts at all. I have grave doubts whether they could be made the subject-matter of an equitable assignment, but it is clear from the provisions of the Judicature Act of 1873 (36 and 37 Vict., c. 66) that they are not choses in action. Even if they were assignable in some such way, the deed is void from lack of consideration. Mr. Justice Parker in his judgment in the Court of Appeal in Glegg v. Bromley, 1912, 3 K. B., 474, lays it down that for every equitable assignment there must be consideration.

The first part of the present case raises the important question whether fees received by a solicitor relating to the services of a barrister can be regarded as debts at all. In my view it is quite clear that they cannot be so regarded, and that view is fortified by the elaborate judgment of Lord Chief Justice Erle in the Court of Common Pleas which is reported in 32 L. J. (New Series), 137. The learned Chief Justice there cites Lord Cottenham as saying that a counsel's fee is not a debt but an honorarium; his services are not sold or hired and what he receives for them is a mere gratuity. That view was endorsed by the Court of Appeal in the case of In re Le Brasseur and Oakley, 1896, 2 Ch., 487. Lord Justice Lindley, when dealing with this point, then said :—

"I think that it would be much to be regretted if the Court, either by itself or its officers, did anything to enable Counsel to recover his fees from his client, whether the lay client or the solicitor client Fees are payable as a matter of honour. The solicitor can, if so required by Counsel, be compelled either not to retain him or to pay his fee with the brief. That is the remedy of Counsel, and he has it in his own hands. But if he does not choose to insist on payment of his fees with the brief, the payment becomes a matter of honour, not of legal obligation. In In re Hall [2 Jur. (N. S.), 1,076], where Counsel was admitted to prove for fees in the bankruptcy of some solicitors, the decision proceeded entirely on the admission made by the solicitors that they had actually received a specific sum in respect of the fees in question from their clients previously to the bankruptcy—an admission which it would be very difficult to get over."

No authority has ever laid down that a barrister's fees are a debt provable in bankruptcy in competition with other creditors. If that is correct, the question here arises whether a garnishee order can attach fees if they are not debts. A garnishee order only applies to the attachment of debts. In the case of Webb v. Stenton (11 Q. B. D., 518), Lord Esher said in the Court of Appeal :—"It seems to me on the plain reading of r. 2 of Or. XLV that no order can be made unless some person at the time the order is made is indebted to the judgment-debtor.

If there be a person so indebted, then the order will be that all debts owing or accruing from such person to the judgment-debtor shall be attached. If there is a debt due, payable in presenti, of course an order may be made to attach that debt. If there is no debt payable in presenti, but there is a debt in existence, debitum in presenti, but payable in futuro, it seems to me that such an order could be made with regard to that debt, although it be the only debt, and there is no debt payable in presenti, because such third person is indebted to the judgment-debtor, and that would satisfy the words of the rule."

If it is not a debt, it is not provable as a debt and there would be no order unless the person was indebted. On referring to the forms used in garnishee proceedings as to the practice and the rules, it will be found that there are two forms of order in this division—an order nisi and an order absolute. Examples of them will be found in "Ravden on Practice and Law in the Divorce Division," at pp. 369-70. The authorities show that a barrister's fees must be regarded as gratuities; that is, therefore, sufficient to dispose of the matter if it is right that a garnishee order cannot be made save as to a debt or something which is subject to a legal obligation and is not a mere gratuity. The decision in the case of Innes v. The East India Company [25 L. J. (New Series), C. P., 154] is against any opposite contention. I am of opinion that this deed is void from fraud and want of consideration, and that garnishee proceedings cannot be used to attach these sums in the hands of solicitors.

Mr. Lee Bas for the Judgment creditor.

Mr. W. O. Willis for the Judgment-debtor (the husband).

Mr. Douglas Hogg for the Garnishees.

B. D.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION—Before FLETCHER AND RICHARDSON, JJ APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREES Nos. 637 AND 673 OF 1911. KUMUD NATH CHATTERJEE AND ANOTHER, Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, Appellants, v. SM. SABITRI DEBI, Plaintiff and two other Defendants, Respondents. 20th May 1914.

Suit for rent against tenant and in the alternative for money against co-sharers, if rent realised by the latter, whether maintainable in a Court other than a Small Cause Court.

These two appeals arose out of two suits for recovery of arrears of rent brought by the Plaintiff who is a co-sharer landlord to the extent of 4 as. share against the tenant Defendants and in the alternative against the other co-sharer landlord Defendants, whose interest extends to 12 as. in case the co-sharers had realised the whole rent from the tenant. The first Court found that the collection of rent was joint and that the tenant had paid the whole rent for the years in suit to the co-sharer Defendants. It therefore held that as the Plaintiff failed to prove separate collection and inasmuch as the collection of the entire rent by the co-sharer Defendants was not unlawful, the Plaintiff was not entitled to get any relief against them. The learned Munsif further held that even if the Plaintiff had any remedy against her co sharers for unlawful detention of her share of the rent realised, the claim was cognizable only by a Court of Small Causes. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge held that such a suit in an alternative form is maintainable on the authorities of Ahamuddeen v. Girish Chandra Shamunt, I. L R. 4 Cal. 350, Madan Mohan Lal v. Holloway I. L. R. 12 Cal. 555, Sham Sing v. Kishun Sahai, 6 C. L. J. 190. He further held that "the forum in which a suit lies is primarily determined by its nature. These suits as framed are suits for rent to begin with. The Plaintiff asked for relief in the first place against the tenants and in the second in the event her claims were held not sustainable against the tenants, against her co sharers. It was open to her to frame the suits in that fashion and to ask for relief in the alternative, vide Or. I, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code." The lower Appellate Court therefore passed a decree against the co-sharer Defendants. Thereupon the co-sharer Defendants preferred these Second Appeals and it was contended on their behalf that the suits as found by the lower Appellate Court are really suits for recovery of money realised by the co-sharer Defendants due to the Plaintiff, and as such the suits were not maintainable in an ordinary Court, but were cognizable by Courts of Small Causes and that the claims prayed for in the alternative are not maintainable.

Held, that the suits as framed were maintainable in law and they were rightly instituted in ordinary Courts. The Small Causes Courts have no jurisdiction to try the suits as they were primarily rent suits.

Babu Sharashi Charan Mitter, for Appellants.

Babus Bepin Chandra Ghosh and Atul Krishna Roy for Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

GULAB KOER v. RAMRATAN PANDE.

in a suit for rent. It is not until the record-of-rights is finally published that the presumption of correctness arises.

These were Appeals preferred on the 20th of November 1911 against the decrees of G. J. Monahan, Esq, District Judge of Zilla Shahabad, dated the 8th of August 1911, modifying the decree of Maulvi Syed Nasimul Huq, Munsif, 1st Court at Arrah, dated the 10th of November 1910.

The Appeals arose out of two suits for rent in which the Munsif gave the Plaintiffs decrees upon the basis of receipts produced by the Defendant, overruling the Defendant's allegation that the rentals were in fact less than were shown in the receipts. The Defendants relied principally upon certain entries in the draft record-of-rights published under sec. 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but the Munsif excluded them from consideration, as in his opinion they were inadmissible in evidence.

The lower Appellate Court modified the decrees of the Munsif on the strength of these entries which it admitted in evidence. In the course of his judgment, the learned Judge observed :

"It seems to me that in the absence of any good reason to the contrary, the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer under sec. 103A which is that of a competent revenue authority should be followed. The receipts are written by the malik and he can mention or not mention abwabs just as he pleases. Thus I think, it will be far safer in this present suit to follow the decision under sec. 103A and to disallow the abwabs."

The Plaintiff preferred this second Appeal.

Babu Rajendra Pershad (for Babu Chander Sekhar Pershad Singh) for the Appellants.

Babu Raghunath Singh for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

These two Appeals are second Appeals from the decision of two rent-suits. The Munsif granted decrees for the whole amount claimed in both the suits. These decrees have been modified by the lower Appellate Court and the Plaintiffs have preferred these second Appeals The learned District Judge has based his decision as to the amount of rent and cesses payable by the Defendants on certain entries in a draft record-of-rights which was published under sec. 103A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In our opinion these entries were not admissible in evidence. It is not until the record-of-rights is finally published that the presumption of its correctness arises.

We accordingly decree this Appeal and modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court. The amount of rent and cesses payable in each suit will be the amount found payable by the first Court. To this amount will be added damages at the rate of 12½ per cent., the rate allowed by the District Judge.

The Appellants will get their costs in all Courts.

Appeal allowed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD MOULTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
6, April.

JOHN KING & CO., LD., Appellants,
v.
THE CHAIRMAN OF THE MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONERS OF HOWRAH and ors., Respondents.

Land, title to—Title-deeds, what are—Original grant not forthcoming—Subsequent conveyances through which title derived, if title-deeds—Court refusing to consider them as title-deeds and basing decision on conduct of parties—Error vitiating judgment—Real question not considered—Drainage-channel, dispute between Municipality and private owner as to title to—Boundaries in title-deeds if may be ignored and title declared up to centre line of channel—Court if may vary boundaries in title-deeds.

Plaintiffs, who sued for recovery of possession of a strip of land lying between their premises and a public road, including a khal or nulla which lay between the said premises and the road, proved a clear title for over 50 years by a succession of duly registered conveyances, mortgages, reconveyances and other title-deeds and also proved that during that period they had leased portions of the land by leases that themselves were registered. The Judge at the trial accordingly found in the Plaintiffs' favour, dispossession having taken place within 12 years of the suit. On appeal, the High Court reversed that decision observing that the original grant of the land made by Government about the year 1830 to one Smith to whom Plaintiffs traced their title was not forthcoming, and that though in the later conveyances referred to above the* khal appeared to have been treated as a part of the subject of the grant, it was unlikely that Government would include it in their grant without securing the continued maintenance in the public interest of a water channel which existed from time out of memory and played a conspicuous part in the drainage system of the local Municipality; and that in the absence of the original grant none of the other documents referred to in the case could be regarded as "being in any sense title-deeds", they being "obviously insufficient to create title" and being "at most mere assertions of title made from time to time by the predecessors-in-interest of the Plaintiffs." In this view it treated the case as though it was one in which the Court had nothing relevant before it but the conduct of the parties to decide whether the Plaintiffs or the Defendant Municipality were entitled to the land:

Held, affirming the trial Judge, that it was scarcely possible to conceive of a clearer title by deeds than that which was proved by the Plaintiffs, and the High Court was wrong in saying that the Plaintiffs had no title deeds—in consequence of which error it never considered the real question in the case.

That having regard to the boundary consistently found in the deeds, which was stated to be the public road, it was impossible to hold that the title of the Plaintiffs went up only to the centre line of the khal and thus make the deeds convey lands marked out by different metes and bounds from that which there appeared.

The appeal arose out of a suit by the Plaintiff Company for a declaration of their title to and confirmation of possession of a piece of land lying between their premises and a public road called Telkalghat Road—which strip of land included a khal and a strip of land lying between the said road and the Plaintiffs' said premises. The Plaintiffs claimed title both as lessees and as purchasers of the superior interest and alleged that they and their predecessors had been in possession adversely to all other persons for more than sixty years.

The Defendants were the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah and the Howrah Amta Light Railway Company, Ld. It appears that the two Defendants entered into an agreement under which the former were to transfer to the latter, for the purposes of the supply of power and the construction of sidings for the latter's railway, so much of the khal as lay opposite to Company's premises. In pursuance of this covenant the Railway Company proceeded to fill up the khal and on the portion filled up to erect offices and lay down lines. The plaint averred that the Plaintiffs' possession was being by these and other acts disturbed and interfered with by the Defendants and they prayed also for a permanent injunction restraining the Defendants from interfering with the Plaintiffs' possession.

The Defendant Corporation denied the Plaintiffs' title to the land in dispute and alleged that the entire land lying between the boundary of the khal towards the Plaintiffs' premises and the Road was and had always been the property of the Corporation and their predecessors and in their possession in their own right and adversely to the Plaintiffs and their predecessors. They denied that the Telkalghat Road formed the southern boundary of the Plaintiff Company's premises as alleged by them. The Railway Company supported the Municipality.

The substantial issues which were raised for trial were :—

1st. Is the Plaintiff Company's claim barred by limitation ?

2nd. Does the khal as well as the land lying to the south of it and extending up to the Telkalghat Road, as described in the plaint, belong to the Plaintiffs ?

Upon this second issue, the judgment of the High Court recites it as common ground that "the land in dispute was originally part of a char, measuring some 55 bighas which was settled by the Government of the day with one Smith on or about the year 1830 and conveyed by Smith to one Calder in 1844." The original lease to Smith could not be found and Calder's conveyance was thus the earliest document bearing upon the disputed land. Subsequent dealings with the land so far as they appeared from the documents produced by the Plaintiffs are thus summarised by the High Court.

"The Plaintiff Company have claimed the land, first as lessees and finally as proprietors. As to their leasehold, it appears, that, sometime before 1849, Calder granted a permanent lease of 2 out of his 55 bighas to one Craig who built upon it what was known as the Vulcan Foundry ; and this is the site of the northern part of the Plaintiff Company's present premises. Craig's interest in these two bighas was subsequently conveyed to one Stewart and in 1854 a 40 years' lease was granted by Calder's successor, Golapi Dasi, to a certain Hugh McLardy in respect of 4 more bighas of the 55 immediately adjoining Craig's land on the south. McLardy's interest likewise eventually passed to Stewart, who thus became the lessees of the whole 6 bighas and who on 26th March 1881, conveyed his entire interest to Messrs. John King and Company, the predecessor of the present limited liability Company. The lease granted by Golapi Dasi expired on 1894, and, in anticipation of this Messrs. John King & Co. obtained in 1891 a further lease for 15 years. In all the documents relating to these leases except one (a permanent lease with option of purchase, Ex. 9) obtained on the 4th April 1855 by one Mackey, the southern boundary is given as a nulla.

"Turning next to the acquisition of the proprietary right claimed, we find that it passed from Smith to Calder, then to Craig, then to Golapi Dasi, then to Mackey and eventually to a certain Chundra Kanta Mukerjee who mortgaged a parcel of 8 bighas including the land in suit. In execution of the decree obtained on the basis of that mortgage, this land was put up for sale and purchased by Messrs. John King & Co., on the 4th August 1893. In Calder's conveyance, the land is described as bounded on the south by the north of the public road to the north of Mr. Humphrey's house; and in the other documents connected with the chain of transfer indicated above, as well as the mortgages and other transaction arising therefrom it is referred to as the public road or 'a public road' or 'the Gholadanga-Ghat Road.'"

It appears further that in 1862, when the entire Gholadanga property was owned and possessed by Mackey, that property (excluding the portion subsequently acquired by the Plaintiff Company) was acquired by Government on behalf of the East India Railway Company, and that at that time the khal was treated as a part and parcel of the land until 1869, when the Municipality addressed the Railway Board of Agency with a view to having the khal made over to the Municipality "as its possession by the Municipality was a matter of the highest importance and affected the drainage and cleanliness of a large portion of the town." The Board of Agency in their reply stated that the "drain clearly belonged to the Railway Company", but they did not object to the transfer which was subsequently amicably arranged.

The Subordinate Judge of Howrah, Babu Pareshnath Chatterjee, delivered judgment decreeing the Plaintiffs' suit on 10th August 1908. He held that "Plaintiffs' proprietary right or free-hold interest in the unacquired portion of Mackey's property including the disputed khal or nulla had been proved to the hilt" With regard to the lease-hold title claimed by the Plaintiffs, the Subordinate Judge thought it probable that in order to keep the khal available to other tenants of the land Golapi Dasi did not include the khal in the lease of 4 bighas to McLardy, but as Mackey obtained lease of the entire Gholadanga property, she found no objection to include the khal in that lease.

In the result he held that "even if the Plaintiffs' allegation in the plaint be not quite accurate so far as their lease-hold interest is concerned, that cannot surely affect the Plaintiffs' proprietary right and all the documents relating to the Plaintiffs' proprietary right clearly go to show that the disputed khal is included within the Plaintiffs' property and that the Plaintiffs have proprietary right thereto." "The Revenue Survey Map," the Subordinate Judge found, "no doubt describes the whole space occupied by the road and the khal as Telkalghat Road, but in the said space there is a dividing line by which the two things have been kept separate and I do not therefore see how it can be inferred from the said map that the khal is a part of the road."

The Subordinate Judge further found that "there was no document on the side of the defence to show that the disputed khal or the soil of the said khal ever belonged to the Howrah Municipality."

With reference to the first issue, the Subordinate Judge found that the Municipality did no doubt do certain acts in connection with the disputed khal, referable to the powers conferred on the Municipality by statute, but no act of possession or user exercised over the khal by the Municipality under those powers could affect the Plaintiffs' title. Moreover, the property in question being a khal, was not capable of enjoyment by the owner in the ordinary way, and the possession of the owners should be presumed to continue until there was actual invasion or infringement of their right so as to give rise to a cause of action, that a slight act of possession by the owner would be sufficient to keep alive his right, and that the party who set up title by adverse possession must prove that their acts of possession had all along been adverse to the Plaintiffs and adequate in continuity, publicity and extent. Upon the evidence the Subordinate Judge found that there never was any real act of adverse possession on the part of the Municipality over the disputed khal and there was no invasion of the Plaintiffs' right until the Howrah-Amta Light Railway Company encroached upon the property in suit by causing a portion of the khal to be filled up on the south side and laying down railway lines and erecting station sheds on the filled-up portion, with the help or sanction of the Howrah Municipality within 2 years prior to the suit.

In the result the Subordinate Judge decreed the suit with costs and damages or mesne profits to be determined in execution proceedings.

The Municipality, alone preferred an appeal to the High Court.

The High Court (Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ.) reversed the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit with costs throughout. In arriving at this conclusion, the learned Judges were influenced by the following amongst other considerations:

(1) That the khal has existed from time out of memory and played, as it still plays, conspicuous part in the drainage system of the Howrah Municipality.

(2) That the original grant to Smith was not forthcoming, and "none of the other documents referred to in the case could be regarded as being in any sense title-deeds. They were obviously insufficient to create title and were at most mere assertions of title made from time to time by predecessors in interest of the Plaintiff Company. In themselves, therefore, even if their intendment were perfectly clear, they would be of little value and could be useful only if supported by evidence of conduct pointing in the same direction."

(3) That it seems most unlikely that a natural channel of such manifest importance and general utility should have been actually included in the grant from the Government to Smith unless its continued existence and utility for public purpose had been at the same time secured.

(4) That even the transactions relating to the acquisition of a portion of the Gholadanga property by the E. I. Ry. Co., from Mackey was no direct evidence of the title of the Plaintiff, though in those proceedings the khal had undoubtedly been treated by Government as a part of that property. They simply showed that Government having made this public drain over to the Railway Company had to arrange for its restoration to the Municipality and the public and that their action in the matter did not really affect the issue.

Turning to the evidence of conduct the learned Judges held that "even if the Defendants had offered no furher evidence, we should be bound to hold that the former had altogether failed to substantiate their claim. At the outset the task before them was difficult and the onus they had to discharge heavy. For, in order to succeed it behoved them to prove affirmatively that their property includes land which was public land to begin with and which has always been occupied by a natural channel maintained as a public drain for the public benefit by Defendant Municipality ever since its creation. There exists, as we have said, apparently no documentary evidence of the original settlement by the Government with the first grantee and the unconditional inclusion therein of a nulla or khal of the kind described is, as has been observed already, contrary to probability and certainly not to be presumed. In these circumstances, the burden on the Plaintiff Company was no light one, and as we have seen they have in our opinion not succeeded in discharging it The Defendant Municipality on the contrary, seem to us to have made out, although it was, of course, unnecessary for them to do so, a much stronger affirmative case. It is true they also have no title-deeds, and their position is, perhaps, worse than that of an ordinary Defendant, because it rests upon and is rigidly defined by statute. By none of the Municipal Acts that have been in force is the subsoil of a public drain vested in the Municipal Commissioners, and the only foundation for a claim on the part of the Defendant Municipality to the ownership of the land covered by this khal is the transfer arranged for them by the Government with the E. I. Ry. Co. in 1869. But it is not their case that the subsoil is theirs; what they say is that the public drain as such is theirs, that the subsoil is not the Plaintiff Company's but the State's, and that they believe they are and have been merely discharging a trust in respect of it. And we think that they have conducted themselves throughout in accordance with this view and that it is the correct view to take. The survey maps of 1870 and 1872 distinctly show the nulla as appertaining to the road and it will presently appear that it was in fact so used by the Municipality. The Plaintiff Company's map which they filed in connection with their application to the Municipal Commissioners in 1888 depicts their parapet to the culvert as projecting well into the Telkalghat Road, and the conduct of the Municipality and its agents. . . . . is entirely consistent with their case."

On the question of title by adverse possession which each party had set up the High Court observed:

"On behalf of the Municipal Commissioners it has been contended that even if the title were in the predecessors in interest of Messrs. John King & Co, Ld., it was lost over and over again by the adverse possession of the Municipality. We doubt, however, whether if the Appellants had to base their defence upon this, they could be allowed to succeed against the Respondents. For regard being had to what has been said as to the rights of Municipal Corporations in respect of public drains and to the powers conferred and duties imposed upon them in this connection, there seems to us to be great force in the contention that all the acts of the Howrah Commissioners which have been described above were, with perhaps the solitary exception of the curtailment of the parapet protecting the culvert, wholly compatible with the recognition of the Company's ownership of the subsoil. . . . . On behalf of the Respondent Company it has been suggested, though faintly, that a title had been acquired by long possession adverse to the true owner. But the suggestion may be summarily rejected, for so long as the Company and their predecessors were in possession as mere lessees, that is until 1893, no such acquisition was possible and enough has been said to demonstrate that no claim of this kind can reasonably be based upon any thing that was done by them after that year."

In the result the learned Judges held that in their view, the suit ought unquestionably to have been decided, on the merits, in favour of the Appellant Municipality; for not only did the Respondent Company not succeed in proving affirmatively that they were entitled to recover possession, but the Appellant Municipality succeeded in showing that the khal, on the title to which the Company's claim was rested, was originally public property and had been dealt with as such by the Municipality always and by the Plaintiffs themselves on several critical occasions. The Plaintiff Company thereupon preferred the present appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. Ogden Lawrence and Mr. M. N. Drucquer for the Appellants.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—This is an Appeal in an action brought by John King & Co, Limited, to obtain a declaration of their title to certain lands mainly consisting of a khal, or nulla, along the Telkalghat Road, Howrah, and for ejectment of the Defendants therefrom, and for damages or mesne profits.

The course of the case has been rather a singular one. The Plaintiffs at the trial proved a clear title to the lands for over fifty years by a succession of duly registered conveyances, mortgages, reconveyances, and other title-deeds, and also proved that during that period they leased portions of the land by leases that themselves were registered. Their Lordships indeed think that they might go so far as to say that, after the rather complex devolution which took place within that long period had been carefully explained by counsel for the Appellants, it became evident that it was scarcely possible to conceive of a clearer title by deeds than that which was proved by the Plaintiffs. They also proved that they had not been dispossessed by the Defendants until a period well within the period of limitation, and that therefore the Statute of Limitations did not apply.

The Judge at the trial, who went into the evidence with very great care, found in favour of the Plaintiffs on all points. An Appeal was brought to the High Court. It would seem from the judgment of that Court, that the Judges pronouncing it took a most extraordinary view of the Plaintiffs' case, ignored entirely the clear title to the land which the Plaintiffs had proved, and expressly held that they came into Court without title-deeds. They therefore treated the case as though it was one in which the Court had nothing relevant before them but the conduct of the parties to decide which of them was entitled to the land.

Their Lordships are entirely unable to understand the grounds on which the High Court rejected the title of the Plaintiffs on their title-deeds, nor can they understand what the learned Judges meant by saying that the Plaintiffs have no title deeds. The consequence of this error on the part of the Judges of the High Court is that they never considered the real questions in the case, and their judgment gives to their Lordships no assistance.

The title-deeds of the Plaintiffs (none of which are impugned), which are all duly registered, show that the Plaintiffs or their predecessors in title have been, ever since 1855, the owners of a parcel of land bounded on the south by the Telkalghat Road. Now it may very well be that the Telkalghat Road was not at that date the broad metalled road that it is now, but it is certain that it lay to the south of a khal, or nulla, the bed of which, with its banks, is the principal subject in dispute in the present action.

Their Lordships have been asked to interpret this boundary of the property as meaning that the property of the Plaintiffs' predecessors in title only went up to the centre line of the nulla, which lies to the north of the Telkalghat Road itself. To do that would be to reject the description of the parcels which is to be found consistently in the deeds and to make these deeds convey land marked out by different metes and bounds from that which there appears. Their Lordships decline so to do. They think that it is possible that by allowing certain portions from time to time to be added to the Telkalghat Road for the purpose of improving that road, the Plaintiffs and their predecessors in title may have parted with the property, or at all events with the right of possession of those strips of land; but none of those form part of that which is claimed in this action. So far as that which is claimed in this action is concerned, they have title and they have had possession. They have been dispossessed from this, but they brought this action in due time, and their action of ejectment must succeed, and this Appeal must be allowed. Their Lordships are quite satisfied both with the reasons and the conclusions of the Judge at the trial, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court which is appealed against should be set aside, and that the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored and affirmed. The Respondents must pay the costs of the Appeal to the High Court and to this Board.

Solicitors: Messrs. Neil, Clerk and Murray for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Morgan, Price and Newburn for the Respondents.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

L. P. APP. NO. 11 OF 1913.

JENKINS, C. J.	SACHINDRA KISHORE DEY, Defendant, Appellant,
N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.	v.
1914,	RAJANI KANT CHUCKERBUTTY, Plaintiff, Respondent.
Heard, 1 & 2, April.
Judgment, 2, April.

Hindu Law—Daughters inheriting father's estate jointly—Death of one—The other if succeeds to deceased's interest as reversionary heir—Adverse possession for more than twelve years during both daughters' lifetime—Surviving daughter's right to recover moiety share belonging to deceased, if arises from her death—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 141.

SACHINDRA KISHORE DEY v. RAJANI KANT CHUCKERBUTTY.

Where one of two daughters of a Hindu who inherited his properties died, the survivor did not acquire in the interest enjoyed by the deceased a title of the nature described in Art. 141 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act.

Where after both daughters had been kept out of possession for more than 12 years one of them died, and the other by some means or other got back possession :

Held—That she could not maintain her possession against the person who by 12 years' adverse possession had acquired title in the entire property, including the interest of the deceased daughter, to which she succeeded by survivorship and not by inheritance.

This was an appeal from a judgment of D. Chatterjee, J., in S. A. No. 3014 of 1911 dated the 30th of January 1913, dismissing an appeal preferred on the 20th of November 1911, against the decree of Babu Behari Lal Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, 3rd Court of Zilla Mymensingh, dated the 25th of August 1911, modifying the decree of Babu Aswini Kumar Das, Munsif, 3rd Court at Kishoreganj, dated the 14th of February 1911.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment of D. CHATTERJEE, J., which was as follows :—

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—One Kirtinarain who died about the year 1871 left him surviving two daughters Harasundari and Kashiswari and one daughter-in law Umatara, being the widow of his predeceased son. Certain jote land belonging to the estate of Kirtinarain which formed the subject-matter of contention in this case continued to be held by Umatara to the exclusion of Harasundari and Kashiswari who were married daughters living in their husbands' houses. After Umatara had been in possession for more than 12 years, that is, in the year 1291, she sold the jote to the father of the Plaintiff, and the father of the Plaintiff having got himself recognised as an in-coming tenant by the landlord remained in possession and also the Plaintiff after him, until on the death of Umatara in 1315, when the Plaintiff was dispossessed by Kashiswari and her two sons, Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. In the suit of the Plaintiff for recovery of possession, Defendant No. 1 pleaded that he had been in possession along with Umatara and Umatara's daughter had made a gift to him of her eight annas share so that he had become entitled to the whole 16-anna jote. This part of the Defendant's case has been held as not proved and the result of the finding is that Umatara remained in possession adverse to both Harasundari and Kashiswari before the sale and that after the sale, the Plaintiff's father and the Plaintiff after him were in such adverse possession until dispossessed by the Defendants. The Court of first instance held that as regards the 8 annas share of Kashiswari, her claim had been barred by 12 years' adverse possession after Umatara.

As regards the 8-anna share of Harasundari, Kashiswari had succeeded to it in 1899, that is within 12 years of the suit and with regard to that share Plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The lower appellate court has, however, decreed the whole suit of the Plaintiff holding that as the Zamindars had accepted rent from Umatara, it must be taken that a fresh settlement was made with her and that the Zamindars having recognised the father of the Plaintiff as an in-coming tenant must be taken to have made a fresh settlement with him so that neither the daughters nor their heirs could have any further claim. It is contended before me in second appeal that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge decreeing the whole suit of the Plaintiff is wrong and that in any case the suit as regards the share of Harasundari ought to have been dismissed. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon Art. 141 of the Limitation Act of 1877 which provides "Twelve years from the death of a female" as the period within which the suit for recovery of possession is to be brought by a Hindu or a Mahomedan who is "entitled to possession of the property on the death of the Hindu or a Mahomedan female." The question, therefore, for decision in this case is whether Art. 141 has any application to a case of this kind in which succession rests jointly in two female heirs. It is settled law that when there are more daughters than one, they succeed jointly as one with a right of survivorship. In this case there was no partition of the property amongst the two daughters so that no question that might arise in a case in which such a partition has taken place arises in this case. Apart from the question of adverse possession by Umatara and her alienees, the two heirs must be taken to have been in joint possession and that if they were in joint possession the suit by the survivor could not be one for recovery of possession. Therefore, the suit by Kashiswari could not be said to be one for recovery of possession on the death of Harasundari. In this view of the case I think that so long as Kashiswari is alive, Art. 141 has no operation. It would be premature now to say whether there would be any right in the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 to recover possession after the death of Kashiswari. That would be a matter for consideration when that case does arise. In the present case, however, the Plaintiff is, I think entitled to recover possession of the whole land.

The decree of the lower appellate court is therefore sustained and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Babu Gobinda Chandra Dey Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Sasankajibon Ray for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is a suit brought to recover possession of land, and to understand the legal question at issue it is necessary to state briefly what the facts of the case are. There was a Hindu father governed by the Dayabhaga school of law who at his death left two daughters Kashiswari and Harasundari and a daughter-in-law Umatara, the wife of a predeceased son. Kashiswari had two sons. On the death of the father Kirtinarain the daughters who were his heirs did not obtain possession, but Umatara, his daughter-in-law, did. She purported to alienate the estate to the predecessor of the Plaintiff, and the possession of Umatara and those who claim under her by purchase was for more than twelve years. Not only was this possession for more than twelve years, but this possession was adverse to Kashiswari and Harasundari. The result was that sec. 28 of the Indian Limitation Act operated with the consequence that the right of the daughters became extinguished. By some means, which are not disclosed, Kashiswari, Defendant No. 3, and her sons Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 afterwards got into possession of the property, and the present suit is to recover possession from them. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have no present title;

SACHINDRA KISHORE DEY v. RAJANI KANT CHUCKERBUTTY.

That would have been with Kashiswari, Defendant No. 3, had it not been extinguished. So far as the original title to a moiety is concerned, it is not suggested before us that the claim of the Plaintiff could be resisted, but it is said that inasmuch as Harasundari died in 1306, the plea of adverse possession and the consequent extinguishment cannot prevail as to the 8 annas that originally survived to Kashiswari on Harasundari's death. So the problem that arises in this case is what was the effect of adverse possession against the two daughters who succeeded on the death of their father under the Dayabhaga system of law.

The nature of the right acquired by these two daughters is made apparent by the decision of the Privy Council in Amrita Lal Bose v. Rojanee Kanto Mitter (1): and, it is abundantly clear from that case that the survivor of the two daughters came in on the death of her sister not by way of inheritance as reversioner, but by right of survivorship. It necessarily follows from this that Art. 141 does not apply and that the surviving daughter cannot now claim that she acquired a title, on the death of Harasundari, of the nature described in Art. 141.

The result appears to me to be that so far as Kashiswari is concerned, her right was extinguished not only in the original 8 annas that devolved on her, but in respect of the whole 16 annas which passed to her and her sister as a single inheritance on the death of their father.

It is unnecessary for us now to express any opinion as to what will be the position of Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on the death of Kashiswari. That depends on considerations which are outside the problem with which we have to deal. It is sufficient for our purpose to say that there was twelve years' adverse possession as against Kashiswari and Harasundari, and as against them and the survivor of them there was, by virtue of sec. 28, an extinguishment of their right in favour of the Plaintiff or those under whom the Plaintiff claims.

This in effect is the view taken by Mr. Justice D. Chatterjee, and we must therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) L. R. 2 I. A. 113 (1875).

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No 2327 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1914.
29, January.

MOHENDRA NATH BISWAS and others, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
SHYAM LAL BANERJEE and another, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Land held under Government on temporary lease—Permanent sub-lease by holders under Government and by sub-lessees themselves—Omission in settlement record of entry of such tenures if affects relationship of landlord and tenant between the subordinate holders.

Certain lands were held under the Government under a temporary settlement during the currency of which the holders granted a permanent sub lease to the Plaintiffs who before the expiration of the lease granted by Government granted a permanent lease to one of the grantors. Ever since then the sub-lessee and his successor in-interest were in occupation of the land, the settlement being from time to time renewed by Government in favour of the original settlement-holders or their representatives, but in the course of the last settlement the under-tenures were not mentioned in the settlement records.

Held (in a suit for rent by the Plaintiffs)—That the mere omission of the settle- ment authorities to make an entry in the settlement records in respect of the tenures and under-tenures cannot affect the rights of the parties; and the effect of the re-settlement by the Government with the original settlement-holders was to keep alive the contractual obligation of the subordinate holders among themselves.

MOHENDRA NATH BISWAS v. SHYAM LAL BANERJEE.

The rights and obligations of the parties were mutual, the Plaintiffs being bound to make good the title of the Defendants as soon as by virtue of the resettlement they were placed in a position to continue the lease in favour of the Defendants and the Defendants being under an obligation to continue as tenants under the Plaintiffs on the basis of the lease and to pay rent accordingly.

This was an appeal from a decree of Babu Chandra Bhusan Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Khulna, dated the 26th of May 1911, confirming a decree of Babu Hem Chandra Basu, Munsif, Bagerhat, dated the 28th of May 1910.

This appeal arose out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent. The facts of the case were that Sri Nath Bhadra and Sri Nath Biswas were settlement-holders of a temporarily settled estate under Government. They carved out a howla by a potta, dated 16th Bhadra 1280, in favour of Umesh Mitter and Radhika Charan Bhattacharji, who again created the nim-howla in favour of the Defendants' father Chandra Nath Biswas, who executed the kabuliat (Exbt. I). Plaintiffs were executors of the estate of Aghore Mitter, son of Umesh Mitter, and under the terms of the kabuliat Plaintiffs were entitled to get Rs. 30 rent annually from the Defendants. The main contentions of the Defendants were that during the late settlement proceedings which took place between the years 1311 to 1313, the Settlement Officer did not recognise and record the existence of the Plaintiffs' howla or the Defendants' nim-howla, hence the relationship of landlord and tenant has ceased to exist.

Previously there was a rent suit between these parties and up to the High Court the Plaintiffs obtained a rent-decree and the objections now urged by the Defendants were all then urged. The High Court finally decided that the Defendants are liable to pay rents to the Plaintiffs under the terms of the kabuliat.

In the kabuliat executed by the settlement-holders to Government and amongst these Defendants' father Chandra Nath Biswas was one, there was a stipulation that the settlement-holders are bound to respect the recorded rights of the tenure-holders.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Chandra Sen for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Defendants in a suit for rent, and the question in controversy is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant subsists between the parties. The facts necessary for the determination of this question may be briefly stated.

Sri Nath Bhadra and Sri Nath Biswas held lands under the Government under a temporary settlement which was not to expire till the end of the year 1890. During the currency of this settlement they granted a permanent sub-lease to the Plaintiffs-Respondents on the 30th December 1873. The grantors and the grantees were aware of the precarious nature of their interest, but the parties assumed that upon the expiry of the then current term of settlement the Government would renew the lease in favour of the grantors, possibly upon payment of enhanced revenue. The grantees accordingly agreed that if at any future time the Government imposed an additional revenue, the grantees themselves would bear the additional burden in proportion to the area of land held by them. On the 4th February 1874, the lessees under the lease of the 30th December 1873 granted a permanent lease to one of the grantors. Here again a provision was inserted to the effect that if the revenue was increased upon a future settlement, the tenant would bear the burden in proportion to the land in his possession. Ever since then, the sub-lessee and his successor-in-interest have been in occupation of the land. The settlement has been from time to time renewed by the Government in favour of the original settlement-holders or their representatives. In the course of the last settlement, the under-tenures for some unexplained reason were not mentoined in the settlement records. In answer to the present suit for rent, the Defendants, the sub-lessees, under the permanent sub-lease of the 4th September 1874, contend that the Plaintiffs are no longer entitled to recover rent from them inasmuch as their tenures have not been recognised by the settlement authorities. This contention is obviously without foundation. The mere omission of the Settlement authorities to make an entry in the settlement records in respect of the tenures and under-tenures cannot affect the rights of the parties. On the other hand, it cannot be disputed for a moment that the effect of the resettlement by the Government with the original settlement holders was to keep alive the contractual obligation of the subordinate holders as amongst themselves. This position is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Pria Nath Das v. Ram Taran Chatterjee (1), and in fact accords with the view taken by this Court in an earlier litigation between these very parties which arose upon the termination of a previous settlement. It has been contended, however, that a different view of the rights and obligations of the parties should be taken on this occasion; because the tenure and under-tenure have not been recorded in the course of the settlement now current. As we have already explained, this circumstance does not in our opinion affect the position of the parties. Their rights and obligations are mutual; the Plaintiffs are bound to make good the title of the Defendants as soon as by virtue of the resettlement they are placed in a position to continue the lease in favour of the Defendants, and similarly the Defendants are under an obligation to continue as tenants under the Plaintiffs on the basis of the lease of the 4th February 1874 and to pay rent accordingly. In this view the Plaintiffs have been rightly allowed a decree for rent as against the Defendants.

MOHENDRA NATH BISWAS v. SHYAM LAL BANERJEE.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(1) 7 C. W. N. 601: s. c. I. L. R. 30 Cal. 811 (1903).

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 407 OF 1909.

COXE, J.
RAY, J.
1913,
Heard, 30, May and 5, June.
Judgment, 1, July.

KALI PRASANNO GHOSH, Decree-holder, Appellant.

v.

SHAIKH GOLAM RAHMAN and others, Objectors, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 47—Decree, irreconcilable directions in—Decree impossible of execution—Claim on behalf of Deity—Appeal.

The Appellant obtained a decree on a mortgage executed by one G and had certain properties attached. Thereafter one Y brought a suit for declaration that the property was wakf and could not therefore be attached and sold, and obtained a decree. On appeal to the High Court against this decree, G and one N were substituted as the heirs of Y who had died in the meantime, and the appeal was ultimately dismissed as against G and decreed on a compromise as between the Appellant and N, "allowing the Appellaut to recover the money due to him by sale of 4 annas share of the properties." On an application for execution of this decree of the High Court without making G a party to the execution, G appeared and objected that he was the sole mutwali of the property which was wakf and could not be sold in execution of the decree. The lower appellate court refused execution, holding that a suit for declaration could not legally terminate in a mortgage-decree, and that the decree which could be executed was the original mortgage-decree, but not the compromise-decree.

Held—That as G was a party to the suit in his personal capacity as also as mutwali, his objection came within sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and an appeal lay from the order refusing to execute the decree.

KARTIK CHANDRA GHOSH v. ASHUTOSH DHARA (1) distinguished.

That the ground upon which the application for execution was refused was erroneous; the decree of the High Court in the present case was, however, incapable of execution inasmuch as the decree in so far as it dismissed the appeal as against G as a part representative of the former mutwali was a final decision that the property was wakf and inalienable, and a direction in the same decree that a portion of the property could be sold was irreconcilable with the rest of the decision and made it impossible to carry the whole decree into effect.

This was an appeal preferred on the 25th of August 1909 against an order of F. Roe, Esq., District Judge of Zilla 24-Parganas, dated the 11th of June 1909, reversing an order of Babu Ram Lal Day, Munsif at Alipore, dated the 13th of March 1909.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Ray, Surendra Nath Ray and Satyendra Nath Ray for the Appellant.

Babus Akshoy Kumar Banerjee and Biraj Mohan Majumder (for the Deputy Registrar) for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

COXE, J.—The facts of this case as they have been laid before us are as follows :—One Golam Rahman mortgaged certain property to the Appellant. The Appellant obtained a decree on that mortgage and certain property was attached in execution. Thereafter Yakub Husain brought a suit for declaration that this property was wakf and could not therefore be attached and sold in execution of Golam Rahman's debt. That suit was decreed by the courts below. On appeal to this Court Golam Rahman and Najoo Bibee were substituted on the record as heirs of Yakub Husain who had died, and the appeal was dismissed with costs as against Golam Rahman and was decreed on compromise as between the Appellant and Najoo Bibee. As regards Najoo Bibee, it was ordered that the decree of the lower court be set aside and the said Appellant do recover the money due to him by sale of 4 annas share of the properties mentioned in the schedule to the plaint. The Appellant applied for execution of this decree against Najoo Bibee not making Golam Rahman a party to the execution. Golam Rahman came in and alleged that he was the sole mutwali of the property and that the property was wakf and could not be sold in execution. The first court disallowed this objection and ordered execution to proceed. On appeal the learned District Judge set aside this order and rejected the Appellant's application for sale. The learned Judge held that the direction in the decree that the Appellant should recover the money due to him by sale of a quarter of the property did not authorise the sale of the property in execution of that decree, but only enabled the Appellant to execute the former decree upon the mortgage. The suit of Yakub was a suit for a declaration and could not terminate in the learned Judge's opinion in a mortgage-decree in favour of the Defendant.

(1) 16 C. W. N. 26 : s. c. I. L. R. 39 Cal. 298 (1911).

KALI PRASANNO GHOSH v. SHAIKH GOLAM RAHMAN.

I am not prepared to say that if the parties settled their differences in such a way that the Defendant was declared entitled to recover money from the Plaintiff, a compromise decree of that nature could not be enforced in ordinary execution. But in my opinion, the High Court decree is incapable of execution. Yakub was succeeded by Golam Rahman and Najoo. He had obtained a decree that the property was dedicated to the diety and inalienable. The appeal against that decree was dismissed, as against one of his joint representatives, in toto, and not only so far as it affected three quarters of the property. That is a final decision between the Appellant and Golam Rahman as a part representative of the former mutwali that the property is dedicated to the diety and inalienable. It appears to me that a direction in the same decree that a portion of the property can be sold is irreconcilable with the rest of the decision and makes it impossible to carry the whole decree into effect, or in other words, makes the decree incapable of execution. The case is somewhat obscured by the fact that the representative of Yakub against whom the whole appeal was dismissed is Golam Rahman. He was the original mortgagor, and it is impossible for him in his personal capacity to resist the mortgage. But his personal conduct does not bind him as a mutwali, and there cannot in my opinion be any question of estoppel. The estate which has been dedicated to the deity cannot be prejudiced by the acts of a perhaps unworthy representative. In this matter Golam Rahman objects, as the mutwali of the endowment, that the property is not saleable. The decree which is being executed shows that his contention is well founded. It may be that he is only a joint mutwali, but he is interested in and entitled to defend every inch of the property, as one at least of the trustees of the endowment. In these circumstances, it seems to me that he is entitled to succeed as such trustee, whether the former proceedings are or are not conclusive against him in his individual capacity.

KALI PRASANNO GHOSH v. SHAIKH GOLAM RAHMAN.

Reliance, however, has been placed on the decision in Shaikh Golam Rahman v. *Surendra Nath Ray. The facts in that case were exactly the same except that the creditor was different. That case also had arisen out of a mortgage by Golam Rahman, and a suit by Yakub, which was decided together with the suit out of which this case arises by the same judgment. And the learned Judges held that the creditor was entitled to succeed.

The learned Judges, however, seem to have been unaware that Golam Rahman had with Najoo Bibee been substituted in the former case for Yakub. They say :—"The suit which was instituted by Yakub Husain was instituted against the present decree-holders and the judgment-debtor Golam Rahman, the latter being made a pro forma Defendant. The Plaintiff Yakub Husain in that suit no doubt obtained a decree against the two Defendants, but there was no decree in favour of the pro forma Defendant Golam Rahman against the present decree-holders, who were also Defendants. The decree which Yakub Husain obtained did not inure to the benefit of Golam Rahman. Then the case came before this Court in second appeal. The widow of Yakub Husain compromised the case, allowing the decree-holders to proceed against the 4-anna share of the property of Yakub. There was no compromise effected between the decree-holders and Golam Rahman and the appeal of Yakub Husain against Golam Rahman was dismissed." As a suit in of fact Yakub's appeal was not dis- mutwali, It was not he that appealed. The creditor's appeal against him was dismissed and certainly this dismissal of the appeal inured to the benefit of his representatives.

I am not prepared, therefore, to accept this decision as binding upon us. It proceeds upon facts and does not lay down any principle of law.

On looking into the judgment of 1904, I see that the property was held to be wakf and that the creditor could not proceed against it except in so far, of course, as Golam Rahman had a personal interest in it. The learned Chief Justice said—"The finding of the Court below is that all the properties were wakf properties and upon the terms of the wakfnama, as printed in the paper-book, the view taken by the Court below seems to be right.

"The Court below has been careful to leave open any question of liability as against Golam Rahman in respect of any beneficial interest that he may have in the wakf property. I think, therefore, that these appeals must be dismissed with costs, as against the Respondent Golam."

It has been argued that no appeal lay to the District Judge and that therefore the Munsif's order should be restored. But it is clear that an appeal lay. It was held in Kartik Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (1), which may be regarded as overruling Jogendra Nath Sarkar v. Gobinda Chandra Dutt (2), that when a judgment-debtor claims property not in his personal capacity, but as shebait for an idol, who was not a party to the suit, the case does not come under sec. 47, C. P. C., and no appeal lies. But in this case Golam Rahman is a party to the suit 17 of the * No. 20 of 1907. Unreported.

(1) 16 C. W. N. 26 : s. c. I. L. R. 39 Cal. 298 (1911).

(2) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 864 (1908).

KALI PRASANNO GHOSH v. SHAIKH GOLAM RAHMAN.

both in his personal capacity and also in his representative capacity.

Then it is argued that the case may be regarded as a continuation of the original execution proceedings and not as an execution of the High Court decree. But when the original execution was interrupted by a suit for a declaration that the property could not be sold and that declaration was decreed, the decision is just as fatal to the former as to the subsequent execution.

The Deputy Registrar who appears for the minor successors of Najoo Bibee supports the Respondent.

In my opinion, the execution cannot proceed in the face of the decision of 1904. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

RAY, J.—I agree in holding that the compromise decree is incapable of execution. It is not correct to say that the decree-holders were to execute their original mortgage-decree. That decree has become merged in the compromise decree so far as the mortgaged property which formed the subject of suit by Yakub is concerned. The compromise decree is incapable of execution, because Golam Rahman objects that the property is wakf and not saleable. He was a party to the suit which resulted in the compromise decree and when that decree is sought to be executed, he can properly come in under sec. 47, C. P. C. His brother had it established as against these decree-holders that the property was wakf and he as a representative of his brother sets up that decree as barring execution against it. The Full Bench case of Kartick Chandra Ghosh v. Ashutosh Dhara (2) has no application to the present case. There is no estoppel and sec. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act does not stand in the way. Here Golam Rahman has not acquired any interest in the property in the sense in which the word 'interest' has been used in the section. The property has been found to be the property of the deity and Golam Rahman is one of the mutwalis. He can well say—I deemed the property not to be wakf and so mortgaged it to you, but now that it has been established to be wakf at the instance of my brother and the trust has devolved on me as one of the representatives of my brother, I am bound to tell you that you cannot sell. It appears to me, there is no answer to this.

(2) 16 C. W. N. 26: s. c. I. L. R. 39 Cal. 298 (1911).

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL NO. 5 OF 1911.

JENKINS, C. J. MOOKERJEE, J. 1913, 29, May.	KESHWAR BHAGAT, Defendant, Appellant, v. SHEO PROSAD LAL and others, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Rent free holding, grant of, if valid—"Lakhiraj," meaning of—"Belagan," meaning of—Record-of-rights, entries of holdings in, as "belagan" and "kabillagan," effect of—Presumption from long and uninterrupted non-payment of rent, that holding "lakhiraj."

The word "belagan" means simply "not paying agricultural rent" and does not imply any thing as to liability to pay rent, whilst the word "kabillagan" indicates a tenancy for which rent is not actually paid, but which is liable to pay rent.

Where in respect of a holding entered in the record-of-rights as "belagan" the District Judge presumed, from evidence of long and uninterrupted possession without payment of rent, a grant of land under conditions which make it rent-free :

KESHWAR BHAGAT v. SHEO PROSAD LAL.

Held—That the District Judge was entitled to make that presumption and his determination in no way conflicted with the entry in the record-of-rights.

There can be a rent free grant of permanently settled land and such a grant cannot be treated as a nullity by the grantor or his heirs or by any person claiming through him.

MOHAMED AKIL v. ASADUNNISSA BIBI (1) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 3rd of January 1911, against the decree of Mr. Justice Caspersz, dated the 6th of December 1910, in appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1327 of 1909.

The Plaintiff Appellant brought this suit to recover possession of some land as being his zerait land and in the alternative he prayed for assessment of rent thereon. In the record-of-rights there were two entries (1) in the column "landlords to whom rent is payable"—the name of the Plaintiff and (2) in the column where rent payable is to be entered, the words "belagan."

Both the Court of first instance and the Court of Appeal agreed in holding that the Plaintiff had failed to prove the land in suit to be his zerait. It was argued on behalf of the Plaintiff, however, that the entry in the record-of-rights amounted to an entry that the land was mal. The lower Appellate Court considered the two entries to be mutually conflicting and declined to place any reliance on them. On the other hand it found that the Plaintiff had for a long period not realised any rent from the land. It accordingly held that the Plaintiff had failed to prove that the land was subject to payment of rent and dismissed the suit.

In Second Appeal, before Caspersz, J., it was argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that the land being admittedly within the zemindary of the Plaintiff, and the Defendant being his tenant, the word "belagan" merely implied that the land though not assessed, was assessable with rent His Lordship gave effect to this contention, and in the course of his judgment remanding the case for assessment of rent observed as follows :—

In my opinion, the decision of the District Judge cannot be supported. A variety of reported cases have been cited and discussed at the Bar. I may mention the following cases in this connexion : Harihar Mukhopadhya v. Madhab Chandra Baboo (2), Batai Ahir v. Bhuggobutty Kocr (3), and Sheikh Milan v. Mahomed Ali (4).

No doubt the onus of proof was upon the Plaintiff but that fact does not relieve the Defendant from adducing evidence to rebut the presumption that arises from the entries in the record-of-rights. The relation of landlord and tenant admittedly exists between the parties upon that presumption and although the Defendant may have never paid any rent, it does not follow that he will never be liable to discharge that obligation to the landlord. No suit was brought to contest the entries in the record-of-rights. The Defendant failed to produce any sanad or to rebut the presumption of correctness attaching to the record.

The learned Vakil for the Defendant has relied in support of the District Judge's judgment upon Art. 130, Sch. II, of the Limitation Act. That article provides a period of limitation of 12 years for the resumption or assessment of rent-free land, the period running from the date when the right to resume or assess the land first accrues But the obligation to pay rent is a recurring obligation

(1) 9 W. R. 1 (1867).

(2) 14 Moo. I. A. 152 (1871).
(3) 11 C. L. R. 476 (1882).
(4) 10 C. W. N. 494 (1908).

KESHWAR BHAGAT v. SHEO PROSAD LAL.

accruing daily in favour of the landlord. In my opinion, Art. 130 has no concern with the circumstances of the present litigation.*

The Defendants preferred this further appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Babus Surendra Madhub Mullick and Provas Chandra Mitra for the Appellant.

Babu Lukshmi Narayan Singh for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Caspersz, and it raises the question whether the Defendant's holding is liable to assessment for rent. The Plaintiff is the zemindar, and in the record-of-rights there is an entry of this particular holding in the name of the Defendant, but as "belagan." From a very useful publication, being a Guide and Glossary to the Survey and Settlement Operations in Behar, we learn the sense in which the settlement officers use the term "belagan." It indicates a rent-free tenure; and it is explained that "belagan" means simply "not paying agricultural rent" and does not imply any thing as to liability to pay rent. This is in contrast with the expression "kabil-lagan" also to be found in the same Glossary, which describes a tenancy for which rent is not actually paid, but which is liable to pay rent. In this case the Defendant pleaded a "lakhiraj" title. The word "lakhiraj" is often used loosely. In strictness it indicates a freedom from liability to revenue, but it is constantly used as indicating exemption from liability to pay rent, and it may fairly be taken in this case that the Defendant did plead a freedom from liability to pay rent. The decision of the lower Court of Appeal was that the Plaintiff had failed to prove that the land was subjected to rent; and the learned Judge consequently allowed the appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Court. Mr. Justice Caspersz on appeal has reversed that decree and sent back the case to the lower Appellate Court for a determination of the fair rental to be imposed on the land in suit. It is from this determination that the present appeal has been preferred.

In my opinion this appeal must succeed; for I think the finding of the lower Appellate Court is conclusive in this case. It has been argued before us that the entry "belagan" is decisive in favour of the zemindar. I fail to see that. The significance of the entry is indicated in the Glossary to which I have already drawn attention, and it is apparent from this, that while it may be indicative of a tenure, it also shows that no rent in fact was paid and makes no pronouncement either way as to liability to pay rent. It cannot, therefore, be said that the determination of the District Judge in any way conflicts with the entry in the record-of-rights. His judgment rests on a familiar rule of law, which has not been disputed before us, and in accordance with which the Court may, from evidence of long and uninterrupted possession without payment of rent, presume a grant of land under conditions which make it rent-free, though it may not be revenue-free. The difficulty in this case has largely arisen from a failure to distinguish between rent-free and revenue-free. It is no doubt true that freedom from revenue cannot now be effectively created, but the decision of the Full Bench in Mohamed Akil v. Asadunnissa Bibi (1), and more particularly that portion of Sir Barnes

(1) 9 W. R. 1 (1867).

Peacock's judgment, which is reported at pp. 41 and 61, makes it clear that there can be a rent-free grant of permanently settled land and such a grant cannot be treated as a nullity by the grantor or his heirs or by any person claiming through him. The zemindar in this case cannot claim the position of advantage which would have accrued to him, had he been the purchaser at a revenue sale, and we have to decide this case apart from that; and so regarding it, I think, we must hold that the learned Judge of the Lower Appellate Court was entitled to make the presumption he did, and that as a result we ought to decide that the Appellant before us holds the land free from liability to rent.

We must, therefore, set aside the judgment of Mr. Justice Caspersz and restore the decree of the District Judge with costs of this hearing and of the hearing before Mr. Justice Caspersz.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 1478 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1914, Heard, 24 and 25, March. Judgment, 26, March.	BATA KRISHNA RANA, Plaintiff, Petitioner, v. JANAKI NATH PANDAY, Defendant, Opposite Party.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 61, 195 (e)—Putnidar, if may deposit rent in Court in case of doubt as to who is entitled to receive it—Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819).

A putnidar who entertains a bonâ fide doubt as to who is entitled to receive rent from him, is entitled to deposit the rent in Court under sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, no provision of the Putni Regulation (VIII of 1819), being in any way affected by that section.

This was a Rule granted on the 3rd of December 1913 against an order of Babu Chandra Bhusan Banerjee, Small Cause Court Judge, Berhampur, dated the 27th of September 1913.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the judgment.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee for the Petitioner.

Babu Korunamoy Bose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Rule raises an important question of first impression, namely, whether it is competent to a putnidar to avail himself of the provisions of sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, notwithstanding cl. (e) of sec. 195. The circumstances under which the question arises for consideration are not disputed and may be briefly stated.

The Plaintiff alleges that he holds a putni talook. That on several occasions he had paid rent to the Mustaphis, that thereafter on the assertion that the estate had been sold for arrears of revenue and that the certified purchaser had conveyed title to him, one Janaki Nath Panday (the present Defendant) had realised rent from him on threat of proceedings under Reg. VIII of 1819 and that recently on the 11th December 1912 in a suit between the representatives of the original proprietors and the Defendant, it was decided that the property was not comprised within the estate sold for arrears of revenue. The Plaintiff asserts that, under these circumstances, he entertained a bonâ fide doubt as to who was entitled to receive the rent and that consequently he was entitled to make a deposit under cl. (e) of sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. He accordingly made a deposit on the 15th May 1913. Notice was thereupon issued to the rival claimants. One of these, the transferee from the purchaser at the revenue-sale, entered appearance and prayed that the money deposited might be retained in Court, as he intended to institute a suit within a fortnight for the establishment of his alleged right to the rent. A receipt was then granted to the Plaintiff by the Court where the deposit had been made. The claimant, however, did not institute the suit. On the other hand, he took recourse to the summary procedure laid down in Reg. VIII of 1819 for recovery of arrears of rent. The consequence was that the Plaintiff was constrained to deposit the money claimed to prevent the sale of his tenure. The Platntiff now sues to recover damages from the Defendant on the allegation that at the time he was compelled to make the deposit to prevent the sale, there was no arrears due from him. The Defendant resisted the claim on the ground that an arrear of rent was due from the Plaintiff who was not competent to make a deposit under sec. 61.

BATA KRISHNA RANA v. JANKI NATH PANDAY.

It cannot be disputed that sec. 61, literally construed by itself, is applicable to the case of the Plaintiff. It provides that when the tenant entertains a boná fide doubt as to who is entitled to receive the rent, he may present to the Court having jurisdiction to entertain a suit for rent of the tenure an application in writing for permission to deposit in Court the full amount then due. It is not questioned that the Plaintiff is a tenant. It is also not seriously contested, and upon the facts stated it cannot be contested, that in the events which have happened, the tenant may entertain a boná fide doubt as to who is entitled to receive rent from him. Sec. 61 is, consequently, primâ facie applicable. But reliance is placed, on behalf of the Defendant, upon cl. (e) of sec. 195, which provides that nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act shall affect any enactment relating to putni tenures in so far as it relates to those tenures. The question, consequently, arises whether sec. 61 does in any way affect an enactment relating to putni tenures. We invited the learned Vakil for the Defendant to specify the particular provision of Reg. VIII of 1819 which is affected by sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but he was constrained to admit that he could not point out any such section. On the other hand, an examination of the provisions of Reg. VIII of 1819 indicates that there is no section which corresponds to sec. 54 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. If the Putni Regulation had contained a provision as to the time and place for payment of putni rent, it might have been plausibly argued that sec. 61 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if applied to putni tenures, would affect the provisions of the Putni Regulation. On these grounds, we hold that sec. 61 is applicable to a putnidar and it was open to the Plaintiff to deposit in Court the putni rent in the manner he did. The consequences which follow from such a deposit are stated in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 62, which provides that a receipt given under the section shall operate as an acquittance for the amount of the rent payable by the tenant and deposited in the same manner and to the same extent as if that amount of rent had been received by the person entitled to rent. Consequently, at the time when the proceedings under Reg. VIII of 1819 were instituted at the instance of the Defendant, there was no arrear of rent due from the Plaintiff. The inference follows that the Plaintiff is entitled to be indemnified on account of money paid under wrongful compulsion of legal process. Fatima Khatoon v. Mohamed Jan (1), Dulichand v. Ram Kishen (2), Kanhaya Lal v. National Bank (3).

BATA KRISHNA RANA v. JANKI NATH PANDAY.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the decree of dismissal made by the Court below set aside. The suit will stand decreed for the sum of Rs. 110-11-6 with interest thereon at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the 15th May 1913 up to this date. The sum decreed will bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from this date till realisation. The Plaintiff will also recover his costs both here and in the Court below with interest as usual. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at three gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 5 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1914,
Heard,
30, January
and
3, February.
Judgment,
3, February.

PROKASH CHANDRA KUNDU and ors., Accused, Petitioners,
v.
KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Excise Act [V (B. C.), of 1909], secs. 67, 70—Rules framed under sec. 85—R. 8, Chap. X, r. 75—Distinction between the old and the new Acts—Sec. 67, scope of—"Open place" in r. 75, meaning of—Sec. 70, duty of a searching officer under—Rioting—Separate sentence under sec. 353, I. P. C., when common object of riot is to commit that offence.

Where the Deputy Inspector of Excise on receipt of information that he would find certain persons in the act of illicitly distilling liquor if he went to a certain village went there with two Sub-Inspectors and a large number of peons, who actually saw the Petitioners removing the distilling apparatus, but before they had time to enter the house and arrest these persons or to make any search whatever the Petitioners proceeded to beat the peons, and were convicted under secs. 147 and 353, I. P. C.:

Held—That as there was no search, the conviction could not be attacked on the ground of non-observance of the formalities relating to search.

Sec. 67 of Act V of 1909 gives wider powers to excise officers than were given to them by the Act of 1878. The words "any officer of the excise" in that section would include a peon.

The expression "open place" in r. 75 of the rules framed under sec. 85 which lays down that officers below the rank of Inspector of Excise may exercise in open places only the power conferred by sec. 67 means "open" in the ordinary sense as opposed to "closed," but does not include a dwelling house; but two Sub-Inspectors and a Deputy Inspector being present there was no restriction on their entering the house for the purposes mentioned in sec. 67.

The letter of the law appears to make it necessary for an officer acting under sec. 70 of the Act to record the grounds of his belief before he enters to search any place, but the provisions of sec. 67 are not with regard to the searching of any place, but with regard to the arrest of any person

(1) 12 M. I. A. 65 (1868).
(2) L. R. 8 I. A. 93 : s. c. I. L. R. 7 Cal. 648 (1881).
(3) 17 C. W. N. 541 ; s. c. L. R. 40 I. A. 56 (1913).

PROKASH CHANDRA KUNDU v. KING-EMPEROR.

openly committing an offence whether in a house or in the open, and the officer who is empowered to arrest under sec. 67 in a house, that is any officer of the rank of Sub-Inspector or above it need not observe the formalities in conducting a search as laid down by r. 8, Ch. X, of the Excise Rules.

That persons who are shown to have committed a separate offence under sec. 353 should receive a separate punishment even although the common object of the riot is to commit that offence.

This was a Rule against the order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Arambagh, dated the 19th of November 1913, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentencing them each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months and further convicting the Petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 under sec. 353, I. P. C., and sentencing them each to undergo 2 months' rigorous imprisonment in addition, an appeal from which order was dismissed by the Deputy Magistrate of Hooghly, on the 12th of December 1913.

The facts material for this report will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Caspersz and Babu Monmotho Nath Mukherjee for the Petitioners.

Mr. Orr and Babu Srish Chandra Chaudhury for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling on the District Magistrate of Hooghly to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the petitioners should not be set aside or otherwise modified as to this Court may seem good on the grounds, firstly, that there having been no search in accordance with the provisions of the law and the Excise officers not having observed any of the formalities required by law, the resistance offered to them was not unlawful and the conviction under sec. 147 is bad in law ; and secondly, that the Excise officers were not acting in the exercise of their duty and the conviction under sec. 353, I. P. C., is therefore bad in law.

We have had the provisions of both the Excise Acts of 1878 and the present Act V of 1909 (B. C.) laid before us and we find that the provisions of the new Act are substantially the same as that of the old, but are stated with much greater clearness and in much greater detail. We may remark that in one particular, with which we are specially concerned in this case, sec. 67 gives wider powers to Excise officers than any powers that were given to them by the Act of 1878. Sec. 67 says "any officer of the Excise," which would include a peon, "may subject to any restrictions prescribed by the Local Government by Rules made under sec. 85 arrest without warrant any person found committing an offence punishable under sec. 46 ;" and for the present we need not concern ourselves with secs. 68, 69 and 70 which prescribe a formal procedure upon information to the Collector, to any Collector or Magistrate or to a Collector or Excise Officer not below such rank as the Local Government by notification may prescribe.

What is stated in this case is that the Deputy Inspector of Excise had information that he would find certain persons in the act of illicitly distilling liquor if he went to this village. He accordingly went with two Sub-Inspectors and a large number of peons who, from the finding, actually saw the Appellants and their men removing the distilling apparatus, which the Magistrate found they probably afterwards destroyed, as no traces of it have been found. But before they had time to enter the house and arrest these persons or to make any search whatever, the accused sallied out and proceeded to beat the peons. The unlawful assembly was joined by two men of higher rank, Prokash Chandra Kundu and Basanta Bhattacharjee, and the finding is clear that these two men were actually found taking part in the rioting. But as regards the accused Bassanta, the first Court held that inasmuch as he did not take any active part in the assault he might be absolved from the charge under sec. 353, which was a separate substantive charge and not raised by implication under sec. 149.

Taking then the simple facts it would appear that these officers were acting under sec. 67 of Act V of 1909, and that before they had time to do anything lawful or unlawful, they were wantonly assaulted by the Dubys encouraged and assisted by the other two petitioners Prokash and Basanta. That being so, the legal questions on which the Rule was issued do not seem to arise. There was no search and therefore it cannot be said that there was a search not in accordance with the provisions of the law, and there were no formalities to be observed at the time the assault was committed.

We wish to make it clear what it is that the law requires in the way of formalities. There are two portions of the Rules made under sec. 85 which deal with duties of officers in this respect. The one is rule 75 at page 69 of the rules dealing with restrictions of the exercise of powers conferred by secs. 66 and 67, and that says, "Officers below the rank of Inspector of Excise may exercise in open places only the power conferred by sec. 67;" the expression open place in this rule means open in the ordinary sense as opposed to closed, but does not include a dwelling house. Obviously two Sub-Inspectors and a Deputy Inspector being present, there was no restriction on their entering the house for the purposes mentioned in sec. 67. But as a matter of fact as we have seen they did not enter the house.

Then there are the provisions of Chap. X of the Rules dealing with detection, investigation and trial of offences. Rule 8 of that Chapter lays down that the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code, especially secs. 101, 102 and 103 which apply to searches must be carefully observed by the officer who makes a search with or without warrant. Every officer who conducts a search will fill up Form 126. When a search is made without warrant, the officer conducting the search will record either separately or at the foot of the counterfoil of Form 126 the grounds of his belief that an offence punishable under secs. 46, 48, 52 or 53 has been committed and the reasons for considering that it is not advisable to obtain a search warrant. Here again this Rule has no application to this case, because no search was made. But supposing that the officer had entered the house under sec. 67 and tried to arrest without warrant any person found illicitly distilling, or to seize and detain any article which he had reason to believe to be liable to confiscation under the Act or detain and search any person upon whom, and any vessel, raft, vehicle, animal, package, receptacle or covering in or upon which he may have reasonable cause to suspect any such article to be,—it would not have been necessary for him to record his reasons before acting under sec. 67. If he was acting under sec. 70, the letter of the law appears to make it necessary that the ground of his belief should be recorded before he enters to search any place. But the provisions of sec. 67 are not with regard to the searching of any place. They are with regard to the arrest of any person openly committing an offence whether in a house or in the open ; and the officer who is empowered to arrest under sec. 67 in a house, that is, any officer of the rank of Sub-Inspector or above it, need not fill in the Form 126 unless he finds it necessary further to make a search in the house. Then he will fill up the Form for the information of the authorities, and he will record at the foot of the counterfoil of the Form the ground of his belief, etc. But here, as we have said, there was no occasion for a formal search. Certain persons were seen committing an offence, and before they could be arrested, the Excise officers were beaten in the open, and the articles which constituted the evidence of the offence were removed.

That being the finding we think it is clear that the assault upon these officers was wholly unjustifiable, and that the riot was one of a very lawless and serious nature, and that the petitioners have been very leniently dealt with.

As regards the separate sentence under sec. 353, it is clear that persons who are shown to have committed a separate offence under sec. 353 should receive a separate punishment even although the common object of the riot is to commit that offence; and the argument of the learned Counsel that the accused Basanta Bhattacharjee was acquitted, he therefore cannot be convicted under sec. 147 with the common object of committing an offence under sec. 353, shows to what an impasse any doctrine to the contrary would lead us. The Rulings of the Court have for a long series of years been to the effect that separate sentence should not be passed upon people convicted of rioting for the offence which is specifically stated to have been the common object of the assembly, unless, as has been held in several cases, a specific charge is laid against the individual members of committing such an offence. In this case it would appear that all the offenders were rightly convicted of rioting and that two of the petitioners were also found to have taken part in the assault ; whereas the second petitioner Basanta Bhattacharjee was found to have taken no part in the actual assault. But it is clear that the encouragement of riot of this kind is quite sufficient to bring him within the purview of the law of rioting ; and it is also clear that those persons who committed separable acts of assault should be more severely punished than those who did not. The question is rather an academical one, inasmuch as the whole of the sentence which is passed could very well have been given under the rioting section without having recourse to the other section.

For all these reasons we are of opinion that the Rule must be discharged. The Petitioners will surrender to their bail and serve out the remainder of their sentence.

Rule discharged.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

No. 45 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914.
Heard,
26, March.
Judgment,
31, March.

DEDAR BUX and another,
Accused,
v.
SYAMAPADA MALAKAR,
Complainant.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 116

DEDAR BUX v. SYAMAPADA MALAKAR.

4 (1) (h), 190, cl. (a), (c)—Cognizance—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to summon persons not named in complaint, on evidence for prosecution—Cl. (c), sec. 190, scope of—Complaint and complainant, meaning of.

A complaint was filed against several persons before the Magistrate under secs. 342, 363, I. P. C., by the husband of a girl against whom the offences were said to have been committed. The Magistrate ordered the complainant to prove his case, but before the date fixed the complainant filed a petition withdrawing the complaint. The Magistrate, however, examined witnesses on the date fixed and found that there was no satisfactory evidence against the persons complained against, but he summoned two other persons under secs. 342, 363, 353, I. P. C., holding that there was evidence against them :

Held—That the Magistrate took cognizance under cl. (1) (a) of sec. 190, Cr. P. C., and had jurisdiction to try the persons summoned by him.

A Magistrate having taken cognizance of a complaint can also proceed against another person, who although not mentioned in the complaint, appears on the evidence for the prosecution to have been concerned in the commission of the offence.

Cl. (c) of sec. 190 deals with cases where there has been neither a formal complaint nor a police report, and independently of these the Magistrate takes the initiative upon information received from any person other than a police officer or upon his own knowledge or suspicion.

It is clear from the definition of "complaint" in cl. (h), sub-sec. (1) of sec. 4, Cr. P. C., that it is not necessary that the complainant should always be the party directly aggrieved by the commission of the offence and the husband of the girl was a competent person to apply to the Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code.

That in the circumstances of the case the Magistrate was right in ordering examination of witnesses in order to ascertain if there was any substance in the petition of withdrawal and in the complaint.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., from the Sessions Judge of Hooghly, recommending that the order of the Deputy Magistrate of Hooghly, dated the 20th November 1913, issuing summons on each of the accused under secs. 342, 363 and 352, I. P. C., be set aside for the reasons set forth in his letter of reference.

The facts will appear from the letter of reference, the material portion of which is set out below :

"On the 15th September 1913, Syamapada Das Malakar lodged a petition of complaint under secs. 342 and 363 of the Indian Penal Code before Babu S. C. Sen, Deputy Magistrate of Hooghly, against (1) the Hon'ble Maulvi Mazharal Anwar, (2) his wife, (3) and (4) his two daughters. On examination by the Deputy Magistrate the said Syamapada Malakar stated that his wife, Siddheswari Dasi, a girl of 11 years of age, was missing about the middle of Asarh last (latter end of June or beginning of July 1913) from her mother's house at Bali in the town of Hooghly, that on information received from one Nanda Madak and one Suren Madak that the girl was seen by them at Maulvi Anwar's house, Sudhir Ranjan Kar, brother of the girl, lodged information before the Police, that on hearing this Maulvi Anwar sent away the girl from his house, that the girl returned to her father's house the preceding Saturday (13th September 1913), that she told the complainant that when one day she was supplying flowers to shops near Anwar Sahib's house, the latter 'signed to her and took her to his house and made her a Mahomedan, and made her eat food forbidden to Hindus and kept her confined in his house so long.' After the examination of the complainant the Magistrate recorded the following order on the 15th September 1913: 'The charge is a serious one and is against a highly respectable inhabitant of this town. The complainant has got back his wife who is said to be only 11 years of age. Complainant will prove his case on the 30th instant.' This, under sec. 202, implies that the complainant was distrusted. On the 17th September 1913, long before the date fixed for the preliminary enquiry, the complainant Syamapada made a petition for withdrawing the case saying that he had come to know on enquiry that his wife, advised by some bad people during his absence, had made untrue statements through fear, that he would not be able to prove the truth of the complaint, that the accused were innocent and that he did not want to prosecute the case, which should be dismissed. The application was ordered to be put up on the date fixed.

DEDAR BUX v. SYAMAPADA MALAKAR.

"On the 30th September 1913, which was fixed for the hearing of the case, the following order was made: 'The complainant is present. He applied before, saying he was unwilling to proceed with the case. This is a serious charge. The witnesses must be examined. Summon them and fix the case for the 3rd October next.' After 3 adjournments and examining the girl and the witnesses the Magistrate recorded the following order on the 20th November 1913: 'Read Police papers and the evidence. The real complainant in this case is the girl herself named Siddheswari Dasi. From her statement and the statement of other witnesses it appears that there is no satisfactory evidence against the persons complained against. There is, however, evidence against one Dedar Bux who is said to have made the girl a Mahomedan and another woman, a maid-servant named Bason. These two persons Dedar Bux and Bason will be summoned under sec. 342, I. P. C., and sec. 363, I. P. C., and sec. 352, I. P. C. Fix case for the 2nd December next.'

"This order of the 20th November 1913 is recommended for revision for the reasons given below:—

"The Magistrate says he has taken cognizance of the case under sec. 190 (a), Criminal Procedure Code, that is, on a complaint, and wanted the complainant to prove his case. The complainant said that he could not prove the case, and that the persons complained against were innocent. After this, in a case taken cognizance of on a complaint, there was nothing else to do than to dismiss the complaint under sec. 203. The order of the 30th September was without jurisdiction in a complaint case, as the complainant declined to prove his case, which he admitted was not true. The seriousness of the allegations made and the position of the persons involved in them might perhaps have made a further inquiry desirable; but that, I apprehend, could not be done as a continuation of the complaint case. It appears that there was a Police inquiry into the matter, but nothing came out of it. And the only way in which such further action as might be considered to be desirable in the ends of justice could be taken, would be, so far as I understand the scheme of the Criminal Procedure Code, on the motion of the Magistrate himself under sec. 190 (1), (c), a power which the present Magistrate does not possess. In his explanation the learned Magistrate takes up a position which seems to show that he was thinking of Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (1). But the facts are different here. There it was a case on a Police report, of which the Magistrate had full seisin; it was not a case on a complaint, governed by secs. 202 and 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code, and what is more pertinent, there was no repudiation of the complaint before even the preliminary inquiry was held, and before any process had issued. I recommend that the whole proceeding be quashed, and the complaint dismissed under sec. 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code."

DEDAR BUX v. SYAMAPADA MALAKAR.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjee and Gour Chandra Pal for the Petitioners.

This is a reference by the Sessions Judge for the quashing of the summons against the accused.

[TEUNON, J.—Do you ask us to quash the proceedings on the merits?]

The Judge has made a reference on one point, but the whole record is before your Lordships and having regard to the peculiar circumstances of the case I ask your Lordships to quash the proceedings on the merits.

The Magistrate should have dismissed the complaint, because the complainant when called upon to prove his case appeared in Court and wanted to withdraw. Whatever the Magistrate did thereafter was on his own responsibility.

The only fact alleged against Dedar Bux who is one of the two persons summoned is that he converted the girl to Mahomedanism. But this is neither kidnapping nor wrongful confinement for which offences summonses have been issued.

This case was started on the complaint of the husband, and the Magistrate holds the erroneous view that the girl wife was the real complainant. If the case is found false, she will say that she never set the law in motion.

[SHARFUDDIN, J.—Although only four persons were named by the complainant, the Magistrate has taken cognizance of the offence and he has summoned the Petitioners on the evidence—that is the difficulty in your way.]

[Mr. Orr.—I have only to refer your Lordships to Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (1), Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3)].

There is also a case in Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (2). In the case in Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (1), there was a police report. In the information on which investigation was started, the accused was mentioned, though not by name.

[TEUNON, J.—The case in Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3) was not on a police report.]

The observation in that case is obiter.

[TEUNON, J.—That may be so; but what about the case in Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakravarti (1).]

The case was not properly argued at the Bar. One would expect the case in Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (2) to be cited. The facts of the present case are distinguishable. Mr. Justice Prinsep in his commentary says that the case may require further consideration.

(1) 4 C. W. N. 367 (1900).

(2) 1 C. W. N. 105 (1896).

(3) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 786 (1899).

DEDAR BUX v. SYAMAPADA MALAKAR.

There is another case decided by Prinsep and Hill, JJ., Raghab Acharya v. Empress (4).

[SHARFUDDIN, J.—That case is against you.]

As regards the question why your Lordships should interfere at this stage, I refer to Chandiproshad v. Abdur Rahman (5). As observed by the then Chief Justice, whenever it is brought to the notice of this Court that a person is being subjected to the harassment of an illegal prosecution, it is the bounden duty of this Court to interfere.

The present case is one of harassing prosecution and should be quashed. This Court has always the power of quashing mala fide prosecutions. What can be more mala fide than what appears in the present case, namely, that a little girl was caught hold of by intriguing people who had this case started.

Mr. Orr for the Crown.

I do not agree that Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3) is obiter dictum. (Refers to p. 788.) The facts are like those of this case. Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakrabartty (1) is somewhat different, but the principle is there.

[SHARFUDDIN, J.—Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (2) is against you.]

[TEUNON, J.—The case in Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (2), was not also argued at the Bar. So Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (2) and Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chakrabartty (1) are on the same footing.]

Babu Dasarathi Sanyal in reply.—Jagat Chandra Mozumdar v. Queen-Empress (3) is really obiter. A decision on a point of law on which the case is not decided is obiter dictum. The case was decided on an altogether different ground.

C. A. V.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a reference made to this Court by the Sessions Judge of Hooghly. The facts which have led to the present reference are these: one Syamapada Malakar complained to the Magistrate against four persons, namely, the Hon'ble Maulvi Mazharal Anwar, his wife and his two daughters under secs. 342 and 363, I. P. C. His complaint was that his 11 years old wife, named Siddheswari Dasi, was missing from the middle of the month of Asarh, that is to say, the latter end of June or beginning of July 1913, that she returned on the 13th September 1913 and told him that while she was near the house of Maulvi Mazharal Anwar, he made a sign to her, took her to his house, made her a Mahomedan and further made her eat food forbidden to a Hindu and kept her confined in the house. On the filing of this complaint the Magistrate passed the following order: "The charge is a serious one and is against a highly respectable inhabitant of this town. The complainant has got back his wife who is said to be only 11 years of age. Complainant will prove his case on the 30th instant." On the 17th September 1913, long before the date fixed for the enquiry, the complainant made a petition for the withdrawal of the case saying that he had come to know on enquiry that his wife had made untrue statements through fear, that he would not be able to prove the truth of the complaint, that the accused were innocent and that he did not want

(1) 4 C. W. N. 867 (1900).
(2) 1 C. W. N. 105 (1896).
(3) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 786 (1899).
(4) 3 C. W. N. ccxxix (1899).
(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 181 (1894).

to prosecute the case which should be dismissed. This application was ordered to be put up on the date fixed, which was the 30th September. On the 30th September 1913 the following order was passed—"The complainant is present. He applied before, saying he was unwilling to proceed with the case. This is a serious charge. The witnesses must be examined. Summon them and fix the case for the 3rd October next." On the 20th November 1913 the following order was passed by the Magistrate—"Read police papers and the evidence. The real complainant in this case is the girl herself, named Siddheswari Dasi. From her statement and the statement of other witnesses it appears that there is no satisfactory evidence against the persons complained against. There is, however, evidence against one Dedar Bux who is said to have made the girl a Mahomedan and another woman, a maid-servant named Bason. These two persons, Dedar Bux and Bason, will be summoned under sec. 342, I. P. C., and sec. 363, I. P. C., and sec. 352, I. P. C. Fix the case for the 2nd December next." It is this order that has been referred to us for revision. The question is whether the Magistrate took cognizance of the case under sec. 190, cl. (1) (a) or under cl. (1) (c) of that section. If he had taken cognizance of the case under cl. (1) (c) of the section, he should have proceeded to observe the formalities provided in sec. 191, Cr. P. C. If he took cognizance under cl. (1) (a), the Magistrate had jurisdiction to try Dedar Bux and Bason against whom he issued processes. The Magistrate in question, we may observe, is not empowered by the Local Government to take cognizance under cl. (c) of sec. 190, Cr. P. C. The original complaint was no doubt not against Didar Bux and Bason Bibee, but the Magistrate had already taken cognizance of the offence mentioned in the complaint. From the evidence before him he came to the conclusion that there was not satisfactory evidence against the four persons mentioned in the complaint, but there was evidence against Dedar Bux and Bason Bibee of the offences under secs. 342, 352 and 363, I. P. C. The offences under the two former sections are compoundable, while the offence under the last is not compoundable. The complaint was of very serious offences; and this complaint was soon followed by a petition of withdrawal by the complainant and not by the girl against whom the offences were said to have been committed. We are of opinion that the Magistrate was right in ordering examination of witnesses in order to ascertain if there was any substance in the petition of withdrawal and in the complaint.

Now, the next question is whether the Magistrate could take cognizance of the offence against Dedar Bux and Bason Bibee which came to light in the evidence given by the witnesses. The Magistrate in his explanation has relied on the case of Charu Chaadra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chackravarti (1). The learned Sessions Judge, however, in his letter tries to distinguish the facts of this reported case from those of the present case by pointing out that the reported case was on a police report of which the Magistrate had full seisin and that there was no repudiation of the complaint in that case. The present case, however, is on a written complaint by the husband of the girl Siddheswari Dasi. The expression "complaint" has been defined in cl. (h), sub-sec. (1) of sec. 4, Cr. P. C. It is clear from the definition that it is not necessary that the complainant should always be the party directly aggrieved by the commission of the offence. The really aggrieved party is the complainant's wife. But according to the definition, the husband is a competent person to apply to the Magistrate with a view to his taking action under the Code.

DEDAR BUX v. SYAMAPADA MALAKAR.

In the above reported case the complainant had lodged his complaint before a Railway police officer against four Babus. At the time of the police enquiry the complainant had indentified one Bhutnath Mookerjee as one of the accused. This accused was sent up for trial and was convicted and sentenced. At the trial it appeared upon the evidence of one of the witnesses that Charu Chandra Das and Atul Krishna were concerned in the crime. The Deputy Magistrate issued summonses and instituted proceedings against these two. Against this a Rule was obtained from this Court. It was held that the Magistrate did not act without jurisdiction. It was also held in that case that the Magistrate had cognizance of the offence. The case having been duly referred to him and having cognizance of the offence it was his duty to proceed to deal with the evidence brought before him and to see that justice was done in regard to any person who might be proved by the evidence to be concerned in that offence. No doubt, in the reported case the complaint was made to a police officer who made a report. The present case was upon a complaint. In the reported case as well as in the present case cognizance of the offence was taken on the evidence produced on behalf of prosecution. If the Magistrate had received information from any person other than a police officer or on his own knowledge or suspicion he could not take cognizance of the offence as he would undoubtedly be barred under cl. (c) of sec. 190 of the Code. Cl. (c) deals with cases where there has been neither a formal complaint, nor a police report and independently of these the Magistrate takes the initiative upon information received from any person other than a police officer or upon his own knowledge or suspicion. In the present case he took the initiative on a complaint and in the reported case on a police report; and in both the cases, the Magistrate issued processes against the persons whose names transpired in the prosecution evidence during the trial. We are, therefore, of opinion that the decision on this point in the reported case is equally applicable to the present case.

We have been referred to an unreported case which was revision case No. 419 of 1899, decided on the 14th July of that year, as an authority showing that whenever a Magistrate takes cognizance of an offence which comes to light only on the evidence recorded by him, he takes such cognizance under cl. (c) of sec. 190. In this unreported case one Bonomali was the accused. But from the evidence given by the witnesses for the defence of Bonomali, it appeared that another person named Raghab was concerned in the same transaction or offence. The Deputy Commissioner proceeded against Raghab and examined witnesses who had been already examined in the trial of Bonomali as witnesses for the prosecution against Raghab. It was held "although as it has been held the Magistrate is competent at the trial against one person to proceed against another who may appear upon the evidence taken to be concerned in that offence and that in doing so, it cannot properly be regarded that he is acting within the terms of sec. 190, cl. (c), so as to enable the accused person to object to that Magistrate proceeding further in the case, still in laying down this view of the law it was contemplated that the two persons should be on trial together in the same case or for the same offence. It was never intended that this rule should be applied to a case where the trial of the second accused was not for the same offence for which the first accused was tried, but on other evidence adduced on behalf of the defence of the first accused." It was further held that such proceeding cannot be regarded as a proceeding upon a complaint or any other foundation upon which the case originally proceeded. It must be regarded as being within the terms of sec. 190, cl. (1) (o). It is clear, therefore, on the authority of this unreported case also, that a Magistrate having taken cognizance of a complaint can also proceed against another person who, although not mentioned in the complaint, appears on the evidence for the prosecution to have been concerned in the commission of the offence. In this unreported case it was held that the Magistrate had taken cognizance under sec. 190, cl. (c), not because Raghab was not mentioned in the complaint, but because his name did not transpire in the evidence for the prosecution. His name in connection with the offence came to light in the statements of witnesses on behalf of Bonomali, the other accused. This case, therefore, also supports the view taken in the case of Charu Chandra Das v. Narendra Krishna Chackravarti (1). There is, however, the case of Khudiram Mookerjee v. Empress (2). In this case one Khudiram had been summoned before a Deputy Magistrate as a witness for the prosecution in a case instituted against one Kurso and the Magistrate in the course of the trial, upon the facts disclosed by the evidence of another witness for the prosecution implicating Khudiram in the commission of the offence complained of, placed him on the trial along with the accused in that case. It was held that the Magistrate had taken cognizance under sec. 191, cl. (c) [now sec. 190, cl. (1) (c)]. We have also been referred to the case of Jagat Chandra Mozumder v. Queen-Empress (3). On a perusal of this case we find that the question involved in the present case was not decided.

DEDAR BUX v. SYAMAPADA MALAKAR.

On a full consideration of the law and authorities placed before us we are of opinion that in the present case the Magistrate took cognizance under clause (1) (a) of sec. 190 of the Code. We are supported in this view by the first two authorities mentioned above.

For the above reasons, we cannot accept the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge and we decline to interfere.

Let the record be returned.

(1) 4 C. W. N. 367 (1900)
(2) 1 C. W. N. 105 (1896).
(3) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 786 (1899).

THE
Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, JUNE 22, 1914. [No. 32.

Contents.

NOTES.

Mr. Justice Sundar Lal.

The Government of India is to be congratulated on having appointed Mr. Sunder Lal to act in the place of Mr. Justice Banerji in the Allahabad High Court. The elevation of Mr. Sundar Lal to the Bench will be welcomed both by the public and the profession. Although the present appointment is a temporary one, Mr. Sundar Lal has accepted it, and we have no doubt that he has done so from a sense of duty. No one in the Allahabad High Court enjoyed a more extensive practice; but it is a well-recognised tradition of the Bar that no lawyer practising in any Court should refuse a seat on the Bench when it is offered to him. But members of the Bar are surely at liberty to refuse officiating appointments. It is, therefore, very commendable on the part of Mr. Sundar Lal that he has not refused even an officiating appointment. We must, however, say that men of his ability and professional reputation should be elevated to the Bench at a much earlier part of their carrer. It would be an advantage both to the State and the public, if the Government would adhere to the principle of this appointment in filling up vacancies on the High Court Benches in future. It is noteworthy that the Times in its recent article on the Judicial System in India also urges the Government never to make judicial appointments from considerations other than ability and character.

Appointment of Mr. Camell as Officiating Second Presidency Magistrate.

We notice that Mr. Camell, Bar.-at-Law, has been appointed to officiate as the Second Presidency Magistrate in place of Mr. Keays who is going on leave. Mr. Camell was a law reporter, and the selection is a good one. He has been placed in charge of the Southern Police Court in Kyd Street.

Codifying the Hindu Law of Wills.

We invite the attention of the Government of India and of the legal profession to a short article contributed to our columns by Sir John Trevelyan, (ex-Judge of the Calcutta High Court, and the author of a well-known commentary on the Hindu Wills Act, and of an excellent treatise on Hindu Law) upon the urgent necessity of a revision of the Hindu Wills Act of 1870. The reasons assigned by him, though brief, are so convincing that it is unnecessary to dilate upon them here. We need only add that a learned Hindu commentator of the Act also has been complaining in our columns about the revolution in the Hindu ideas of devolution of property that is being brought about by the operation of some of the provisions of the Succession Act which are foreign to juristic notions prevailing amongst the Hindus. We believe, the legal profession in India have long been of the same opinion as Sir John Trevelyan, and they accord a hearty welcome to his suggestion. The Act should be divorced from the Indian Succession Act and replaced by a self-contained codification of the Hindu Law of Wills. The provisions of the Succession Act should be modified and amended in the light of judicial decisions and then judiciously incorporated into the new Code, taking care that they do not militate against the Hindu ideas of devolution and vested and contingent interests in property. If need be, the Government should entrust the task of preparing a draft Code to a representative committee or commission composed of practical lawyers and judges from different parts of India, as was done in the case of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. The draft Code should then be circulated and the opinion of the legal profession and the High Courts in the different Provinces should be obtained, before it is considered and passed by the Imperial Legislative Council.

Judicial Reform in India.

The London Times devoted a long article on Judicial Reform in India in its issue of the 25th of May last. Although we cannot subscribe to the opinions expressed there, under different heads and sub-heads, upon the various aspects of the present system of judicial recruitment, still we welcome it as an admission evidently proceeding from a well-informed and influential quarter that the need for reform is urgent and cannot be put off indefinitely without serious prejudice to the prestige and efficiency of British administration of justice in India. The article opens with the hackneyed theme of the absence of legal training in the case of the members of the Indian Civil Service and the consequent disadvantages they labour under in the discharge of their judicial duties. The complaints under this head cover grounds already well threshed out by such veteran members of the Service as Sir Robert Fulton and Sir Henry Prinsep. The remedy suggested has also no novelty about it. The self-same suggestion that members of the Service should be given leave and allowances on a more liberal scale re-appears in a more amplified form. There is, however, some novelty in the further suggestion for the appointment by Government of a sort of supervisor to check the quality and progress of the legal training of officers availing themselves of leave for the purpose. The scheme, however, savours of impracticability, since it is common experience that a man after he has taken to some avocation in life is ill-fitted to revert to a life of tutelage. Adverting to recruitment of Judges from the legal profession in India, the Times candidly admits that it is the Indian lawyers who have come to the forefront of the profession since some time past and that it would be an advantage to the State to recruit the High Court Judges from amongst them. The recommendation of the Times that such appointments should be offered to the best qualified men irrespective of class or creed will surely meet with public support and, we hope, will also commend itself to Government.

New Rules regarding Police Courts in Calcutta.

The current issue of the Calcutta Gazette contains new rules defining the ordinary local limits of the jurisdiction of the several Police Courts in the town of Calcutta and providing for the distribution of business and the place and time of sitting of those Courts. These rules which have been framed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate under sec. 21, sub-sec. (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure and have been sanctioned by the Governor in Council supersede the old rules on the subject.

Henceforth complaints and cases arising in the thanas of Shampukur, Kumartoli, Burtala, Sukea Street and Jorabagan and within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Port-police, Division I, shall ordinarily be heard at the Northern Police Court in Nimtola Street. Complaints and cases arising in the thanas of Jorasanko, Barabazar, Colootola, Waterloo Street and Bowbazar, and within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Port-police, Division II, shall ordinarily be heard at the Central Police Court and those arising in the thanas of Muchipara, Puddopukur, Fenwick Bazar, Taltola, Collinga, Park Street, Victoria Terrace and Hastings and within the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Port-police, Division III, shall ordinarily be heard at the Southern Police Court in Kyd Street. The rules provide that in case of emergency any Presidency Magistrate may hold his Court at such place and hours as he may consider best suited to meet the requirements of the public service. The Magistrates in charge of the Northern and Southern Police Courts may divide the work between themselves and the Honorary Magistrates who reside within the areas respectively assigned to these Courts. The Honorary Magistrates shall take cognizance of such complaints and cases as may be made over to them by these Magistrates. The Chief Presidency Magistrate will distribute the work at the Central Police Court and during the casual or other absence of any Magistrate or in the event of any pressure of work occurring in any Court or for any other reason the Chief Presidency Magistrate may arrange for the distribution of the work among other Presidency Magistrates.

THE HINDU WILLS ACT, 1870.

Has not the time arrived when the Government of India might be expected to compose a Code of law applicable to Hindu Wills throughout British India?

Since the Act of 1870 became law, the volume of decisions on Hindu Wills has been large, and many of them have accentuated the serious defects which existed in that Act.

The Hindu Wills Act of 1870 only applies to a portion of British India, viz., what was then the Province of Lower Bengal and the towns of Bombay and Madras. The other parts of India are entitled to require their law on this subject to be put into shape, and there is no reason why the Law of Hindu Wills should not be uniform throughout British India.

To take one matter only, a will by word of mouth is valid except in cases to which the Act applies. It must now rarely happen that a Hindu makes a will otherwise than in writing. There are no recent cases in which the Courts have given effect to such wills. The difficulties of proof are too great.

It will be difficult to find in the Indian Statute Book any Act which has been put together in so unsatisfactory a way as that which was employed in the composition of the Hindu Wills Act. The bulk of the Act consists of sections of the Indian Succession Act, which are applied to the Hindu Wills governed by the Hindu Wills Act. The Indian Succession Act was enacted for the benefit of persons who are governed by a system of personal law entirely different from that of the Hindus.

The result of this form of legislation has been that the Courts have had in many cases to declare that particular sections which have been expressly applied to the Hindus by the Wills Act cannot be so applied. Whether this view will eventually be taken by the Judicial Committee, may be open to question. Many of the illustrations also are wholly unsuited to Hindu Wills. There is, however, no real doubt that the Legislature did not intend to make any substantial alteration in the Hindu Law of Wills. They have succeeded in inciting a considerable amount of costly and unnecessary litigation.

It would be quite possible to compose a Code suited to Hindu Wills throughout British India, or if such a Code be composed it should be self-contained and should not incorporate the provisions of any other enactment.

There is a further reason for reconsidering the Hindu Wills Act. During the more than 46 years since it has been enacted the Courts have construed many Hindu Wills. Those decisions should form the basis of a new enactment. Moreover, the practice of Will-making has considerably increased among Hindus, and the subject has become of much greater importance than it was in 1870.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CRIMINAL.)

Indian Penal Code, sec. 423.

RE MANIA GOUNDAN, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 47.

The section makes punishable the act of a person who dishonestly or fraudulently executes an instrument which purports to transfer any property and which contains any false statement relating to the consideration for such transfer or relating to the person or persons for whose use or benefit it is really intended to operate.

It is clear that the law does not make punishable every false statement contained in an instrument of transfer. It must be a statement relating to the consideration or to the person to be benefited thereby.

Coasting Vessels Act (XIX of 1838).

EMPEROR v. HARIDAS LAKHMIDAS, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 111.

Under sec. 4 of the Act, a second registration is quired whenever any change takes place in the name the owner of any harbour craft, for example, in the case of a son carrying on the business of the father who owned a craft and took out a certificate of registry in his own name under sec. 7 of the Act.

Review.

THE STUDENTS' GUIDE TO MUKTEARSHIP EXAMINATION. By Kishori Mohan Das, Muktear, Dacca. Price Rs. 2-8.

This is a handbook for the guidance of Muktearship students in preparing for their examination. It contains the rules and regulations of the Muktearship examination and all the questions set at that examination from its commencement in 1870 up to 1913, with answers.

The answers, so far as we have been able to examine them, seem to be accurate, concise and to the point. Students preparing for the Muktearship examination will, we expect, get considerable assistance from the book.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

COURT OF APPEAL.—Wolf v. R. H. Halford & Sons (Limited). Before LORDS SUMNER, LORD JUSTICE KENNEDY AND MR. JUSTICE A. T. LAWRENCE. 16th March 1914.

A shop-keeper's puff is no warranty—Caveat Emptor.

The Plaintiff claimed damages for breach of warranty of a ring purchased by him. The Plaintiff's complaint was that the Defendants stated at the time of the sale that he was obtaining thoroughly good value. The Defendants denied giving any warranty by those statements.

The trial Judge held that what was stated was a mere puff such as might properly be used by any shop-keeper and that there was no evidence to go to the jury.

The Court affirmed that view and Lord Sumner in the course of his judgment, observed :—

There were really two questions here—the one being in what circumstances were the statements made, and the other, with what intention were they made. It was in evidence that this particular stone had been purchased by the Defendants for £105 and sold by them to the Plaintiff for £155, and it was said that contracts for sale of precious stones stood on a very special footing. He thought, it was quite plain that if what was said here was held to be a warranty, the doctrine of caveat emptor would very largely disappear. It would be a formidable matter for any tradesman to consider, if this was held to be a question for the jury. In commending his goods to customers he might be sued for breach of warranty unless the goods were disposed of on the slot principle.

Fortunately, in this matter, he was guided by authority which had laid it down that the test to be applied was whether it was intended as appearing from all the evidence that the affirmation should be treated as a warranty. That test had been affirmed and adopted by the House of Lords in Heilbut, Symons & Co. v. Buckleton, ([1913] A. C., 30). It was a question for the Court to consider whether there was any evidence. This was not like the case of the sale of the picture [Power v. Barham, (4 A. and E., 473)]. In his judgment the statements made here by Mr. Halford on behalf of the Defendants belonged to the category of opinions. Looking at the evidence given in the present case, he thought it was more consistent with the view that it was an expression of the tradesman's honest intention to recommend his goods, and there was nothing to show any intention to warrant.

Mr. Compston, K. C., and Mr. Drucquer for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Pollock, K. C., and R. J. Willis for the Defendants.

B. D.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before SHARFUDDIN and TEUNON, JJ. REV. No. 616 OF 1914. DIAN BHUYAN, Accused, Petitioner v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party. 21st May 1914.

Indian Railways Act, sec. 129—Rash or negligent act.

This was a Rule granted on the 17th of April 1914 against an order of P. H. Waddell, Esq., Joint Magistrate of Midnapur, dated the 10th of March 1914, convicting Petitioner under sec. 129, Railways Act, and sentencing him to one month's rigorous imprisonment, an application for the reference of which order to the High Court was rejected by W. N. Delevingne, Esq., Sessions Judge of Midnapur, on the 3rd of April 1914.

Their Lordships delivered the following judgment in this case—

In this case the Petitioner was convicted under sec. 129 of the Indian Railways Act and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment. The negligence charged against him is that he drove his cart over a railway crossing in front of an approaching train with the result that there was a collision in which his cart was destroyed and he himself narrowly escaped.

It appears from the evidence on the side of the prosecution that the gate at the crossing was open, and it also appears from the evidence of the 1st witness that when in answer to the invitation of the open gate the Petitioner proceeded to cross, the train was not in motion, but was standing at the distant signal. Under these circumstances we are unable to understand how it has come to be found that the Petitioner was either rash or negligent. On the contrary it appears to us that the negligence is entirely on the side of some Railway officer.

The Rule is made absolute, and the conviction and sentence are set aside. The Petitioner will now be discharged from his bail.

Babu Monmotho Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN AND MULLICK, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 513 OF 1911. RAM LAL PAHARI, Decree-holder, Appellant v. BABU LAL BARIK and another, Judgment-debtors, Respondents. 25th May 1914.

Decree, execution of—Benamidar, application by—Step in aid of execution—Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 180—Assignment.

In 1904 one Narayan Panday obtained a money-decree. He died in the year 1907, and in the same year two of his sons who were minors applied for execution of the decree. After various proceedings the application for execution was struck off and execution was never granted by the Court. After this had happened, the present Appellant brought a suit in May 1909 for declaration against the sons of Narayan Panday that the decree obtained by the latter was obtained on his behalf, that is to say, that Narayan Panday was his benamidar in the matter. This was decreed on compromise in the same year and the terms agreed upon were that Narayan Panday was the benamidar and that the Appellant should have the power to execute the decree. On the 1st October 1910, an application was made for execution, but was refused on the ground that it was time-barred. It was argued in appeal that the application by the sons of Narayan Panday, dated the 7th December 1907, was a step in aid of the execution which had the effect of extending the period of limitation so as to include within it the present application.

Held, that the application was not a step in aid of execution, A benamidar had no power to execute the decree.

Deno Nath Chuckerbutty v. Lalit Coomar Gungopadhaya (I. L. R. 9 Cal. 633) followed.

Balkishen Das v. Bedmati Koer (I. L. R. 20 Cal. 388) distinguished.

That the compromise of July 1909 did not operate as an assignment.

Babu Surendra Mahhub Mullick for the Appellant.

Babu Rajendra Prosad for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

[PRIVY COUNCIL.]

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD MOULTON, LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. 1914, 24, April.	MUSAMMAT HIRAN BIBI and others, Appellants, v. MUSAMMAT SOHAN BIBI, Respondent.

Hindu Law—Alienation—Settlement of dispute by compromise—Hindu widow who is party if thereby alienates property in excess of her powers.

A dispute between the daughters of a deceased Hindu on the one hand and the widow of his alleged adopted son on the other, each party claiming to be solely entitled to the estate, was settled by a compromise, each party getting thereunder a share in the family property. In a suit by a daughter of the alleged adopted son (as one of the reversionary heirs expectant on her mother's death) to set aside the compromise as beyond the competence of a limited owner like her mother:

Held—That the compromise was in no sense of the word an alienation by a limited owner of the family property, but a family settlement in which each party takes a share of the family property by virtue of the independent title which is, to that extent, and by way of compromise, admitted by the other parties.

LALA KHUNNI LAL v. KUNWAR GOBIND KRISHNA NARAIN (1) followed.

This is an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree, dated the 6th April 1911, of the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, which partly affirmed and partly reversed a Judgment and Decree, dated the 26th July 1909, of the District Judge of Benares.

The Plaintiff instituted the suit for a declaration that her reversionary interests in certain moveable and immoveable property were not affected by a compromise, dated the 27th May 1896, and a decree, dated 28th May 1896, passed in accordance with it.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows :—

The litigation related to the estate of one Harish Chandar, whose relationship to the parties will appear from the following pedigree :—

Harish Chandar died in 1856, leaving him surviving his widow, who succeeded him and three daughters. In 1860 she adopted Parsotam Das on the condition, it was alleged by her, that she was to remain the owner of her husband's property during her lifetime. On the 9th December, 1871, she made a Will by which she made allowances in favour of the said Parsotam Das and his children and in order to perpetuate the name of her husband she dedicated and endowed 16 annas of mauza Sheodasa to Sri Thakurji. During her lifetime she remained the manager and superintendent of the temple and the endowed property, and by a Will, dated the 24th January 1893, she provided that after her death her son-in-law Raghunath Das was to be the manager and superintendent of the temple and the endowed property. These dispositions of property were made with the knowledge and consent of Parsotam Das. Parsotam Das executed a document, dated the 29th March 1881, by which he recognised and consented to the dispositions made by her under the Will, dated the 9th December 1871, and relinquished all right or claim to the properties comprised in the Will.

(1) L. R. 38 I. A. 87 : s. c. 15 C. W. N. 545 (1911).

MUSAMMAT HIRAN BIBI v. MUSAMMAT SOHAN BIBI.

He died shortly after December 1883.

Musammat Manki Bahu died on the 1st June 1893, leaving her three daughters her surviving. The deceased lady left some valuable moveables including Government Promissory Notes about which there arose a dispute between her daughters on the one side and the widow and daughters of Parsotam Das on the other.

In 1895 Musammat Puno Bibi instituted a suit against the said Bindesri Bahu. Musammat Hiran Bibi and Musammat Makundi Bibi were also made pro formâ Defendants to the suit She alleged that the daughters of Harish Chandar, her father, were entitled to the whole of his estate, and that the said Parsotam Das, deceased, and his widows and daughters had absolutely no right thereto. She claimed that she together with her two sisters was the owner of certain Government Promissory Notes of which Bindesri Bahu had taken unlawful possession and which she sought to recover by her suit.

The said Bindesri Bahu contested the suit and filed a written statement on the 21st March 1895. She pleaded that Parsotam Das was the lawfully adopted son of Harish Chandar, deceased, and that both under the Hindu Law and the Will of her husband, dated the 9th December 1883, she was the absolute owner of the whole estate of Harish Chandar to the exclusion of the Plaintiff and her sisters.

The suit was settled by a compromise, dated the 27th May 1896, and a decree in accordance with it was made by the Court on the 28th May 1896. The compromise provided that the Government Promissory Notes were to be divided among the Plaintiff and the Defendants in a certain proportion specified therein, and that the management and supervision of mauza Sheodasa which was endowed for the worship of Thakurji was to continue in the hands of the present Defendants.

On the 15th January 1906, the present suit was instituted by Musammat Sohan Bibi in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Benares. Musammat Hiran Bibi, Musammat Makundi Bibi and Musammat Puno Bibi were the principal Defendants and Musammat Bindesri Bahu and Musammat Mohan Bibi were pro formâ Defendants. In her plaint the Plaintiff alleged that her father, Parsotam Das, was the lawfully adopted son and heir of Harish Chandar, that after her father's death her mother succeeded to a life estate therein, and that after her death she and her sister would be the next reversionary heirs. She further alleged that the compromise, dated the 27th May, 1896, had been made by her mother without consideration and without any right. She claimed a declaration that the said compromise and the decree based thereon be declared null and void and of no effect as against her reversionary interests in mauza Sheodasa and Barhi Haveli (a stone-built house) and certain other properties specified by her in the plaint.

MUSAMMAT HIRAN BIBI v. MUSAMMAT SOHAN BIBI.

The principal Defendants contested the suit and filed written statements.

Both sides produced oral and documentary evidence, which was recorded by the District Judge, who delivered his judgment on the 4th March 1907.

He found that the compromise was binding upon the Plaintiff, and observed as follows :—

"In the present instance fraud or collusion is not specifically, at any rate, pleaded ; nor do I think that either is implied. Certainly neither has been proved. I have not the least ground for believing that the compromise entered into by the Plaintiff's mother was either fraudulent or collusive. I have examined the record of the case in which the compromise was effected and find that it bears every appearence of having been genuinely contested. The suit was pending for close on eighteen months. During that time, it is proved, the husband of the Plaintiff here conducted the case of her mother and actually signed the compromise now impugned. At that time the Plaintiff and her husband were living, and have all along since been living, with her mother. It has also been proved that the Plaintiff herself was actually present when the compromise was discussed. Even if she were then a minor, which is not beyond doubt, she was at least 16 or 17 years of age and able to understand the import of the discussion, and undoubtedly was at the time aware when the compromise was filed. Had there been any fraud or collusion on the part of her mother, it is unlikely in the extreme that her husband would have permitted the compromise, and would certainly not have signed it. Nor do I think he would have done so, had it not been, as it has the appearance of having been, made in order to settle for ever all disputes as to what were obviously, in view of the Wills which had been made by Manki Bahu and the relinquishment of the rights by Parsotam Das (all of which were admitted by the parties to that suit), doubtful rights. The fact that it is he who is now prosecuting the Plaintiff's claim precludes the idea that he was at that time in collusion with the Plaintiff's mother and utterly heedless of his own wife's interests. Under such circumstances it is not possible to hold that the compromise was without consideration, or that the Plaintiff's mother had no authority to enter into it, and I am of the opinion, as already stated, that it undoubtedly binds the Plaintiff and that, in face of it, this suit cannot succeed."

He also held that the suit was governed by Article 120 of the Limitation Act, 1877, and that it was barred by time. He accordingly made a decree dismissing the suit with costs.

Against the said decree the Plaintiff appealed to the High Court of Judicature for the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, which (Sir John Stanley, C. J., and Banerji, J.) delivered judgment on the 12th February, 1909. The learned Judges of the High Court held that Parsotam Das was the lawfully adopted son of Harish Chandar, and that the said compromise was not binding upon the Plaintiff and that the suit in so far as it related to immoveable property was not barred by limitation. They accordingly made a decree remanding the suit to the Court below for determination of the remaining issues. In the course of their judgment, they observed as follows :—

"The question is concluded by the decision of this Court in Gobind Krishna Narain v. Khunni Lal (2). In that case it was held that a compromise made by a person holding a Hindu widow's estate in the property of her deceased husband is not binding on the reversioners, even though it has been followed by a decree of Court and that the reversioners can only be bound by a decree made after full contest in a bonâ fide litigation. In the present case the previous litigation was not decided after contest and the matter in dispute was only settled by a compromise entered into by Bindesri Bahu, who held only a widow's estate, if any. In Ram Sarup v Ram Dei (3), it was held that a compromise of this nature amounted to an alienation of the property dealt with by it. Having regard to these rulings, the Plaintiff's suit was maintainable and the Court below was wrong in holding that she was precluded by reason of the compromise and the decree from sustaining her claim. We may observe that on this point the learned advocate for the Respondent has addressed no argument to us.

(2) I. L. R. 29 All. 487 (1907).

MUSAMMAT HIRAN BIBI v. MUSAMMAT SOHAN BIBI.

"As to the plea of limitation, the transaction being an alienation, Art. 125 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act, 1877, clearly applies in so far as the claim relates to immoveable property. As the suit was brought within 12 years of the date of the compromise and the decree, it is clearly within time as regards the immoveable property claimed. As to the moveable property claimed, that article does not apply and the claim to have the alienation set aside is time barred."

On remand the said District Judge found the issues against the Plaintiff and dismissed the suit. But the High Court came to a contrary conclusion and allowed the claim. Hence this appeal, which was heard ex parte.

(3) I.L. R. 29 All. 239 (1906).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dube for the Appellants submitted that the High Court had erred in holding that the compromise, dated the 27th May 1896, was not binding upon the Plaintiff. The decision on which the High Court relied [Gobind Krishna Narain v. Khunni Lal (2)] was reversed by the Judicial Committee: Lala Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna Narain (1). The facts of the present case come within that decision. It was a compromise of doubtful claims of the various contending parties, and the Hindu widow was entitled to settle them by a compromise. All the existing members of the family were parties thereto. There was no fraud or collusion. It bore all the marks of a family settlement, and was in no sense an alienation of the property.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—In this case their Lordships are of opinion that the facts bring it within the decision of Lala Khunni Lal v. Kunwar Gobind Krishna Narain (1), in other words, that the compromise in question is in no sense of the word an alienation by a limited owner of the family property, but a family settlement in which each party takes a share of the family property by virtue of the independent title which is, to that extent, and by way of compromise, admitted by the other parties.

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, that the decree of the High Court should be set aside, that the decree of the District Judge should be restored,

(1) L. R. 38 I. A. 87 : s. c. 15 C. W. N. 545 (1911).
(2) I. L. R. 29 All. 487 (1907).

MUSAMMAT HIRAN BIBI v. MUSAMMAT SOHAN BIBI.

and that the Appellants should have their costs of this appeal and the costs of the suit in both Courts.

Solicitors: Messrs. Barrow, Rogers and Nevill for the Appellants.

B. D. Appeal allowed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD DUNEDIN. LORD MOULTON. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. 1914, Heard, 20, April. Judgment, 11, May.	PETER CHARLES ERNEST PAUL and another, Appellants, v. WILLIAM ROBSON and ors., Respondents.

Ancient lights—Nature of right—What amounts to infringement—Act done should amount to nuisance.

The easement acquired by ancient lights is not measured by the amount of light enjoyed during the period of prescription.

The owner of the dominant tenement obtains a right to so much of it as will suffice for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business according to the ordinary notions of mankind, having regard to the locality and surroundings.

There is no infringement of the right, unless what is done amounts to a nuisance.

JOLLY v. KINE (2) has established that the law as formulated by LORD DAVEY in COLLS'S case (1) is the law laid down by that decision.

This was an appeal from a Judgment of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 1st August 1911, which is reported in Paul v. Robson (5) where the facts are fully stated.

The Appellants claimed that the Respondents had interfered with the enjoyment of their light and air in such a manner as to amount to an actionable nuisance. The trial Judge, Stephen, J., dismissed the suit. He held that although light coming to the Plaintiffs' premises from the east had been obstructed by the Defendants' new building, sufficient quantity of light and air had still been left for the ground and middle floors of the Plaintiffs' premises, sufficient for the purpose of carrying on the business of a shop or office. In short, he found that there was no nuisance caused.

On appeal Sir L. Jenkins, C. J. (Woodroffe, J. concurring) affirmed those findings; they said as follows:—

"Agreeing as I do with the learned Judge's estimate of their evidence, I do not think it necessary to discuss it in detail. It will be sufficient that I should express my conclusion which is that I find, that though there is an abridgement of direct light from the east, there still remains a sufficiency of light for the ordinary purposes of this house and that even the diminution of light to the rooms Nos. 2 and 3 on the ground floor, to which windows Nos. 10, 13 and 16 belong, does not to such a material extent detract from the value of those rooms considered as an integral part of the Plaintiffs' premises, as materially to affect the suitableness of those premises for the purposes for which they may reasonably be regarded as available.

"Though the argument before us has practically been limited to a discussion of the easement of light, complaint is also made of the interference with the access of air to the Plaintiffs' premises, but as to this part also of their case the Plaintiffs have failed to establish an actionable nuisance.

(1) [1904] A. C. 179.
(2) [1907] A. C. 1.
(5) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 59 (1911).

PETER CHARLES ERNEST PAUL v. WILLIAM ROBSON.

"The result then is that I hold that the Plaintiffs have not proved that their premises have been materially affected or injured, or that there has been a sensible deprivation of light and air, sufficient to render the occupation of the premises uncomfortable, or to prevent their being used for purposes of business as beneficially as before.

"Further than this I hold that the Plaintiffs have failed to prove that the selling or letting value of the premises has been diminished : in fact the indications are, if any thing, the other way."

Hence this Appeal.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Hudson, K. C., and Venson for the Appellants.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Respondents.

Mr. DeGruyther took a preliminary objection. He submitted that there were concurrent findings of fact by both the lower Courts, first, that no actionable nuisance had been proved by the Plaintiff, and second, that no damage had been sustained by the Plaintiff by reason of any interference with the Plaintiffs' enjoyment of light and air. He urged that the Appellants ought not to be allowed to question the concurrent findings of fact. The arguments for the Appellants should be confined to the question of law alone. During the argument reference was made to the following cases: Karuppanan Servai v. Srinivasan Chetti (6), Mirza Sajjad Husain v. Nawab Wazir Ali Khan (7).

Mr. Upjohn, K. C., for the Appellants, submitted that the learned Judges of the Courts below had taken a wrong view of the law, and that the findings of fact so arrived at could not be conclusive. The usefulness of each room in the building must be assured to the Plaintiff and it was no defence in law to say that the Plaintiff had a large house. He submitted that the true test was whether the premises were as fit as before, after the deprivation of light and air. He relied upon the opinions of Lord Macnaghten and Lord Lindley, in Colls's case (1). Lord Davey's judgment was applicable to an ordinary case, but here the rooms could not be used for the ordinary purpose and the ground-floor rooms could not be used for business as profitably as before. The Courts below had erred in omitting to ascertain the quantity of light and air the Plaintiffs enjoyed before the interference. They ought to have held that the Plaintiff was entitled to such light and air as would enable him to use it for all purposes for which he used it previously. In any view of the case the Courts below were wrong about the two rooms on the ground floor. Counsel cited and discussed the following authorities. Colls v. The Home and Colonial Stores, Limited (1), Kine v. Jolly (8), Jolly v. Kine (2).

Mr. Hudson, K. C., further submitted that room No. 3 had suffered most injuriously. It had only one window and there was no concurrent finding as regards that room. The Courts below ought to have considered the usefulness of that room by itself, and not looked at the building as a whole. He referred to Griffith v. Richard Clay (9).

Counsels for the Respondents were not heard in reply.

(6) L. R. 29 I. A. 38 (1901).
(7) L. R. 39 I. A. 156, 161 (1912).

(1) [1904] A. C. 179.
(2) [1907] A. C. 1.
(8) [1905] 1 Ch. 480, 497.
(9) [1912] 2 Ch. 291, 298.

PETER CHARLES ERNEST PAUL v. WILLIAM ROBSON.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—The action in which the present appeal is brought is an action in which the Appellants sued the Respondents for infringement of certain rights of light possessed by them in connection with premises known as 7, Esplanade, East, Calcutta, of which they owned the freehold. The Respondents had erected a building known as 8, Esplanade, East, Calcutta, lying to the east of the Appellants' premises, and so situated that the western walls of the Respondents' buildings were parallel to and at a distance of 17 feet from the eastern wall of the Appellants' building. The ground on which the Respondents' building was erected had for more than 20 years previously been occupied by much lower buildings, and it is conceded that the Appellants had acquired rights of light thereby for the windows on the east side of their premises. The new buildings of the Respondents greatly exceed in height the former buildings upon the site and decreased the amount of light coming to the eastern windows of the Appellants, and it is in respect of this interference with the access of light to their windows that the Appellants brought the action.

The action came on for trial with witnesses before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Stephen, sitting as a Judge of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, in its Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction, and on the 29th day of March 1911 he gave judgment dismissing the action. An appeal was brought from that judgment to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal in its Appellate Jurisdiction, and on the 1st day of August 1911 judgment was delivered by that Court dismissing the appeal. It is from this judgment that the present appeal is brought.

Both in the Court of First Instance and in the Court of Appeal the facts of the case are dealt with in detail, and clear findings are given on all relevant points of fact. Their Lordships can find no material difference between the views taken by the two Courts on these points of fact, though the expressions used may not be in all cases indentical. Their Lordships, therefore, would feel justified in holding, if it were necessary, that this is a case of concurrent findings of fact. But in truth the grounds of appeal do not relate to these findings of fact, but to the question whether the Courts below have taken the proper view of the legal rights of the Appellants, and whether, accordingly, the test which they applied as to whether those rights had been infringed was the correct one. This is a pure question of law, and it was admitted by counsel for the Appellants that it practically turns upon the interpretation to be given to the well-known decision of the House of Lords in the case of Colls v. The Home and Colonial Stores, Limited (1), when considered in connection with the later decision of the House of Lords in Jolly v. Kine (2).

Their Lordships do not consider that it is either necessary or profitable to go into the history of the divergent views in respect of the nature and extent of rights of light acquired by prescription that prevailed in the Courts prior to the decision in Colls's case (1). It suffices to say that one stream of authorities gave countenance to the view that by the enjoyment of light for a period of 20 years, there could be acquired an indefeasible

(1) [1904] A. C. 179.
(2) [1907] A. C. 1.

PETER CHARLES ERNEST PAUL v. WILLIAM ROBSON.

right to the enjoyment of a like amount of light in the future. The conflicting stream of authorities countenanced the view that nothing constituted an infringement of rights of light which did not amount to an actionable nuisance, so that the amplitude of previous enjoyment was no measure of the rights acquired thereby. This conflict of views was fully recognised by the noble Lords who took part in the decision of Colls's case (1), and there can be no doubt that it was their intention to decide between them, and to lay down the law in such a manner as to prevent uncertainty in the future.

Mr. Justice Stephen takes as expressing the law laid down by this decision the following quotation from the opinion of Lord Davey in that case :—

"The owner . . . . of the dominant tenement is entitled to the uninterrupted access through his ancient windows of a quantity of light the measure of which is what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business of the tenement according to the ordinary notions of mankind . . . . The single question in these cases is still what it was in the days of Lord Hardwicke and Lord Eldon—whether the obstruction complained of is a nuisance ?"

And the Court of Appeal although they do not so directly base their judgment on the above passage in Lord Davey's opinion, appear to their Lordships to have substantially taken the same test. But in their Lordships' opinion it is not necessary to examine minutely the verbal differences between the expressions used in the Court of Appeal and by the Judge of First Instance. They accept in full the finding in fact of the Judge of First Instance, and they are of opinion that he has consistently applied to them the legal test above formulated. The only question therefore is whether it accurately formulates the law on the subject.

It is evident on reading the opinion of Lord Davey that he intended the passage to be a precise formulation of the rights of a dominant tenement in respect of ancient lights, and his opinion was formally accepted by Lord Robertson who also took part in the decision. The opinion of the Lord Chancellor in that case is equally clear on the essential points that the easement acquired by ancient lights is not measured by the amount of light enjoyed during the period of prescription, and that there is no infringement unless that which is done amounts to a nuisance. It has been suggested that a different view is to be found in the opinions of Lord Macnaghten and Lord Lindley, but although there are passages in these opinions which might, if they stood alone, indicate that those noble Lords considered that to some extent the amount of light enjoyed in the past might influence the rights acquired for the future, there is no reason to think there was any intention on the part of those noble Lords to differ from the conclusions of their colleagues. It must be taken, therefore, that the House of Lords adopted the formulation of the law given by Lord Davey as above mentioned.

But if any doubt remained on the point, it is in their Lordships' opinion set at rest by a consideration of the subsequent decision of the House of Lords in the case of Jolly v. Kine (2). In that case Mr. Justice Kekewich had found as a fact that the obstruction amounted to a nuisance, but in the course of his judgment said that the room affected was "still a well-lighted room." He, gave judgment for the Plaintiff. On appeal to the Court of Appeal there was a division of opinion among the Judges. Romer, L. J., held that under the decision in Colls's case (1) the finding that it was still a well-lighted room was fatal to the Plaintiffs' claim. Vaughan Williams and Cozens Hardy, L. JJ., held to the contrary. On appeal to the House of Lords, their Lordships were equally divided and accordingly the appeal was dismissed. But this division of opinion was not due to any doubt as to the law to be applied. The Lord Chancellor gives his opinion on the law as laid down in Colls's case (1) in the following words :—

(2) [1907] A. C. 1.

"The right of the owner or occupier of a dominant tenement to light is based upon the principle stated by Lord Hardwicke in 1752, in Fishmongers' Company v. East India Company (3), that he is not to be molested by what would be equivalent to a nuisance. He does not obtain by his easement a right to all the light he has enjoyed. He obtains a right to so much of it as will suffice for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business according to the ordinary notions of mankind having regard to the locality and surroundings. That is the basis on which the decision of this House proceeded.

Lord James of Hereford concurred in the judgment delivered by the Lord Chancellor.

These were the judgments of the two noble Lords who were in favour of dismissing the appeal. On the other hand Lord Robertson was of opinion that the appeal should be allowed and in his opinion says :—

"I adhere, as I did in Colls's case (1), to the definition given by Lord Davey in entire accordance with the judgments of the other noble and learned Lords. According to that definition the quantity of light to which right is acquired in 20 years is 'what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business of the tenement according to the ordinary notions of mankind.'"

(1) [1904] A. C. 179.
(3) 1 Dick. 168 (1752).

Lord Atkinson, who was the other member of the Court, was also in favour of allowing the Appeal, and referring to the decision in Colls's case (1), he says :—

"It would appear to me that that case established the principle that there must be an invasion of the legal right of the owner of the dominant tenement sufficient to amount to a nuisance in order to give him a right of action, and that as long as he receives through the windows of his dwelling-house, or in the case of a particular room in his dwelling-house, through the windows of that room, an amount of light which, to use the words of James, L. J., in Kelk v. Pearson (4), is 'sufficient according to the ordinary notions of mankind for the comfortable use and enjoyment' of his dwelling-house, or of the room in it, as the case may be, no nuisance has as regards him been created, and no legal wrong has been inflicted upon him."

And although he does not expressly repeat the well-known passage from Lord Davey's opinion in Colls's case (1), he shows by the language which he uses that he thoroughly agrees with it, and says that to him it appears to be of general application.

In the judgment of the House of Lords in Jolly v. Kine (2), there is therefore an authoritative exposition of the decision in Colls's case (1), and it is established that the law as formulated by Lord Davey is the law laid down by that decision. It is somewhat remarkable therefore that counsel for the Appellants should have sought to treat the decision in Jolly v. Kine (2), as throwing some doubt upon the interpretation of the decision in Colls's case (1), operating, if such an expression could be used, to weaken it in the direction of directing that regard should be had to the extent of previous enjoyment of light. The only explanation of such a view is

(1) [1904] A. C. 179.
(2) [1907] A. C. 1.
(4) L. R. 6 Ch. 809 (1871).

PETER CHARLES ERNEST PAUL v. WILLIAM ROBSON.

that the appeal was in the end dismissed, inasmuch as the House was equally divided. But this was in no way due to any difference of opinion as to the law, but to the fact that the Lord Chancellor felt himself entitled to disregard the finding that the room was "still a well-lighted room" in the sense which those words would naturally convey and to hold them as meaning that it would have been considered to be well-lighted "according to the standard of a crowded city." His Lordship was led to this conclusion by passages in the evidence and the context of Mr. Justice Kekewich's judgment. It was on this ground alone that he was in favour of dismissing the appeal, and therefore the actual result in that case has no bearing on its effect as an authoritative explanation of the law laid down in Colls's case (1).

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that the learned Judge at the trial took the proper test as to whether or not there had been an infringement of the rights of the Appellants and that he applied it correctly to the facts of the case. They are therefore of opinion that his judgment was right and that the Court of Appeal was right in affirming it, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the present appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors: Messrs. Westbury, Preston and Stravridi for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Watkins and Hunter for the Respondents.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

(1) [1904] A. C. 179.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2528 OF 1910.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
Heard, 4 and 17, April.
Judgment, 17, April.

RAM CHANDRA BHANJA, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
NANDANANDANANANDA GOSSAIN, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 106—Scope of enquiry under—Title if can be determined.

A Revenue Officer in deciding disputes between rival proprietors under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is confined to the question of possession alone and is not competent to determine the question of title.

PADMALAV v. LUKHI RANI (1) followed.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 7th of August 1910, against a decree of J. Cornes, Esq., Special Judge of Zilla Midnapur, dated the 1st of March 1910, affirming a decree of Babu Rampada Chatterji, Assistant Settlement Officer of Midnapur, dated the 11th of January 1909.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. H. N. Sen and Babu Jnanendra Nath Sarkar for the Appellant.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal on behalf of the first Defendant in a suit instituted by the Plaintiff-Respondent under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The case for the Plaintiff is that the disputed lands are comprised in his Mauza Taka Bakra,

(1) 12 C. W. N. 8 (1907).

RAM CHANDRA BHANJA v. NANDANANDANANANDA GOSSAIN.

Tauzi 1980, and that though he is in possession thereof, they have been erroneously declared by the Settlement Officer to be in the possession of the first Defendant as included in his Mauza Nayabushan, Tauzi 1981. The Courts below have investigated the question of title and held that the disputed lands form part of the mauza of which the Plaintiff is the proprietor; but upon the question of possession, they have not recorded any clear finding. The occupants of the lands are the second and the sixth Defendants; and it has not been found by either Court whether they held as tenants under the Plaintiff or the first Defendant. Notwithstanding the absence of such a finding the Courts below have made a decree in favour of the Plaintiff.

In support of the present appeal by the first Defendant, it has been contended on the authority of the decision in Padmalav v. Lukhi Rani (1), that the Courts below have misapprehended the scope of the investigation under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that they have determined the question of title between rival proprietors which they were not competent to decide in a suit instituted under that section and that they have left undecided the only question they were competent to investigate, namely, the question of present possession. In our opinion, this contention is well-founded and must prevail.

On behalf of the Respondent the decision in Padmalav v. Lukhi Rani (1) has been criticized, and it has been suggested that the matter should be referred to a Full Bench for decision. We are of opinion that no ground has been established for such reference. Mr. Justice Woodroffe in the case mentioned held that in a suit under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the question to be investigated is one of possession of the disputed land, and that the Plaintiff is entitled to have the record corrected in accordance with such possession. Mr. Justice Coxe held that in a proceeding under the Bengal Tenancy Act no question of title between rival proprietors, considered merely as proprietors, can legitimately arise. The Statute deals with the relations of landlords and tenants, and it is no part of its purpose to regulate disputes between rival proprietors, except in so far as such disputes affect their relations with their tenants. We entirely agree in the view taken by Mr. Justice Coxe that the revenue officer, in deciding disputes between rival proprietors under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is confined to the question of possession alone. We are of opinion that this is the correct exposition of the law, and we would ourselves have independently adopted the same view, even if the point had not been previously decided in Padmalav v. Lukhi Rani (1). The decisions in Gulab Misser v. Kalanund Singh (2), Pandab Dowari v. Anand Kesun (3), Mukti Nath v. Rameshur (4) and Kali Sundari v. Girija Sankar (5), which recognise the principle that the question of title is open for examination in a civil suit, lead to the same conclusion. In this view it is clear that the decision of the Special Judge cannot be supported.

The result is that the appeal is allowed, the decree of the Special Judge set aside and the case remanded to him in order that he may determine upon the evidence

(1) 12 C. W. N. 8 (1907).

(1) 12 C W. N. 8 (1907).
(2) 14 C. W. N. 884 (1910).
(3) 14 C. W. N. 897 (1910).
(4) 15 C. W. N 57 (1910).
(5) 15 C. W. N. 974 (1911).

on the record whether the Plaintiff or the first Defendant was in possession of the disputed land through their tenants who are parties Defendants to the suit. As the object of the suit is to have the record, as finally published, amended, the question of possession must necessarily be considered from the standpoint, whether the record, as finally published, is correct. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3982 OF 1910.

COXE, J.
D. CHATTERJEE, J.
1914,
Heard, 2, March.
Judgment, 10, March.

DEONANDAN PERSHAD, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
UDIT NARAIN SINGH and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Hindu Law—Alienation by Hindu widow—Suit by vendee to recover property after widow's death from stranger—Proof of legal necessity, if necessary—Suit for possession—Symbolical possession delivered to Plaintiff more than 12 years ago, as against Defendant—Presumption of continuance of possession—Finding that no actual possession ever obtained—Limitation—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 142, 144—Recovery of rent decrees against raiyats within 12 years, if possession.

An alienation by a Hindu widow without legal necessity is voidable but not void, and until the reversioner (including in that term the Crown if there is no nearer reversioner) decides to avoid it or to treat it as a nullity, it stands good, and the alienee is entitled to recover possession from a stranger without being required to prove legal necessity.

BEJOY GOPAL v. KRISHNA MAHISHI (2), MADHUSUDAN v. ROOKE (1) referred to.

(1) 11 C. W. N. 424 (1907).
(2) I. L. R 25 Cal. 1 (1897).

Delivery of symbolical possession is conclusive evidence, as between the parties, that possession was delivered, but is not in the least conclusive evidence that the possession so delivered continued. There may be a presumption that such possession would continue until the contrary was proved, but that is all.

Where it was found that the Plaintiff to whom symbolical possession was delivered never got actual possession, the finding can only mean that the possession delivered did not continue at all, so that Art. 142 and not Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applied to the case.

Where it appeared that the Plaintiff had recovered rent decrees from raiyats within 12 years of the suit and the decrees were not open to question as collusive and fraudulent, the Plaintiff's possession of the lands held by the raiyats through them within the statutory period of limitation was established.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 8th of December 1910, against a decree of J. C. Twidell, Esq., District Judge of Zilla Bhagalpur, dated the 26th of August 1910, affirming that of Babu Ram Lal Dutt, Subordinate Judge at Monghyr, dated the 19th of February 1910.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Provash Chandra Mitter and Kulwant Sahay for the Appellant.

Babus Jogesh Chandra Ray, Karunamoy Bose for Babu Khettra Mohan Sen, for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

COXE, J.—The property in suit originally belonged to one Rukmini. She mortgaged it, and the mortgagee in the end sold it in execution of a decree on the mortgage. It was purchased by a predecessor-in-interest of the Plaintiff. The Defendants are successors-in-interest of Rukmini's brothers to whom she is said to have transferred the property. The Plaintiff has sued for possession. The suit has been dismissed by the Courts below, partly on the ground that the Plaintiff has not made out his title, and partly on the ground that the Defendants have acquired a title by adverse possession. The Plaintiff appeals.

DEONANDAN PERSHAD v. UDIT NARAIN SINGH.

On the first point, I think that the Plaintiff is entitled to succeed. The Courts below hold that he has not succeeded in proving that Rukmini's mortgage was made for legal necessity. But the Defendants are not the reversioners. The alienation, if made without legal necessity, was voidable, but not void. Until the reversioner, including in that term the Crown, if there is no nearer reversioner, decides to avoid it or to treat it as a nullity, it stands good. This, I think, is the result of the decisions in Madhusudan v. Rooke (1) and Bejoy Gopal v. Krishna Mahishi (2).

As to the question of adverse possession, it is argued that the Courts below have wrongly applied Art. 142 instead of Art. 144 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. So far as regards the kamat land, it does not appear to me that this question really arises on the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts. The Defendants have always claimed adversely to the Plaintiff and his predecessors since long before 1882. In that year it was decided that the Plaintiff's predecessors were entitled to possession during Rukmini's lifetime. It was not decided, whether or not they were entitled to possession afterwards. They obtained, however, formal delivery of possession. But the District Judge finds, and it is a finding of fact, with which we cannot interfere, that although the Plaintiff's predecessor "got symbolical possession through the Court in 1883 in pursuance of the order of the District Judge, it is quite certain that he never got actual possession. Now of course the formal delivery of possession, as no doubt the learned District Judge was well aware, is conclusive evidence between the parties that possession was delivered. It is perhaps somewhat of a legal fiction in many cases, but it is a very valuable one as it affords a starting point for limitation. But it cannot be denied that it is often little more than a fiction, and it is not in the least conclusive evidence that the possession so delivered continued. There may be a presumption that such possession would continue until the contrary was proved, but that is all. The District Judge's finding that the Plaintiff's predecessors never got actual, as distinguished from symbolical, possession, can only mean that the possession delivered did not continue at all, and that the Defendants, except for the unimportant interval while possession was being formally delivered, remained in actual occupation of the land. Such a finding of fact is fatal to the mere presumption referred to above. Such possession could not but be adverse. There is no reason to suppose that the Defendants have ever changed their claim, and where possession is exercised by the actual cultivation of the ground, the Plaintiff, who admittedly has never been in possession of the kamat land, must necessarily have known that the possession of the Defendants was adverse.

Now as regards the land held by raiyats, limitation is saved, in my opinion, by the rent decrees obtained by the Plaintiff's

(1) 11 C. W. N. 424 (1907).
(2) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 1 (1897).

DEONANDAN PERSHAD v. UDIT NARAIN SINGH.

predecessor in 1901. The Defendants in those suits are admittedly tenants of the land. It was finally decided in those suits that the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between them and the Plaintiff's predecessor. That being so, I do not see how it can be said that the Plaintiff's predecessor was not then in possession. The tenants were admittedly in possession, and their possession was his possession. The Respondents have not shown that those decrees were fraudulent and collusive. Indeed, it was found in those suits that the tenants were colluding with the present Respondents. If the tenants had attorned to the Plaintiff, their possession would have been his possession. It seems to me that the same result must follow, if it is decided in a suit between the parties that they are his tenants.

The appeal will accordingly be allowed in part. The Plaintiff will get a declaration of his proprietary right in the land, covered by the rent decrees of 1901, but otherwise the suit will fail.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 271 OF 1912.

COXE, J. RAY, J. 1913, 8, July.	DWARKA DHAKAI, Defendant No. 1, Appellant, v. MATHUR LAL MAJUMDAR and another, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 188—Suit by co-sharer landlord for additional rent, if maintainable—Parties—Right of suit.

Where a co-sharer landlord brought a suit for arrears of rent and also for additional rent on the basis of a kabuliyat executed by the tenant in favour of the entire body of landlords agreeing to pay additional rent for additional area, and made his co-sharers parties to the suit:

Held, that the suit for additional rent was not maintainable, as it was not brought by all the landlords jointly under sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act;

Held also, that the existence of the stipulation in the kabuliyat about the payment of additional rent did not take the suit out of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

GOPAL CHANDRA v. UMESH NARAIN (1), BAIDYANATH v. ILIM (2) followed.

GOBINDA CHANDRA v. HAMIDULLAH (4), distinguished on the ground that there was an entirely separate agreement between the tenant and the individual co-sharer landlord which did not exist in the present case.

The entire body of landlords must join as Plaintiffs in a suit under sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

JATINDRA NATH v. PRASANNA KUMAR (3) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 4th June 1912 against an order of Babu Chandra Bhusan Banerjee, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Khulna, dated the 28th March 1912, reversing an order of Babu Hem Chandra Basu, Munsif at Bagerhat, dated the 29th of June 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Nil Madhab Basu and Jadu Nath Kanjilal for the Appellant.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysak for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

COXE, J.—The Plaintiff in this case is a

(1) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 695 (1890).
(2) 2 C. W. N. 44: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Cal. 917 (1897).
(3) 15 C. W. N. 74 (1910).
(4) 7 C. W. N. 670 (1903).

DWARKA DHAKAI v. MATHUR LAL MAJUMDAR.

co-sharer landlord, and his case is that the tenants had executed a kabuliyat in favour of the 16 annas landlords agreeing to pay rent for 15 bighas of land. There was a stipulation that the tenant should pay additional rent for additional land. Accordingly the land was measured and was discovered to be 25 bighas instead of 15 bighas. He, therefore, sued for the whole rent, including the rent due on the additional area making his co-sharers parties to the suit. The Munsif held that the suit was not maintainable under sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This decision was set aside in appeal by the additional Subordinate Judge, and the Defendant appeals.

It appears to me that the point is concluded by authority. The decisions in Gopal Chandra v. Umesh Narain (1) and Baidya Nath v. Ilim (2) are both clear authorities that a suit of this nature can only be brought by all the landlords under sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; and it was held in Jatindra Nath v. Prasanna Kumar (3) that when a suit must be brought by the whole body of landlords under sec. 188, it is not sufficient if the co-sharers who are unwilling to join as Plaintiffs are joined as Defendants. It appears to us, therefore, that so far as the claim for increased rent is concerned, we are bound by these decisions to hold that the suit is barred by sec. 188 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

It has been argued, firstly, that sec. 52 only applies to cases in which the area in excess for which rent had been previously paid is included within the original holding, and that the section does not apply to cases in which new land has been taken. It appears to me that this is an impossible construction of the plain terms of the section.

Secondly, it has been argued that this is not a suit under the Bengal Tenancy Act at all, inasmuch as there is a separate kabuliyat between the parties; and reference has been made to the case of Gobinda Chandra v. Hamidulla (4), in which it was held by Prinsep, J., agreeing with Ghosh, J. (Geidt, J., dissenting) that in the circumstances of that case sec. 188 did not bar the suit. But that case may be distinguished on the ground that there was an entirely separate agreement between the tenant and the individual co-sharer landlord who was the Plaintiff which does not exist in this case. The case of Baidya Nath v. Ilim (2) to which I have already referred shows that the existence of an agreement does not necessarily take the suit out of the Tenancy Act, and it appears to me that it would be unreasonable to hold that it should. It is provided by the Tenancy Act and it must be common knowledge, that a tenant is bound to pay additional rent for additional land and is entitled to reduction of rent if the area is reduced. If the landlord and tenant include a stipulation to that effect in their contract, it certainly seems to me unreasonable that the existence of such a stipulation should oust the application of the Tenancy Act from which it was in all probability derived. Reference has been made to another case, namely, that of Dintarini v. Broughton (5), but that case is clearly distinguishable, because there the liability of

(1) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 695 (1890).
(2) 2 C. W. N. 441 ; s. c. I. L. R. 25 Cal. 917 (1897).
(3) 15 C. W. N. 74 (1910).
(2) 2 C. W.N. 44 : s. c. I. L. R. 25 Cal. 917 (1897).
(4) 7 C. W. N. 670 (1903).
(5) 3 C. W. N. 225 (1896).

DWARKA DHAKAI v. MATHUR LAL MAJUMDAR.

the Defendant was said to have come into existence before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It appears to me now clearly settled that a suit of this nature must be brought by the whole body of landlords, and that accordingly so far as that point is concerned, the appeal must be allowed and the decision of the Subordinate Judge set aside. This decision, however, does not take away the right of the Plaintiff to the original rent which has accrued due during the years in suit, and the case must accordingly go back to the Court of first instance in order that that Court may decide how much of that rent is due and unpaid.

The Appellant will be entitled to his costs in this Court and of the Court below. The hearing fee is assessed at two gold mohurs.

RAY, J.—I agree.

H. C. S. Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 203 OF 1912.

FLETCHER, J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1914,
Heard,
25, March.
Judgment,
16, April.

SRIMATI NOGENDRA BALA CHOWDHURANI, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Defendant, Respondent.

Bengal Drainage Act [VI (B. C.) of 1880], secs. 36, 36A, 38—Costs of drainage construction—Apportionment—Person made liable, engagement to pay in instalments by—Recovery by certificate from purchaser.

The provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act for summarily recovering the amount due from a landholder under an engagement entered into under sec. 38 of the Bengal Drainage Act can only be put in force against the person who gave it.

They cannot be enforced against a person who has subsequently purchased his properties and who has not been made liable for the costs of construction under sec. 36A of the Bengal Drainage Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th of June 1912 against the decree of Babu Latu Behary Bose, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 30th of April 1912.

The appeal arises out of a suit to declare a certificate issued against the Plaintiff under the Public Demands Recovery Act to be illegal, inoperative and without jurisdiction.

The certificate was issued in respect of certain sums alleged to be due in respect of the Rajapur Drainage scheme which was executed upon, amongst others, properties belonging to the Mukherjees of Janai. The amount had been declared payable by the Mukherjees who also entered into an engagement under sec. 37 of the Bengal Drainage Act agreeing to pay the said amount in certain instalments.

The Plaintiff subsequently purchased the property of the Mukherjees affected by the scheme at a sale by a Receiver appointed in a suit for partition amongst the Mukherjees.

The certificate was originally issued against the Mukherjees, but subsequently the Receiver, and later on the Platntiff, was substituted in the place of the Mukherjees.

Hence this suit, which was first dismissed on the ground that sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 was a bar to its maintainability. The High Court on appeal set aside this decision, and on remand the Subordinate Judge again dismissed the suit on, amongst other grounds, that the amount due under the certificate was a first charge upon the property benefitted under secs. 31, 37 and 38 of the Drainage Act, and no purchaser could avoid payment of the sum for which the certificate was filed.

The Plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babus Sarat Chunder Ray Chaudhury and Dhirendra Krishna Ray for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Chunder Mitter for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff from the judgment of the second Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 30th of April 1912, dismissing her suit.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining a declaration that a certificate purported to have been made against her on behalf of the Secretary of State for India in Council under the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, was illegal and invalid.

The Plaintiff purchased the property described in the schedule to the plaint on the 15th of April 1905 at a sale held by a Receiver appointed by this Court in its Original Jurisdiction.

The property in question formerly belonged to a family of Mukherjees, some of whom instituted a suit for partition in this Court. In that suit a Receiver was appointed and under the orders of the Court, a portion of the estate was sold for liquidation of the debts of the estate. The Plaintiff became the purchaser at that sale, and the sale to her was duly confirmed by the Court.

Under the provisions of the Bengal Drainage Act, 1880, certain works known as Rajapur Drainage scheme were executed for the improvement of, amongst other properties, the property subsequently purchased by the Plaintiff. For the payment of the amount that they were liable to pay under the terms of the Act, three of the Mukherjees executed on the 4th of February 1908 in favour of the Secretary of State for India in Council an instalment bond. The Mukherjees subsequently made default in payment of certain of the instalments under the bond, and thereupon under the provisions of the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, a certificate was filed in the Collectorate against them, the certificate being No. 507 of 1900-1901. When the estate passed into the possession of the Receiver, his name was added or substituted in the certificate in the course of the year 1903-1904 and after the purchase by the Plaintiff, her name was added or substituted on the record on the 9th of July 1906. The Plaintiff objected to this procedure, but the Revenue authorities declined to interfere. Thereupon the Plaintiff instituted this suit.

When the case first came on for hearing, the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the preliminary grounds that sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 was a bar to the suit, and further that the suit was barred by limitation. The Plaintiff preferred an appeal to this Court, and the order of the learned Subordinate Judge was reversed and the case remanded for trial in the lower Court.

The case that we have now to deal with is on the footing that the amended certificate is a certificate filed against the Plaintiff.

This question must be dealt with quite apart from the charge given by the Bengal Drainage Act, 1880, for the expenses of works executed under the terms of the Act.

The only point we have to consider in this appeal is, was the certificate validly made against the Plaintiff? The answer to that question depends on whether or not the Plaintiff is a person "liable to pay the public demand."

Now sec. 28 (c) of the Bengal Drainage Act, 1880, directs that the Commissioners after making the classification therein mentioned shall proceed to apportion the total cost of construction upon the improved lands and shall draw up a statement showing the amount payable by each landholder.

Sec. 31 of the Act provides that the total sum so made payable with interest shall be a first charge upon such lands.

By sec. 36 it is enacted that whenever the Commissioner of the Division shall confirm any apportionment and report, or whenever one month shall elapse from the publication of any report without any appeal having been preferred, he shall pass an order declaring the sums payable in respect of the lands and the persons liable to pay the same to be determined.

As soon as any apportionment has been determined, the Collector is authorised by the terms of sec. 37 of the Act to cause a notice to be served upon any landholder who has not paid the sum payable by him, requiring him within one month to pay such sum with interest or to enter into an engagement for the payment by instalments over a period of not more than 10 years of such sum together with interest on the instalments for the time being remaining unpaid.

Under the terms of this section the Mukherjees executed in favour of the Defendant the instalment bond of the 4th of February 1908.

Sec. 38 provides (amongst other things) that if any landholder having entered into such an engagement fails to discharge any instalment payable thereunder, such instalment together with interest shall be recoverable under the provisions of any law for the time being in force for the recovery of public demands.

It is very obvious that under the terms of this section the person liable to satisfy the "engagement" entered into with the Defendant is the person or persons who gave it, and that under the terms of the section the provisions contained in the Public Demands Recovery Act, 1895, for summarily recovering the amount remaining due under the terms of the "engagement" can only be put in force against the persons who gave it. The Plaintiff in this suit is not such a person.

The Bengal Drainage Act, 1880, has, however, been amended by the Bengal Drainage (Amendment) Act, 1902, and under the provisions of the amending Act a new sec. 36A has been inserted in the Act authorising the Collector to revise an order passed under sec. 36 as to the names of the persons liable to pay by reason (amongst others) of any change having taken place in the ownership or joint ownership of the land.

The learned Senior Government Pleader has informed us that no such revision has taken place in the present case, and, therefore, it is not necessary to consider what liability, if any, the Plaintiff would have been under, if the order made under sec. 36 of the Act had been revised by the Collector.

In the result, the present appeal must be allowed and a decree passed in favour of the Plaintiff declaring the certificate invalid as against her.

The Defendant must pay to the Plaintiff her costs both in this Court and the Court below. We assess the hearing fee at Rs. 500.

Richardson, J.—I have read this judgment and agree.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

Appeal from Original Order No. 579 of 1911.

Woodroffe, J. Carnduff, J. 1914, 22, April.

Rajani Nath Rakshit, Opposite Party, Appellant,
v.
Kusum Kamini Mazumdar & ors., Judgment-debtors, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. XXI, r. 90—"Immoveable property"—Whether sale of some of properties sold can be set aside—Substantial loss with regard to some if vitiates sale as to whole.

Where four lots of immoveable properties were sold in execution and it was found that there was substantial injury caused to the judgment-debtors with regard to one of the lots, but not with regard to the other three:

Held—That in Or. XXI, r. 90, "immoveable property" means any one of the immoveable properties, the sale of which is liable to be set aside upon the grounds mentioned in the section.

That the Court was not bound to set aside sale of all four lots by reason of irregularity and substantial loss caused thereby with regard to one of them.

Macnaghtan v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1) referred to.

This was an appeal from an order of H. Walmsley, Esq., District Judge of Mymensingh, dated the 20th June 1911.

The facts of the case are shortly as follows:—

Four lots were put up to sale in execution of a decree. The findings of the District Judge with regard to each were as follows:—

(1) With regard to lot No. 1, it was impossible to say whether the price obtained was adequate or not.

(2) With regard to lot No. 2, the property was valued at Rs. 1,800 and was sold for Rs. 470 only. The difference between the value was so great as to amount to substantial injury.

(3) With regard to lot No. 3, the price at which the property was sold was not unreasonable.

(4) With regard to lot No. 4, the price was adequate.

The material irregularity complained of was with regard to non-service of fresh sale proclamation under Or. XXI, r. 69 (2), although the adjournments were obtained at the instance of the judgment-debtors, but there was no waiver referred to in the rule. The District Judge concluded as follows:—

"My conclusion is that regarding the second property the Petitioner has sustained substantial injury. The history of the case shows that adjournments were given again and again and the result must have been to encourage the belief that the property would never be sold. The consequence was that the absence of a fresh sale proclamation had a most prejudicial effect.

I cannot discriminate between the properties to confirm the sale of one and cancel the sale of another." In this view the sale of all the lots was set aside.

(1) I. L. R 9 Cal. 656, 662 (1882)

RAJANI NATH RAKSHIT v. KUSUM KAMINI MAZUMDAR.

Babus Kritant Kumar Bose and Bepin Chunder Bose for the Appellant.

Babus Gobind Chunder Dey Roy and Biraj Mohan Majumdar (for Deputy Registrar) for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WOODROFFE, J.—This appeal arises out of an order passed upon an application to set aside a sale.

Four properties were put up for sale, which are mentioned in the judgment of the District Judge. The learned District Judge set aside the sale as regards all these four properties. Now, as regards properties Nos. 1 and 4, there is no appeal before us and therefore the order of the District Judge stands.

As regards property No. 2, it is admitted that there were irregularities, but the contention has been that there is no evidence which shows that substantial injury which the Judge has found to exist in this case was caused by the irregularities referred to in the judgment. I think that the facts to which the learned Judge refers in his judgment supports the conclusion at which he has arrived as regards this property, and therefore his order setting aside the sale as regards property No. 2 stands.

The main question in this appeal is as regards property No. 3. No doubt, the irregularities alleged may have affected this property as much as other properties put up at this sale, but it must be found that substantial injury was caused by such irregularity, and the learned Judge found on the evidence that as regards property No. 3, no substantial injury has been proved.

We have been referred by the learned Pleader for the Respondent to some facts connected with the second sale which took place after the Judge's order. I am not sure that we are entitled to look at those facts, but if we do, the result of that second sale seems to support the Judge's order now under appeal; for, according to the learned Pleader for the Respondent, whilst at such second sale properties Nos. 1 and 2 were sold at an increased price of Rs. 890 and property No. 4 was sold at an increased price of Rs. 550, property No. 3 with which we are now concerned fetched only Rs. 80 more than Rs. 420 at the first sale which the learned Judge found not to be unreasonable. The question now is whether under these circumstances the sale should also be set aside as regards property No. 3. There is no question but that if at this sale, property No. 3 had alone been sold, there would have been no ground for setting aside the sale. But the argument is that because property No. 3 formed part of a lot of four properties and the sale has been set aside as regards the other properties, therefore the sale as regards property No. 3 must also be set aside, although it has not been shown that any substantial injury has been suffered. The learned Judge has gone upon this ground and says that though there has been no injury in respect of property No. 3 or properties Nos. 1 and 4, yet he is unable to discriminate between the properties and confirm the sale of one and cancel the sale of another and on that ground he set aside the whole sale.

If, however, we look at the words of the section, they would appear to justify us in this case in dealing with property No. 3 separately from the others; for the section says that where any immoveable property has been sold, application may be made to Court to set aside the sale. The question then is what is the meaning of "immoveable property"? Does "immoveable property" mean all the immoveable properties which are to be put up for sale at one and the same time, or does it mean any one of such immoveable properties the sale of which is liable to be set aside upon the grounds mentioned in the section? I do not see anything in the wording of the section, which, under the circumstances of this case, preclude us from giving effect to the contention of the Appellant, and we have asked the Respondent to refer us to any reported authority which would prohibit us from adopting the course which we have been asked to pursue; but no such authority has been produced. On the contrary, we find that in the case of Macnaghten v. Mahabir Prosad Singh (1), the High Court which had previously set aside the sale of twenty properties which were sold at an execution sale, subsequently on review withdrew its order as regards six of those properties so that the effect was as though the High Court had in the first instance set aside the sale as regards fourteen properties under one auction sale and not as regards the remaining six properties. It is true that the order of the High Court was reversed by the Privy Council upon other grounds, but there is nothing in the Privy Council judgment to indicate that they disapproved of the High Court judgment on the ground that it was not proper for the High Court to set aside the sale as regards some of the properties put up at one auction sale and not others. Had that course been illegal, doubtless exception would have been taken to the High Court judgment also on this ground, but there is no evidence of that. Therefore, it appears to me that we are justified in accepting the argument addressed to us by the Appellant as regards the property No. 3, namely, estate No. 2593, taluk Shibkali.

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 656, 662 (1882).

As regards this particular property, I would set aside the order of the District Judge setting aside the sale and direct that the sale of property No. 3 should stand.

As regards the Appellant and the Judgment-debtors, each party will bear his own costs. As regards the purchaser of the property No. 2, the Appellant must pay his costs. The hearing fee is assessed at three gold mohurs. We make no order as to costs of the lower Courts.

CARNDUFF, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

L. P. APP. No. 64 OF 1913.

JENKINS, C. J.
D. CHATTERJEE, J.
1914,
25, March.

BISHESHUR RAY CHOWDRY, Defendant, Appellant,
v
RAJENDRA KUMAR SINGH, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 50, 105—Question of enhancibility of rent if a question under sec. 105—Presumption under sec. 50—Kabuliyat executed since Permanent Settlement—Confirmatory lease.

Where in a proceeding for settlement of rent under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the Settlement Officer held that the rent of the tenant was not enhancible by reason of the application of sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the Special Judge on appeal held that the tenure having originated in a kabuliyat of 1238, the rent was enhancible:

BISHESHUR RAY CHOWDRY v. RAJENDRA KUMAR SINGH.

Held—That the question decided being a question relating to an incident of the tenancy did not come under sec. 105 of the Act and a second appeal was not barred by sec. 109A of the Act;

That as the kabuliyat was a document by which a previously existing lease was recognised, the presumption under sec. 50 of the Act applied.

This was an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent, preferred on the 9th of May 1913 against a decree of Newbould, J., dated the 14th of April 1913, in S. A. No. 2158 of 1910 preferred from a decree of P. E. Cammiade, Esq., Special Judge of Backerganj, dated the 9th of April 1910, confirming a decree of Babu Sirish Kumar Shome, Assistant Settlement Officer of Backerganj, dated the 10th of December 1909.

After the preparation of record-of-rights, an application under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act, was made by the Plaintiff-Respondent (the landlord) for assessment of fair rent in respect of a tenure which consisted of a fractional share of 7 annas 7½ gandas of a taluk named Raghu Durgadas and which was recorded as a permanent tenure in the khatian prepared by the Settlement Officer, on the allegation that the rent of the tenure was liable to be enhanced, and that there was also an increase in the area. The Defendant pleaded that the rent of his tenure was under the provisions of sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act not liable to enhancement inasmuch as the rent had not been changed from the time of the Permanent Settlement and also pleaded that there was no increase in area. The Defendant proved payment of rent at a uniform rate for more than 20 years and relied upon the presumption arising from this under the provisions of the second paragraph of sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to prove payment of rent at the same rate from the time of the Permanent Settlement. To rebut this presumption the landlord Plaintiff put in a kabuliyat, dated the 13th Pous 1238, corresponding to the 27th December 1831, to show that the tenure was first created on that date and urged that this would disprove the presumption. The Assistant Settlement Officer held on a construction of this kabuliyat that it did not show that the tenure was created for the first time in 1831, but that it was merely a "confirmatory" lease. He, however, held that the Plaintiff had succeeded in proving an increase in the area and granted a decree for increased rent on account thereof. On appeal, the Special Judge found that the Plaintiff had failed to prove an increase in the area of the tenure, but he construed the kabuliyat of 1831 as creating a new tenure, and held that the presumption arising from the payment of a uniform rent for over 20 years was rebutted by it and further according to his interpretation of the document the rent payable was not fixed, but variable, and he granted a decree for enhancement of rent at the same amount as was fixed by the Settlement Officer. The Defendant preferred a special appeal to the High Court, and Newbould, J., held that no second appeal lay, as under sec. 109A of the Bengal Tenancy Act no order for assessment of rent under sec. 105 was appealable.

The judgment of Newbould, J., was as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—This is a second appeal against a decree enhancing rent of a tenure. The Settlement Officer held that the presumption under sec. 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act applied, but that the tenure was liable to enhancement, because there has been an increase of area. The lower Appellate Court differed from these findings, but upheld the enhancement, on the ground that the provisions of sec. 50 (2) did not apply and the rent of the tenure was liable to enhancement.

BISHESHUR RAY CHOWDRY v. RAJENDRA KUMAR SINGH.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies. It appears to me that this objection is sound. My attention has been drawn to certain cases in which it has been held in cases of a somewhat similar nature that an appeal did lie. But it seems to me that these cases are distinguishable, because in all these cases some question under sec. 106, Bengal Tenancy Act, was also involved. The present case is clearly a case under sec. 105, and the decision is simply a decision settling rent. The words of sec. 109A are clear that no appeal lies against a decision settling rent, and I, therefore, hold that no appeal lies in these cases. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

[Against this judgment the Defendant preferred this Letters Patent Appeal. The appeal was first heard on the 20th March 1914 before the Chief Justice and Imam, J.]

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhury (with him Babu Atul Krishna Ray) on behalf of the Appellant contended that though the proceedings commenced nominally under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, yet the contentions raised by the parties and the matters decided by the lower Courts had reference to the incidents of the tenure. The question decided is whether the rent of the tenure is enhancible at all. This is not a question of assessment of rent under sec. 109A, Bengal Tenancy Act. See Prithi Chand v. Basarat Ali (1).

(1) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 30 F. B.: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 1149 (1909).

Babu Mahendra Nath Ray (with him Babu Bisbhusan Dutt) for the Respondent.—The case is surely one under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Is not the question as to whether rent of the tenure is enhancible or not a question regarding the incidents of the tenure? Is it a question merely of assessment of what rent is fair?]

It may be a question of the incidents of the tenure, but the proceedings were under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[JENKINS, C. J.—This does not matter. The question of incidents does not come properly under that section.]

At all events no question regarding the amount of rent assessed should be allowed to be raised in the appeal.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhury.—I do not propose to raise any question as to the amount of rent.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Then the judgment of Newbould, J., is set aside.]

[The second appeal was heard on the merits on 25th March 1914 before the Chief Justice and D. Chatterjee, J.]

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhury (with him Babu Atul Krishna Ray).—The kabuliyat of 1831 expressly shows that the person who executed it had come to acquire in different ways a 7 as. and 7½ gandas share of a taluk already in existence, and the kabuliyat was merely a recognition by the then landlord of the interest of the person who executed the kabuliyat in that share and the opening of a separate account with reference to that share. Hence it is not the creation of a new tenure. No doubt, the case of Uday Chandra Kaji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (2) takes a contrary view, but the learned Judges who decided that case have themselves refused to follow it as an authority for the broad proposition laid down therein. In the case of Grant v. Ram Rekha (3), Sharfuddin, J., who was one of the Judges who decided the case of Uday Chandra Koji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (2), cited with approval the judgment reported in Mulluk Chand v. Satish Chandra (4), wherein it is stated that the case of Uday Chandra Kaji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (2) is authority only for the proposition that in some cases where after dividing a tenure the parties intend to create a new tenure, then only the presumption under sec. 50, Bengal Tenancy Act. does not apply in the case of tenure-holders. No doubt, if a kabuliyat for a portion of the lands constituting a tenure is executed, containing new terms altogether and the parties intend that this should be regarded as the origin of a new tenancy, the presumption arising from payment of a uniform rent for over 20 years under sec. 50 (2) might not arise. Coxe, J., who was the other learned Judge who was a party to the decision in Uday Chandra Kaji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (2) said, with reference to this case in the case of Jyoti Proshad v. Darby (5), that that decision would not apply to any case where the division of the tenure was made prior to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Therefore both the learned Judges who decided the case of Uday Chandra Kaji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (2) have refused to follow it as an authority for the broad proposition laid down there. It is now therefore no longer any authority against me. Madhu Mala v. Alfazuddi (6) was also referred to in this connection. Sec. 88, Bengal Tenancy Act, expressly recognises division of a tenure and a distribution of the rent made with the consent of both the landlord and the tenants. Division according to this section certainly does not mean the destruction of the old tenure and the creation of new ones. Sec. 50, cl. (3) therefore is not to be applied to cases which are cases merely of division and distribution of rent and come within the purview of sec. 88, but refers to cases of creation of new holdings on new terms whether those holdings comprise only portions of pre-existing holdings or are made up of lands of old holdings and other new lands.

(2) 13 C. W. N. 410 (1909).

BISHESHUR RAY CHOWDRY v. RAJENDRA KUMAR SINGH.

If then mere division of a tenure does not constitute the destruction of old tenure and the creation of a new one, the kabuliyat in the present case clearly does not prove the creation of a new tenure in 1831 and so the presumption is not rebutted.

It is immaterial whether the rent fixed by the kabuliyat was variable or not under the terms of the kabuliyat ; for as a matter of fact there has been no change in rent ever since then and there has been no evidence of change of rent before 1831. If in point of fact the rent has not been changed, the presumption applies.

On a proper construction of the kabuliyat, it ought to be held that there is no clause in it providing for variation of rent.

Babu Mahendra Nath Roy (with him Babu Bibhusan Dutt).—The kabuliyat properly construed means that the rent is variable, and if variable no presumption can arise.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Sec. 50 (1) speaks of

(2) 13 C. W. N. 410 (1909).
(3) 14 C. L. J. 110 (1910).
(4) 14 C. W. N. 335 (1909).
(5) 16 C. W. N. 241 (1911).
(6) 13 C. W. N. 962 (1909).

BISHESHUR RAY CHOWDRY v. RAJENDRA KUMAR SINGH.

tenancy being held as a matter of fact on payment of rent at a uniform rate irrespective of the original terms of the tenancy.]

The kabuliyat of 1831 is the creation of a new tenancy. It appears from the kabuliyat that the executant purchased or otherwise acquired different shares of three distinct tenures and a new tenure must be considered to have been created by the amalgamation of these shares into one.

[JENKINS, C. J.—This is not the case made by the other side, whose case is that it was a division of one tenure into different parts. But if what you say is correct, can you say that the interest of the executant which is all that the word tenure means was acquired for the first time by this kabuliyat?]

The interest of the executant might have existed from before in the several parts of the three distinct tenures, but the interest in the parts taken together as a whole was the creation of this kabuliyat.

I also rely on the case of Uday Chandra Kaji v. Nripendra Narayan Bhup (2) and the arguments used therein.

Babu Tara Kishore Chowdhury in reply.—The case of both parties in the lower Courts was that there was only one tenure originally, viz., taluk Raghu Durgadas and the tenure of the Defendant consisted of a 7 as. and 7½ gandas of that taluk. Even if there were three different taluks, it would not make any difference in the argument. The interest was not new, but had existed from before.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—In our opinion the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould as also the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside for these reasons. We are satisfied that the Appellant, who is the Defendant in the suit, is a tenure-holder, and that he and his predecessors-in-interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit. From that it follows that, until the contrary is shown, the tenure-holder and his predecessors-in-interest have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement; and, if that be so, then sub-sec. (1) of sec. 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act protects the Defendant from an increase of rent except on the ground of an alteration in the area of the tenure. The only question, therefore, is whether the contrary has been shown. For that purpose reliance has been placed on the kabuliyat, dated the 13th Pous 1238, one of the exhibits in the case. The true meaning of this document has been the subject of considerable discussion before us, but this at least emerges clearly from the discussion that the document is the recognition of a previously existing interest and not the creation of a new one. Therefore it does not show the contrary required by sub-sec. (2) of sec. 50.

The result then is that in so far as the lower Appellate Court has decided in favour of an enhancement of rent, the decree was erroneous. In so far as it decided that there had been no alteration in area, it must be upheld as it is a finding of fact which has not been controverted. The Plaintiff's suit must, therefore, be dismissed.

Each party will bear his own costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

(2) 13 C. W. N. 410 (1909).

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 37 OF 1912.

JENKINS, C. J.
MOOKERJEE, J.
1913,
10, July.

PEARI MOHAN SHAHA and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants,
v.
DURLAVI DASSYA and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Judgments and orders not inter parties—Res judicata—Estoppel—Evidence—Relevancy.

Plaintiff purchased certain properties at a sale in execution of a money decree against A. A's mother B, whose claim to the property under a kobala alleged to have been executed by the original owner D had been dismissed in execution proceedings also failed in a suit instituted by her against Plaintiff and others under sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, it having been found that B was really a benamidar for A. Plaintiff, on proceeding to take possession, was opposed by D. In a suit by the Plaintiffs to recover the property from D:

Held—That the orders and decrees in the previous litigation were relevant to the issue as to title, and though not res judicata between the parties were admissible in evidence.

RAMAMURTI DHORA v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (1) referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 26th of March 1912 against the decree of D. Chatterjee, J., dated the 27th February 1912, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1641 of 1909, which was preferred on the 6th August 1909 against the decree of Babu Aditya Charan Chackrabartty, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Mymensingh, dated the 1st May 1909, affirming the decree of Babu Sarat Chandra Ghose, Munsif, 2nd Court, Netrakona, dated the 24th August 1908.

(1) I. L. R. 36 Mad. 141 (1911).

The material facts were these :—

The Plaintiffs were the decree-holders-auction-purchasers of certain properties in a proceeding in which the sons of one Pateswari were the judgment-debtors. Pateswari preferred a claim under sec. 278, C. P. C., against the attachment, alleging that the properties were in fact hers by transfer from her mother Durlavi. The claim being dismissed, Pateswari brought a regular suit in order to have her title declared which was dismissed and the dismissal was confirmed on appeal. On the predecessor of the Plaintiff applying for mutation of names in the Collectorate, he was opposed by Durlavi alleging title in herself and the application was refused by the Collector. Hence the suit for the declaration of title by the Plaintiffs. The suit was decreed by the 1st Court and the appeal was also dismissed by the Subordinate Judge. On second appeal Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee set aside the judgments of the lower Courts and remanded the case to the Court of 1st instance for re-trial, if the costs of the Defendants were put in within a fixed period in the Court of the Munsif.

There was default in paying the costs, and the Munsif ordered the dismissal of the suit in terms of the order of Mr. Justice Chatterjee.

The judgment of D. Chatterjee, J., was as follows :—

D. CHATTERJEE, J.—One Durlavi inherited certain properties from her sons. She had 2 daughters : one of them died and the son of the deceased daughter being afraid of the whole property going to the other daughter induced Durlavi to execute 2 kobalas one in favour of the surviving daughter Pateswari in respect of $\frac{4}{7}$ths of the estate and the other in respect of $\frac{3}{7}$ths in favour of his wife and another. These kobalas are said to have been benami for the daughters' sons who had incurred debts.

PEARI MOHAN SHAHA v. DURLAVI DASSYA.

The Plaintiffs' father having got a decree for money against the sons of Pateswari sold $\frac{4}{7}$ths of the properties in execution and purchased it himself on the 22nd August 1903 after a claim by Pateswari under sec. 278 of the Civil Procedure Code had been rejected. Pateswari then brought a regular suit for the establishment of her title under the kobala executed by Durlavi, but her suit was dismissed on the 4th of March 1904 and her appeal was dismissed on the 21st of June 1904. Durlavi was no party to this suit, but she deposed on behalf of her daughter and admitted the execution of the kobala and receipt of consideration. The sale to the Plaintiffs having been confirmed in the meantime, they applied for the registration of their names in the Collector's books and were opposed by Durlavi. Their application was refused, and they bring the present suit for the declaration of their title and recovery of possession on the allegation that the kobala executed by Durlavi was benami in the name of Pateswari in favour of her sons whose rights they had purchased. Neither Pateswari nor her sons were made Defendants, the only Defendant being Durlavi who had suceeeded in defeating their application before the Collector.

Both the Courts below have decreed the suit, and Durlavi appealed to this Court. The present Appellants who are the sons of Pateswari have been substituted in place of Durlavi deceased along with her other grandsons. It has been contended on their behalf that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that Durlavi conveyed her right to Pateswari and had no rights left of her own is not sufficient for supporting the decree that has been passed; that the decrees in the suit of Pateswari were not admissible against Durlavi and on the findings the suit should have been dismissed. It is conceded that the decrees in Peteswari's suit were not binding on Durlavi who was not a party to the same, but it is contended that they are admissible as title-deeds in favour of the Plaintiffs; that upon the finding of the lower Appellate Court the title passed to Pateswari and the decrees show that Pateswari had no title as against the Plaintiffs: the learned Vakil for the Plaintiffs-Respondents argues that when a Defendant pleads jus tertii it is open to the Plaintiff to show that he has good title as against the tertius, i. e., the third party set up by the Defendant. In the present case, however, the Defendant Durlavi did not plead the title of Pateswari, nor did the Plaintiffs claim title through Pateswari. The estoppel of Pateswari by the judgment in her suit does not create any title in the Plaintiffs as against the Defendant Durlavi. The effect of acceding to the argument of the Respondent would be to give effect to two contradictory judgments: the judgment in Pateswari's suit decides that Pateswari had no title—that she was a benamidar: the judgment in the present case decides that title passed to Pateswari. I am not aware of any principle of law upon which this can be allowed. Whether Durlavi had any title or not, she is in possession and the Plaintiffs must make out their title in her presence before they can be allowed to oust her; they must prove in this case that the Appellants whose rights they purchased had the rights which they claim at the date of their purchase. The pleadings raised the question, and one of the issues framed was—Issue No. 5. Did the Defendant execute any document in favour of her daughter Pateswari as a benami transaction? Did any title pass thereunder to her grandsons? Is that document binding upon her? The learned Munsiff says—" The onus is on the Plaintiffs to prove the benami; this they have not attempted to do." Seeing the view that both the lower Courts have taken of the effect of the decree in Pateswari's suit, it is quite probable that the Plaintiffs were misled in adducing no evidence on the point. The best course in the interests of justice therefore would be to give them an opportunity of adducing evidence on this part of the case. This, however, must be on terms as it is through their mistake that the case has to be sent back. I therefore set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court and send the case back to the first Court for re-trial after giving the parties an opportunity of adducing further evidence. The Respondents must pay the costs of the Appellants both in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court within one month from their receipt of notice of the arrival of the record in the Court of first instance. If the said costs are not paid within that time, this appeal will be decreed with costs. Notice of the arrival of the record in the Court of first instance will be given to the Appellants. The costs in the first Court will abide the result.

PEARI MOHAN SHAHA v. DURLAVI DASSYA.

[On this appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent.]

Babu Dwarka Nath Chackravarti (with Babu Jotindra Nath Lahiri) for the Appellants.—The Defendant set up title in a third person, and we have proved that the third person, viz., Pateswari had no title as against us. We have proved our title by showing that Durlavi had parted with her interest in favour of either Pateswari or her sons, and against both we have the judgment in the previous proceedings. I submit, thus the links in my title are established. The judgment inter alios is admissible in evidence. Though it is not res judicata, it has evidentiary value and we have nothing against it. See secs. 9 and 13, Indian Evidence Act, also Denomani Chowdhrani's case (3). I submit that the judgment supplies a link in the chain of titles at least as a conveyance would. I rely upon Ramamurti Dhora v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1).

Babu Tarak Chandra Chackravarti for the Respondents.—The Plaintiff was bound to prove his title. There is no question of Durlavi's title.

[JENKINS, C. J.—The title of the Plaintiff is mixed up with your title.]

The Plaintiffs have not even attempted to prove whether Durlavi's kobala was merely a benami in favour of the sons of Pateswari.

[JENKINS, C. J.—But both Pateswari and her sons are bound by the previous proceedings: sec. 283 of the old Civil Procedure Code.]

[Babu Dwarka Nath Chackravarti, after judgment was delivered, submitted that the order of the Munsif dismissing the suit in the terms of the order of Chatterjee, J., should also be set aside.]

The following JUDGMENT was delivered by—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, whereby he reversed the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remanded the case for re-trial.

(1) I. L. R. 36 Mad. 141 (1911).
(3) 6 C. W. N. 386: s. c. I. L. R. 29 Cal. 187 (1901).

PEARI MOHAN SHAHA v. DURLAVI DASSYA.

The Plaintiff claims to be a purchaser at an execution sale, and on the strengh of that purchase he has brought this suit for a declaration of his title to a $\frac{4}{7}$ths share of Taluk No. 12437 of the Mymensingh Collectorate and also for possession.

The Defendant against whom the suit is brought is a lady named Durlavi Dassya who unquestionably was at one time entitled to the property in suit, and the Plaintiff's claim relates to a title alleged to be derived from her. In 1897, this lady executed a kobala which purported to be in favour of her daughter Pateswari. The land in suit was then attached in execution of a decree obtained against Pateswari's sons. A claim to the property was advanced by Pateswari, but it was rejected. Thereupon, Pateswari brought a suit as contemplated by sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 making as parties the decree-holder and her sons. This suit failed in the Court of first instance, and on appeal the decree of dismissal was confirmed. It was in these execution proceedings that the Plaintiff bought the property in 1904. There was opposition offered to the Plaintiff by the Defendant Durlavi Dassya; so this suit has been brought.

The Defendant's contention was that she never parted with the property, and if she had established that, there would have been a complete answer to the claim. It has, however, been held by the lower Appellate Court that the kobala was executed by her in 1897, and that it was an effective kobala, and so the title passed out of her. The question then is whether the Plaintiff has made out a title to the property.

The lower Appellate Court has decided this in the Plaintiff's favour, and for that purpose has relied on the result of the litigation which commenced with the claim in the execution proceedings and terminated in the suit and on the orders and decrees in that litigation.

Mr. Justice Chatterjee appeared to think that that was not a sufficient foundation for the Plaintiff's title, and so it was that he reversed the decree of the lower Appellate Cou t.

Before us it has been contended that this was erroneous, but the Defendant-Respondent maintains that it was correct.

There is a decision in a recent issue of the Indian Law Reports, Madras Series [Ramamurti Dhora v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1)], which practically covers this case, for it was there decided in circumstances substantially resembling the present, that a party could not set up a title at variance with what had been determined in a previous litigation although his opponent in the suit then before the Court had not been a party to the previous litigation. And, in disposing of the case, it was said, "The question does not depend on the application of the doctrine of res judicata between the parties as expounded in sec. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. That section does not cover all cases of estoppel by judgment. We must hold that the Plaintiffs cannot be permitted to prove that they are the owners of the land in question. They have therefore no cause of action." Though I do not for one moment question the propriety of the result in that suit, I hesitate to act on that line of reasoning, and more particularly when I bear in mind what was said by the Privy Council in the case of Gokul Mandar v. Pudmanund Singh (2). Their Lordships there dealing with the topic of res judicata remarked as follows:—"They will further observe that the essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a Judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction."

(1) I. L. R. 36 Mad. 141 (1911).

Peari Mohan Shaha v. Durlavi Dassya.

But I think there is another and sounder basis on which our decision must go in favour of the Appellant. It is not disputed before us that the decrees in the previous litigation are relevant as evidence, nor indeed can this be disputed when regard is had to the long line of authorities of which it will suffice for me to refer to the decision in Denomoni Chowdhrani v. Brojo Mohini Chowdhrani (3) decided by the Privy Council, Brew v. Haren (4) and Davies v. Lowndes (5), so that what we have to see is whether, as they were admissible, they were not a sufficient basis for the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. Now, the Judge of the lower Appellate Court seems to me to have perceived with clearness that there was not a res judicata as between the parties to this litigation, but the learned Judge says, and I think correctly, that as between the parties to the previous litigation the decrees were binding. That appears to me to be a correct view of the law, and I may here refer not inappropriately to sec. 283 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882, which says that "the party against whom an order under secs. 280, 281 or 282 is passed may institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive." The result of the former suit we know was that the claimant's alleged right was negatived. So then we have this result that as between the decree-holder, Pateswari, and her sons there has been an adjudication by Court, which affirms the right of Pateswari's sons, and negatives the right of Pateswari. Why that should not be, in the circumstances of this case, cogent evidence I fail to see. Indeed the Defendant herself has not made any suggestion in the course of this litigation as to how things stand as between Pateswari and her sons. Her contention throughout has been that the title did not pass away from her. So we have this result that as against the adjudication in favour of Pateswari's sons, there is no evidence of any sort or any contention brought in rebuttal of the result of that litigation, and the decree in which it resulted. It appears to me that in these circumstances, and having regard to the facts with which we have to deal in this case, the result of that litigation is at least as cogent against the Defendant as would have been an instrument of transfer executed by Pateswari, the ostensible owner, in favour of her sons. I wish to make it clear that, in the view I take, I cannot regard the decree in the previous litigation as amounting to res judicata which would bar all possibility of evidence on the part of the Defendant. It would, I conceive, have been open to the Defendant to show that, notwithstanding that decree, there were circumstances either vitiating the result

(2) 6 C. W. N. 825: s. c. I. L. R. 29 Cal. 707 at p. 715 (1902).

(3) 6 C. W. N. 386: s. c. I. L. R. 29 Cal. 187 (1901).

(4) Ir. Rep. 9 Com. Law 29; 11 Com. Law 198.

(5) 6 Man. and Gr. 471 (1843).

PEARI MOHAN SHAHA v. DURLAVI DASSYA.

of that litigation or affecting its result so as to prevent its operation in favour of Pateswari's sons. But we have nothing of that sort in this case, as, we merely have on one side the evidence furnished by the orders and decrees in the previous litigation, and nothing by way of rebuttal of that, on the other.

In these circumstances, I think, the necessary conclusion is that we must hold that the Judge of the lower Appellate Court had evidence which justified the conclusion at which he arrived, and it was erroneous to have interfered with his decree.

We must accordingly set aside the judgment of Mr. Justice Chatterjee and restore the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and the Appellants must get their costs of both appeals in this Court.

It has been brought to our notice that there has been an order by the Munsiff consequent upon the judgment of Mr. Justice Chatterjee. The order necessarily is of no effect and inoperative.

Appeal allowed.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 1587 OF 1913.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
2, December.

KEDAR BISWAS, Petitioner,
v.
MATHURA NATH MITRA, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 439, 517, 520—Restoration of moveable property—Charge of theft—Malkhana register, order passed in, making over property to complainant—Acquittal by High Court—Subsequent order of Magistrate refusing to revise order in Malkhana register—Revision by High Court.

Certain properties, alleged to be stolen properties, were found in the house of the Petitioner who was tried and convicted of theft. These properties were in the custody of the Court and after the judgment of the Sessions Judge affirming the conviction of the Petitioner, the trying Magistrate passed an order in the Malkhana register to the effect that the properties should be made over to the complainant. No order was passed on the record of the case. The Petitioner moved the High Court against the conviction and sentence and was acquitted. After his acquittal by the High Court the Petitioner applied to the trying Magistrate for the restoration of the properties to him, but the Magistrate held that he could not revise his previous order in the Malkhana register. The Petitioner then moved the High Court and obtained a Rule:

Held—That the Malkhana register forms no part of any criminal case, unless it is brought on the record in a legal way and the order in complainant's favour recorded in it was not one under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., but the order refusing to revise that order was an order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., and the High Court had jurisdiction to revise it under sec. 520, as also under sec. 439, Cr. P. C.

The intention of the Legislature in cl. (3) of sec. 517 is that an order under sec. 517 should not be carried into effect until it really becomes final either by there being no appeal within the prescribed period or by any final order by a Court of final jurisdiction.

That after the accused is acquitted of theft or burglary, the proper order to make is to direct that the property found in the possession of the accused should be restored to him. The complainant in that case could go to the Civil Court, file a suit and secure an injunction.

*That, in the circumstances of the case, the absence of a prayer by the Petitioner as to the restoration of the properties in his previous application to the High Court was no bar to his getting relief in this Rule.

KEDAR BISWAS v. MATHURA NATH MITRA.

This was a Rule granted on the 23rd September 1913, against an order of Babu Susil Kumar Ganguly, Deputy Magistrate of Jessore, dated the 6th August 1913.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Tarakeshur Pal Choudry for the Petitionor.

Babu Sirish Chandra Chaudhuri for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate and the Opposite Party to show cause why the articles taken from the Petitioner's house should not be returned to him on the grounds mentioned in the petition.

It appears that certain properties were found in the Petitioner's house which the complainant alleged had been stolen from his house when a burglary and theft had been committed. The evidence as to the identity of the accused with the commission of the crime was the evidence of a witness who said that he had recognised the accused from his voice. The accused was convicted by the trying Court and on appeal to the Appellate Cou t the conviction was upheld. Thereupon the present Petitioner moved this Court with the result that the following order was passed by this Court: "We have perused the explanation of the Magistrate in answer to the Rule; we are not satisfied that the conviction of the Petitioner is sound. We therefore make this Rule absolute and set aside the conviction and sentence passed on him and he will be forthwith released from jail." This is an acquittal by this Court. It further appears that the Petitioner was convicted in the above case on the 11th March 1913, and that conviction of the accused was upheld by the Sessions Judge on the 21st April 1913. It appears from the Malkhana register that on the 29th April 1913, the trying Magistrate passed an order to the effect that the properties which were then in the custody of the Court should be made over to the complainant of that case who is the Opposite Party in the present Rule. Admittedly no order under sec. 517 was passed on the record of the case. In the Malkhana of a Magistrate all kinds of properties either confiscated or which are the subject of some offence are kept and then after the decision they are restored to the parties entitled to them. The Malkhana register forms no part of any criminal case, unless it is brought on the record in a legal way. Subsequent to the passing of this order on the Malkhana register the Petitioner moved this Court and this Court acquitted the accused. On the 2nd July, sometime after the acquittal by this Court, the Petitioner applied to the trying Court for the restora ion of the properties on the ground that these properties were brought into Court from his possession and that he was entitled to have them restored to him inasmuch as he was acquitted of the offence by the High Court. The Magistrate thereupon sent the matter to the Police. The Police thereupon wrote to the Magistrate in the following terms :—"The property in question is claimed by both the complainant and the accused. I do not know to whom it will be returned. There is an order already made in the Malkhana register to the effect that the property to be returned to the complainant. Order as to whom it will be returned solicited." This letter

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, JUNE 29, 1914. [No. 33.

Contents.

NOTES.

Sir Lawrence Jenkins presides over the Criminal Sessions which commences its sittings from date.

Judicial Reform in India.

In our last issue we have said that we are unable to accept all the recommendations made in the issue of the Times newspaper of the 25th May last, regarding the reform of "Judicial Administration in India" as either feasible or desirable from the point of view of public interest. But all the same, we must say that the closing lines of the article will meet with the approval of even those who may take exception to the remedies suggested. The article concludes thus:—

"The present break-down of public confidence in the Courts is a menace to Civil Government. The greatest optimist cannot regard it with equaminity. It may be said that the remedies suggested will not be sufficiently immediate in its effect. The answer is that this is not a reason for a continuance of inaction. The longer reform is delayed, the more urgent and difficult will the problems become. No time is to be lost. A vigorous beginning should be made now, lest the procrastination should make more drastic and dangerous measures inevitable."

As for the remedies suggested, after suggesting special means of training for members of the Indian Civil Service, which we have pointed out in our last issue to be hardly feasible, the article proceeds to suggest that a third of the appointments to the High Court Benches should be reserved for Indian Advocates, Pleaders and Subordinate Judges. We do not take any exception to this, provided that a radical reform is made regarding the recruitment of the Subordinate Judiciary and steps are taken to ensure their rapid promotion to the position of District Judges, and those amongst them who display special merit are promoted to the High Court Benches in their prime of life and not at the fag end of their careers. But after offering this sop to the Indian public, the article proceeds to make the most extraordinary suggestion that the proportion of the Barrister Judges should be reduced to one-fourth. The provision in the existing Charters of the High Courts provides that not less than one-third of the Judges of any Chartered High Court should be Barristers. There is also a similar provision with regard to members of the Indian Civil Service. So if the proportion of Barrister Judges of the High Court are fixed at one-fourth, the proportion of Civilian Judges would necessarily increase. We are positive that the public will view any such change with great alarm and there would be great public opposition to any such innovation.

The Secretary of State and his Council should spare no pains or trouble to appoint High Court Judges from amongst such members of the English Bar as would be glad to accept a County Court Judgeship. Members of the English Bar with a fair amount of practice and of considerable learning have been known to accept Judgeships in the Colonies. A strong body of English Barrister Judges would always keep the Indian High Courts up to the mark. The provision in the existing Charters should on no account be altered, but a fair proportion of the Barristers' appointments should be given to members of the English Bar prastising in India. With regard to the remaining one-third, the appointments should be distributed amongst Barristers and Vakils practising in the Indian High Courts. The lawyer element on the Bench should on no account be reduced below two-thirds of the total number of Judges. Should there be any attempt to vary the existing proportion, the reform will be regarded in India as retrogressive and will rouse a tremendous amount of opposition.

The advantage to be derived from reducing the number of Barrister Judges is said to be that in that case Indians will not proceed to England in large numbers to qualify themselves for the Bar. But we doubt if any Indian youth joins the Inns of Court with the very remote object of obtaining a seat on the Bench. They join the Inns of Court with the very laudable object of acquiring western culture and education and of earning a living by taking to an honourable profession. If this avenue of employment is closed to them, the influx of Indian youths to Europe and America will increase, and Continental and American education will not surely promote in them the sobering influence of English legal training. Indian youths trained in England may return home with ideas of constitutional freedom; others, who are trained in the Continent or in America, imbibe from there extreme political ideas. So if this bugbear about Indian Barristers were discarded from this scheme of Judicial Reform, the rest of it would meet with general public approval. Subject to the above qualification, we reproduce below the following suggestion in the Times for the recruitment of High Court Judges more largely from amongst Indian Advocates :—

As to the other elements from which the High Court may be constituted, reform of the present method is essential. To begin with, the rank of Advocate of an Indian Court should be recognized as a qualification for promotion to the High Court Bench. As a first step, in place of one-third of the Court being reserved for Barristers, one-third should be allotted to Advocates of the Indian High Courts, or Pleaders or persons who have been Subordinate Judges, and not less than one-fourth to Barristers. At the same time, a firm stand should be made against the system of political rotation which gives to candidates of a particular nationality a lien on a vacancy in any Court, whether they are suitable or not.

Speech of the Attorney-General at the Annual Meeting of the Barristers' Benevolent Association.

The Attorney-General at the annual meeting of the Barristers' Benevolent Association made a speech which is remarkable for its outspokenness in some respects. Senior members of the Bar are apt to advise their juniors that the surest way to success at the Bar lies in industry, perseverence and the study of the law. Sir John Simon has, we find, somewhat unceremoniously, exploded this myth and suggested that the conditions of success in the legal profession are not unoften due to causes very different from those which determine success in other callings in life. The learned Attorney-General said :—

"He believed that there were many occupations, where it was true to say that a man, who was not obviously disqualified and would apply his mind to it, would meet with fair success before he came to the end of his time and, apart from some exceptional misfortunes, put himself in a safe, though not in a prominent, position. That was not true of their profession."

So far we are quite at one with the Attorney-General; but we think he was somewhat unduly hard on the leaders when he observed, "considering how great was the body of advocates at the English Bar . . . ., though it is true that many of them did not make great fortunes, some few, some happy and largely undeserving few, did do so."

But the Attorney-General only gave utterance to the strong sense of honour and the deep sense of fraternity which has long prevailed amongst the members of the Bar and which make them take a legitimate pride in the profession to which they belong and which form the strongest bond of union amongst them, when he said :—

"The Bar is, in a real sense, a brotherhood. It is bound together, or ought to be bound together by traditions of mutual good feeling which were truly fraternal. It is one of its most striking and splendid attributes as a profession that, though every man who succeeded in it was engaged in constant and, it might be, in strenuous altercation with some other member in the face of the public, he all the time regarded him, in the real sense as a friend of his own on whose honour and faith he could absolutely rely, whose word was his bond, and who, therefore, had, if misfortune struck him down, that special and peculiar claim which every well-organised community recognised existed as between those who were friendly and brotherly.

Liability of the Secretary of State to be Sued for Damages for alleged Defamation in Orders passed by Government.

A. M. Ross v. The Secretary of State for India I. L. R. 37 Mad. 55 is a decision on the liability of the Secretary of State to be sued for damages for alleged defamation in orders passed by Government. The Plaintiff who was the agent of the Assam Labour Supply Association in certain districts in the Madras Presidency sought to recover damages from the Secretary of State for India in Council in respect of two orders made by the Collector of Ganjam and for alleged defamation of the Plaintiff. By one of the orders complained of a local agent working under the Assam Labour and Emigration Act was suspended and the depôt maintained by him closed to recuriting, while by the other the local agent was dismissed. The alleged defamation of the Plaintiff by the Governor of Madras in Council was in respect of a Government order passed on the appeal of the Plaintiff and other interested parties against the Collector's orders above referred to. The order of the Government was in the following terms:—"Government see no reason to doubt that there had been illegal recruitment in the agency tracts of the Ganjam District by sirdars working under the Assam Labour Supply Association and are of opinion that the conduct of Mr. Ross (the Plaintiff) in that matter has not been wholly above suspicion."

On a consideration of the reported cases and the statutes on the subject, the Court dismissed the Plaintiff's suit with costs. Wallis, J., in the course of an elaborate and well-considered judgment pointed out that as regards liability to be sued, the Secretary of State was in no position different from that of the old East India Company before the passing of the Government of India Act, 1858, and it was on the Plaintiff to show that he would have had a cause of action against the East India Company if the case had arisen before 1858. The liabilities of the East India Company, his Lordship said, could not have been any less than those of the Crown in England on a petition of right, and this being not a case in which a petition of right would lie against the Crown at the instance of the Plaintiff and as the Company would not have been liable for the acts of its servants merely on the ground that they were done in the course of employment and as the acts complained of in this case were not shown to have been ratified by the Secretary of State who had succeeded under sec. 3 of the Government of India Act, 1858, to the powers of the Court of Directors, the Plaintiff's suit must fail.

As regards the cause of action on the order of the Governor in Council, his Lordship was of opinion that no suit lies against the Secretary of State for a libel published by the Madras Government at all events, unless it be shown that the publication was made under the orders of the Secretary of State or on his behalf and afterwards ratified by him. Even if the suit had been brought against the Members of the Madras Government at the date of the order and the High Court had jurisdiction to entertain such a suit, it must still have failed on the ground that the publication having been made by such Government in the execution of its duty and without exceeding it, was absolutely privileged.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CRIMINAL.)

Commitment, reasons for.

EMPEROR v. NANJI SAMAL, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 114.

In a case triable either by the Magistrate or by the Court of Session, reasons for commitment must include not merely reasons for not discharging the accused, but reasons for sending him before the Court of Session. Failure to comply with the law in this respect would amount to no more than an irregularity, if the case were one which plainly ought to be committed to the Sessions, but when the case is not one which ought to have been committed, it is an illegality.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 125.

RE MARE GOWD, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 125 (F. B.)

The words of the section are very wide. If the District Magistrate in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion is of opinion that the bond ought never to have been required, that is a sufficient reason for cancelling the bond.

Nabu Sirdar v. Emperor, I. L. R. 34 Cal. 1, followed.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 106—Jurisdiction of Appellate Court.

RE SALAI GOUNDEN, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 153 (F. B.)

The jurisdiction of an Appellate Court to order a person who has been convicted of one of the offences mentioned in sub-sec. (1) of sec. 106 is not restricted to cases where the conviction was by one of the Courts specified in the sub-sec. The words "an Appellate Court" are quite general and indicate that the powers given by the section may be exercised by the Courts mentioned in sub-sec. (1) and by any Appellate Court.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 195.

BEARDSELL v. NILGIRI, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 107.

During the course of certain insolvency proceedings, the accused filed an affidavit before the Official Assignee in Madras, in which he asserted the genuineness of the execution of a promissory note and the deposit of the title-deeds. Subsequently, the promissory note and letter were produced in the Insolvency Court.

Held—That for a prosecution under secs. 465, 467, 471, I. P. C., the sanction of the Insolvency Commissioner was necessary and not that of the Official Assignee. The Official Assignee does not become a Civil Court, merely because he has a wide discretion in deciding on claims of persons alleging themselves to be creditors of the insolvent, or because persons aggrieved by decisions of his can appeal to the Court from those decisions, and the provisions of the Insolvency Act do not suggest that he ought to be considered a Court subordinate to the Court which by secs. 3 and 6 of the Insolvency Act is the High Court or some officer appointed under sec. 6 of the Insolvency Act.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

KING'S BENCH DIVISION.—Elizabeth Peters v. Jones. Before MR. JUSTICE AVORY. 21st March 1914.

The principle on which an action for seduction is based—The legal fiction of master and servant.

The Plaintiff Mrs. Peters had a girl, 22 years of age, who was adopted by her and who used to do some domestic work in the house. The girl used to be given a small allowance by Mr. Peters. The Court held that Mrs. Peters, who had no separate property and did not pay her, was not the mistress of the girl and could not therefore maintain an action for seduction. The learned Judge discussed the principle upon which an action for seduction is maintainable. He said :—"The principle on which this action is maintained is, I believe, not that there must be the relationship of parent and child, or any quasi-relationship of parent and child, but that the relationship necessary is merely that of master and servant."

"If I had had any doubt about that principle I should turn to the case of Hamilton v. Long (1903) 2 I. R. 407, where the facts in my judgment give rise in principle to the very question of law that has to be determined in this case. In that case, a daughter was seduced while her father and mother were alive and while she was living in their house. A child was born after the father's death, and the daughter continued to live with the widow. It was found as a fact that the daughter rendered ordinary household services to her mother after her father's death. In these circumstances, it was held that an action could not be maintained by the widow either by virtue of the common law or the Married Woman's Property Acts. Now it is admitted to be the law that to maintain this action the relationship that justifies the maintenance of the action must exist at the time of the seduction and also at the time of the illness consequent upon it that deprives the Plaintiff of the girl's services. That being so, the Court in Hamilton v. Long (supra) had to determine whether services were rendered to the mother at the time of the seduction, and, if they were, whether the mother could maintain the action. The effect of the judgment was that as the father was alive and the daughter living in his house at the time of the seduction, he alone was the person who could have maintained the action, and that the mother could not, because at the time of the seduction the services were rendered to the father and not to the mother. If I had had any doubt upon the point, I should have willingly followed this decision of Lord Chief Justice O'Brien, Mr. Justice Madden, and Mr. Justice Gibson ; for although the decision is not binding upon me, it is of great authority.

Now that decision was in fact approved in the Irish Court of Appeal (see [1905] 2 I. R., 552) by Lord Chancellor Ashbourne and Lords Justices Fitzgibbon, Walker, and Holmes. I should be quite content to follow that decision, even if I did not entertain exactly the same view of the principle upon which this action is maintainable; it can only be maintained by proof of an actual contract of service or of an implied contract of service. The relationship of parent and child gives rise to the legal fiction that there is an implied contract of service. The legal relationship of father and child does not by itself justify the maintenance of the action, but only the legal fiction that a child living with the parent is a servant. And an action is maintainable where the daughter is under 21 years of age without any proof of actual services rendered ; but after that age is passed, there must be proof of actual services."

Mr. Lewis for the Plaintiff.

Hunter for the Defendant.

B. D.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER AND RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2381 OF 1912. KISHA BAN, Appellant v. SRIMATI RANIMOYI DEBI, Respondent. Heard, 6th and 7th April. Judgment, 26th May 1914.

Limitation—Application for decree absolute—Right, accrual of, before Act V of 1908 came into force—Application after Act V of 1908 came into force.

The question in Appeal was whether an application for an order absolute for sale, of a decree nisi, dated the 28th September 1898, was barred by limitation.

The application for order absolute was made after the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, came into operation.

Held, that the application was not barred by limitation, as there was no period of limitation within which the Plaintiff was bound to apply. That the effect of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, was not to take away the vested right that a party had to apply to have his decree for sale made absolute.

Kaunsilla v. Ishri Singh (7 A. L. J. R. 420) followed.

Dutto Atmaram v. Shankor Dattatrya (I. L. R. 38 Bom. 32) dissented from.

Gopeshwar Pal. v. Jiban Chandra (18 C. W. N. 804) referred to.

Babu Jyotis Chandra Hajra for the Appellant.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Respondent.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

KEDAR BISWAS v. MATHURA NATH MITRA.

is dated the 5th of July. The Magistrate in his explanation says that this register is the Malkhana register. Then we find, on the 9th July there is an order by the Magistrate in the following terms: "Court Inspector will please report after perusal of the judgment." Then the Court Sub-Inspector wrote to the Peshkar Babu asking him to supply the record. Then there is a letter by the Court Inspector, named A. Sen, dated the 20th July 1913, in the following terms.—"I have gone through the record of the case. In view of the Sessions Judge's finding all properties seem to belong to the complainant to whom they should be returned. Evidence for a conviction might not be sufficient. But that does not alter the situation." And we find there is an order by the Magistrate: "I am of the same opinion." Against that order the Petitioner moved this Court for the restoration of the properties in question to him.

On behalf of the Opposite Party, it has been contended that the order passed by the trying Magistrate on the 29th of April was a legal order, and that this Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the order. We are, however, of a different opinion. The order of the 29th of April was either an order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., or it was not. If it was an order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., this Court has jurisdiction to interfere with that order under sec. 520 of the Cr. P. C. That is to say, we can pass an order staying the carrying out of that order. If the order of the 29th April was not an order under sec. 517 on the ground that it was not passed on the record and that it was not passed in the presence of the parties in that case, it may not be an order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C. But on the 2nd of July, the present Petitioner applied to the trying Magistrate for the restoration of these properties, and certain order has been passed on that petition. It was to the effect that that Court was not in a position to revise the order of the 29th April. This is no doubt an order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., and this Court has jurisdiction to interfere with it under sec. 520, Cr. P. C. It has also been contended on behalf of the Opposite Party that the matter before us is under sec. 439, Cr. P. C. But the learned Vakil for the Petitioner informs us that the application to this Court was not made under sec. 439, but under sec. 520, Cr. P. C. In either case this Court has got jurisdiction. "Sec. 435, Cr. P. C., clearly provides that the High Court . . . . may call for and examine the record of any proceedings before any inferior Criminal Court situate within the local limits of its jurisdiction for the purpose of satisfying itself as to the correctness, legality or propriety of any finding, sentence or order recorded as passed and as to the regularity of any proceedings of such inferior Court." Sec. 439 provides that "In the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may in its discretion exercise any of the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by secs. 195, 423, 426, 427 and 428." When we refer back to sec. 423, we find thus: "The Appellate Court shall then send for the record of the case, if such record is not already in Court. After perusing such record, and hearing the Appellant or his Pleader, if he appears, and the Public Prosecutor, if he appears, and in case of an appeal under sec. 417 the accused, if he appears, the Court may, if it considers that there is no sufficient ground for interfering, dismiss the appeal or may [cl. (a)] make any amendment or any consequential or incidental order that may be just or proper." So any order passed under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., may be amended by us under cl. (d), sec. 423, Cr. P. C.

KEDAR BISWAS v. MATHURA NATH MITRA.

Lastly, it has been contended that the present Petitioner moved this Court against his conviction and sentence in the original case. He did not apply for the restoration of the properties in the event of his acquittal by this Court. It seems to us that it is quite clear from the record that nobody knew that the Magistrate had passed any order in favour of the complainant in that case for the restoration of the properties; evidently the order of the 29th April was an order outside the case, and something like an instruction given by the Magistrate to a Subordinate Officer as to how he should deal with certain properties. The Petitioner's own application which he filed on 2nd July does not mention that any order has been passed and that order should be set aside on the ground of his acquittal by the High Court. It seems to us doubtful that even the complainant knew that such an order was passed. Sec. 517, cl. (3) provides that "when an order is made under this section in a case in which an appeal lies, such order shall not (except when the property is live stock or is subject to speedy and natural decay) be carried out until the period allowed for presenting such appeal has passed, or, when such appeal is presented within such period, until such appeal has been disposed of." Clearly the intention of the Legislature is this, that on passing an order like the one in the present case, the order should not be carried out at once, that is to say, the properties although ordered to be given to a party should not be made over to him until either the period of limitation for preferring an appeal has expired, or the appeal filed has been disposed of. The intention of the Legislature seems to be that until the order really becomes final either by there being no appeal within the prescribed period or by any final order by a Court of final jurisdiction, the property is to be kept in the custody of the Court, that is to say, if an order has been passed as in the present case that the property should be made over to the complainant, that order should not be carried out at once, because it is possible that this order may become infructuous on the accused being acquitted by a Court of higher jurisdiction, for in that case the order will have to be changed.

After an accused has been acquitted of the offence of theft or burglary, the proper order to make is to direct that the property found in the possession of the accused should be restored to him. The complainant in that case could go to the Civil Court, file a suit and secure an order of injunction.

For the above reasons we make this Rule absolute. The properties in question should be made over to the Petitioner.

Rule made absolute.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD MOULTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard, 31, March.
Judgment, 7, April.

GHAUDHRI ABDUL MAJID, Appellant,
v.
JAWAHIR LAL and, others, Respondents.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Arts. 179, 180—Mortgage suit—Decree for sale, affirmed by High Court on appeal—Appeal to Privy Council dismissed for non-prosecution—Application for order absolute—Limitation—High Court decree if merged in Order in Council—Right to execute, barred by limitation, if revived by the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908).

Where a decree for sale, passed in a mortgage suit on 12th May 1890, was affirmed on appeal by the High Court on 8th April 1893, and an appeal from the decree of the High Court to His Majesty in Council was dismissed for want of prosecution on 13th May 1901 :

Held—That an application for an order absolute to sell the mortgage properties was barred, under Art. 179 of Sch. II of the Limitation Act of 1877, at the expiry of three years from the date of the High Court's decree, the only decree for sale in existence, the operation of which had not been stayed and which did not become merged in any decree of His Majesty in Council.

The order dismissing the appeal to His Majesty in Council for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from.

No provision of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 operated to revive the right to enforce the decree, which had already become time-barred.

ABDUL HAMID v. JAWAHIR LAL (1) reversed.

This was an Appeal from a judgment of a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (Sir J. Stanley, C. J., and Banerji and Chamier, JJ.) in the case of Abdul Hamid v. Jawahir Lal (1). The facts of the case which appear from their Lordships' judgment were briefly as follows :

The mortgagee obtained a decree (preliminary) for sale which was affirmed on appeal by the High Court on the 8th April 1893. The mortgagor then appealed to His Majesty in Council, but the appeal was dismissed for non-prosecution on the 13th May 1901. An order of His Majesty in Council was duly made dismissing the appeal, but there was no order as to costs. The decree-holder applied to the first Court for an order absolute for sale. The judgment-debtor pleaded among other things that the proper procedure was to apply to the High Court under sec. 610, C. P. C., for enforcing His Majesty's Order in Council. This objection prevailed, and the decree-holder then applied to the High Court under sec. 610 to transmit the Order in Council to the Court of first instance for execution, and that order was accordingly made. On the 11th June 1909, the decree-holder filed the present application before the Subordinate Judge for an order absolute for sale. The judgment-debtor objected that it was barred by limitation. The Subordinate Judge held that as the decree-holder was enforcing His Majesty's Order in Council, the period of limitation was 12 years under Art. 180 of Act XV of 1877. The Full Bench of the High Court affirmed that view. [See Abdul Hamid v. Jawahir Lal (1)]. Sir J. Stanley, C. J., in the course of his judgment observed as follows :—

(1) I. L. R. 33 All. 164 (1910).

CHAUDHRI ABDUL MAJID v. JAWAHIR LAL.

"This application was met by the objection on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the application was barred by limitation, that the only decree which was capable of execution was the decree of the High Court passed on the 8th of April 1893, that the order of their Lordships of the Privy Council did not affirm that decree, but merely dismissed the appeal for want of prosecution and that there was no order or decree of the Privy Council which was capable of execution.

"If this contention be correct, then the application for execution is barred by Art. 178 or 179 of the Second Schedule to Act XV of 1877, corresponding to Arts. 181 or 182 of Act IX of 1908. If, on the other hand, the order of the Privy Council is an order which can be executed, the application of the decree-holder is governed by Art. 180 of Act XV of 1877, corresponding to Art. 183 of Act IX of 1908. This last mentioned article provides a period of 12 years within which an order of His Majesty in Council may be enforced. If the order of His Majesty of the 13th of May 1901 is treated as an affirmance of the decree of this Court, it seems to me that it is the decree or order of the final Court of Appeal and is an order which can be executed, and as 12 years have not elapsed since the date of that order, the application of the creditor is not barred by limitation. The question is not without authority. In Pitts v. La Fontaine (2), it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that when a decision of the Judicial Committee has been reported and sanctioned and embodied in an Order of Council, it becomes the decree or order of the final Court of Appeal, and it is the duty of every subordinate tribunal to whom the order is addressed to carry it into execution.

"In Luchmun Prasad Singh v. Kishun Prasad Singh (3), it was held by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court on a reference by Mitter and Maclean, JJ., that although an order of Her late Majesty in Council only confirms a decree of the Court below, that order is the paramount decision in the suit, and any application to enforce it is in point of law an application to execute the order and not the decree which it confirmed. The question before the Court in that case was whether Art. 179 or 180 of Sch. II of Act XV of 1877 governed an application to enforce an order of Her Majesty in Council affirming a decree of the High Court on its Appellate Side. Garth, C. J., who delivered the judgment of the Court, observed: 'Although an order of Her Majesty in Council may confirm the decree of the Court below, that order is undoubtedly the paramount decision in the suit, and any application to enforce it is in point of law an application to execute the order and not the decree which it confirmed.' Then he observes that before the decree-holder 'can obtain execution, he must apply to the High Court under sec. 610 of the Code to transmit the order of Her Majesty to the Court whose duty it is to issue execution and it is clear from the language of that section that the Court to which the order is transmitted has to execute not its own decree, but the order itself. If this were not so, there would seem no necessity for applying to the High Court at all.'

"In this case it will be observed, the order of the Privy Council affirmed the decree of the High Court, and it may be said that there was no such affirmance of the decree of the High Court in the present case. This, I think, is not so. The dismissal of the judgment-debtor's appeal for want of prosecution must, I think, be treated as an affirmance of the decree of the High Court.

(2) L. R. 6 A. C. 482 (1881).

(3) I. L. R. 8 Cal. 218 (1882).

CHAUDHRI ABDUL MAJID v. JAWAHIR LAL.

"The question whether the dismissal of an appeal for want of prosecution was a decree affirming the decision of the Court immediately below within the meaning of sec. 596 of the former Code of Civil Procedure was considered in the case of Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (4). That section falls within Chap. 45, which treats of appeals to His Majesty in Council, and it prescribes the requirements for such an appeal and amongst others enjoins that where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree, the appeal must involve some substantial question of law. My Brothers Knox and Banerji held that a decree dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution was a decree affirming the decision of the Court immediately below within the meaning of sec. 596.

The decision of the Privy Council in Tassaduk Rasul Khan v. Kashi Ram (5) lends support to the view taken in the last mentioned case. In that case a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Respondents to the hearing of an appeal before their Lordships on the ground that the order giving leave to appeal was not in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit in that case was for specific performance of an agreement and the Court below had decreed specific performance. On appeal the only order of the Appellate Court was in these terms:—'It is ordered and decreed that this appeal be dismissed and the Respondent's costs of this appeal * * * are to be paid by * * * Appellant.'

"It was held that in order to 'affirm the decision of the Court below' within the meaning of sec. 596, it is sufficient for the Appellate Court to affirm the decree; it need not also affirm the grounds of fact on which the judgment was passed and that where the decree of the Appellate Court was that the appeal be dismissed, but the reasons given were not the same as those of the lower Court in respect of some matters of fact, the Appellate Court by the dismissal affirmed the decision of the lower Court within the meaning of the section. This decision appears to me to lend strong support to the argument addressed to us on behalf of the Respondent, that the dismissal of an appeal operates as an affirmance of the decree of the Court from which the appeal is preferred, and it is immaterial on what grounds it is dismissed. It seems to me therefore that we ought to treat the order of His Majesty in Council as the final order in the litigation and the order which alone is capable of enforcement."

Mr. Justice Banerji said as follows:—"This order of His Majesty is the final order in the cause and is the order which must be enforced. The necessary effect of an order dismissing an appeal from the decree of a subordinate Court is an affirmance of that decree. Therefore, when an appeal to His Majesty in Council is dismissed, the necessary result is that the decree of the Court below is affirmed, whatever the reason for the dismissal may be. It was held in Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (4), that a decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal for want

(4) I. L. R. 20 All. 367 (1898).
(5) I. L. R. 25 All. 109 (1902).

(4) I. L. R. 20 All. 367 (1898).

CHAUDHRI ABDUL MAJID v. JAWAHIR LAL.

of prosecution was a decree affirming the decision of the Court below. I was a party to this ruling, and I see no reason to alter the opinion therein expressed. To the same effect is the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tassaduk Rasul Khan v. Kashi Ram (5), referred to in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice. In that case, the decree of the Appellate Court was, as the report of the case shows, 'that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.' It was held that the Appellate Court affirmed the decision of the lower Court. The principle of these cases applies to the present case, and applying that principle it cannot but be held that the order of His Majesty dismissing the Appellant's appeal affirmed the decree of this Court."

Hence this appeal.

Mr. G. R. Lowndes for the Appellant submitted that the present application was barred by limitation. The period of three years from the 8th April 1893 had expired. His Majesty's order in Council was not a substantive decree in the cause. The appeal was dismissed for non-prosecution. There was even no order as to costs. The decree, dated the 8th April 1893, was not affected by the abortive proceedings in Appeal. There was no affirmance of that decree by His Majesty. The Courts below had erred in holding that the decree-holder had 12 years within which to apply. There was nothing in the Order in Council which could be enforced or was in fact being enforced. The application was made after the new Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908) and the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) had come into force. These new Acts applied to the present case. In that view the present application was not an application for execution of a decree. It was an application under Or. 34, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code to obtain a final decree for sale. It was barred by Art. 181 of the new Limitation Act. In any case, the application was barred under sec. 48 of the new Code of Civil Procedure after the expiry of 12 years from the 8th of April 1893. Art. 180 or 183 had no application. The case of Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (4) did not govern the present application. The Order of His Majesty in Council was not a judicial order affirming the decree of the High Court.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhagwandin Dubé for the Respondent submitted that neither the new Code of Civil Procedure nor the new Limitation Act governed the present case. The present application was an application in execution of a decree under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. It was not an application under Or. 34, r. 5 That rule applies to those cases only in which a preliminary decree is passed under Or. 34, r. 4. In other words, both the preliminary decree and the final decree must be made under the new Code. Here the decree for sale was made under the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and that Act alone was applicable. It was settled law that an application under sec. 89 for an order absolute for sale was an application in execution of a decree. Art. 180 of Act XV of 1877 was applicable. The Order of His Majesty in Council was the final decree and order in the cause. It was a decree or order affirming the decree of the High Court. The reasons on which it was based were immaterial. Under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, when a first or second appeal is lodged, the period of limitation begins to run from the date of the decree or order of the Appellate Court, whether the appeal is dismissed for default, or is allowed to be withdrawn. It was not necessary that the dismissal of the appeal should be a judicial termination for the purpose of extending the period of limitation. His Majesty in Council was seised of the appeal, because a petition of appeal had been filed. The Order in Council dismissed the appeal, and its effect would be the same if the appeal were dismissed on the ground of limitation or want of prosecution or some other ground. It was a judicial order of affirmance and not an executive order of the Registrar. There could be no doubt that if an Appellate Court in India had dismissed an appeal for non-prosecution, the period of limitation would run from the date of the dismissal under Art. 179 of Act XV of 1877. The decree of the High Court here was merged in the Order in Council which the Respondents were seeking to enforce. Reliance was placed upon the following authorities: Gobardhan Das v. Gopal Ram (6), Kristo Kinkur Roy v. Burrodacaunt Roy (7), Shivlal Kalidas v. Jumaklal Nathiji Desai (8), Nanchand v. Vithu (9), Beni Rai v. Ram Lakhan Rai (4), Ram Narain Joshi v. Parmeswar Narain Mahta (10), Luchmun Prasad Singh v. Kishun Prasad Singh (3).

(5) I. L. R. 25 All. 109 (1902).

(4) I. L. R. 20 All. 367 (1898).

CHAUDHRI ABDUL MAJID v. JAWAHIR LAL.

Further, if the present application was not an application in execution of a decree, it was purely an application under sec. 89 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. For such an application no period of limitation was prescribed by Act XV of 1877. Reliance was placed on Tiluck Singh v. Parsotien Prosad (11), Rahmat Karim v. Abdul Karim (12). The present case was distinguishable from the case of Batuk Nath v. Munni Dei (13).

Here an Order in Council was duly made on the report of the Lords of the Judicial Committee.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—In this case the relevant facts necessary and sufficient to determine their Lordships' decision on the appeal are very simple and are undisputed.

The Appellant is in the position of mortgagor and the Respondents of mortgagees under a mortgage, dated 3rd September 1868. In 1889, a suit was commenced before the Subordinate Judge of Allahabad to enforce that mortgage, and on 12th May 1890 a decree was passed by him for the sale of the property, unless payment was made on or before 12th August 1890. An appeal was brought from that decree to the High Court, and on 8th April 1893 that appeal was dismissed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge confirmed. The mortgagor obtained leave to appeal to this Board, but did not prosecute his appeal, and on 13th May 1901 the appeal was dismissed for want of prosecution.

The present appeal relates to an application to the Subordinate Judge, dated 11th June 1909, for an order absolute to sell the mortgaged properties; in other words, for an order directing enforcement of the order nisi which had been confirmed by

(3) I. L. R. 8 Cal. 218 (1882).
(4) I. L. R. 20 All. 367 (1898).
(6) I. L. R. 7 All. 366 (1885).
(7) 14 M. I. A. 465 (1872).
(8) I. L. R. 18 Bom. 542 (1893).
(9) I. L. R. 19 Bom. 258 (1894).
(10) L. R. 30 I. A. 25 (1902).
(11) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 924 (1895).
(12) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 672 (1907).
(13) 18 C. W. N. 740 (1914)

CHAUDHRI ABDUL MAJID v. JAWAHIR LAL.

the decision of the High Court of 8th April 1893. It is not necessary to go into the particulars of this application, because their Lordships are of opinion that any such application was barred by the Statute of Limitation, Article 179, at the expiry of three years from the date of the decree, and therefore before the passing of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, under which the present proceedings purported to be taken, and their Lordships have no doubt whatever that inasmuch as the right to enforce the decree had once been barred, no provisions of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, operate to revive it.

The chief matter of argument before this Board was a contention that the decree which it is sought to enforce had been constructively turned into a decree of His Majesty in Council and assigned to the date of 13th May 1901 by virtue of the dismissal of the appeal for want of prosecution on that date, and that therefore the period of limitation was 12 years from 13th May 1901 by virtue of Art. 180 of the Indian Limitation Act. Their Lordships see no foundation for this contention, which appears to have been the basis of the decision of the Courts below. The order dismissing the appeal for want of prosecution did not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and could in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognised authoritatively that the Appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him, and that therefore he was, in the same position as if he had not appealed at all. To put it shortly, the only decree for sale that exists is, the decree, dated 8th April 1893, and that is a decree of the High Court of Allahabad. The operation of this decree has never been stayed, and there is no decree of His Majesty in Council in which it has become merged. The period of limitation applying to the enforcement of it at all material times was therefore a period of three years. The Respondents' right is therefore barred by limitation.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, and that the application of 11th June 1909 should be dismissed and that the respondents should pay the costs of that application and of the appeal to the High Court as well as of this appeal.

Solicitor: Mr. Douglas Grant for the Appellant.

Solicitors: Messrs. Barrow, Rogers and Nevill for the Respondents.

B. D. Appeal dismissed with costs.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM ALLAHABAD.]

LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard, 1, May.
Judgment, 12, May.

SHEO SHANKAR RAM and ors., Appellants,
v.
MUSAMMAT JADDO KUNWAR and others, Respondents.

Hindu Law—Mortgage, suit on—Managing members of joint Hindu family made Defendants—Co-parceners not made parties, if bound by decree—Suit by latter for redemption, if lies—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 85.

There are occasions, including foreclosure actions, when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound.

Where the members of a joint Hindu

SHEO SHANKAR RAM v. MUSAMMAT JADDO KUNWAR.

family other than the managers sued for redemption of mortgages which the mortgagee had already foreclosed by suits in which the managing members of the family had been made parties and the other members were not made parties, the mortgagee not having had notice of their interests, and there was not the slightest ground for suggesting that the managers of the joint family did not act in every way in the interests of the family itself:

Held—That no question under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act arose in the case, as the mortgagee was not aware of the Plaintiffs' interest, and the suit for redemption was properly dismissed.

JADDO KUNWAR v. SHEO SHANKAR RAM (1) affirmed.

This was an Appeal from a judgment, dated the 8th July 1910, of the Allahabad High Court (Tudball and Chamier, JJ.) in the case of Jaddo Kunwar v. Sheo Shankar Ram (1).

One Bhuabal Bhagat and his descendants who were joint in every respect carried on an ancestral grocery business under the style of Bhuabal Bhagat Bhoj Ram. They also did a little money-lending and owned some zemindari properties. After the death of Bhuabal and four of his sons, the management of the business and property came into the hands of the remaining son, Hira Ram, and Dhundha Ram, the son of one of the deceased sons. These two persons advanced money belonging to the family upon a mortgage, dated 4th July 1894, of some villages already mortgaged to the Respondent Jaddo Kunwar, and on 26th July 1894, they purchased with family funds certain other villages previously mortgaged to the same mortgagee. The latter in 1895 sued upon her mortgages and obtained two decrees, one for sale and another for foreclosure. Hira Ram and Dhundha Ram were parties to the suits, but the Plaintiffs who were the sons of Hira Ram and Dhundha Ram and the son, grandson and the great grandson of another son of Bhuabal who had pre-deceased Hira Ram were not made parties. In the present suit the Plaintiffs claimed a decree for redemption of all the properties mortgaged to the Respondent Jaddo Kunwar. The Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur, Mr. Chajjumal, gave the Plaintiffs a decree on 18th December 1912 for redemption of so much of the property as was covered by the mortgage of 4th July 1894. The Respondent Jaddo Kunwar appealed to the High Court

Both the Courts in India concurrently found that Hira Ram and Dhundha Ram were the managers of the family property and business and that the Respondent when she sued on her mortgage was not aware of the existence of the Plaintiffs. The High Court decreed the appeal holding upon a review of authorities that where a joint family has been effectively represented in a suit and substantial justice has been done, the Court is not always bound to set aside the execution proceedings merely because every member of the family was not formally made a party.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhagwandin Dube for the Appellants submitted that the Appellants were necessary parties to the foreclosure proceedings. If their Lordships held that the managing members effectively represented the whole family, the Appellants' case must fail. Reference was made to Kishen Parshad* v. *Har Narain (2).

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Lowndes for the Respondents were not heard.

(1) I. L. R. 33 All. 71 (1910).

(2) L. R. 38 I. A. 45 (1911).

SHEO SHANKAR RAM v. MUSAMMAT JADDO KUNWAR.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—This is an Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature of the North-Western Provinces, Allahabad, which reversed a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur. The matter in issue is whether the Plaintiffs or some of them are entitled to redeem the mortgaged properties in suit, or whether they are bound by certain foreclosure decrees, dated the 27th of March 1895, which were followed by orders absolute, dated the 3rd of April 1897, upon which possession was taken in August 1897.

So far as is necessary to make clear the question in issue, the facts of the case are as follows. The first and principal Respondent, Musammat Jaddo Kunwar, was the mortgagee of certain properties under a mortgage, dated the 16th September 1887, and of certain other properties by a mortgage of 6th January 1891. In 1895 she brought suits to foreclose those mortgages. But in the interval, Hira Ram and Dhundha Ram, members of a joint Hindu family, had acquired interest in the mortgaged properties partly by purchase and partly by obtaining a usufructuary mortgage. Both these interests were of course subordinate to the mortgage to Musammat Jaddo Kunwar. Although Hira Ram and Dhundha Ram acquired these interests in their own name, they were in fact acquired by them on behalf of the joint family, although the Respondent Musammat Jaddo Kunwar had no notice of this fact at any time material to the question in this action.

Hira Ram and Dhundha Ram were made parties to the foreclosure actions by Musammat Jaddo Kunwar as parties interested in the mortgaged properties, and the foreclosure decrees were pronounced against them. They did not make any attempt to avail themselves of their right to redeem, so that the order absolute was pronounced against them. They were at the time of acquiring the properties and also at all material times in the foreclosure suits the managers of the joint family and they acted as such, both in acquiring the properties and in abstaining from redeeming them. The Appellants, the Plaintiffs in this suit, are other members of the joint family, and they claim that they were, as such members, interested in the mortgaged properties at the time of the foreclosure suits, and that they ought to have been joined therein as parties, and that inasmuch as they were not so joined, the foreclosure decrees do not bind them, and they are entitled now to redeem. The Subordinate Judge found in their favour on this point of principle, but held that they were entitled to redeem their own properties only and not the entire properties comprised in the said mortgages. On appeal to the High Court of Judicature it was held that they were bound by the foreclosure decrees on the ground that the joint family was effectively represented in the suit, and that in such case the Court is not bound to set aside the execution proceedings, where substantial justice has been done, merely because every existing member of the family was not formally a party to the suit.

There seems to be no doubt upon the Indian decisions (from which their Lordships see no reason to dissent) that there are occasions including foreclosure actions when the managers of a joint Hindu family so effectively represent all other members of the family that the family as a whole is bound. It is quite clear from the facts of this case and the findings of the Courts upon them that this is a case where this principle ought to be applied. There is not the slightest ground for suggesting that the managers of the joint family did not act in every way in the interests of the family itself, and no question arises under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, because the mortgagee had no notice of the Plaintiffs' interests. Their Lordships have therefore no hesitation in deciding that there is no reason for interfering in the decision of the High Court. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed, and that the Appellants should pay the costs.

SHEO SHANKAR RAM v. MUSAMMAT JADDO KUNWAR.

Solicitor: Mr. Douglas Grant for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co., for the Respondents.

B. D. Appeal dismissed with costs.

[FULL BENCH REFERENCES]

IN

APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 455 OF 1907.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2388 OF 1908,

AND

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2379 OF 1908.

JENKINS, C. J.
STEPHEN, J.
WOODROFFE, J.
MOOKERJEE, J.
HOLMWOOD, J.
1914,
Heard, 15, 16, 17, 18, May.
Judgment, 2, June.

DAYAMAYI
v.
ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

Occupancy holding, not transferable by custom—Transfer without landlord's consent, effect of—Purchaser of portion, if may recover from landlord who has dispossessed him—If he may apply to set aside sale of holding—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 244—"Representative"—Holding, if may be transferred apart from occupancy right.

Apart from custom or local usage, the transfer for value of the whole or a part of an occupancy holding is operative as against the raiyat,

(a) Where it is made voluntarily,

(b) Where it is made involuntarily, and the raiyat with knowledge fails or omits to have the sale set aside.

A sale is made involuntarily where it is in execution of a money-decree, but not of a decree founded on a mortgage or charge voluntarily made.

The transfer is operative as against the landlord in all cases in which it is operative against the raiyat, provided the landlord has given his previous or subsequent consent. Where the transfer is the sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding, but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act; or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy.

Whether there has been a relinquishment or repudiation or not, depends on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case.

The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against all other persons where it is operative against the raiyat.

A person who without the landlord's consent purchases a portion of an occupancy holding which is not transferable by local custom or usage is a person whose immoveable property has been sold and is a representative of the judgment-debtor under sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

A transferee of a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom can by suit recover possession from the landlord who has forcibly dispossessed him.

A right of occupancy not transferable by custom or local usage can be transferred, but not the holding apart from the right of occupancy.

These were three Full Bench References arising out of three appeals. In the first of these (Appeal from Order No. 455 of 1907) Srimati Daya Mayi, the Petitioner in the executing Court was the Appellant and Ananda Mohan Roy Chaudhuri and anr., the Opposite Party, were the Respondents. In Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2388 of 1908, the Plaintiff Shaikh Azim was the Appellant and the Defendants Golak Chung alias Chandra Nath Chung and others were the Respondents. In Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2379 of 1908, Defendant No. 1, Ambika Charan Mandal, was the Appellant, and Ram Charan Pramanik and another, Plaintiffs, and Defendants No. 2 and 3 were Respondents.

The three References were heard consecutively in the above order.

The Reference in the first of these appeals was made on the 14th July 1908 by COXE and DOSS, JJ. It was in these terms :—

COXE and DOSS, JJ.—In this case the Respondent No. 2 was the owner of an occupancy holding which was not transferable by local custom or usage. He sold a portion of it to the Appellant. The landlord afterwards sued for rent and obtained a decree. In execution, he sold the holding and purchased it himself. The Appellant then applied under secs. 244 and 311 of the Civil Procedure Code and sec. 173 of the Tenancy Act to have the sale set aside. The Lower Appellate Court has decided against the Appellant and hence this Appeal.

Two points are taken in Appeal—

First.—That the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the Appellant was not entitled to maintain the application under secs. 311 and 244 ; and

Secondly.—That he was wrong in holding that the decree-holder's purchase was not proved to have been effected on behalf of the judgment-debtor.

Taking the second point first, we think that the decision of the Subordinate Judge on this point is one of fact that cannot be questioned in second appeal.

With regard to the first point, the Subordinate Judge has decided the fourth point laid down for decision in his judgment in favour of the Appellant. That point is thus stated—"Whether the sale notices were suppressed by fraud of the decree-holder." So we may take it as a finding of fact with which we cannot interfere in second appeal that the sale was obtained by the decree-holder by fraud. But the Subordinate Judge holds that the Appellant being a purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding was not entitled to apply under sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code at all.

The question whether the Appellant is entitled to apply under sec. 244 depends on the question whether he is a representative of a party to the suit, which depends on the further question whether he has an interest in the judgment-debtor's property which is affected by the decree.

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

This is laid down in Ishan Chandar Sirkar v. Beni Madhab Sirkar (1), which has been followed in several of the cases to which we propose to refer. It is clear enough that if the Appellant has purchased any interest of the Judgment-debtor, that interest is bound by the decree, and the Appellant is so far a representative of the Judgment debtor and is entitled to apply under sec. 244. The question, therefore, narrows itself down to this, namely, whether a person who purchases without the landlord's consent a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by local custom or usage without the landlord's consent can be said to have purchased any interest at all in the property. The Subordinate Judge has relied on Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore (2). In that case, the applicant to set aside the sale was a mortgagee of the holding, and the learned Judges held that his right to have the sale set aside depended on the question whether or not the holding was transferable by local usage. They remarked—"If such interest was not transferable either according to law, custom or local usage, then we are of opinion that the Appellant could not rightly be regarded as a representative in the proper sense of the word and as falling within the provision of sec. 244, Civil Procedure Code." This finding was necessary for the decision of the case, for by necessary implication in the order of remand the learned Judges directed the lower Court to dismiss the application, if it was found that the holding was not transferable by local usage.

The only distinction that the learned pleader for the Appellant can draw between his case and that quoted is that this is a case of a sale and that was one of a mortgage. But a perusal of the decision itself will show that it refers generally to all transfers. We think there is no real distinction between the cases. A sale of the holding for arrears of rent would have been as fatal to a mortgage as to a sale.

We think, therefore, that if this decision is sound, we are bound to dismiss the appeal and to hold that in the present case, in which the holding is not transferable by custom, the Appellant obtained nothing by his purchase and cannot be regarded as a representative under sec. 244, inasmuch as if he bought no interest, he has no interest to be affected by the decree. There is of course authority for the view that a purchase, such as this, conveys nothing. We may refer to Bhiram Ali Shaikh Shikdar v. Gopi Kanth Saha (3), Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders (4), Sadagar Sarkar v. Krishna Chandar Nath (5).

On the other hand, however, it seems to have been held by necessary implication in Bhagirath Changa v. Sheikh Hafizuddin (6), Ambika Nath v. Aditya Nath (7), Ayenuddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra Banerjee (8) that a purchaser of an occupancy holding not transferable by local custom or usage acquires a good title against his vendor and persons claiming through him, and it has been held further in Kabil Sardar v. Chandra Nath Nag Chowdhury (9), Durga Prasad Sen v. Doula Gazee (10),

(1) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 62 (1896).
(2) 11 C. W. N. 812 (1906).

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897).
(4) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 615 (1899).
(5) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 937 (1899).
(6) 4 C. W. N. 679 (1900).
(7) 6 C. W. N. 624 (1902).
(8) 11 C. W. N. 76 (1906).
(9) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 590 (1892).
(10) 1 C. W. N. 160 (1894).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

Sheikh Gozaffur Hossain v. E. Dalglish (11) that a transfer of a portion of an occupancy holding not transferable by local custom or usage does not entitle the landlord to re-enter on the portion so transferred. In view of these authorities, though they are not expressly referred to, it has been held in Omar Ali v. Basiruddin Ahmed (12), following Kunja Behari v. Sambhu Chandar (13), to which Bunshidhar v. Kedar Nath (14) may be added, that a purchaser of a portion of an occupancy holding, whether transferable or not, is entitled to apply under sec. 310-A, and, therefore, following Asgar Ali Khan v. Asabuddin Kazi (15) quoted above, under sec. 244. It has been sought to distinguish the present case from Omar Ali v. Basiruddin Ahmed (12) on the ground that the application in the latter case was under sec. 310 A. The words in both sec. 310-A and sec. 311 are "persons whose immoveable property has been sold", and the whole point is whether the purchaser can be said to have any property at all in the holding. In Asgar Ali v. Asabuddin (15) the application was under sec. 311 and sec. 244. We think there is nothing in this distinction and that if the decisions in Omar Ali v. Basiruddin Ahmed (12) and Asgar Ali v. Asabuddin Kazi (15) are correct, we are bound in the present case to allow the appeal and to hold that the Appellant is a person whose immoveable property has been sold and is a representative of the Judgment-debtor under sec. 244.

We think, therefore, that there is a real conflict of authority and that the appeal ought to be referred to a Full Bench and we refer it accordingly. As Rule 11 of the Rules for References to a Full Bench by implication requires that we should state our own opinion on the point referred, we may say that we agree with the decision in Omar Ali v. Basiruddin Ahmed (12), and it necessarily follows that we differ from the view taken in Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore (2). We would formulate the point to be decided in the following way :—

"Is a person, who without the landlord's consent purchased from a raiyat, the whole or a portion of an occupancy holding, which is not transferable by local custom or usage, entitled to apply under sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code as a representative of the raiyat to have a sale of the holding in execution of a decree for arrears of rent set aside on the ground of fraud?"

[This Reference which was ready for hearing for some time, and had on several occasions before been placed on the Peremptory Board, had to be adjourned for one reason or another. On one of these occasions (there being then pending a number of other references bearing on the position of a transferee of an occupancy holding) the Full Bench, as then constituted, passed this order: "We direct that this reference do stand over generally, and the Reference be treated as including the question whether the Appellant can be considered as a representative of the Judgment-debtor, regard being had to the fact that he purchased before suit and the words 'the whole or' be omitted from the present reference."]

(11) 1 C. W. N. 162 (1896).
(12) 7 C. L. J. 282 (1908).
(13) 8 C. W. N. 232 (1903).
(14) 1 C. W. N. 114 (1896).
(15) 9 C. W. N. 134 (1904).

(2) 11 C. W. N. 312 (1906).
(12) 7 C. L. J. 282 (1908).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

Babu Mohendra Nath Roy (with Babu Sarat Chandra Ghosh) for the Appellant.—The terms of the reference have been modified. The application was under sec. 244 as well as under sec. 311, C. P. C. It being a second appeal, the application under sec. 311 could not be considered. The question is to be considered with reference only to sec. 244. This is why the reference has been amended.

The holding was to be sold under a decree of 4th January 1906. I purchased on 17th February 1909. The question when I purchased was of no importance, as the interest I purchased would be extinguished by the sale. I am thus a representative of the Judgment-debtor within the Full Bench ruling in Ishan Chunder Sirkar v. Beni Madhab Sirkar (1). Assuming I have acquired an interest in the holding, I am, so far as that interest is concerned, bound by the decree. The important question, therefore, is—have I acquired any interest at all? On this point the decisions are not uniform, but the balance of authority favours the view that a purchaser acquires an interest which is not good against the landlord, but good against all other people. Some of the decisions are based on the ground of estoppel, holding that the vendor and persons claiming under him cannot object.

Briefly, the purchaser acquires an interest which is defeasible at the instance of the landlord, but it is an interest in the property.

The decisions against me are those which hold that, except under special local customs, occupancy holdings are not transferable at all, though the transferor may, in special circumstances, be estopped from saying that the transfer conveyed no title.

The older authorities show that occupancy holdings were generally not transferable except by custom.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Suggests that the proper way to describe an occupancy raiyat's interest would be to say, it is a holding in respect of which there are occupancy rights.]

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Asks if he has found any instance in which the question arose between persons other than the landlord and the vendor or vendee.]

Relies on Asgar Ali v. Asabuddin Kazi (15). Here a portion of the holding was sold. Whether the holding was transferable or not does not appear to have been considered. The purchaser was held to be a representative within sec. 244.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The case was argued on the assumption that the holding was non-transferable.]

It was followed in Gopi Nath v. Sujani Kanta (16) and Haradhan v. Girish Chandra (17), contra, Makhan Lal Pal v. Khudu Khan (18). See also Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore (2) in which a mortgagee of a transferable holding was held entitled to apply under sec. 244. In Prosunno Kumar v. Bama Churn (19) which follows the last case, the right was denied to the purchaser of the holding, because the holding was not transferable. Refers to Nalini Behary Roy v. Fulmani Dasi (20), Benodini Dassi v. Peary Mohan Haldar (21), Kunja Behary v. Sambhu Chandra (13), Omar Ali

(1) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 62 at p. 71 (1896).

(2) 11 C. W. N. 312 (1906).
(13) 8 C. W. N. 232 (1903).
(15) 9 C. W. N. 134 (1904).
(16) 10 C. W. N. 240 (1905).
(17) 13 C. W. N. 98 (1908).
(18) 10 C. W. N. clxiii (1906).
(19) 13 C. W. N. 652 (1909).
(20) 16 C. W. N. 421 : s. c. 15 C. L. J. 388 (1912).
(21) 8 C. W. N. 55 (1903).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

v. Basiruddin Ahmed (12), Abdul Aziz v. Tafajuddin Sheikh (22). The purchaser of a portion of a non-occupancy holding is one whose interests are affected under Or. 21, r. 90.

The cases may be divided into 2 groups:

(i) Those which hold that a purchaser does acquire an interest in the property: Basarat v. Sabullah (23), Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (24), Samiruddin Munshi v. Benga Sheikh (25), Ambika Nath v. Aditya Nath (7).

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The last case is a Land Acquisition case. Refers to Bhiram Ali Shaikh Sikdar v. Gopi Kanth Saha (3)].

(ii) The vendor cannot question the purchaser's right: Bhagirath Changa v. Hafizuddin (6). If a purchaser acquires a right as against the vendor, that is some interest in property: Ayenuddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra Banerjee (8), Hari Das Bairagi v. Udoy Chandra Dass (26), Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (24), Haro Chandra v. Umesh Chandra (27).

The only position which can be taken up against me is that the transferee of a whole or a portion of the holding acquires no interest whatever. The Court has not gone so far as that.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Mr. Justice Doss decided that point sitting alone.]

Yes, in Hari Das Bairagi v. Udoy Chandra Dass (26).

The status of a transferee is not altogether unrecognised in the Act (sec. 73).

[Dr. Ghose.—The section refers to a case where the holding is transferable by local custom.]

So far as regards persons other than the landlord, there is no difference between transfer of the whole and that of a part [Secs. 178 (2) (d) and 183, Illus. (1)].

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—What is transferred—the holding or the right of occupancy?]

Refers to Jawadul v. Ram Das (28), subsequently affirmed in Ram Mohan v. Sheikh Kachu (29), decided under sec. 22 (before amendment), but distinguished in Girish Chandra v. Kedar Chandra (30).

These cases show that in certain cases the holding can be transferred without the right of occupancy. The transferee gets good title, although he is not an occupancy raiyat.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Refers to Sadagar Sarkar v. Krishna Chandra Nath (5), where the claim of the auction-purchaser of joint possession with the other co-sharers was refused on the ground that the Judgment-debtor had no saleable interest.]

There the purchaser was not acknowledged by the landlord, and the Defendants had taken settlement from the landlord.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose (with Babus Mohini Mohan Chakrabarty and Gopal

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897).
(6) 4 C. W. N. 679 (1900).
(7) 6 C. W. N. 624 (1902).
(8) 11 C. W. N. 76 (1906).
(12) 7 C. L. J. 282 (1908).
(22) 18 C. W. N. lxxii (1914).
(23) 2 C. W. N. cclxxix (1898).
(24) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 687 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 779 (1910).
(25) 13 C. W. N. 630 (1909).
(26) 12 C. W. N. 1086 : s. c. 8 C. L. J. 261 (1908).
(27) 14 C. W. N. 71 (1909).
(5) I. L. R 26 Cal. 937 (1899).
(26) 12 C. W. N. 1086 : s. c. 8 C. L. J. 261 (1908).
(28) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 143 (1896).
(29) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 386 (1905).
(30) I. L. R. 27 Cal. 473 : s. c. 4 C. W. N. 569 (1899).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

Chandra Dass) for the Respondent submitted that the right of occupancy cannot be severed from the holding to which it is attached, and this has always been the law in this country. Cases on this point are reviewed in Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (24). See Narendra Narain v. Ishan Chandra (31), Suhodra v. Maxwell (32), Ajodhya v. Imambandi (33), Hyat Bibee v. Akbar Alee (34), Bootee Singh v. Moorut Singh (35). It is a right in derogation of that of the zemindar and qualifies it: Tara Pershad v. Soorja Kanto (36), Hyder Buksh v. Bhupendra Deb (37), Jawadul v. Ram Das (28), Girish Chandra v. Kedar Chandra (30). Sec. 22 does not make a non-transferable occupancy holding transferable, because the purchaser is a co-sharer. The transfer of a non-transferable holding without the right of occupancy is only confined to cases under sec. 22. There is not a single case, where it has been held that the holding can be severed from the right of occupancy: Uday Chandra v. Hari Das (38), Hari Das Bairagi v. Udoy Chandra Das Bairagi (26). I rely upon this absence of authority to show that the right is not severable from the holding. If it were, no landlord could recover possession from a purchaser on the ground that he was a trespasser.

(24) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 687 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 779 (1910).
(26) 8 C. L. J. 261 : s. c. 12 C. W. N. 1086 (1908).
(28) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 143 (1896).
(30) I. L. R. 27 Cal. 473 : s. c. 4 C. W. N. 569 (1899).
(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).
(32) 20 W. R. 139 (1873).
(33) 7 W. R. 528 (1867).
(34) S. D. A., 1855, p. 20.
(35) 20 W. R. 478 (1873).
(36) 15 W. R. 152 (1871).
(37) 17 W. R. 179 (1872).
(38) 13 C. W. N. 987 (1909).

Sir Richard Couch did not overlook the point in Narendra Bahadur's case (31). All the right the occupancy raiyat has is to occupy and cultivate. He has one right and not two, so as to enable a purchaser to cultivate and yet not to occupy. It would be equivalent to saying that he was an occupancy-raiyat and a non-occupancy-raiyat at the same time.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Can occupancy right be acquired by contract ?]

It is a creation of statute.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Formerly it could be acquired only by 12 years' occupation. Now it is different, e.g., in the case of settled raiyats.]

It might follow from this, if the purchaser does acquire an interest and he is a settled raiyat of the village, he would forthwith acquire a right of occupancy.

The relations between a zemindar and a tenant are not purely contractual. An English lawyer will be surprised to hear that tenancies are not assignable, though there is no covenant to that effect.

The position of a purchaser of the whole holding is not the same as that of the purchaser of a portion: Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders (4), Bhiram Ali Shaikh v. Gopi Kanth Shaha (3).

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Asked whether the transferee of an occupancy right can hold the land as licensee against the transferor.]

The raiyat is entitled to underlet, though subject to some restrictions ; but in the case of the under-raiyat he is not a licensee. He has an interest in the land. A vendee is not a licensee.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Refers to Suhodra v. Maxwell (32), per Phear, J.]

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897).
(4) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 615 (1899).
(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).
(32) 20 W. R. 139 (1873).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

The man who sells the land walks out.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—There is no finding here of abandonment.]

Could a licensee claim as representative?

What is the meaning of "representative"? Nalini Behari Roy v. Fulmani Dasi (20), Nissa Bibi v. Radha Kishore (2), Prosunno Kumar v. Bama Churn (19).

There can be no ratification of a transfer by the landlord. Recognition must mean a new settlement.

Babu Sarat Chandra Ghosh was heard in reply.

The Reference in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2388 of 1908 was made on the 23rd March 1911 by CHITTY and N. R. CHATTERJEA, JJ., and it was in these terms:

CHITTY and N. R. CHATTERJEA, JJ.—This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit brought by him to recover possession jointly with Defendant No. 44 of certain land. His suit was dismissed by the Munsif, but the Subordinate Judge has given him a decree for one-fourth of his claim, on the ground that he had been recognized as tenant by some of the co-sharer landlords holding a share of 4 annas. As to the facts it is found that the jote in question belonged to Hari Das Mondal and Parasuram Nama Das, two brothers, in equal shares. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are the sons of Hari Das. On Parasuram's death his widow, Defendant No. 44, succeeded to his 8 annas share, and sold 7 annas 15 gandas to the Plaintiff on 25th Asarh 1308 (9th July 1901) Within two years before suit filed, the Plaintiff was dispossessed of his portion of the holding by the 12-anna co-sharer landlords, who settled these lands with Defendants Nos. 6, 8 and 12. It appears that Defendant No. 44, Plaintiff's vendor, and her co-sharers are in possession of the remainder of the holding, and it is not alleged that they had ceased to pay the rent of the entire holding before the ouster of the Plaintiff by the 12-anna co-sharer landlords. It was conceded by the learned Vakil for the Appellant that if the case of Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders, Arbuthnot and Company (4) is to be followed, then his client has no case. That case is a distinct authority for the proposition, that the mere fact of a Plaintiff having once had possession, would not entitle him, as against the landlord, to recover possession in a suit not under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. As against the landlord, he must shew some title. In that case as the transfer to the Plaintiff of a portion of the jote was not binding on the landlords, he was unable to show a title, on which he could claim to be reinstated in possession. That case is on all fours with the present. It was distinguished in the cases of Benodini Dassi v. Peary Mohun Haldar (21) and Asgar Ali v. Asabuddin Kazi (15). In each of these cases the Court remarked that had the case of Kuldip Singh (4) been directly in point, they would have had to consider whether the matter ought not to be referred to a Full Bench. The same remark was made in the case of Rai Kamaleswari Pershad Singh Bahadur v. Maharaja Harbullabh Narain Singh Bahadur (39).

(2) 11 C. W. N. 312 (1906).
(19) 13 C. W. N. 652 (1909).
(20) 16 C. W. N. 421 : s. c 16 C. L. J. 383 (1912).
(4) I. L. R 26 Cal. 616 (1899).
(15) 9 C. W. N. 134 (1904).
(21) 8 C. W. N. 66 (1903).
(39) 2 C. L. J. 869 (1905).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

Kuldip Singh's case (4) was again distinguished, but without any note of dissent, in Ashok Bhuiyan v. Karim Bepari (40). In that case, the Court pointed out that Kuldip Singh's case (4) is no authority for the proposition, that a purchaser of a portion only of a jote gets no title at all. It was again distinguished in the case of Gour Kaibarta v. Tarajan Bibi (41), where the Plaintiff sued not the landlord, but other tenants. On the other hand, we find that Kuldip Singh's case (4) was followed in the case of Manoda Sundari Dasi v. Madhu Sudan Das (42), one of the Judges being a member of the Bench in both cases. We cannot find that Kuldip Singh's case (4) has ever been overruled. At the same time it is questionable whether the principle upon which it proceeds is entirely consistent with the principle on which the cases of Kabil Sardar v. Chandra Nath Nag Chowdhury (9), Durga Prasad Sen v. Doula Gazee (10), Sheikh Gozaffar Hossain v. E. Dalglish (11) and Rai Kamaleswari Pershad Singh Bahadur v. Maharaj Harbullabh Narain Singh Bahadur (39) are based. These cases appear to rest upon the principle, that where an occupancy raiyat transfers a portion of his holding but remains in possession of the remainder and pays rent for the entire holding, the tenancy still subsists and there is no abandonment of the entire holding, which alone can entitle the landlord to eject the transferee.

If Kuldip Singh's case (4) was correctly decided, it follows that so long as the transferee of a portion of a holding can remain in possession, he can shelter himself under the title of his transferor, the occupancy raiyat, and the landlord cannot evict him by process of law. If, however, the landlord can, by any means, prevent his getting into possession, or, when he has got into possession, can oust him by force, the transferee has no remedy at law by suit against the landlord. This is no doubt somewhat of an anomaly, and puts a premium upon violence, the landlord being tempted to take the law into his own hands. Kuldip Singh's case (4) is perhaps indirectly supported by the decision in the recent case of Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (24).

As serious doubts have been cast on the correctness of the decision in Kuldip Singh's case (4) and as the questions raised are of very great importance, we would refer, for decision by a Full Bench, the question, whether in the case of a transfer of a portion of an occupancy holding, such transfer not binding the landlord, unless made with his consent, the transferee can by suit recover possession from the landlord who has forcibly dispossessed him.

Babu Tara Kishore Choudhury (with him Babus Jyotish Chunder Sarkar and Sasanka Jiban Roy) for the Appellant.—Right of occupancy under the Bengal Tenancy Act is different from the right as defined by the Act of 1859, and it is property and as such transferable though the transfer may not be binding on the landlord, unless certain conditions are fulfilled.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Do you concede that occupancy right was not transferable before the Act of 1885?]

(4) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 615 (1899).
(9) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 590 (1892).
(10) 1 C. W. N. 160 (1894).
(11) 1 C. W. N. 162 (1896).
(24) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 687: s. c. 14 C. W N. 779 (1910).
(39) 2 C. L. J. 369 (1905).
(40) 9 C. W. N. 843 (1905).
(41) 8 C. L. J. 161 (1908).
(42) Unreported. S. A. No. 528 (1901).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

For the purpose of my argument, I assume that it was not transferable and that was what the Full Bench held in Narendra Narain Ray v. Ishan Chandra Sen (31).

Refers to the Preamble to Act VII of 1885 which shows that the Act expressly amends previous Acts; cf. provisions of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869 which reproduce Act X of 1859. Sec. 6 of the Act of 1869 defines mode of acquisition of occupancy right. The right was limited in duration to the period "so long as he pays rent for same" saving for the case of a holding inherited, when the holding and cultivation of a third party is treated as that of the raiyat. It not only defines the right, but also its extent or measure and duration. (See sec. 6 of Act X of 1859) Sec. 22 to some extent qualifies the limitation (see sec. 21 of Act X of 1859). He is not liable to ejectment except under a decree: Sec. 52 (sec. 78 of Act X of 1859)]

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Refers to sec. 7 which gave a certain scope to contracts. This has been taken away and the right made more valuable.]

Narendra Narain Ray v. Ishan Chandra Sen (31). The interpretation in this case depends upon the language of sec. 6 of the Act of 1869 upon which Chandrabati v. Harrington (43) is also based.

Coming back to Act VIII of 1885, refers to sec. 3, cl. (3), where "tenant" includes all classes of tenants [sec. 3, cls. (7), (8) and (9), Ch. II, secs. 4 and 5]. "Successor in interest" would include transferee. The rights of a raiyat are the same as a tenure-holder's; only the purpose is different. It cannot on the definitions be said that one is a right in property and the other a personal right. Then the raiyat may cultivate with the aid of a "partner." This is a great advance. He remains liable to the landlord, but his partners acquire rights against him. "Members of the family" assisting him in cultivation would become in the same way co-sharers.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Those words were introduced to meet the difficulty arising from the definition in sec. 6 of the Act of 1869 which said that cultivation must be by the raiyat.]

The raiyat could not turn out his partner. That would be an interest in the land.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—That does not show that the right is other than contractual, that is, it is an interest in the land.]

If as a fact a partner could not be removed from the land, it is only a play of words to say, he has no interest in the land.

Due weight must be given to the Preamble: Chunder Kishore v. Raj Kishore (44).

Sec. 44 (a) and sec. 66 show that a non-occupancy raiyat too has a right in the property. An occupancy raiyat's rights are higher.

It is arguable that had the Full Bench in Narendra Narain Ray v. Ishan Chandra Sen (31) these words before them, their decision would have been different. Reads sec. 19.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Does not that section show that what right of occupancy there was before, was continued under the Act?]

(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).
(43) I. L. R. 18 Cal. 349, 353 (1891).

(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).
(44) I. L. R. 15 Cal. 450 (1888).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

Continued and enriched in its incidents. My theory of sec. 19 is that new rights were intended to be conferred on occupancy raiyats and others.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Does it not come to this that wherever there was occupancy right, the tenants acquired the right given by the Act.

It may be so.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Or it may be, the section was provided to meet the situation that occupancy right being the creation of the Act fell with the repeal of the Act.]

Sec. 20 [cls. (1), (4) and (5)] confers higher rights than sec. 6 of Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869 : Forbes v. Ram Lal (45).

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Mahomed Chaman v. Ram Pershad (46) is opposed to that.]

The Full Bench in Narendra Narain v. Ishan Chandra (31) does not leave the matter in doubt.

Sec. 21 refers only to the acquisition of the right not to its measure or duration. That must be ascertained from other provisions, e.g., sec. 26, which clearly shows, it is property. This cuts away the foundation of the decision in Narendra Narain v. Ishan Chandra (31). That it is property is assumed, not expressly enacted by the section. It became more than a personal right or a license.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Was not this section possibly introduced in view of sec. 178, where a right of bequest by custom is recognised ?]

Sec. 26 is irrespective of customs. Sec. 178 must refer to non-occupancy holdings and non-transferable occupancy holdings.

Secs. 65, 73. "First charge" in the former section implies that there might be a second and other charges. A "charge" implies property upon which it is a charge.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Refers to sec. 18A.]

It shows, as other sections show, that the dealing with the property by the tenant will not bind the landlord.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Refers to sec. 6 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act.]

That refers to non transferable occupancy holdings implying that ordinarily they are transferable. Moreover, that Act has a more extensive local application than the Bengal Tenancy Act.

As to sec. 178, where there was a local usage of transfer previously existing, the law does not take it away. Where it was not, there was nothing to take away.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Even under the Transfer of Property Act, a transfer contrary to a covenant of forfeiture and re-entry is not prohibited. It has only that consequence attached to a right of property.]

Secs. 159, 160. "Protected interest" includes occupancy rights. It implies that it is an interest in land.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—The right protected by cl. (f) to sec. 160 is not a right in property.]

Cls. (e), (f) and (g) are rights attached to rights in property.

Unless it is boldly asserted that all these sections refer to custom of which there is no mention, it is difficult to say that these sections do not assume that occupancy right is a right to property.

Sec. 163, cls. (a) and (b), sub-sec. (2) assumes that the raiyat can create incumbrances on his interest which must be property.

A notification under sec. 168 may virtually do away with the distinction

(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).
(45) 22 W. R. 51 (1874).
(46) 22 W. R. 52n (1872).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

between cls. (a) and (b), between tenures and occupancy holdings.

I submit, there is no limitation to the right to transfer occupancy rights except what is enacted in sec. 73 and the need for registration in the landlord's sherista.

Sec. 85 gives no authority to create a sub-lease. It is assumed.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Why was the power of transfer expressly given in sec. 11 to tenure-holders, but not to raiyats?]

That was the argument in Bhiram Ali's case (3), which I am trying to answer. Many things are assumed in the Act.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—So far as subletting is concerned, it existed before.]

Because it existed before, it does not follow that it did not need enacting. The argument is at best not conclusive. But I show from other provisions of the Act that, subject to certain restrictions, the right was treated as a right in property. That is the explanation of the absence of a general section authorising transfer, confining one's arguments to the provisions of the Act. There might have been reasons outside the Act against an express recognition of the right. The Legislature might have been unwilling to rouse the active hostility of the landlords by making an express provision. It proposed to describe the rights generally in terms of property leaving it to the Courts to work out its intention with greater precision as occasion arose. With regard to sec. 85, cls. (2) and (3), there is a conflict of decisions, but cl. (1) is clear: sec. 136 (5), sec. 137.

Sec. 22: "Interest becoming united." Both interests are treated as similar. And the modes are succession, transfer. The language is only consistent with the idea that occupancy right is property. There is no mention here as in sec. 23 of custom. If sec. 22 was intended to apply only by custom, that would have been mentioned.

Secs. 84, 88 imply partial transfer.

Secs. 72, 73. There is nothing in the heading of the chapter or in the sections that they refer only to cases outside the Act, i.e., to cases governed by custom.

Custom is dealt with in sec. 183. It is not necessary to assume, as was done in Bhiram Ali's case (3), that only custom would give the right provided for in the various sections. Notice under sec. 73 must be in a particular form. Sec. 73 deals with occupancy right as dealt with in the Act and not rights outside the Act, i.e., customary rights.

The sections of the Act are to be interpreted without reference to custom which is dealt with separately under sec. 183. The argument briefly is that occupancy right is made property by the Act. Being property under the general law of property, it would be transferable. The power of making testamentary disposition is assumed in sec. 26, and transfers otherwise are recognised in various other sections. The sections where no reference is made to custom should be interpreted as dealing with a state of things dealt with in the Act. But although it is property and as such transferable, the landlord is not bound to recognise it, unless notice has been served on him as required by the Act. Does the transfer of a part make any difference? Earliest and latest cases on the subject are Kabil Sardar v. Chandra Nath Nag Chowdhury (9), Jogendra v. Tincowri (47). The purchaser of a portion has a good title

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897).

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897).
(9) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 590 (1892).
(47) 10 C. L. J. 147 (1909).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

against the transferor. The person whose title is undoubted has put him in possession. Therefore, his possession is derived lawfully. Being in possession, the question is whether a trespasser can oust him; it makes no difference, if the trespasser happens to be the landlord. The landlord has acquired no title. Even if it be held that the purchaser has got no title from the vendor, the fact remains that he has been in possession for some years, and that being so, can the landlord who is no better than a trespasser recover?

There is some conflict of authority on this question. Enayetoollah v. Kishen (48) is clear authority in my favour: Mohabeer v. Mohabeer (49), Wise v. Ameerunnessa (50). The decision to the contrary in Ertaza v. Banij (51) is erroneously interpreted. Other High Courts are in my favour: Pemraj v. Narayana (52). Krishnarav v. Vasudeb (53) interprets Wise v. Ameerunnessa (50) as in my favour: Narayani v. Dharmachar (54), Krishna v. Secretary of State (55), Sangoda v. Varadappau (56), Wali Ahmed v. Ajudhia (57), Ismail v. Mahomed (58), Sundar v. Parbati (59). Anterior possession is itself evidence of good title. In Sundar v. Parbati (59) it was held that the widows being in possession were entitled to sue for partition apart from any other question of title. If the rightful owner comes, previous possession won't prevail, but against any one else it would. Referred to Purmeshur v. Brojo Lal (60), Nisa Chand v. Kanchiram (61). The origin of all title is possession: Banka Behary v. Raj Chunder (62), Shyama Churn v. Surya Kanta (63).

Babu Gobindo Chandra Dey Roy for the Respondents.—Nisa Chand v. Kanchiram (61) now in question has never been doubted.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—I thought you were going to say that it has never been followed except once.]

Whenever the case has been considered, the Judges have said that the case was distinguishable from the case under determination. So it has been distinguished, but not doubted. It is good law, and is quite in agreement with the rooted notions of lawyers and laymen alike as to occupancy rights.

Right of occupancy is of a peculiar and limited nature.

If possession is to be respected merely as possession, the Defendant should succeed. He has been in possession.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The Plaintiff was put in possession by a person lawfully in possession. You came in and dispossessed him by force.]

Whenever it has been thought necessary to confer a new right, the Legislature has done it in express terms.

The section or sections which create or recognise the existing right should alone be looked to in order to determine what was the intention of the Legislature:

(48) 8 W. R. 386 (1867).
(49) I. L. R. 7 Cal. 591 (1881).
(50) L. R. 7 I. A. 73 (80, 81) (1879).
(51) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 130 (1882).
(52) I. L. R. 6 Bom. 215 (1882).
(53) I. L. R. 8 Bom. 371 (1884).
(54) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 514 (1902).
(55) I. L. R. 33 Mad. 173 (1909).
(56) I. L. R. 36 Mad. 148 (1911).
(57) I. L. R. 13 All. 537 (F. B.) (1891).
(58) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 834 at p. 842 (P. C.) (1893).
(59) I. L. R. 12 All. 51 (P. C.) (1889).
(60) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 256 at p. 260 (1889).
(61) 3 C. W. N. 568: s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal. 579 (1899).
(62) 14 C. W. N. 141 (1909).
(63) 15 C. W. N. 168 at p. 169 (1910).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

Narendra Narain v. Ishan Chandra (31). Refers to secs. 20, 21 of Act VIII of 1885. Secs. 20, 21 may be said to correspond to sec. 6, Act X of 1869.

In sec. 20 we have for the first time a definition of "settled raiyat"—this definition was not in the old Act. The result is that every settled raiyat gets a right of occupancy. These sections elucidate certain matters not clear under sec. 6 of the old Act, and in some respects create new rights. On the question of transferability sec. 6 was silent and the present sections also are equally so. On a construction of secs. 20, 21 alone, apart from any other consideration, the conclusion must be arrived at that occupancy right is not transferable; but fortunately there are other indications in the Act in my favour. Refers to sec. 4.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Referred to the distinction between a tenure-holder and a raiyat.]

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The words in sec. 11 are "like other immoveable properties." The inference is that the right of occupancy is immoveable property. The legislature does not say "as if it were an immoveable property." The same expression occurs in sec. 26 also.]

Discusses sec 26

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The reason why sec. 26 was put in is well-known. Sir Barnes Peacock expressed doubt as to whether an occupancy right is heritable or not, and the legislature thought it right to put in a section making the point clear.]

It has never been held on the wording of sec. 26 that the right is bequeathable. Refers to sec. 178.

In Prosunno Kumar v. Bama Churn (19), the question of testamentary disposition of this right was raised and partially considered, though no opinion was expressed.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—The question was left open.]

Refers to sec. 19. This section proposes to preserve the existing rights.

It is conceded that under the old Act the right of occupancy was not transferable, but it is contended that it is, under the new Act. A person, who had acquired a right of occupancy before the new Act, acquired it in a particular manner and with certain incidents, one of which was non-transferability. But according to the interpretation of the present Act put forward by the Appellant, such a person would be able to transfer such a right after the passing of the new Act. We can hardly conceive that this anomaly was intended by the Legislature.

My submission is that the present Act, although it makes some improvements on the position of the raiyat, makes no departure from the old Act on the question of the transfer of occupancy right: Girish Chandra v. Kedar Chandra (30). It has been held that sec. 22 refers to transferable holdings only; so the argument that this section recognises transfer of occupancy holdings fails.

Secs. 85, 136, cl. (5), were referred to by the other side; but as to sec. 85, the right of sub-letting does not necessarily imply that the tenant has got a right of property in the ordinary acceptance of the expression.

Sec. 136 also deals with sub-letting.

Refers to sec. 183 and illus. (1) and sec. 6, cl. (i) of the Transfer of Property Act.

(19) 13 C. W. N. 652 (1909).
(31) 22 W. R. 22 at p. 25 (1874).

(30) 4 C. W. N. ; s. c. I. L. R. 27 Cal. 473 (1899).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Is it intended to govern the previous clauses?]

[STEPHEN, J.—Yes.]

Then it should have been put in as a sub-section.

The mere fact that it has not been so put in should not deprive it of its importance. It is in the section.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Yes, you can make the most of it.]

Refers to sec. 160 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. This section deals with "protected interest." The temporary right of holding for five years is a protected interest within the meaning of this section, but it cannot be said that it is a right of property.

Cites Bhiram Ali Shaikh Shikdar v. Gopi Kanth Saha (3), Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (24). These cases keep the law in the same position in which it was under the old law, as interpreted in some well-known cases, e. g., Suhodra v. Maxwell (32), Narendra Narain v. Ishan Chandra (31).

So far as the essence of the right is concerned, I submit there is really no difference between what it was and what it is to-day.

I said that the case in Nisa Chand v. Kanchiram (61) has never been doubted, I shall show that it is so. Not even in the referring order has it been doubted. It seems to have been taken on trust that this case has been doubted. Even in Rai Kamaleswari Pershad Singh Bahadur v. Maharaja Harbullabh Narain Singh Bahadur (39), Gour Kaibarta v. Tarajan Bibi (41) their Lordships did not, after a consideration of this case, hold that the law laid down there was not correct. Their Lordships say that the case of Nisa Chand v. Kanchiram (61) appeared to have been doubted.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—If it is a personal right, it would come under cl. (d) of sec. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act rather than under cl. (i).]

To hold that the whole cannot be transferred, although a part can be, is a logical absurdity.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Where is the absurdity?]

The essence of the right must attach to the whole.

The next point is the effect of earlier possession.

The question is whether merely on the ground of possession one may succeed in a suit for ejectment without showing better title. The law laid down in Enayetoollah v. Kishen (48) by Dwarka Nath Mitter, J., is no longer the law: Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders (4). The Plaintiff here purchased a portion; some of the Defendants evicted him: Kawa Manjee v. Khowaz Nussio (64). A Plaintiff cannot recover merely on the ground of anterior possession. In order to succeed on such a ground, he must bring his suit under the possessory section. Where the Plaintiff does not avail himself of sec. 9, the question of title must be looked into and not merely possession.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—There is an earlier case where neither party could prove ownership. It is referred to in Enayetoollah

(3) I. L. R, 24 Cal. 355 (1897).
(24) 14 C. W. N. 779 : s. c. I. L. R. 37 Cal. 687 (1910).
(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).
(32) 20 W. R. 139 (1873).
(39) 2 C. L. J. 369 (1905).
(61) 3 C. W. N. 568 : s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal. 579 (1899).

(4) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 615 (1899)
(41) 8 C. L. J. 161 (1908).
(48) 8 W. R. 386 (1867).
(61) 3 C. W. N. 568 : s. c. I. L. R. 26 Cal. 579 (1899).
(64) 5 C. L. R. 278 at p. 282 (1879).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

v. Kishen (48) by D. N. Mitter, J.: Shama Churn v. Abdul Kabeer (65).]

If sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act is enough to cover these cases, what is the necessity for giving wider powers?

In Benodini Dassi v. Peary Mohan Haldar (21), Kuldip Singh v. Gillanders (4) is only distinguished, not doubted; so in Asgar Ali v. Asabuddin Kazi (15), Ashok Bhuiyan v. Karim Bepari (40).

The Reference in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2379 of 1908 was made on 25th June 1912 by JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEA, J., before whom the case came on appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent (L. P. A. No. 15 of 1910) from a decision of D. CHATTERJEE, J., dated the 25th January 1910. It was in the following terms:—

JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—The Plaintiffs sued to recover possession of an occupancy holding, alleging that they had purchased the same at a sale held in execution of a money decree against one Kristo Dass. The defence was that Kristo Dass had no title to the lands, that the holding being non-transferable no right passed to the Plaintiffs and that the suit was not maintainable, as one Narain, the nephew of Kristo Dass, who had a share in the holding, had not been made a party. The Court of first instance held that only a four annas share of the holding belonged to Kristo Dass, four annas to Narain, and the remaining 8 annas share belonged to the contesting Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, that the holding not being transferable nothing passed to the Plaintiffs at the sale, and that the suit was bad for non-joinder of Narain and dismissed the suit. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court held that the suit could not be dismissed for non-joinder of Narain, but that he would not be bound by the decree, and that Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 who were Kristo Dass' co-sharers in the holding could not raise the question of transferability of the holding and gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for joint possession in respect of a four annas share of the lands. That decree having been confirmed on second appeal by Mr. Justice Digambar Chatterjee, the present appeal has been preferred by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 under the Letters Patent against his judgment. It appears that Kristo Dass whose interest was purchased by the Plaintiff did not contest the Plaintiff's claim. The landlord of the holding brought a suit for arrears of rent against the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Narain, and so far has not recognised the Plaintiffs as tenants and is no party to the suit.

The point for consideration in this appeal is whether the question of transferability of Kristo Dass' share in the holding can be raised by the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, and this depends upon the question whether a right of occupancy not transferable by custom or local usage is a right, that is, merely personal to the raiyat and as such cannot be transferred at all, or is a right the transfer of which is valid against all persons other than the landlord, so that no one except the landlord can take exception to the validity of the purchaser's title. There is a considerable conflict of judicial opinion on the point.

Before the Bengal Tenancy Act was passed, it was settled by a Full Bench in the case of Narendra Narain Ray v. Ishan

(4) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 615 (1899).
(15) 9 C. W. N. 134, 135 (1904).
(21) 8 C. W. N. 55 (1903).
(40) [illegible] C. W. N. 843 (1905).
(48) 8 W. R. 386, 389 (1867).
(65) 3 C. W. N. 158 (1898).

Chandra Sen (31), that a right of occupancy was a right that was personal to the raiyat and could not be transferred. The question there arose between the landlord and the transferee. Subsequent to the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, in the case of Bhiram Ali Shaikh Shikdar v. Gopi Kanth Saha (3), the learned Judges, after a consideration of the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, came to the same conclusion, and it was held in that case that the tenant whose occupancy holding had been sold in execution of a money decree could himself raise the question that the holding was not transferable in a suit by the purchaser for possession of the holding and that the tenant was not barred by the provisions of sec. 244, Civil Procedure Code. Bhiram Ali's case (3) was followed in a number of cases where such a question was raised by the tenant, with this qualification that if the tenant was aware of the execution proceedings and having had opportunity of objecting did not object, he was precluded by the provisions of sec. 244, Civil Procedure Code, from raising the question subsequently. The case of Durga Charan Mandal v. Kali Prasanna Sarkar (66) may be cited as an instance of this class of cases.

In the case of Agarjan Bibi v. Panaulla (24), a suit for possession by the purchaser of a share of an occupancy holding was resisted not by the tenant who had transferred his share, but by his co-sharers, and it was held that it was open to tenants in occupation of a portion of the jote, i.e., the co-sharers of the vendor, to question the validity of the transfer.

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897).
(24) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 687 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 779 (1910).
(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).
(66) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 727 (1899).

A different view has been taken in other cases, viz., that the question of transferability is one that might be raised by the landlord, but cannot legitimately be raised by trespassers, and that whatever might be the precise nature of the tenant's interest which is purchased, it has a market value and the transfer is capable of being recognized by the landlord, and that the purchaser is entitled to be protected in the enjoyment of his purchase against all the world except possibly his landlord. See Basarat Mandal v. Sabullah (23), or, in other words, as observed in the case of Hari Das Bairagi v. Udoy Chandra Dass (26), the transfer of an occupancy holding is not a void transaction, and is voidable only at the option of the landlord. And in several cases, for instance in Ayenuddin Nasya v. Srish Chandra Banerjee (8), it has been held that in a suit between two rival claimants (both of whom derive their title from the tenant), neither of whom is the original tenant nor the landlord, the question of transferability does not arise. These cases however can be explained by the doctrine of estoppel.

A sale of occupancy holding has been held to be valid, if settlement is made by the landlord with the auction-purchaser as soon as can reasonably be expected after the sale; see Dwarka Nath Pal v. Turini Sankar Roy (67), and an objection to the sale of a holding with the consent of some of the landlords was overruled in the case of Shakaruddin Chowdhry v. Hemangini Dasi (68), on the ground

(8) 11 C. W. N. 76 (1906).
(23) 2 C. W. N. cclxxix (1898).
(26) 12 C. W. N. 1086 : s. c. 8 C. L. J. 261 (1908).
(67) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 199 (1907).
(68) 16 C. W. N. 420 (1911).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

that the non-consenting landlords might give their consent after the sale is held, but that the decree-holders must take the risk and the purchaser must purchase at his peril.

In the case of a voluntary transfer it has been held that the transferor cannot question the validity of the transfer; see Bhagirath Changa v. Hafizuddin (6), but such cases proceed on the ground that the transferor is estopped from impugning the validity of his own transfer.

If the view, that the transfer of an occupancy holding is valid against all persons excepting the landlord, is correct, it is difficult to see how the raiyat himself whose right is sold at an execution sale can question the validity of the purchaser's title, or why the validity of the transfer should depend upon recognition by the landlord in cases where the landlord does not impugn the transfer. If on the other hand occupancy holdings are not transferable at all, there does not seem to be any reason why persons in the position of the Defendants in the present case or even trespassers in possession of the land should not be entitled to question the validity of the transfer, or why the purchaser should acquire a right of occupancy by consent of the landlord, although he might by virtue of fresh settlement become a non-occupancy raiyat.

The facts of the present case are similar to those of Agunjan Bibi v. Panaulla (24) referred to above, except that in that case the purchase was made by a kobala, which however does not make any difference in principle (the doctrine of estoppel not coming into operation either in that case or in the present), but having regard to the conflict of views noticed above and having regard to the great importance of the questions involved, we think the case should be referred to a Full Bench.

The questions referred to the Full Bench are :—

(i) Whether a right of occupancy which is not transferable by custom or local usage is a right which can be transferred at all.

(ii) If not, whether the holding apart from the right of occupancy can be transferred.

(iii) In either case whether the validity of the transfer can be questioned by any person other than the landlord of the holding.

As these questions arise in a second appeal, the whole case is referred to the Full Bench.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullik for the Appellant —Occupancy right is a personal right in connection with the holding. A holding in which a raiyat has acquired occupancy right cannot be transferred apart from the occupancy rights. The transfer of an occupancy holding in the absence of any custom to that effect can be questioned by any one who is not estopped. Narendra Narain v. Ishan Chandra (31) and Chandrabati v. Harrington (43) establish conclusively that the occupancy right was, under the old law, a personal right which could not be transferred. The Bengal Tenancy Act has enacted no change in the law as it stood at the time of the passing of the Act.

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Has there been any case before the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act between a transferee and the co-sharers of the transferor ?]

(6) 4 C. W. N 679 (1900).

(24) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 687 : S. C. 14 C. W. N. 779 (1910).

(31) 22 W. R. 22 (1874).

(43) I. L. R. 18 Cal. 349, 353 (1891).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

No. The words "successors-in-interest" in the definition of the term "raiyat" in sec. 5 refers to those raiyati holdings which are transferable by custom. Sec. 26 admits of a similar interpretation. "As other immoveable property" should be read "as if it was immoveable property." In view of the sec. 11 it has been held that even tenures which are not permanent are incapable of being transferred or bequeathed. See Hiramoti v. Annoda (69). In the case of a tenure, no abandonment is possible, whereas an occupancy holding can be abandoned and surrendered. Unless a right is a personal one, there cannot be any abandonment of that right. Reads sec. 87. The right of surrender in sec. 86 also implies that it is a personal right.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Does not cl. (6) of sec. 86 indicate that this right can be mortgaged? Is that possible with a personal right?]

[MOOKERJEE, J.—Your contention would equally apply to the case of a raiyat at fixed rent, but his right is transferable.]

My point is that the framing of the Bengal Tenancy Act specially in view of the sections on abandonment and surrender show that the occupancy right is in the nature of a personal right.

In this particular case the landlord cannot object, as it is a part transfer, and if I am not allowed to raise any objection, the result would be that the land will be enjoyed rent-free by the purchaser. Sec. 178 (3) and illus. (1) of sec. 183 clearly support me. Sec. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act also supports the same view.

The right of occupancy is not something severable from the holding. Referred to Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanth (3), Durga Charan v. Kali Prasanna (66), Girish Chandra v. Kedar Chandra (30).

Babu Jadunath Kanjilal (with him Babu Karunamoy Ghose) said—In this case, in execution of the money-decree obtained against the judgment-debtor raiyat, I purchased a 4-anna share of the holding. There is neither abandonment nor surrender of the holding by the raiyat. My vendor had a right to possession and that right to possession has been transferred to me. The remark of the Judicial Committee in the case recently reported [Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur (70)] shows that the Bengal Tenancy Act applies when relationship of landlord and tenant subsists. I am entitled to joint possession with the other co-sharers of my vendor. It is a tenancy in common and not joint tenancy; and hence my vendor's co-sharers, so far as my vendor's share is concerned, are merely trespassers. My right to possession was in personam against the judgment debtor or the landlord, but it is in rem against his co-sharers. Referred to Mackenzie's Roman Law, p. 171 and Dr. Moyle's Roman Law, Vol. II, p. 334 and Arts. 136 and 137, Limitation Act, and Davenport v. Queen (71). The extreme contention of the other side is that such a transfer is absolutely void. Sec. 6 (i) of the Transfer of Property Act certainly does not support that contention. The clauses "except as otherwise provided by any other law for the time being in force" and the cl. (d), which would otherwise cover the opposite side's contention, show that the cl. (i) has no application in this case.

(3) I. L. R. 24 Cal. 355 (1897).
(69) 7 C. L. J. 553 (1908).

(30) 4 C. W. N. 569: s. c. I. L. R. 27 Cal 473 (1899).
(66) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 727 (1899).
(70) 18 C. W. N. 747 (1914).
(71) 3 A. C. 115, 128 (1877).

DAYAMOYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

If, under the old Acts, an occupancy right could be acquired "by law, by custom or otherwise," that is, by purchase, then, a fortiori, it can under the present Act which is clearly in advance of the old Acts in the matter of conferring rights on raiyats. The case of Chandrabati v. Harrington (43) is quite distinguishable upon its facts from the present case. Here, under the Civil Procedure Code, symbolical possession has been delivered to me and the judgment-debtor raiyat did not object thereto. He is now estopped from raising any objection to my purchase, and therefore his co-sharers are equally bound by the sale to me.

Under the Tenancy Acts of 1859 and 1869, the occupancy right was regarded as a right to cultivate. Refers to Suhodra v. Maxwell (32). Sec. 23 of the present Act which regulates the user of the holding by a raiyat, secs. 85 and 178 (c) which gives him the power to sub-let the holding, secs. 77 (1) and 76 which give him the power to improve the holding and erect dwelling houses thereon show that the occupancy right under the present Act is an ordinary right of property, and hence can be transferred under the general law.

The right is at least transferable under certain conditions, that is, with the landlord's consent whether given before or after the transfer. Even under the old Act it was held in the case reported in Suhodra v. Maxwell (32) that it was transferable with the landlord's consent. Sec. 73 and illus. (1) of sec. 183 support my present contention. Secs. 65, 158B (1) and 89 expressly give the landlord power to sell the holding for arrears of rent. The complete ownership is vested in the landlord and the tenant. They can conjointly transfer the same to any third person. There is no outstanding right in anybody else. It has been held in Buzlul Karim v. Satish Chandra (72) that even in case of a custom, the absence of the landlord's consent must be an element for consideration. The transfer is voidable. Referred to Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant (19th edition), p. 233.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—You need not deal with the question whether a new tenancy is created on transfer.]

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullik in reply:—The case in Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur (70) has reference to Chap. VIII of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the remark does not apply here. "Otherwise" in sec. 19, B. T. A., has reference to tenancies transferable by custom. Secs. 65 and 158B lay down special procedure for recovery of arrears of rent. As I was not party to the decree and the sale, I am not bound by the same, and I can object to the title of the Plaintiff.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

These several references have been heard consecutively, and as they involve many of the debatable points that relate to the transferability of occupancy holdings, apart from local usage, it will be convenient to state our conclusion in general terms. This conclusion rests largely on a recognition of the paramount importance of upholding decisions on which dealings with property have been extensively based. These decisions probably mark a departure from earlier

(32) 20 W. R. 139 (1873).
(43) I. L. R. 18 Cal. 349, 353 (1891).
(70) 18 C. W. N. 747 (1914).
(72) 15 C. W. N. 752 (1911).

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY CHAUDHURI.

judicial pronouncements and the opinions of those who have studied this question in the past. The life of the law, however, it has been said, is not logic but experience, and the modern departure is probably due to a change in economic conditions, which has brought into prominence problems that did not previously call for solution.

The weight of modern authority establishes the following propositions regarding the transfer for value of occupancy holdings apart from custom or local usage :

(1) The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against the raiyat,

(a) where it is made voluntarily,

(b) where it is made involuntarily and the raiyat with knowledge fails or omits to have the sale set aside.

A sale is made involuntarily where it is in execution of a money decree, but not of a decree founded on a mortgage or charge voluntarily made.

(2) The transfer is operative as against the landlord in all cases in which it is operative against the raiyat, provided the landlord has given his previous or subsequent consent. Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord, in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding; but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding, or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy.

Whether there has been a relinquishment or repudiation or not, depends on the substantial effect of what has been done in each case.

(3) The transfer of the whole or a part is operative as against all other persons, where it is operative against the raiyat.

Applying then these propositions to the questions propounded, we answer them as follows :—

(1) The question in the Appeal from Order No. 455 of 1907 is answered in the affirmative. We accordingly hold that the Appellant is a person whose immoveable property has been sold and is a representative of the judgment-debtor under sec. 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. This appeal must, therefore, be allowed and an order made as prayed. Each party, however, will bear his own costs throughout.

(2) The question in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2388 of 1908 is answered in the affirmative. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside, and a decree will be passed in favour of the Plaintiff for possession, but each party will bear his own costs throughout.

(3) The questions in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 2379 of 1908 are answered as follows :—(i) in the affirmative; (ii) in the negative; (iii) in accordance with the propositions above set out. The result will be that this appeal will be dismissed. There will be no order as to costs of the Letters Patent Appeal on this reference.

We would only add that the uncertainty as to the transferability of holdings has been one of the most fruitful sources of litigation, and it is urgently necessary that it should be set at rest by the legislature.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

CRIMINAL REV. No. 1693 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
5, December.

ARIFF MUNSHI & anr, Accused, Petitioners, v. EMPAROR, Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 147, 447, I. P. C.—Rioting—Criminal trespass—Charge of rioting with common object of taking forcible possession of complainant's land and assaulting him—Absence of charge under sec. 447. I. P. C.—Conviction of criminal trespass, propriety of—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 238.

When the Petitioners who were charged under sec. 147, I. P. C., with rioting with the common object of taking forcible possession of complainant's land and of assaulting him and others were convicted of criminal trespass under sec. 447, I. P. C., without any charge being framed against them or without being called upon to plead to a case of trespass:

Held—That the conviction was illegal.

If the common object had been to commit criminal trespass, the conviction under sec. 447, I. P. C., without a charge having been framed against the accused might have been legally valid, but the common object stated in the charge did not make out a case of trespass.

In a case of trespass, before a conviction is obtained, the prosecution must establish on the part of the trespasser an intention to commit an offence or to intimidate insult or annoy any person in possession of the property on which trespass has been committed.

QUEEN v. SALAMUT ALI (1) referred to.

This was a Rule against the order of Mr. Ataur Rahaman, Extra Assistant Commissioner of Sylhet, dated the 14th day of July 1913, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 447, I. P. C, and sentencing them each to pay a fine of Rs. 50 or in default three months' rigorous imprisonment, an application for revision of which order was rejected by A. E. Stinton, Esq., Sessions Judge of Sylhet, on the 18th August 1913.

The material portion of the judgment of the Magistrate is set out below:

"Bonai Chong (P. W. 2) and Accused Ariff Munshi have contiguous paddy fields at Tukarbundh kitta, separated only by a common ridge (ail), which has been there for the last 20 to 25 years. On the 6th April last Ariff Munshi (Accused) with his son Ibrahim (Accused) and others demolished a portion of this ridge and incorporated about 15 cubits × 1 cubit of Bonai Chong's paddy land in Accused Ariff Munshi's land. Bonai Chong and his men protested, but to no effect. It is alleged that about 20 to 25 persons belonging to Accused's party came up armed with lathis and assaulted Bonai Chong. Bhanu (P. W. 1), Gonai (P. W. 3) and Brojo (P. W. 4) came to the rescue of Bonai Chong and were assaulted in their turn by the Accused's party.

"Both the Accused plead not guilty to the charge laid against them. Accused Ibrahim's plea is that it was the Complainant's party that had trespassed on his father Ariff's land that day, that he had on the next day after the occurrence lodged a complaint before the Magistrate for the trespass and the assault on him. Accused Ariff Munshi's plea is that he knows nothing about the occurrence and that he was at his house at the time of the occurrence.

"That there was an occurrence that day over the common ridge between Bonai Chong and Ariff Munshi's paddy fields is

(1) 23 W. R. Cr. 59 (1875).

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, JULY 6, 1914. [No. 34

Contents.

NOTES.

The late Mr. Ganesh Chandra Chandra.

We deeply regret to record the death of Mr. Ganesh Chandra Chandra, who was not only one of the leading, but one of the most senior amongst the solicitors practising in the Calcutta High Court. He was a self-made man and rose to the top of his profession by his own ability. He and the late Mr W. C. Bonnerji were intimate friends; from early in life both took to the legal profession and rose to positions of great eminence in their respective spheres Although Mr Chandra did not ordinarily take part in public life, in his own sphere he was known to be a man of rare independence, and he commanded the respect not only of all branches of the legal profession, but also of the Bench. Though well advanced in years, he took a keen interest in the well-being of the profession to which he belonged, and was one of the most active members of the Incorporated Law Society. We convey our sincere condolence to the members of his family.

President of the Judicial Tribunal of the Calcutta Improvement Trust.

We congratulate the Government of Bengal on having made an almost unexceptionable selection for the post of the President of the Judicial Tribunal in connection with the Calcutta Improvement Trust. Dr. Sarat Chandra Banerjee is both by his legal attainments and character eminently fitted to fill this position with credit. The only exception that could be taken to this appointment is as to his lack of experience in judicial work of an original nature, his legal training both in the past and present being more or less of a technical and secretarial nature. But he is a lawyer of excellent parts and quick intellect, and we have every confidence that he will soon get accustomed to his judicial duties. We welcome the appointment; chiefly because we believe that he will be an absolutely reliable person for this position of great responsibility and trust both from the public and the Government point of view.

Legality of Mr. Justice Sundarlal's appointment.

We publish in another column a letter from an eminent Vakil of the Allahabad High Court questioning the legality of the appointment of Mr Justice Sundarlal as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court. The objection seems to us to be extremely technical. There is no question that he acquired the necessary qualification of being a Vakil of ten years' standing many years ago. The fact that he has since been enrolled as an Advocate of the Court does not annul the qualification he once acquired.

City Civil Court.

The Hon'ble Mr. S. N Ray has been well-advised in taking time to consider the propriety of moving a resolution in the Bengal Legislative Council for the establishment of a City Court in Calcutta. Before such a resolution is moved, the Hon'ble Member should satisfy himself that the general public and the people, particularly whose property, rights and interests are likely to be affected by it, demand the establishment of such a Court in supersession of the jurisdiction of the Original Side of the High Court The Hon'ble Mr. Ray is not a resident of the town of Calcutta, and before moving any resolution for ousting the jurisdiction of the Original Side in respect of properties and transactions situate or arising within the statutory limits of the town of Calcutta, he must take steps for the ascertainment of the opinion of those who are likely to be affected for good or evil by this proposal. If the different sections of the community, whose interests may be affected, meet, deliberate and express an unequivocal opinion in favour of his proposal, the Hon'ble Member would be justified in moving the resolution in the Bengal Council but otherwise not. The Hon'ble Members who owe their seat to a sort of election (which is yet far from popular) often complain that the Provincial Council is no better than a debating society in so far as they are unable to elicit adequate response from official members to popular demands. If, however, the non-official members betake themselves to moving resolutions on questions of their own initiative and for which there is no public demand and regarding which they are themselves divided in their own camp, they would lay themselves open to the charge that when their individual or professional interests are concerned, they too are apt to forget that the Provincial Legislature is not after all a debating society.

We have before this pointed out on more than one occasion that no material advantage would be gained by the establishment of a City Civil Court for the trial of suits of the value up to Rs. 10,000, unless the Judge or Judges presiding over such Courts are of the ability and experience of High Court Judges. The popularity of a tribunal and public confidence in it entirely depend on the personnel of the tribunal. If it is difficult to get men of ability and practice at the Bar to accept High Court Judgeships, it would be much more difficult to get such men to accept judgeships of the City Court. The prestige of the position of a High Court Judge and also the tradition of the Bar that when any of its members is called upon to serve on the Bench, he should not refuse a judgeship, make it comparatively easier for the State to secure desirable Judges for the High Court Benches. But surely a lower scale of pay, pension and prestige would not attract a good class of men from the Bar to the City Court Bench. Judges from the mofussil are also not likely to give public satisfaction as Judges of a City Court. The character and quality of business in Calcutta is so entirely different from what they are in the mofussil that mofussil Judges will feel quite out of their element here.

Any one, who has any experience of both the Original Side procedure and the mofussil procedure, cannot close his eyes to the fact that really contentious and complicated matters are much more expeditiously disposed of on the Original Side than in the mofussil Courts. The infinite troubles and procrastinations connected with execution proceedings in the mofussil are almost unknown on the Original Side of the High Court. That matters, which come up before the Original Side, are not only speedily but more effectively disposed of is also borne out by the fact of the very small number of appeals which are preferred against the decisions and orders passed by the Original Side Judges. Further, it is also a very significant fact that in suits between the value of Rs. 1,000 to Rs. 2,000, where the High Court has a concurrent jurisdiction with the Small Cause Court, nearly ten per cent. of such suits are transferred to the Original Side at the instance of the parties. The Defendants by getting such suits transferred incur the risk of being mulcted in costs on a higher scale than in the Small Cause Court, but they prefer to run such risk in the expectation of getting better justice from the High Court. It is also a matter of common experience that of all suits instituted in any Court, the percentage of cases, where there is any real and substantial contest of law or facts, would hardly exceed ten per cent. It is therefore a matter of very legitimate inference that the litigant public of Calcutta would much more prefer their suits to be tried on the Original Side of the High Court than in another glorified Small Cause Court which some people only from the point of view of professional interest are anxious to see set up in this city under the name and style of a City Civil Court.

From what we have said, it would be evident that nothing will be gained and much may be lost both in the quality of justice and in the expeditious disposal of suits by the litigant public of Calcutta by the establishment of a City Court presided over by Judges of indifferent qualifications. It might let loose a flood-gate of appeals to the High Court, which will be of no practical advantage to anybody except to members of the legal profession. Then weaker judges always lead to prolongation of hearing of original suits, which necessarily means increased cost of litigation. Strong self-opinionated judges on the other hand mean so much costs thrown away and costs of appeal in addition. Further, in really contentious cases leaders of the Bar will charge more fees for going before the City Court than they do on the Original Side. The only ground which may be urged in favour of such a Court is that in non-contentious suits the cost of litigation there would be less. But there is a good deal of misapprehension in the public mind as to the legitimate costs of litigation on the Original Side. For instance, it may be mentioned in this connection that the costs of an uncontested mortgage suit of the value of Rs. 10,000 up to any value need not and does not ordinarily exceed Rs. 250 up to the decree stage, while the ad valorem Court-fees in the Mofussil Court would alone cost Rs. 475 and pleaders' fees even on the fixed scale would amount to Rs. 350. Then in an undefended suit of any value the cost on the Original Side comes up to only Rs. 250.

In mortgage suits, subsequent to the decree, the costs of execution, sale and realization may come up to Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 1,250 more. Although this may be somewhat more than the costs incurred in the Mofussil Courts, still it is well worth in the interests of both the mortgagor and the mortgagee. It is a well-known fact that a property sold at a Registrar's sale on the Original Side fetches nearly 50 per cent. more value than the same property, if sold at an execution sale at Alipur. The difference is due to the fact that the Registrar in the Original Side takes care to give people a clean title, while the sheristadars of the Mofussil Courts are neither competent, nor do they trouble themselves about the title, and on the top of that, owing to various other reasons, which we need not detail here, purchasers at Mofussil execution sales cannot rely on such sales being regular in every respect. Naturally they bid at such sales leaving a sufficient margin for covering the cost of subsequent proceedings that often arise for the setting aside of the sale. Such proceedings are almost unknown on the Original Side of the High Court.

The strongest objection to the proposal of any City Court will proceed from the citizens of Calcutta who enjoy the unique privilege of being exempt from ad valorem duty. If a City Court is set up, this privilege will be lost irrevocably and it is people who have to realize their moderate claims varying from Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 10,000 and who will be most seriously prejudiced by such change. The public Revenue will swell at their expense, but the more wealthy people will continue to enjoy the exemption. The proposal may be viewed with favour by the Government, but it will not surely receive public approval. Under the present taxing rules on the Original Side, the solicitors and counsels are not entitled to charge costs or fees on any higher scale than that fixed by the Rules of the Court. If, however, clients choose to incur costs on a more lavish scale, they are required to give a written authority to the solicitor for engaging extra counsel or for the payment of extra fees, but on no account would the Taxing Officer allow costs on any higher scale than that fixed by the schedule between party and party. The Court cannot be responsible for those who would still gamble in litigation or pay counsel on a lavish scale without any protest, more by way of a bet on their favourite counsel on the off chance of securing judicial favour—a thing which ought not to exist. So all that is said about the fabulous cost of litigation on the Original Side is a myth. The fact is that costs are often piled up owing to the ignorance or folly of clients, and if they are more vigilant and astute about their rights, they can bring the lawyers to book for the abuse of their privileges and opportunities.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(Criminal.)

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 94.

Re S. Kondareddi, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 112.

It is competent to a Magistrate under sec. 94, Cr. P. C., to issue a summons to an accused person to produce a document or other thing, the production of which might tend to incriminate him.

Correspondence.

MR. JUSTICE SUNDAR LAL.

To the Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes".

Sir,

While the United Provinces are to be congratulated on the acceptance of a seat on the Bench by a lawyer of the intellectual calibre and professional eminence of the Hon'ble Dr. Sundar Lal, one cannot but feel considerable doubt as to the validity of his appointment. It is however proper that one should state in public what those doubts are, so that the matter might be considered and set at rest, and to my mind the legal objection in the case of Mr. Justice Sundar Lal is much more substantial than the one which was raised regarding the validity of the appointment of Mr. Justice Burkitt in 1894 by Mr. Ross Alston in the case of Queen-Empress v. Ganga Ram (I. L. R 16 All.), which was overruled by the High Court on one ground and by the Privy Council on another. Now the Charter of the Allahabad High Court provides that four classes of persons are eligible for High Court Judgeships. They are Barristers, District Judges, Subordinate Judges and Vakils of a Sudder or High Court, all of a certain standing. Of course, there could be no doubt that the test of eligibility is that the individual selected should at the time of his appointment belong to one or other of these categories. Now it cannot be contended that Pandit Sundar Lal comes within any one of the first three categories. His claim to eligibility rests solely on his being a Vakil of ten years' standing. Now the Law List of 1893 published by authority tells us that Pandit Sundar Lal was admitted as a Vakil of the High Court in 1880. The Law List of 1900 published also by authority shows us that he was enrolled as an Advocate of the High Court early in 1896, and that his name had been removed from the List of Vakils. Since the first quarter of 1896, Pandit Sundar Lal belongs to another class of practitioners, and his name, from whatever cause it might be, has ceased to adorn the Roll of Vakils of the Allahabad High Court. That he has ceased to be a Vakil would also clearly appear from the fact that he had not filed any vakalatnama, in any case Civil or Criminal (he had a few Criminal cases since 1896), which every one who is a Vakil must do under the Rules of the High Court either in a Civil or Criminal proceeding. Now the Charter of the Allahabad High Court has no place for an Advocate who is not a Barrister, and under the circumstances one fails to see how Pandit Sundar Lal (who by the way is the fittest man in those provinces to be raised to the Bench and to whom such a translation would mean a considerable sacrifice of income) can be regarded as a validly appointed Judge.

The practice of making a few Vakils Advocates which obtains in the Allahabad High Court is to my mind a most unwise step, and it has been most injurious to the profession as a whole. Be it remembered that the Advocates in the Allahabad High Court, unlike their brethren in Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, can act and sign for their clients, can see the latter directly and can appear without being instructed by an Attorney or Vakil. This places them at a very great advantage, as compared to their brethren in the rest of the British Empire and very favourably indeed, as compared to the Vakil members of the profession, who cannot do anything without a vakalatnama which, in the case of prisoners transferred from District to Central Jails after their conviction, it often takes days and weeks to obtain. On the Civil Side of the Court, the Code of Civil Procedure expressly exempts Advocates of Chartered High Courts from the obligation of filing vakalatnamas, but on the Criminal Side of the Court, the Advocates and Vakils have been placed on exactly the same footing, and the practice of requiring vakalatnamas from one class of practitioners and exempting the other class from this burden has no justification in law, and any rule to that effect is, it is humbly submitted, altogether ultra vires. Of course it need not be said, where a few men were selected from a large body for professional honors, the litigants would naturally flock to them, and it is therefore that we find that in the Allahabad High Court business has centred in those few hands, who, at the turning point of their career, had been selected for advancement to a higher category of practitioners. This has been very detrimental to both the members of the English Bar and the Vakils of the Court, all of whom, popular opinion regards, as having been left by the Judges in the cold shade of neglect. The situation was aggravated, when some clever juniors who had been admitted to the degree of Doctor of Laws of the Allahabad University were by virtue of that very fact coupled with three years' practice enrolled as Advocates. It was apparently overlooked that this was a serious injustice to the senior members of the Vakil Bar most of whom passed their examinations before the Allahabad University was in working order and some of whom had obtained high distinctions in the parent University of Calcutta. It was further overlooked that by a technical rule of the Allahabad University only LL. B.'s of that University were eligible for appearing for Doctorial Honors and that all the senior men including the present Vice-Chancellor (who is by the way an Honorary Doctor) cannot even be permitted to try their chance for such honors.

All these things show that those practitioners who were once Vakils and who are now Advocates form a distinct category by themselves and have nothing in common with those who are at present on the Roll of Vakils of the Court. The only thing that can be said the other way is that these Advocates are still members of the Vakils' Association, but they are there not by choice but by compulsion, because the Barristers would not have them, and the Vakils would not care to part with them so long as they buy their privilege by paying a higher rate of subscription.

Yours faithfully,

AN ALLAHABAD VAKIL.

Notes of Cases.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before HOLMWOOD AND CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 97 OF 1912. SRIMATI AMJADNESSA BIBI AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants v. RAHIM BAKS SHIKDER AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 28th May 1914.

Suit, maintainability of—Suit for recovery of money—Agreement not to prosecute—Non-compoundable offence.

The suit was for recovery of Rs 680, the principal sum of Rs. 535 with interest, said to have been given by the Plaintiff to the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for withdrawing a certain criminal case, in which the Plaintiffs were prosecuted at the instance of Defendant No. 1 for offences punishable under secs. 323 and 147 of the Indian Penal Code, in respect of the murder of Defendant No.5's husband. The first batch of accused had been punished, and the Plaintiffs were the second batch of accused sent up for trial. Plaintiffs further alleged that the Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 agreed to return the money in case the higher authorities prosecuted them again for the same offence as they did.

The Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 appeared and admitted having taken the money for withdrawing from the prosecution, but denied that there was any agreement to return the money, in case the Plaintiffs were again prosecuted by the higher authorities, that they fulfilled their part of the agreement by withdrawing from the prosecution and that the suit was not maintainable, as the consideration for the agreement was unlawful and against public policy, the offence under sec. 147 being a non-compoundable one.

The lower Courts dismissed the suit, holding that the suit was not maintainable.

There was no pressure upon the Plaintiff to pay this money in consideration of not being prosecuted.

Held, that the rule derived from cases could be thus stated: "If money or security be given under an agreement not to prosecute under such circumstances that there has been pressure or undue influence, the transaction will be set aside and the money or security ordered to be returned."

Babu Rajendra Chandra Guha for the Appellants.

Babu Satis Chandra Ghose for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

ARIFF MUNSHI v. EMPEROR.

an admitted fact. The only question that calls for my decision in this case is whether the occurrence had developed into a riot that day or whether it was a case of simple trespass which has been magnified into a riot by the complainant and his witnesses in the present case.'

* * * * * * * *

"The Defence have in my opinion completely failed to prove that the Complainant's party were the trespassers that day. I have gone carefully through the entire record of this case, and I have also gone through the Accused Ibrahim's cross case (No. 419 of 1913). I am convinced that there is conclusive evidence against both the Accused for a conviction under sec. 447, I. P. C., in this case. The evidence against the Accused for charge under sec. 147, I. P. C., is not very convincing to me.

"I accordingly find both the Accused guilty under sec. 447, I. P. C. As the criminal trespass was attended with hurt, both the Accused deserve a severe punishment in this case. I accordingly sentence both the Accused to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each, in default three months' rigorous imprisonment each. An order under sec. 106, C. P. C., against the Accused is not desirable in this case."

Babu Hemendra Kumar Das for the Petitioners.

Babu Srish Chandra Chowdhury for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioners were charged with the commission of an offence under sec. 147, I. P. C., but were convicted under sec. 447 of the Code for trespass, without any charge under that section being framed against them or without being called upon to plead to a case of trespass. The case against them was that their land lay contiguous to the land of the Complainant, and in order to encroach on the Complainant's land they demolished a certain ail and constructed another on the land of the Complainant and thereby included within their own land the land belonging to the Complainant. The Complainant set up a case of rioting against them. But that case was not believed by the Magistrate who summed up his findings in the following terms:—"I am satisfied that both the Accused had broken the common ail that day and had incorporated some land belonging to Bonai (P. W. 2) in their own land. The evidence that Accused party had numbered five or more than five that day is not very convincing to me, and I am not in a position to hold that the Accused had formed the members of an unlawful assembly on the day of alleged occurrence." After arriving at this conclusion, the Magistrate convicted the petitioners under sec. 447, I. P. C., for criminal trespass and sentenced them to pay a fine of Rs. 50 each. Against their conviction and sentences, the Petitioners moved the Sessions Judge and then this Court and obtained this Rule on the Deputy Commissioner of Sylhet to show cause why the conviction of the Petitioners under sec. 447, I. P. C, should not be set aside on the ground that the Petitioners having been charged under sec. 147 only and there being no charge nor any complaint under sec. 447, I. P. C., the conviction of the Petitioners under sec. 447 was illegal. The learned Government Pleader appearing on behalf of the Crown maintains that under sec. 238, Cr. P. C., sub-sec. (2), a person charged with an offence may be convicted of a minor offence, though not charged with it, if the facts proved justify a conviction for a minor offence. In this case, had the common object constituting unlawful assembly been to commit criminal trespass, the conviction under sec. 447 without a charge having been framed against the Petitioners might have been legally valid. But the common object described in the charge is to take forcible possession of Bhanoo Namasudra's land and of assaulting him and others. This common object does not clearly make out a case of trespass. In a case of trespass, before a conviction is obtained, Prosecution must establish on the part of the trespasser an intention to commit an offence, or to intimidate, insult or annoy any person in possession of the property on which trespass has been committed. In the present case, none of these elements is present. As an authority bearing on this case we may cite the case of Queen v. Salamut Ali (1).

ARIFF MUNSHI v. EMPEROR.

The convictions, therefore, are clearly bad and must be set aside. This Rule is made absolute. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD SHAW.
LORD MOULTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard, 8, 9, 10 and 15, April.
Judgment, 19, May.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH, since deceased (now represented by Sashi Bhusan Singh and ors., Appellants,

v.

RAMANI MOHAN SINGH, since deceased, Respondent.

Sonthal Parganas, mortgage of land in, not completely settled—Suit in Civil Court at Bhagalpur on mortgage, if lies—Limits of Civil Court's jurisdiction—Exclusive jurisdiction of special officers appointed by Lieutenant-Governor—Stipulation in bond that suit might be instituted at Bhagalpur—"Court having jurisdiction in Sonthal Parganas," if includes Civil Courts at Bhagalpur—Sonthal Parganas Regulation III of 1872 (read with Act XXXVII of 1855 and Act X of 1857), secs. 5, 6—Interest—Usury rules enforceable by all Courts—Sonthal Parganas Justice Regulation (V of 1893), sec. 9—Civil Procedure Codes (Act VIII of 1859, Act XXIII of 1861, Act X of 1877, Act XIV of 1882) how far applicable in Sonthal Parganas—Civil Courts Acts (Act VI of 1871 and Act XII of 1887) how far apply in Sonthal Parganas—Scheduled Districts Act (XII of 1874) if applied to Sonthal Parganas—Jurisdiction, objection to, taken at a late stage when entertainable.

Where, exception being taken to the Court's jurisdiction to entertain a suit, an issue was raised, but the objection was overruled, and on appeal to the High Court the Defendant did not raise the question, but did so before the Judicial Committee :

Held, that inasmuch as the question was one of jurisdiction and it did not depend on disputed facts, the Judicial Committee could not decline to entertain it, specially as it necessarily presented itself in argument.

That on 20th June 1904, the date on which the present suit was instituted in the Subordinate Judge's Court at Bhagalpur to enforce a mortgage of properties two-thirds of which was in the Sonthal Parganas, no suit could lie in any Court established under the Civil Courts Act of 1871 or 1887, in regard to any land or interest in or arising out of any land or for the rents or profits of any land, but such suits must have been brought under sec. 5 of Sonthal Parganas Regulation of 1872, before the Settlement Officers or Courts of officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal under sec.

(1) 23 W. R. Cr. 59 (1875).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

2 of the Sonthal Parganas Act, 1855, and the Sonthal Parganas Justice Regulation of 1893, Part 2, so long as the land had not been settled and the settlement declared by a notification in the Calcutta Gazette to have been completed and concluded.

That as it appeared that portions only of the mortgaged land had been settled and notification made prior to the institution of the suit of the completion of the settlement in respect of such portions only, the suit came within sec. 5 of the Sonthal Parganas Regulation of 1872 and the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur had no jurisdiction to entertain it.

The provision in sec. 6 of that Regulation which places all contractual stipulation as to compound interest in a position of non-enforcibility and limits statutably the total interest which can be decreed on any loan or debt is not one of procedure, but of substance, and applies to all Courts having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas and acting under and by virtue of such jurisdiction. "All Courts having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas" in sec. 6 do not refer only to Courts locally situated in the Sonthal Parganas and dealing with matters purely local.

A stipulation in the mortgage-bond that the mortgagees might enforce it in the Court at Bhagalpur was inoperative, as the parties could not by consent give the Court jurisdiction, thereby nullifying the express prohibition of sec. 5 of the Regulation of 1872.

The Civil Procedure Codes of 1861, 1877 and 1882 applied to suits cognizable in the ordinary Civil Courts, and these, since the enactment of sec. 9 of Reg. V of 1893, were suits of which the value exceeded Rs. 1,000 and which were not excluded from their cognizance by, amongst others, the provisions of sec. 5 of the Regulation of 1872.

Quære.—Whether the Civil Procedure Code was intended by the Notification of 19th August 1867 to apply to Courts held by officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in those suits in which they were not required to try and determine the case according to the several laws and regulations prevailing in Bengal.

Semble.—The true interpretation of cl. (1) of Act XXXVII of 1855 (before its operation was modified by subsequent enactments and notifications) was that even suits on which the matter in dispute exceeded Rs. 1,000 in value were to be tried by the special officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor, but in trying and determining them, they were to observe the general laws and regulations obtaining in Bengal.

SORBOJIT ROY v. GANESH PROSAD MISSIR (1) doubted.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the Judgments of the High Court and of the Judicial Committee. The suit was to enforce a mortgage of properties situated in the Sonthal Parganas and was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur. In their written statement the Defendants pleaded "that no party can in law fix by agreement the jurisdiction of the Court of law, in respect of any dispute, and such agreement cannot give jurisdiction in favour of a Court of law" and that the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit under the Sonthal Parganas Regulations. Both the Courts below, the Subordinate Judge as well as the High Court, allowed the Plaintiffs' claim. Both held that sec. 6 of

(1) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 761 (1884).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

Reg. III of 1872 did not apply to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, which was governed by the ordinary law in force at Bhagalpur. Both parties appealed to His Majesty in Council. The Judgment of the High Court (Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ.) was as follows :—

"This is an appeal against a decision of the First Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 12th February 1906.

"The suit is one brought upon a mortgage of certain property. One-third of this property is situated in the Bhagalpur district and two-thirds in the Sonthal Parganas. The Subordinate Judge exercised jurisdiction in the case, under sec. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The suit was brought to recover 3½ lakhs of rupees upon a mortgage bond (Exhibit I) executed on the 21st December 1896. This bond was the last of a long series of bonds. The first of the series was executed on the 3rd October 1883 for Rs. 73,000 by some of the Defendants in this case, and by the predecessor of the others in favour of one Surja Narayan Singh, the predecessor of the present Plaintiff. The interest stipulated for was 12 per cent. per annum. At intervals other bonds were executed. The amounts of these bonds were always increasing, but the rate of interest decreasing. Finally, on the 21st December 1896, the bond now sued upon was executed for 3½ lakhs of rupees at 7½ per cent. per annum. The Subordinate Judge gave the Plaintiffs a decree upon this bond, and the Defendants now appeal to this Court.

Mr. Eardley Norton, the learned Counsel who appears on behalf of the Defendants-Appellants, very candidly admits that he cannot venture to impugn the findings of facts arrived at by the Subordinate Judge. He accepts those findings and contents himself with impugning the judgment of the Subordinate Judge on two points. In the first place, he says that under sec. 6 of Regulation III of 1872 (the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation) the Subordinate Judge was not justified in giving compound interest, or in giving a decree for interest, exceeding the amount of the principal amount of the debt ; and in the next place, he points out that there has been non-joinder of parties in this case, seeing that two persons named Matuki Mandar and Jadu Mandar who are necessary parties to the suit, have not been made parties Defendants.

We will now deal with the first of these contentions. Mr. Eardley Norton argues that, in sec. 6 of Regulation III of 1872 it is laid down that all Courts having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas shall observe the following rules, and therein certain restrictions are provided against usury, which the Subordinate Judge in this suit has not given effect to. The Subordinate Judge himself says that, in his opinion, the provisions of sec. 6 of Regulation III of 1872 do not apply to Courts exercising jurisdiction within the Sonthal Parganas under sec. 19, Civil Procedure Code. He thinks that these words relate only to the Courts of the Sonthal Parganas exercising jurisdiction within their territorial limits ; and it would appear to us that the Subordinate Judge's view upon this matter is correct. We are relieved of the necessity of discussing this question at any great length, because it was decided by this Court in Regular Appeal No. 467 of 1902 in a judgment, dated the 16th December 1903, to which one of the members of this Bench was party. In that judgment occurs the following passage: "The Appellants' fifth plea is founded on the terms of sec. 6 of the Settlement Regulation III of 1872, according to which 'no Court having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas can decree compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of account or a larger amount of interest than the original debt.' But the words 'Court having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas' occurring in the section must, in our opinion, refer to a Court in the Sonthal Parganas and constituted under the Regulation. They cannot include a Court, such as that of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, when dealing with a suit, the cause of action in which has arisen within his jurisdiction and not in the Sonthal Parganas, and which has only jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas in the sense that it has power to order the sale of some of the mortgaged property which is situated in that district.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

"Two cases have been cited by the learned pleader for the Appellants, namely Dungaram Marwari v. Rajkishore Deo (2) and Shama Charan Misser v. Chuni Lal Marwari (3). They do no appear to be in point, or to throw any light upon the question now under discussion. There is certainly nothing in them which in any way conflicts with the view expressed above.

"Mr. Eardley Norton for the Appellants has cited another case, namely, that of Maseyk v. Steel & Co. (4). But it does not appear to us that this case in any way supports his contention. We accordingly see no reason to dissent from the view taken by this Court in the judgment above cited. Moreover, our attention has been called to the fact that in the mortgage bond on which the Plaintiff now sues the Defendants expressly declared that the loan had been taken at Bhagalpur and that the Plaintiff was entitled to institute a suit in Bhagalpur for the realization of the amount due. It appears that all the loans taken by the Defendant from the Plaintiff were taken at Bhagalpur; and there was further a stipulation that interest should be paid at Bhagalpur. We therefore think that the suit was properly instituted at Bhagalpur and that for the reasons above given, the Court at Bhagalpur was not restricted in awarding interest by the provisions of sec. 6 of Regulation III of 1872.

"We now turn to the second plea raised by Mr. Norton, namely, that the two persons, Matuki Mandar and Jadu Mandar, are necessary parties. The Subordinate Judge has held that they are not necessary parties, and we entirely agree with him. They are, no doubt, the great grandsons of one Rup Chand Mandar, who lent a sum of Rs. 10,000 to some of the Defendants on the 30th January 1884. The bond executed for this loan is printed at page 216 of the paper book; we have examined it. It appears to us to be a simple money bond and not a mortgage bond at all. That being so, it does not appear to us that the great-grandsons of Rup Chand Mandar are necessary parties to the suit or need have been made parties under sec. 85 of the Transfer of Property Act, even if they are the heirs of Rup Chand Mandar. It appears, however, that Rup Chand Mandar died in February 1897, and that he was succeeded in interest, so far as the loan of the 30th January 1884 is concerned, by his daughter-in-law, Champabati, and the Defendants executed in her favour a parwana (Exhibit E) in March 1897, putting her in possession of

(2) I. L. R. 18 Cal. 133 (1890).
(3) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 238 (1898).
(4) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 661 (1887).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

the property for the purpose of realizing the loan taken by them from her father-in-law, Rup Chand Mandar. We have examined this parwana. It does not appear to us to be a mortgage-bond, nor does it seem to be an instrument which requires registration under the Registration Act. Mr. Eardley Norton argues 'that it is not admissible in evidence. But the Subordinate Judge has not used it as evidence of any transaction, or as relating to any property affected by it, but as an admission by the Defendants of Champabati's having been put in possession of the property, and that therefore she has rightly been made a party Defendant in the suit and that therefore it was not necessary to implead Matuki Mandar and Jadu Mandar. Furthermore, we see from the petition at page 448 of the paper-book put in by Matuki Mandar and Jadu Mandar themselves, that they disclaim all connection with the property now in the possession of Champabati. They say, they have no right to it and are not in possession of it and that Champabati is in possession and that the property will vest in them after her death. This seems an additional reason why they should not be regarded as necessary parties. A third reason is that the Plaintiffs applied, in the course of the suit, to have the 2nd part of issue No. 2 either struck out, or that these two persons should be made parties. The Defendants, however, objected and Matuki Mandar and Jadu Mandar were accordingly not made parties. In these circumstances, it does not seem to us that it lies in the mouth of the representatives of the Defendants now to contend that these persons should have been made parties and that the suit should be dismissed, because they have not been impleaded.

"Finally, we may refer to the provisions of the 2nd part of the clause (1) of sec. 31, Civil Procedure Code, in which it is laid down that 'the Court may in every suit deal with the matter in controversy, so far as regards the rights and interests of the parties actually before it.'

"For these reasons, the Appeal fails and is dismissed with costs."

Mr G. R. Lowndes for the Mortgagors-Appellants submitted that sec. 6. of Reg. III of 1872 relating to usury applied.

[In the course of argument their Lordships asked whether the Code of Civil Procedure had any application to the Sonthal Parganas and whether the Bhagalpur Court had any jurisdiction to entertain the suit relating to land in Sonthal Parganas.]

Mr. Lowndes submitted that the Code of Civil Procedure had no application and that the suit to enforce the mortgage which was a suit relating to land in Sonthal Parganas could not be maintained in Bhagalpur.

[Sir R. Finlay, K. C., Counsel for the Respondents, objected that the point was not argued in the Courts below and was therefore not open to the Appellants.]

Mr. Lowndes replied that the point was not a new one; it was clearly raised in the written statement, although the Courts below had not dealt with it.

[Their Lordships ruled that it was a question of jurisdiction which arose on the admitted facts of the case and allowed the Appellants to argue it]

Mr. Lowndes submitted that two-thirds of the mortgaged properties were situated in the Sonthal Parganas and in districts in which the settlement had not been completed. The Bhagalpur Court was, therefore, incompetent to entertain the suit under sec. 5, Reg. III of 1872. By a notification, dated 19th August 1867, made under sec. 385 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, that Code was applied to the Sonthal Parganas. It was applied to civil suits in which the matter in dispute exceeded Rs. 1,000, but Reg. III of 1872, sec. 5, expressly provided, "no suit shall lie in any Court established under the said Act, VI of 1871, in regard to any land, etc, except as hereinafter provided." The words of the section were wide and imperative and excluded the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Court in all suits regarding land irrespective of its value. The notification of 1867 was abrogated after the passing of the Civil Procedure Code, 1877, which repealed Civil Procedure Codes of 1859 and 1861. There was no power in the Act of 1877 to extend its application to the Sonthal Parganas. In any case, the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 was applicable to suits of the value of more than Rs. 1,000, excepting suits relating to land. Civil Procedure Code, 1882, clearly shews what sections of the Act apply to the Sonthal Parganas. Reference was made to the Bengal Code, Vol. V., p. 268, where a list of enactments applicable to Sonthal Parganas is given. Sec. 19 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, would not apply, unless the whole Code applied. Reliance was placed on Ram Ratan v. Lalta Prasad (5), which was almost on all fours with the present case and related to scheduled districts.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

Partial application of the Code by sec. 10 of Reg. V of 1893 is not sufficient, as that only makes it applicable to certain suits filed in Sonthal Parganas to which alone the Regulation applies. The same argument applies to sec. 2 of Reg. III of 1872, as the suits there referred to are clearly suits filed in the Sonthal Parganas.

(5) I. L. R. 17 All. 483 (1895).

Vide sec. 2 of Sonthal Parganas Act, 1855. No doubt the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 was applied to Sonthal Parganas by notification, dated 19th August 1867, which might possibly be good under sec. 3 (3) of Reg. III of 1872. But the two subsequent Codes of 1877 and 1882 were made specifically not applicable to the scheduled districts which includes the Sonthal Parganas. The reasoning of Wilson, J, in Sorbojit Roy v. Gonesh Prasad (1) is against that contention, but it is submitted that it is unsound. By sec. 3 (2) of Reg. 3 of 1872, no Act other than those specified in the schedule attached thereto are to apply to the Sonthal Parganas, and the Code of Civil Procedure is not among them. The notification, dated the 19th August 1867, must be held to have been repealed by subsequent enactments. Further, the Codes of 1877 and 1882 contain in themselves no power to extend their application similar to the provision made in the Code of 1859, sec. 385. The argument is strengthened by

(1) the fact that the Code of Civil Procedure is not mentioned in the Schedule to Reg. III of 1872 ;

(2) the fact that by Reg. III of 1899 certain specific sections of the Code of Civil Procedure are applied to Sonthal Parganas which would be absurd, if the whole Code already applied ;

(3) the fact that the Code is applied by Reg. V of 1893, sec. 10, to certain suits only in the Sonthal Parganas. Again, even if the Code applied to the Sonthal Parganas, the jurisdiction in respect of all suits regarding land is taken away and confined to particular Courts in the Sonthal Parganas by sec. 5 of Reg. III of 1872. The words of the section are wide enough to include suits on mortgages. It is argued on the other side that the scope of the Regulation of 1872 limits the section to such suits only as would come ordinarily before a Settlement Officer. But the Preamble to the Act shows that it was not merely an Act to provide for settlement only. Sec. 6 is also a general section. The settlement sections of the Regulation seem to refer only to "claims" and not suits. Under sec. 5, suits regarding land were to be tried either by Settlement Officers or by officers appointed under the Sonthal Parganas Act of 1855. The whole Civil jurisdiction over the Sonthal Parganas was vested in them. By notification, dated 7th May 1872, the trial of all suits relating to land was entrusted to these officers. The only question is whether the provision with regard to such suits under sec. 5 of Reg. III of 1872 had become inoperative owing to a notification of the completion of the settlement. The first settlement was completed in 1879, but it seems that no notification of completion was published in the Gazette. Evidently the Government did not want to do away with the whole machinery and to re-enact the old Act for the purposes of the second settlement which began about 1886. So sec. 5 remained operative. There were several amending Acts between 1872 and 1908, and if sec. 5 had become inoperative, it would have been repealed. The reference in sec. 9 of Reg. of 1893 to suits over Rs. 1,000 which are excluded from the cognizance of the ordinary Civil Courts must refer to suits regarding land under sec. 5 of Reg. III of 1872, and shows that they were still supposed, at all events, to be excluded. Sec. 5 contains both a prohibition against any other Courts trying suits relating to land and also a positive enactment that they must be tried by certain Courts only. Further, even assuming that sec. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies or that the parties have by their agreement or terms of the deed of mortgage chosen that Court as their forum [Hamlyn v. Taliskar Distillery Co. (6)], still the law to be applied must be the law of the Sonthal Parganas. That law does not allow usury beyond the limits of sec. 6. It was a law for the protection of the people there and their land. Qua land they could not contract themselves out of it. All suits respecting land are governed by rei situe. To hold otherwise would be to allow an evasion of the Act. Considerations applicable to mere money suits against residents in the Sonthal Parganas have no application to a suit on mortgage. The Bhagalpur Court under sec. 19 would clearly be a Court having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas. It is asked to make a decree for sale, and under sec. 223, C. P. C., it would have jurisdiction actually to sell: Maseyk v. Steel & Co. (4), Shurrup Chunder v. Ameerunnessa (7), Kartick Nath v. Telukdhari (8), Gopi Mohun v. Doyibaki Nundun (9). Tincouri v. Shib Chandra (10), Jagarnath v. Dip Rani (11).

(1) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 761 (1884).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

To hold, as the High Court did, that sec. 6 only refers to Courts in the Sonthal Parganas would be to strike out the words "having jurisdiction" from the section. It is suggested that these words were intended to apply to the Courts at Bhagalpur and Birbhum, which, after the Act of 1855, acted as District Courts

(4) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 661 (1887).
(6) [1894] A. C. 202.
(7) I. L. R. 8 Cal. 703 (1882).
(8) I. L. R. 15 Cal. 667 (1888).
(9) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 13 (1891).
(10) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 639 (1894).
(11) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 871 (1895).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

of Sonthal Parganas. But (1) they were still strictly Sonthal Parganas Courts constituted under sec. 2 of Act of 1855, though for convenience sitting in places outside the Sonthal Parganas under sec. 3 of that Act.

(2) On the date when Reg. III of 1872 was published, it was notified that these particular Courts should cease to have jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas. It could not therefore have been intended to refer to them in sec. 5 of the same Regulation.

(3) If sec. 5 was intended to apply to Courts outside Sonthal Parganas, as argued on the other side, it clearly applied to Bhagalpur Court and excluded suits regarding land in the Sonthal Parganas from that Court's jurisdiction.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C. (Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Dunne with him) submitted that sec. 5, Reg. III, 1872, related to questions of title to land and not to a suit to enforce a mortgage. The object of the Regulation was to give the Settlement Officer a free hand in dealing with questions which arise in the course of settlement, namely, questions as to who should be recorded as the owner of land, and as to the record-of-rights. Sec. 12 clearly indicated that the object was to make an enquiry into landed rights. Prior to 1855, the Sonthal Parganas were subject to the ordinary laws of India. Act XXXVII of 1855 imposed a limitation on suits under Rs. 1,000 and set up special Courts. Secs. 1 to 3 of Reg. III of 1872 leave in tact the application of the general law in all suits over Rs. 1,000. It was never intended that the Settlement Officers were to deal with suits relating to mortgages; such suits over Rs. 1,000 were to be tried by the Civil Courts in the ordinary way under the general law of the Code of Civil Procedure. Sec. 10 of Reg. V of 1893 shews that the whole C. P. C., 1882, was applicable to the Sonthal Parganas. Reference was made to Sonthal Parganas Settlement Manual (1898), p. 96; Bengal Code, Vol. V., pp. 222, 268, 269. The present suit could have been instituted in the ordinary Civil Court of the Sonthal Parganas as well as in Bhagalpur. Reliance was placed on Sorbojit Roy v. Gonesh Prosad Misser (1) (supra).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., followed:—The Code of Civil Procedure does apply to the Sonthal Parganas (sec. 10, Reg. V of 1893), and thereby the Sonthal Parganas are placed on a par with other districts in British India. It provides for the trial of the suits according to the Civil Procedure Code; the trial of a suit must include the place where the suit is brought. Sec. 5 of Reg. 3 of 1872 refers to Civil Courts in the Sonthal Parganas and not to Courts beyond them. It was limited to the term of settlement, and it was proved that the settlement of some of the districts, where the mortgaged lands were situated, had been completed. The terms of the bond also shewed that the parties agreed that the suit to enforce the bond could be brought in Bhagalpur or in Sonthal Parganas. If it were a suit for money alone, it was certainly maintainable, and the place of residence of the Defendant would have made no difference. There was no reason why the suit should not lie, because the Plaintiff had an additional security in Bhagalpur and the Sonthal Parganas.

Mr. Lowndes in reply: Sec. 10 of Reg. V of 1893 applied the Code of Civil Procedure to suits in certain Courts in Sonthal Parganas. The whole Code was not applicable to all the Courts there.

(1) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 761 (1884).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

Reg. III of 872 repealed all previous notifications, and the administration of civil justice was entrusted to officers appointed by the Regulation. The notification, dated 6th August 1873, had the force of law. There has never been a notification that the settlement of the districts had been completed. Again, the agreement of the parties could not give jurisdiction to the Court which it was prohibited from exercising. Reference was made to Hamlyn's case (6).

As to the compound interest, sec. 6 of Reg. III of 1872 applied, and the Bhagalpur Court was incompetent to allow greater interest than what the Courts of the Sonthal Parganas could have allowed. The section embodied a basic law, and the parties could not contract themselves out of it. In so far as the Bhagalpur Court had jurisdiction to decree a sale of the mortgaged properties in the Sonthal Parganas, it was governed by sec. 6. The account of moneys due ought to be taken from the date of the first mortgage. If sec. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure applied, it was only a matter of convenience and that could not extend the powers of the Court beyond those given by sec. 6.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C.: Sec. 6 applied to the Courts in the Sonthal Parganas only. The authority given by sec. 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure included an authority to make an order for the sale of the properties situated in another district: Maseyk v. Steel & Co. (4). Ram Chandra Marwari v. Rani Keshobati Kumari (12) was a case where the property was in the Sonthal Parganas. The Civil Procedure Code, sec. 223, and other sections provided for executing a decree. Because a Court could send out a decree for execution to a Court in the Sonthal Parganas, it could not be said that that Court had jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas. The Bhagalpur Court was competent to make a decree for money without being affected by sec. 6, and the decree could not be varied inasmuch as a Court executing a decree cannot do so.

Mr. L. DeGruyther: Reg. III of 1872 was not an Act of the Imperial Legislature; it was enacted by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal for the Sonthal Parganas only, and could not override the general law of British India. It would be ultra vires, if it did so (Cowell's "Courts in India"), p. 113.

Mr. Lowndes in reply: The Respondents were in fact asking the Bhagalpur Court to sell the property in the Sonthal Parganas which meant that the Court was to exercise jurisdiction therein. Reg. III of 1872 was not an executive Act, its validity was as good as that of any other law.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—In this case their Lordships have to deal with three consolidated Appeals from decrees of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, arising out of a mortgage suit filed in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Bhagalpur in Bengal. The first and principal appeal is from the decree of the Subordinate Judge enforcing the mortgage, which was affirmed on appeal by the High Court. Subsequently to making that decree, the Subordinate Judge made two orders varying the same, both of which were on appeal set aside by the High Court. From these two orders of

(4) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 661 (1887).
(6) [1894] A. C. 202.
(12) L. R. 36 I. A. 85 (1909).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

the High Court, appeals have been brought by the Respondents to the main appeal, and they constitute the second and third of the consolidated appeals.

The mortgage bond, to enforce which the action was originally brought, was a bond for Rs. 3,50,000, dated the 21st December 1896, in favour of Babu Suraj Narayan Singh, the father of the principal Respondent, and secured on lands situated in the Sonthal Parganas and elsewhere. The mortgagors were members of a joint Hindu family. Inasmuch as no question arises in this appeal as to the parties to the present action being the proper parties, it will be convenient to call the Appellants in the principal appeal the mortgagors and the Respondents the mortgagees.

The bond sued on was the last of a series of bonds for increasing amounts. The total of the principal amounts advanced was, according to the statements in the plaint, Rs. 2,85,903-1-9. But the total claim of the mortgagees at the date of suit was Rs. 5,36,038-11-10, the balance being made up of interest which was charged according to the provisions of the different bonds, the rate under the bond in suit being $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum with annual rests. By far the greater portion of the mortgaged properties was situated in the district of the Sonthal Parganas, and the mortgagors resided in that district. The remainder of the mortgaged property was situated within the local jurisdiction of the Bhagalpur Court.

The bond in suit was executed at Bhagalpur and contained a stipulation that the mortgagees might enforce it in the Bhagalpur Court.

The suit was commenced on June 20th, 1904. The plaint shows that it was an ordinary suit to enforce a mortgage. Written statements of defence were put in by various Defendants, and various issues were raised and decided by the Subordinate Judge at the trial. Most of these relate to matters no longer in dispute. The only issues that remain for their Lordships' decision in this appeal turn on the fact that the mortgagors reside, and the chief part of the property is situate, in the Sonthal Parganas, so that it is not necessary further to refer to the other issues.

The judgment of the Subordinate Judge, which is dated February 12th, 1906, was in favour of the mortgagees on all issues. On the appeal to the High Court, the argument seems to have been confined to the sixth issue, which was in the following terms:—

"Are the Plaintiffs precluded from claiming compound interest, or interest exceeding the amount of the principal advanced under Reg. III of 1872?"

The High Court found in favour of the mortgagees on this issue, and from that decision the present appeal is brought. But in the hearing before the Subordinate Judge, an issue was raised as to the jurisdiction of the Court of Bhagalpur to entertain the suit, and this point has again been raised in the argument before their Lordships. Seeing that it is a question of jurisdiction, and depends on no disputed facts, their Lordships are of opinion that they cannot decline to entertain it, although it is not specifically raised on the appeal, more especially as it necessarily presented itself in the argument.

The position of the Sonthal Parganas is very peculiar. They are under separate and special legislation, which differs widely from the legislation applicable to the rest of Bengal. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has the power to vary that legislation from time to time by notifications published in the "Calcutta Gazette," under and according to provisions appearing in the regulations relating to the district as will presently be more particularly referred to. At the hearing of the appeal it was found that the documents in the record did not adequately inform their Lordships of the relevant notifications which had thus appeared in the "Calcutta Gazette," and, accordingly it was arranged that the parties should supplement the record by putting in copies of such notifications as they thought material. These were furnished to their Lordships in December last, and they affect to an important degree the matters in issue, and more particularly those that turn upon the settlement of the lands to which the mortgage bond relates.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

In order to make clear the legal questions that arise in this appeal, it is necessary to explain the nature and sequence of the legislation relating to the Sonthal Parganas.

The special legislation for the Sonthal Parganas commences by an Act of the Governor-General of India in Council, No. XXXVII of 1855, which was passed on December 22nd, 1855. Its full title is :—

"An Act to remove from operation of the General Laws and Regulations certain districts inhabited by the Sonthals and others and to place the same under the superintendence of an officer to be specially appointed for that purpose."

The Preamble of the Act recites that the General Regulations and Acts of Government then in force in the Presidency of Bengal were not adapted to the uncivilized race of people called Sonthals, and it was therefore deemed expedient to remove from the operation of such laws certain districts. It then proceeded to enact [illegible]. (1) as follows :—

"The districts described in the Schedule to this Act are hereby removed from the operation of the General Regulations of the Bengal Code and of the Laws passed by the Governor-General of India in Council except so far as is hereinafter provided and no law which shall hereafter be passed by the Governor-General of India in Council shall be deemed to extend to any part of the said districts unless the same shall be specially named therein."

This is subject to a proviso which is not material to this case.

The Act then proceeds to carry out its main object by the following enactment :—

"The said district shall be placed under the superintendence and jurisdiction of an officer or officers to be appointed in that behalf by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. . . . . The administration of civil and criminal justice . . . . are hereby vested in the officer or officers so appointed."

This language is perfectly general in its character, and under it the whole administration of civil justice became vested in the officer or officers so appointed. But there follows a proviso to which frequent reference was made in the argument. It reads as follows :—

"Provided that all civil suits in which the matter in dispute shall exceed the value of Rs. 1,000 shall be tried and determined according to the General Laws and Regulations in the same manner as if this Act had not been passed."

The interpretation of this provision is a matter of great difficulty. Two rival interpretations naturally suggest themselves. The one is that the officers exercising the jurisdiction shall do so in accordance with the general laws and regulations, so that the rights of the parties are unaffected by the provision, although they are to be pronounced upon by a different judicial tribunal. The other is that not only the laws that govern rights, but also the procedure to enforce those rights is to remain unchanged. Now it must be observed that this is a proviso and not an exception, and accordingly, taken in connection with the general language of the previous portion of the clause, the former of these two interpretations is the one that commends itself to their Lordships, so that it must be construed as providing that the special officer or officers shall try such suits, but that in trying and determining them they shall observe the General Laws and Regulations obtaining in Bengal, which but for the Act would have applied equally in the Sonthal Parganas. It would seem, however, that the other view has been taken in India [see the judgment in Sorbojit Ray v. Gonesh Prosad Misser (1)]. Subsequent legislation has, however, rendered it unnecessary, so far as the decision in this case is concerned, to decide what would be the state of things, if this regulation were still in force unmodified by any other statutory enactments.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

The territorial definition of the Sonthal Parganas was originally to be found in the schedule to this Act; but, by Act X of 1857, a new schedule was substituted therefor. The judgment of the High Court finds that two-thirds of the mortgaged properties are situated within the district described in that schedule, and it would seem that this estimate may be assumed to be approximately correct for the purposes of this Appeal.

The next Act in chronological order to which it is necessary to refer is the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859. The Sonthal Parganas are not specially named in that Act, and therefore it did not primâ facie apply to them; but, nevertheless, we must have regard to the language of section 385 of that Act, which reads as follows:—

"This Act shall not take effect in any part of the territories not subject to the General Regulations of Bengal, Madras and Bombay, until the same shall be extended thereto by the Governor-General of India in Council or by the Local Government to which such territory is subordinate and notified in the Gazette."

Although the words "Sonthal Parganas" do not appear in this section, the district falls under the description there appearing. Accordingly, we find that by notification on August 19th, 1867, the Code of Civil Procedure of 1859, as amended by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1861, was applied to the Sonthal Parganas subject to certain provisions, restrictions and exceptions which are not relevant to the matters of this suit.

It is not necessary to decide what was the precise effect of this notification. It can hardly have been intended that it should apply to the Courts held by the officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal in those suits in which they were not required to try and determine the case according to the general laws and regulations prevailing in Bengal. But with regard to civil suits in which the matter in dispute exceeded the value of Rs. 1,000, it would seem to have settled the doubt as to whether they were cognizable by ordinary Civil Courts duly established with jurisdiction within the Sonthal Parganas, because it will be found that the fact that such jurisdiction exists in such Courts is recognized in subsequent legislation.

In the year 1872 a new Regulation was passed for the Sonthal Parganas. It is entitled the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation, and by cl. (2) it is directed to be read with Act XXXVII of 1855 and Act X of 1857 before referred to. Cl. (3) reads as follows:—

"Subject to the provisions of this Regulation, the Regulations and Acts mentioned in the schedule annexed to this Regulation, or such portions of them as are unrepealed, shall be deemed to be in force in the Sonthal Parganas. No other Regulations or Acts shall be deemed to be in force in the Sonthal Parganas, except so far as regards the trial and determination of the civil suits mentioned in sec. 2, Act XXXVII of 1855, in which the matter in dispute exceeds the value of Rs. 1,000, when such suits are tried in the Courts established under Act VI of 1871."

(1) I. L. R. 10 Cal. 761 (1884).

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

It further provides that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal may by notification in the "Calcutta Gazette" add to or take away from the list in the schedule.

To arrive at the true meaning and effect of these provisions, it is necessary to bear in mind that at the date of this Regulation the Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, as amended by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1861, applied to the Sonthal Parganas by virtue of the notification of August 19th, 1867. But the schedule to the Regulation does not contain the Civil Procedure Codes of 1859 and 1861, nor have they ever been added to the above list by any notification of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal as above described. It follows that these Civil Procedure Codes were thereafter applicable in the Sonthal Parganas only so far as concerns the trial and determination of civil suits in which the matter in dispute exceeded the value of Rs. 1,000, when such suits were tried in the Courts established under Act VI of 1871. So far as such suits were concerned, there is nothing in this clause of the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation to alter the effect of the notification of August 19th, 1867, which applied to them the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 as amended in 1861.

Act VI of 1871 is known as the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1871. It is not in the scheduled list. But it was passed at a date when the Code of Civil Procedure, 1859, as amended by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1861, was in force in the Sonthal Parganas, and it would seem as though the wide provisions of the clauses in those Codes giving jurisdiction to Civil Courts must be taken to have given to the Government power to appoint Judges under it within the Sonthal Parganas, inasmuch as sec. 4 of the Sonthal Parganas Regulation, 1872, provides as follows :—

"The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal may, by notification in the 'Calcutta Gazette,' invest any competent officer in the Sonthal Parganas with the powers of any Civil Court established under Act VI of 1871, and may exclude the whole or any part of the said Parganas from the jurisdiction of any of the Courts established under the said Act now having jurisdiction therein."

But while it is evident that the Government by this section left it to the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to decide in future whether Courts established under the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1871, should retain jurisdiction within the Sonthal Parganas, it had already made up its mind that such should not be the case with suits relating to lands, pending the completion of the settlement which they proposed forthwith to make of all the lands situated in the Sonthal Parganas. This is made clear by sec. 5, which reads as follows :—

"Till such time as a settlement of the whole or any part of the Sonthal Parganas shall be made under the rules hereinafter provided, and the said settlement shall be declared by a notification in the 'Calcutta Gazette' to have been completed and concluded, no suit shall lie in any Court established under the said Act VI of 1871 in regard to any land, or any interest in or arising out of any land, or for the rent or profits of any land, or regarding any village-headship or other office connected with the land, except as hereinafter provided; but such suits shall be heard and determined by the officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal under sec. 2 of the said Act XXXVII of 1855, or by the Settlement Officers hereinafter mentioned, according as the said Lieutenant-Governor shall from time to time direct."

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

Then follows a proviso by which the officer empowered to try a suit may transfer it to a Court established under the said Act, and thereby give to the Court jurisdiction to try it. No question, however, under this proviso, arises in the present case.

The critical question in this suit is as to whether cl. (5) excludes from the jurisdiction of Courts established under the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1871, suits relating to land, where the value of the matter in dispute is more than Rs. 1,000. Their Lordships are of opinion that to this question only one answer can be given. The language of the section is so wide and so peremptory that it gives to the officers therein mentioned sole and exclusive jurisdiction in all suits in regard to any land, or any interest in or arising out of any land, or for the rent or profits of any land. To make the meaning clearer and to render the language more emphatic, it is expressed both in the positive and in the negative form. On the one hand, it provides that "no suit shall lie in any Court established under the said Act, VI of 1871, in regard to any land, etc.," and on the other hand it provides that such "suits shall be heard and determined by the officers, etc." It is impossible not to give to such language the full effect of creating an exclusive jurisdiction. It follows, therefore, that no action relating to land in the Sonthal Parganas can be brought otherwise than before such officers, so long as sec. 5 is in force with respect to the district in which that land is situated. There is no difficulty in comprehending the motives for such legislation. The section shows that a settlement of the lands was in contemplation, and evidently the aim of the provision was to prevent any clash of jurisdiction between different Courts in matters relating to land until such time as the Government proclaimed the settlement to be completed—a very intelligible policy when it is considered that on the results of such suits between individuals might depend the entries which must be made in the settlement records.

The object of the regulation being thus to throw the whole of the jurisdiction in suits relating to land into special Courts established in and for the Sonthal Parganas, and provision being made for extending that exclusive jurisdiction to all suits, one has to consider the meaning and effect of sec. 6, which is the section upon which the rights of the parties in the present suit depend. That section, so far as is material, reads as follows :—

"All Courts having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas shall observe the following rules relating to usury, namely :—

"(a) . . . . no compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of interest shall be decreed;

"(b) the total interest decreed on any loan or debt shall never exceed one-fourth of the principal sum, if the period be not more than one year, and shall not in any other case exceed the principal of the original debt or loan."

The Respondents sought to establish that the phrase "all Courts having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas" meant Courts locally situated in the Sonthal Parganas, and dealing with matters purely local. Their Lordships cannot accept this interpretation. The words are definite and precise, and must be applied in their natural signification. It was urged that, taken literally, they would apply to everything done by a Court having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas, whether the matter related to those districts or not, inasmuch as the language used makes the application of the enactment depend on the Court and not on the matter in dispute. But this is to ignore the fact that the Regulation is only applicable to the Sonthal Parganas, and that, therefore, it would not apply to Courts having jurisdiction wider than these local limits when such Courts were dealing with matters relating solely to other parts of India. The enactment, therefore, applies to Courts having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas, and acting under and by virtue of such jurisdiction.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

The importance of the section is very great. It is a protective section clearly dictated by the fundamental consideration to which reference has already been made, and which led to the Sonthal Parganas being put under separate and special legislation, namely, that—

"The General Regulations and Acts of Government now in force in the Presidency of Bengal are not adapted to the uncivilized race of people called Sonthals, and it is, therefore, expedient to remove from the operations of such laws" the district known as the Sonthal Parganas.

The provision, therefore, is not one of procedure, but of substance, and so far as the Courts having jurisdiction within the Sonthal Parganas are concerned, it places all contractual stipulations as to compound interest in a position of non-enforcibility, and limits statutably the total interest which can be decreed on any loan or debt. The application of these provisions to the facts of the present case will be considered later.

The next Act in chronological sequence to which reference was made in the argument is Act XIV of 1874, known as the Scheduled Districts Act, 1874. This is an Act for the purpose of removing doubts as to what Acts or Regulations are in force in parts of British India, which have never been brought within or have from time to time been removed from the operation of the general Acts and Regulations and the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts of Judicature. These parts of British India are termed in the Act "Scheduled Districts." They are all set out in the First Schedule to the Act, and amongst them are to be found the Sonthal Parganas. The scheme of the Act is peculiar. It is expressly made to apply to all parts of British India other than the scheduled districts. But it is provided that it shall come into force in any scheduled district upon the issue of a notification under sec. 3 of the Act with regard to such district. In such case, the Local Government may, with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council by notification in the "Gazette of India" and also in the local Gazette, declare (among other things) what enactments are actually in force in any of the scheduled districts, and every such notification shall be binding on all courts of law. During the argument, Counsels for the parties were not in agreement as to whether any notification under this Act had been issued applying to the Sonthal Parganas; but, from the subsequent information supplied to their Lordships, it would appear that no such notification has been issued, and therefore that the provisions of the Scheduled Districts Act, 1874, have never been applied to them. It is, therefore, unnecessary to discuss further the provisions of this enactment.

The next Act which requires to be noticed is the Civil Procedure Code, 1877. It repeals Act VIII of 1859 and Act XXIII of 1861, which constituted the then existing Code of Civil Procedure. Sec. 1 reads as follows :—

"This Act may be cited as 'The Code of Civil Procedure' and it shall come into force on the first day of October 1887.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

"This section and sec. 3 extend to the whole of British India. The other sections extend to the whole of British India except the scheduled districts as defined in Act No. XIV of 1874."

The relevant part of sec. 3 reads as follows :—

"The enactments specified in the First Schedule hereto annexed are hereby repealed to the extent mentioned in the third column of the same schedule.

"But when in any Act, Regulation or notification passed or issued prior to the day on which this Code comes into force, reference is made to Act VIII of 1859, Act XXIII of 1871, or 'The Code of Civil Procedure' or to any other Act hereby repealed, such reference shall so far as may be practicable be read as applying to this Code or the corresponding part thereof."

The effect of these sections is to make the notification of 1867 relative to the application of the then existing Codes of Civil Procedure to the Sonthal Parganas read as though it applied to the Civil Procedure Act, 1877. But it will be remembered that such application had been restricted by the Sonthal Parganas Regulation of 1872 to suits brought for amounts above Rs. 1,000 in Courts established under Act VI of 1871. The combined effect of these provisions must be to make the Civil Procedure Act of 1877 apply in the Sonthal Parganas only to suits so brought.

The next Act is the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. In every thing that is material to the present appeal, this is identical with the Civil Procedure Code, 1877. It took the place of that Act in the Sonthal Parganas to the extent that such Act was in force therein, that is to say, for suits brought for amounts above Rs. 1,000 in Courts established under Act VI of 1871.

We now come to Reg. V of 1893, the short title of which is the Sonthal Parganas Justice Regulation, 1893. It made important changes in the administration of civil justice in the Sonthal Parganas. By sec. 5 it added to the two classes of special Courts theretofore existing in the Sonthal Parganas, named the Courts of Settlement Officers and the Courts of officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal under sec. 2 of the Regulation of 1855, a third class, namely Courts established under Act XII of 1887, known as the Bengal, United Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, which is an Act which has taken the place of Act VI of 1871 (which has been repealed), and all references to the last-mentioned Act must now be read as referring to it.

These definite provisions entirely remove the difficulties as to the jurisdiction within the Sonthal Parganas of Courts appointed under the Bengal, United Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, or its predecessor—the Bengal Civil Courts Act, 1871. It remains to see what suits are put within the cognizance of these Courts. By sec. 9 the jurisdiction of a Judge of one of these Courts extends to—

"Suits of which the value exceeds Rs. 1,000 and which are not excluded from his cognizance by the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation, or by any other law for the time being in force."

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that these words of exclusion refer to sec. 5 of the Regulation of 1872, which excluded from the cognizance of any such Court suits relating to land, the settlement of which had not been finished and duly notified, and placed them exclusively in the hands of Settlement Officers or officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal under sec. 2 of the Regulation of 1855. This exclusive jurisdiction is, therefore, maintained, and suits in regard to land, which is not in districts that have been notified as being completely settled, are not within the cognizance of the ordinary Courts, no matter what may be the value of the matter in dispute. It is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to examine further into the jurisdiction of Courts established under these provisions, because the Court of Bhagalpur, in which the present action was brought, is not one of such Courts.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

The result of this examination of the Acts and Regulations applicable to the Sonthal Parganas is that at the date when this suit was commenced, no suit could lie in any Court established under Act VI of 1871, or under the Act which has taken its place, namely, the Bengal, United Provinces and Assam Civil Courts Act, 1887, in regard to any land or any interest in or arising out of any land, or for the rent or profits of any land, but such suits must have been brought before Settlement Officers, or Courts of officers appointed by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal under sec. 2 of the Sonthal Parganas Act, 1855, and the Sonthal Parganas Justice Regulation of 1893, Part 2, so long as the land had not been settled and the settlement declared by a notification in the "Calcutta Gazette" to have been completed and concluded. And, further, that whatever be the Court that has jurisdiction to decide cases within the Sonthal Parganas, and is exercising that jurisdiction, it must observe the two rules relating to usury above referred to.

It is necessary therefore to ascertain what was the exact position (so far as settlement is concerned) of the land included in the mortgage bond at the date of the commencement of the action in which the present appeal is brought, namely, June 20th, 1904. The information supplied to their Lordships by the parties, as to the notifications appearing in the "Calcutta Gazette" show conclusively that, although portions of the lands mortgaged had been settled, and notification had been duly made that such settlement had been completed at dates prior to the institution of the suit, other portions were not so settled. It is clear, therefore, that the suit came within the provisions of sec. 5 of the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation, 1872, relating to the exclusive jurisdiction of officers appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, or by Settlement Officers, inasmuch as it related to land which had not been settled, or the settlement of which had not been declared by a notification in the "Calcutta Gazette" to have been completed and concluded. The Court of Bhagalpur had, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and this appeal must be allowed.

Reliance was placed by Counsel for the Respondent on the stipulation in the bond that the mortgagees might enforce it in the Court of Bhagalpur. Their Lordships are of opinion that this has no effect. That Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit which, beyond question, was a suit in regard to land in the Sonthal Parganas, and that being so, the parties could not give it the necessary jurisdiction by consent. To do so would be to nullify the express prohibition of sec. 5 of the Sonthal Parganas Regulation, 1872, which was binding on any Court having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas in the exercise of such jurisdiction.

Their Lordships are also of opinion that, apart from the question of jurisdiction, any Court dealing with the subject-matter of the suit would be bound to give full force and effect to the provisions of sec. 6 of the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation, 1872, relating to usury, and therefore to have refused to decree any compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of interest, or an amount of total interest exceeding the principal of the original debt or loan.

MAHA PRASAD SINGH v. RAMANI MOHAN SINGH.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, and the action dismissed with costs in both Courts. The Respondents must pay the costs of this Appeal. The two subsidiary appeals fall with the dismissal of the action, and the costs connected with them will form part of the costs of the whole proceedings, which the Respondents must bear.

Solicitors: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co., for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Morgan, Price & Co, for the Respondents.

B. D. Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2146 OF 1911.

COXE, J.
D. CHATTERJEE, J.
1914,
19, January.

GAJADHAR AHIR and ors., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
MUNSHI BHIKARI LAL, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Suit for recovery of possession of land by proprietor of undivided half share—Nature of decree that Plaintiff may be entitled to—Proprietor of undivided half share if can eject any one on the land from the whole of it.

The Plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of possession of a plot of land to the extent of an eight annas share, the Plaintiff being the proprietor to the extent of eight annas and Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 proprietors to the extent of the other eight annas. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 were tenants on the land recognised by Defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The Plaintiff asked for joint possession with Defendants Nos. 1 to 3, if joint possession with Defendants No. 5 and 6 could not be granted:

Held—That all that the Plaintiff could ask for was joint possession of an eight annas share. He could not in this suit ask the Court to decide who was entitled to possession of the other eight annas share of the land with which he had no concern.

That a person entitled to an undivided half share of the land cannot sue to eject anybody from the whole of it and the Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 who had been recognised as tenants by the co-sharer landlords could not be ejected by the Plaintiff from the whole of the land.

That the Plaintiff was entitled to a decree against all the Defendants for recovery of joint possession of an eight annas share of the disputed property and he was entitled to enforce the right by a suit for partition, if he was not satisfied with the delivery of possession of an undivided half share.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 10th August 1911 against a decree of Babu Sihari Lahiri, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Saran, dated the 14th July 1911, reversing a decree of Maulvi Khaja Taki Jan, Munsif at Gopalganj, dated the 31st March 1911.

The material facts appearing from the judgment of the Munsif are as follows:—

"The Plaintiff is mortgagee in possession of 8 as. share of Mauza Pakowala and the Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 are the mortgagees in possession of the other 8 as. share. In this mauza, there is a plot of land, bearing No. 907 which is in dispute. The Plaintiff alleges that this land appertains to and is Sihan land of the zemindary kutchery which is plot No. 908; that he was in direct possession of the properties; that the Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 with whom the Plaintiff has some dispute have set up the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 to take wrongful possession of the said land and use it as their bathan by fixing cattle-troughs and pegs and that it is not bathan land of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and they have no right to remain in possession of the land and use it as such.

GAJADHAR AHIR v. MUNSHI BHIKARI LAL.

"Hence this suit for a declaration that the said plot is attached to the plot No. 908, the site of zemindary kutchery, that it is not bathan land of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 and that they have no right to use the same as such; for perpetual injunction to restrain Defendants from using the land as bathan; for khas possession to the extent of 8 as. jointly with Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 with Defendants Nos. 1 to 4; for removal of all the cattle-troughs and pegs fixed on the land. The Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 contest the suit and Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 support them.

* * * * * * *

"From the evidence in the record and from allegations made in the plaint and written statements of Defendants, it is clear that the possession of Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 in respect of the disputed land is less due to any merits of theirs than to the discord between the co-sharers. In such a case the Plaintiff is not entitled to anything more than his strict rights as co-sharer."

Against this order the Plaintiff appealed to the Sub-Judge who reversed the judgment.

The Defendants appealed to this Court.

Babu Debendra Narayan Bhattacharjee for the Appellants.

Babu Rajendra Prasad for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This was a suit for recovery of possession of a plot of land to the extent of an 8 annas share. The Plaintiff appears to be the proprietor of the land to the extent of 8 annas and Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 to be proprietors to the extent of the other 8 annas. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 claim to be tenants on the land, and they are supported by Defendants Nos. 5 and 6. The Munsif gave the Plaintiff a decree for khas possession to the extent of an 8 annas share jointly with Defendants Nos. 1 to 3, but not so as to entitle the Plaintiff to remove certain cattle-troughs and pegs fixed by Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 thereon. The Plaintiff was not satisfied with this success, and appealed to the Subordinate Judge, who held that the title of Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had not been proved and that the Plaintiff should recover possession of a moiety share in the disputed land jointly with Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 after removal of the Nads and pegs. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 have appealed to this Court. On their behalf it is first urged that as the Plaintiff asked in the alternative for joint possession with Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 or with Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 and obtained a decree for joint possession with Defendants Nos. 1 to 3, he could not subsequently appeal for joint possession with Defendants Nos. 5 and 6. In the first place, it is clear that the Plaintiff only asked for joint possession with Defendants No. 1 to 3, if joint possession with Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 could not be granted. But it appears to us that that matter does not really arise in this case. All that the Plaintiff could ask for was joint possession of an 8 annas share. He could not in this suit ask the Court to decide who was entitled to possession of the other 8 annas share of the land, with which he had no concern.

GAJADHAR AHIR v. MUNSHI BHIKARI LAL.

Secondly, it is argued that as Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had been recognized as tenants by the co-sharer landlords Nos. 5 and 6, they could not be ejected from the whole of the land, nor could the cattle-troughs and pegs be removed. We have not been shown any authority for holding that a person entitled to an undivided half share of the land can sue to eject anybody from the whole of it.

This contention therefore must succeed. Accordingly, the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be modified. The Plaintiff will be entitled to a decree against all the Defendants for recovery of joint possession of an 8 annas share of the disputed property. He will be entitled to enforce this right by a suit for partition, if he is not satisfied with the delivery of possession of an undivided half share. Until the land is partitioned, the cattle-troughs and pegs will not be removed.

The Appeal will be decreed in these terms.

Appeal decreed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 93 OF 1912.

FLETCHER, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1914, Heard, 16, April. Judgment, 16, April.	MOHIRUDDIN MONDAL, Defendant No. 1, Appellant, v. SRIMATI INDRA KUMARI DASI, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 11—Res judicata.

Where in a suit on a subsequent mortgage bond, a prior mortgagee was made a party and the Plaintiff prayed for an account as to the amount due to the prior mortgagee, but the Court on the failure of the prior mortgagee to appear passed an ex parte decree, but no order was passed as to Plaintiff's prayer for account as against the prior mortgagee:

Held—That the Court in passing this decree never intended to say that the absence of the prior mortgagee from the trial caused the mortgage security of the Plaintiff to override the prior security which was held by the prior mortgagee.

AJUDHYA v. INAYET (1) followed.

This was an Appeal from a decree of Babu Asutosh Banerjee, Subordinate Judge at Burdwan, dated the 10th November 1911, confirming a decision of Babu Sachindra Kumar Sen, Additional Munsif at Kalna, dated the 27th June 1910.

This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the Plaintiff for recovery of possession of lands purchased by her, in execution of her mortgage decree in suit No. 477 of 1902. In that mortgage suit Defendant No. 1 in the present suit was impleaded as Defendant No. 3 in the mortgage suit. He was made a party as purchaser of the mortgaged property in execution of a decree based on a prior mortgage of his own. In the suit based on the prior mortgage bond by the present Defendant No. 1, the present Plaintiff was not made a party. It was stated in the plaint in the subsequent mortgage suit by the Plaintiff that the prior mortgage was satisfied partly by cash payment and partly by the realization of profits during the time that the mortgaged properties were in his possession. It was stated in prayer "ka" of the plaint that if after taking proper account the Court found that any sum was due to the Defendant No. 3, then on the Plaintiff's paying the same to the Defendant No. 3 the Court would be pleased to pass a decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act in favour of Plaintiff against the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (the mortgagors).

(1) I. L. R. 35 All. 111 (1912).

MOHIRUDDIN MONDAL v. SRIMATI INDRA KUMARI DASI.

In this suit the Defendant No. 1 filed a written statement, but when the case came on for decision, he failed to appear, and the suit was decreed ex parte. No order was, however, made on the aforesaid prayer of the Plaintiff. The mortgaged properties were sold and purchased by Plaintiff, and she then instituted the present suit for recovery of possession. The Defendant No. 1 pleaded that unless his prior mortgage was paid off, the Plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. The Courts below held that the ex parte decree in the previous mortgage suit No. 477 of 1902 operated as res judicata and the Defendant No. 1 was not entitled to raise the issue in the present suit.

Hence this appeal.

Babu Bepin Behary Ghosh (with Babu Bankim Chandra Mukherjee) for the Appellant cited Ajudhya v. Inayet (1).

Babu Hiralal Sanyal for the Respondent relied on Gopal v. Benarshi (2) and Mungal v. Girija (3).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an Appeal from a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge of Burdwan, dated the 10th November 1911, affirming the decision of the Munsif. The suit was brought by the Plaintiff to recover possession of certain pieces of land on the ground that the Plaintiff had become the owner thereof as the purchaser in certain execution proceedings that had taken place in the suit which was brought by her to enforce her own mortgage security. The Plaintiff was the second mortgagee. The present Appellant who was the Defendant No. 1 in the suit was a prior mortgagee and, as such prior mortgagee, he had brought a suit and had the property brought to sale and, in that sale by the Court, he himself had purchased the property. The first Defendant, however, failed to make the present Plaintiff a party to his suit and, therefore, the present Plaintiff was not bound by the decree for sale that was passed in the suit brought on the mortgage of the first Defendant. Subsequently, the present Plaintiff brought suit No. 477 of 1902 to enforce her own mortgage. In the plaint in that suit, the present Plaintiff alleged that the Defendant No. 1, who was the Defendant No. 3 in that suit, was or claimed to be a prior encumbrancer and that the Defendant No. 1 having been in possession of the mortgaged properties, the rents and profits thereof had satisfied his claim ; and accordingly the reliefs that the present Plaintiff asked for in that suit were (1) that if on proper accounts being taken by the Court, any sum would be found due by the Defendant No. 3, that is, the Defendant No. 1 in the present case, then on the Plaintiff's paying the same to the said Defendant No. 3, the Court would be pleased to pass a decree under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act in favour of the Plaintiff and against the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the sums claimed with interest, and (2) that if the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 (no mention was made of the present Appellant, the Defendant No. 3 in that suit) did not pay off the decretal amount within the time

(1) I. L. R. 35 All. 111 (1912).
(2) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 423 (1904).
(3) I. L. R. 8 Cal. 51 (P. C.) (1881).

MOHIRUDDIN MONDAL v. SRIMATI INDRA KUMARI DASI.

allowed by the Court, then the Court would be pleased to pass a decree declaring that they have no right to redeem the properties. As a matter of fact, no relief was asked for against the present Appellant except that an account should be taken of what was due to him, if anything, on the footing of his prior mortgage security. The present Appellant put in a written statement denying that there was anything due upon his mortgage, but made no appearance in the suit. The suit thereafter came on for trial before the learned Judge and the Court passed a decree ex parte. The decree runs in these terms:—"Ordered that the suit be decreed ex parte with costs and interest at bond rate up to two months hence from date, the time allowed to pay off the decree and that, in default, the mortgaged properties be sold. Now, as already stated, no relief was asked for in that suit of the Plaintiff against the Defendant No. 3, that is, the present Appellant, except that an account should be taken of what was due to him on the footing of his prior mortgage security and, although the present Appellant did not appear in that suit, he was entitled to assume that the Court would only pass a decree in accordance with the reliefs sought for. In my opinion, the Court in passing this decree never intended to say that the absence of the present Appellant from the trial caused the mortgage security of the Plaintiff to override the prior security which was held by the Appellant. That point seems to me to have been quite conclusively determined by the decision which has been handed up to us in Ajudhya Pandey v. Inayet Ulla (1). That case seems to me to be conclusive against the argument that has been addressed to us by the learned Vakil for the Respondent. Then the present Plaintiff pursuant to this decree brought the properties to sale and herself became the purchaser, and next she brought this suit for ejectment against the first mortgagee. The short answer is that the Plaintiff has not got the interest of the first mortgagee. The case that the learned Vakil for the Respondent cited to us [Gopal v. Benarshi (2)] is not an authority at all for the proposition that he stated. That was a case where a party knowing of his rights and being present before the Court did not put forward his claim under a prior mortgage. That is a very different case from a case where the Plaintiff setting up a case that one of the Defendants had a claim under a prior encumbrance says that the said Defendant by merely not appearing at the trial has lost the benefit of his prior encumbrance. I think, the contrary has been decided by the Allahabad High Court and that seems to me to be perfectly good law and good sense. The learned Judge never intended in the former suit that the Plaintiff's mortgage should be enforced except against the property that was comprised therein. That was the property subject to the first mortgage. Nobody has ever heard that the doctrine of merger applies so as to give the second mortgagee the benefit of the first mortgage simply by reason of the first mortgagee, in a suit to enforce his encumbrance, not having joined the second mortgagee whose existence perhaps he did not know of, as a party to the suit. The question in the present case is whether this is a case of res judicata. It is difficult to see what is the case of res judicata that has been decided. Nothing was decided in the former suit with reference to the present Appellant's prior encumbrance. That was left altogether untouched, and it was not within the scope of the suit for the Court to enforce a second encumbrance so as to override the prior encumbrance which happened to be held by the present Appellant who was not only the prior encumbrancer, but then also the owner of the equity of redemption. The mere fact that the prior owner of the equity of redemption was also the first mortgagee is obviously not sufficient to raise a case of res judicata. In my opinion, this case does not fall within sec. 11, C. P. C. The present appeal ought to be allowed and the case sent back to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. Costs of this appeal and of the two lower Courts will abide the result of the trial before the first Court.

(1) I. L. R. 35 All. 111 (1912).

(2) I. L. R. 31 Cal. 428 (1901).

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. There was no adjudication in the previous suit on the question that is now said to be res judicata. The Defendant No. 1 raised the question by his pleadings, as he was bound to do, but there was no decision upon it.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 1200 OF 1913.

	BROHMANAND NATH DEB SIRCAR, Petitioner,
MOOKERJEE, J.	Decree-holder,
BEECHCROFT, J.	v.
1914,	HEM CHANDRA
30, January.	MITRA and others, Opposite Party, Defendants.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 148A—Landlord and tenant, meaning of—Nature of suit under the section—Usufructuary mortgagee of a landlord—Sec. 158B—Co-sharer landlords, who are Usufructuary mortgagee of a portion from a co-sharer of a co-sharer landlord—Decree for rent obtained by such mortgagee how to be executed—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 34, r. 14, if applies to such a decree—Revisional jurisdiction of the High Court, circumstances warranting the exercise of.

The Petitioner was a usufructuary mortgagee from a co-sharer landlord who was interested in the property to the extent of one-fourth, the Opposite Parties being entitled to the remaining three-fourths share. The Petitioner as usufructuary mortgagee brought a suit for rent against the tenant under sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and joined the proprietors of the three-fourths share as also the mortgagor as parties Defendants. The co sharers did not enter appearance and the Plaintiff obtained a decree for rent and applied for execution under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, whereupon the co-sharers appeared and objected that the execution could not proceed under sec. 158-B. The objection was overruled by the Court of first instance, but the lower Appellate Court directed the first Court to hold the sale not under sub sec. (2) of sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure:

Held—That the term "landlord" means a person immediately under whom a tenant holds, and the term "tenant" is defined to mean a person who holds land under another person and is or, but for a special contract, would be liable to pay rent for that land to that person, and a usufructuary mortgagee is consequently a person immediately under whom a tenant holds and is in the position of a landlord and is entitled to sue for rent in his character as such.

That the co-sharer landlords are the entire body of persons who are entitled to collect rent, and a usufructuary mortgagee from one of the proprietors is in the position of a co-sharer landlord within the meaning of sec. 158B, sub-sec. (1), cl. (e) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

BROHMANAND NATH DEB SIRCAR v. HEM CHANDRA MITRA.

That the Plaintiff having sued for the recovery of what to his information was the whole arrear due, the suit was in essence a suit for rent due to all the co-sharers within the meaning of sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the suit as framed was within the scope of that section, and the decree should be executed under sec. 158B, sub sec. (1), cl. (e) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

That r. 14 of Or. 34 of the Civil Procedure Code had no application to the execution proceedings in the present case.

That the result of the decision of the District Judge was that the Court of first instance had to proceed to sell the tenure in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure which it had no jurisdiction to do and to refuse to sell the tenure in accordance with sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act which it had jurisdiction to do and the circumstance that this result followed from an erroneous interpretation of the scope and requirements of secs. 148A and 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act was clearly no bar to the exercise of the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court.

This was a Rule against a decision of H. P. Duval, Esq., District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 12th of July 1913, reversing that of Babu Thakurdas Banerjee, Munsif, Diamond Harbour, dated the 3rd of April 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Prokas Chandra Mazumdar for the Petitioner.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order by which the Court of appeal below has directed execution of a decree for rent to proceed, not under sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act as had been ordered by the Court of first instance, but under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure. The circumstances under which the order in question has been made may be briefly narrated. The Petitioner is a usufructuary mortgagee from a co-sharer landlord, who is interested in the property to the extent of one-fourth. The Opposite Parties are entitled to the remaining three-fourths share. The Petitioner as usufructuary mortgagee brought a suit for rent against the tenant and joined the proprietors of the three-fourths share as also the mortgagor as parties Defendants. He stated in the plaint that the entire rent payable to all the landlords was Rs. 42 annually, and that the rent payable in his share was Rs. 10-8. He further alleged that the co-sharers refused his invitation to join as co-Plaintiffs in the suit, and had declined to inform him whether any arrears of rent were due to them, and if so, how much. He consequently instituted the suit under sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and prayed that the co-sharers might be transferred to the category of co-Plaintiffs, if they so desired, and that in any event if they stated that rent was due to them, the Plaintiff would amend his claim and pay additional court-fees. The co-sharers did not enter appearance, and the Plaintiff obtained a decree for rent. He next applied for execution in accordance with sub-sec. (1) of sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Thereupon under sub-sec. (2), notice of the application for execution was given to the co-sharers. They appeared and contended that the suit had not been properly framed under sec. 148A, and that the execution could not proceed under sec. 158B. The objection was overruled by the Court of first instance. Upon appeal the District Judge has reversed that decision and has directed the Court of first instance to hold the sale not under sub-sec. (2) of sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but in accordance with the Code of Civil Procedure on the footing that the decree obtained by the Petitioner was a decree for money and was not capable of execution as a decree for rent under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The propriety of this order is now challenged before us, and we are invited to interfere in the exercise of our revisional jurisdiction, inasmuch as no second appeal lies in the present case. There is no question that the case falls within sec. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, because the matter arises between the parties to the suit, and the question raised obviously relates to the execution of the decree. But a second appeal is barred under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, because the amount claimed in the suit was less than Rs. 100 [Shama Charan v. Debendra Nath (1)]. Consequently if the order of the Court below is erroneous, the only course left open to the Petitioner to obtain relief is by way of an application under either sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure or sec. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act.

(1) 4 C. W. N. 269 (1900).

The order of the Court below has been sought to be supported on behalf of the Opposite Party on three grounds. It has been argued in the first place, that the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply, because the decree was made in a suit by a person other than the landlord. It is difficult to appreciate the force of this argument, but the contention appears to be that a usufructuary mortgagee is not in the position of a landlord; in other words, if the relationship of landlord and tenant exists between A and B, the usufructuary mortgagee of A is not in the position of a landlord in relation to B. In our opinion, this contention is wholly fallacious. The usufructuary mortgagee is entitled to receive the rent, as is clear from the definition of the expression "usufructuary mortgage," given in cl. (d) of sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. Reference has been made to cls. (3) and (4) of sec. 3 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but they are clearly of no assistance to the Opposite Party. The term "landlord" means a person immediately under whom a tenant holds, and the term "tenant" is defined to mean a person who holds land under another person, and is or, but for a special contract, would be liable to pay rent for that land to that person. The usufructuary mortgagee is consequently a person immediately under whom a tenant holds. But it has been argued that this view cannot be supported, because a usufructuary mortgagee is a transferee of a portion only of the interest vested in the mortgagor. This clearly does not affect the question. An intermediate lessee is entitled to collect rent from the tenant—rent which but for the lease would have been payable to his landlord. On the other hand, sec. 78 of the Land Registration Act clearly contemplates that a usu-fructuary mortgagee in possession is entitled to sue for rent in his character as landlord. The first contention, therefore, fails.

BROHMANAND NATH DEB SIRCAR v. HEM CHANDRA MITRA.

It has been argued in the second place, that a usufructuary mortgagee is not in the position of a co sharer landlord within the meaning of sec. 158B, sub-sec. (1), cl. (c) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, because he is the mortgagee from one of the proprietors, whereas the co sharers are the proprietors themselves. This argument is obviously fallacious. The co-sharer landlords are the entire body of persons who are entitled to collect rent. It is not essential that the interest of each should be of the same degree ; for instance, it is conceivable that a putnidar of one-half share in the zemindary and a dar putnidar of the other half share may be jointly entitled to collect rent from tenants in actual occupation, and when they are so entitled, they clearly constitute a body of co-sharer landlords. It has been contended further that sec. 158B has no application, because the suit as framed was not within the scope of sec. 148A. We have already described the nature of the suit, and it is clear from the decision in the case of Nanda Lal v. Kala Chand (2) that the Plaintiffs substantially complied with the requirements of sec. 148A. It has been argued, however, that the suit was not brought for the entire rent due to all the co-sharers. We have been invited to construe the expression "rent due" as equivalent to "rent payable under the contract of tenancy." The argument in substance is that to entitle a person to claim the benefit of sec. 148A he must include in the suit a claim, not for the rent actually in arrears, but the rent payable under the contract without the deduction of any amount that might have been actually paid to the landlord. This clearly is an entirely untenable contention. We may further add that it has not been suggested at any stage of present proceeding, nor was the suggestion made in the course of the original suit that at the time of the commencement of the litigation, there was an arrear of rent due to the co sharer landlords. The Plaintiff sued for the recovery of what to his information was the whole arrear due, and that was in essence a suit for rent due to all the co-sharers, within the meaning of sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The second contention consequently fails.

It has been argued in the third place that the execution proceedings are barred under r. 14 of Or. 34 of the Civil Procedure Code. This contention is based obviously on a misapprehension. R. 14 provides that where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage, and he may institute such suit notwithstanding anything contained in Or. 2, r. 2. This rule is inapplicable on three grounds. In the first place, the mortgagee has not obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the usufructuary mortgage. In the second place, he does not here seek to bring the mortgaged property to sale; the mortgagee seeks to bring to sale a tenancy subordinate to the interest of the mortgagor. In the third place, the decree has not been made for money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage. Consequently the suit is not barred under Or. 34, r. 14.

(2) 15 C. W. N. 820 (1910).

BROHMANAND NATH DEB SIRCAR v. HEM CHANDRA MITRA.

It is thus plain that the order of the District Judge cannot be supported on any of the grounds suggested. The only question for consideration is as to the competency of this Court to interfere with that order. On behalf of the Opposite Party, it has been suggested that the District Judge has acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction, as under the law an appeal did lie to him. He has, it is said, committed only an error of law, which, in the language of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Malkarjan v. Narhari (3) he had jurisdiction to commit. This is a plausible view of the case, but upon a closer examination of the true nature of the order of the District Judge, the real position appears to be this. The order of the District Judge replaces the order of the Court of first instance. That is, in substance, the effect of the exercise of appellate jurisdiction by the Court below; if it finally disposes of the case, it makes the order which should have been passed by the Court of first instance. The result of the decision of the District Judge, consequently, is that the Court of first instance has to proceed to sell the tenure in accordance with the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, which it has no jurisdiction to do, and to refuse to sell the tenure in accordance with sec. 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which it has jurisdiction to do. The circumstance that this result follows from an erroneous interpretation of the scope and requirements of secs. 148A and 158B of the Bengal Tenancy Act is clearly no bar to the exercise of our revisional powers: (Jugodanand v. Amritalal (4), Sheo Prosad v. Ramchunder (5).

The outstanding fact remains that if the original Court proceed to carry out the direction of the lower Appellate Court, as it is bound to do, it will exercise a jurisdiction, which it does not possess and will decline a jurisdiction which it does possess, and such proceeding would obviously be liable to be set aside—an aspect of the matter which was not suggested to the Court in Mathura v. Umesh (6). We are of opinion that this is plainly a case where it is competent to this Court to set aside the order of the Court below.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute, the order of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. This order will carry costs in all the Courts. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

REF. NO. 1 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
COXE, J.
1914,
21, April.

RANI ABHOYESWARI DEVI, Complainant,
v.
KISHORI MOHAN BANERJEE and ors., Accused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 200—Complaint by a purdanashin lady signed and presented by agent holding general power to present complaints—Absence of special power—Duty of Magistrate to satisfy himself if complaint really by person by whom it purports to be—Magistrate bound to examine complainant before issuing process—Complaint not presented in person, proper course for Magistrate on receipt of—Words "at once," effect of, in sec. 200—Sec. 198, compliance with the requirements of—Sec. 503, scope of—Examination of complainant on commission—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 500—Defamation.

A complaint was filed before the Chief Presidency Magistrate under sec. 500,

(3) I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).
(4) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 767, (783) (1895).
(5) I. L. R. 41 Cal. 323 (341), (1913).
(6) 1 C. W. N. 626 (1897).

RANI ABHOYESWARI DEVI v. KISHORI MOHAN BANERJEE.

I. P. C., purporting to be made by a purdanashin lady and signed by a person in whose favour there was a general power-of-attorney authorising the presentation of criminal complaints, but no power-of-attorney authorising the presentation of the specific complaint. The Chief Presidency Magistrate issued process against the accused and transferred the case to another Magistrate :

Held (on a reference under sec. 432, Cr. P. C.)—That the Chief Presidency Magistrate was wrong in issuing process against the accused. It is perfectly well settled that a process cannot be issued against an accused person either by the Magistrate first taking cognizance of an offence or by the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred under the proviso to sec. 200, Cr. P. C., unless and until the Magistrate issuing process has first examined the complainant. And this is more necessary in the case of a purdanashin lady than in other cases to enable the Magistrate to satisfy himself that the complaint is really her own action.

That the Magistrate should be very loth to take cognizance of any complaint which is not presented in person. The words "at once" in sec. 200 of the Code clearly indicate that ordinarily a complaint must be presented in person, and a complaint should not be accepted which is not signed by the complainant and is not preferred by a person duly authorised to prefer that specific complaint.

That whether the requirements of sec. 198, Cr. P. C., were satisfied in the present case depended upon whether or not the complaint was the complaint of the lady.

The High Court quashed the proceedings, giving liberty to the lady to file a fresh complaint and directed her examination, if fresh complaint was made by a commission issued to a Magistrate.

Held—That the terms of sec. 503, Cr. P. C., are very wide. They refer not only to an enquiry and a trial, but to any other proceeding. The section authorises the examination of any witness and the complainant is a witness.

This was a Reference made on the 25th March 1914 by the Fourth Presidency Magistrate (Mr. R. D. Chatterjee) (through the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta).

The facts will appear from the letter of reference of the Magistrate which is set out below :—

"'Under sec. 432, Cr. P. C., I beg to refer the following point of law to you for submission to the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court for decision. A case of Defamation (sec. 500, I. P. C.) was instituted in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on the 6th November 1913, on behalf of Rani Abhoyeswari Devi, Rani of Bijni, through her constituted attorney Bhuban Mohan Chatterjee, Asst. Superintendent, Bijni Raj, against Kishori Mohan Banerjee and others. The petition was signed by Bhuban Mohan Chatterjee on behalf of Rani Abhoyeswari Devi of Bijni and not signed by the Rani. No power-of-attorney has yet been filed in this matter. Mr. Keays took cognizance of the case and issued process. The case was in the file of Mr. Keays, whence it was transferred to the Central Court, Lall Bazar, by the order of the Hon'ble High Court. The case was transferred to my file by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Mr. Swinhoe, on the 16th March 1914, when, as the accused were not present, the case was adjourned to 24th March 1914. On the case being called up to-day 24th March 1914, the Defence

RANI ABHOYESWARI DEVI v. KISHORI MOHAN BANERJEE.

Counsel wanted de novo trial, and contended that as the Rani who is alleged to have been defamed did not lodge the complaint herself, but did so through one Bhuban Mohan Chatterjee, who was represented in the petition as her constituted agent, the complaint could not be said to have been made by the party aggrieved, and as such under sec. 198, Cr. P. C., the case cannot go on. As this point is not free from difficulty, I submit the record of the case to you for laying before the Hon'ble Judges of the High Court for the decision on the following point:—Whether the Rani can institute the case of defamation through her agent Bhuban Mohan Chatterjee and whether by doing so the requirements of sec. 198, Cr. P. C., have been met with.'

"The whole record of the case including the petition of complaint is submitted for their Lordship's decision. The case has been adjourned sine die pending their Lordships' order on the point."

Mr. J. N. Roy and Babu Monmatha Nath Mukerjee for the Complainant.

Mr. H. N. Sen and Babu Tarakeswar Pal Chaudhury for the Accused.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

COXE, J.—This proceeding arises out of a complaint purporting to be made on the part of Rani Abhoyeswari Devi against the Petitioners accusing them of committing defamation. The complaint is not signed by the Rani, but by one Bhuban Mohan Chatterjee on behalf of the Rani. We are informed that there is no power-of-attorney on the record and that there is no power-of-attorney authorising the presentation of this specific complaint, although there is a general power-of-attorney authorising the presentation of criminal complaints. The document was presented to the Chief Presidency Magistrate, who issued process against the accused; and thereafter the case was transferred. The Magistrate, to whom it has ultimately come, has referred for our decision the following point:—"Whether the Rani can institute the case of defamation through her agent Bhuban Mohan Chatterjee and whether by doing so the requirements of sec. 198, Cr. P. C., have been met with."

If the Rani makes a complaint to a Magistrate, the Magistrate is entitled to take coginizance of it. But before he takes cognizance, he must be satisfied that it is her complaint. It is comparatively unimportant by what means the complaint reaches the Magistrate, if really it is her own complaint.

But I hold that the magistrate should be very loth to take cognizance of any complaint which is not presented in person. The words "at once" in sec. 200 of the Code clearly indicate that ordinarily a complaint must be presented in person. And I do not think that a complaint should ever be accepted which is not signed by the Complainant and is not preferred by a person duly authorised to prefer that specific complaint.

It is perfectly clear to me that the Magistrate in the Court below had no right to issue process against the accused persons in this case. It has been argued that when a case is transferred under sec. 192, Cr. P. C., before the Complainant has been examined, process can issue without the examination of the Complainant. That argument really has no application to the present case, because as a matter of fact process had been issued before the case was transferred. But in any case it is perfectly well settled that a process cannot be issued against an accused person, either by the Magistrate first taking cognizance of an offence, or by the Magistrate to whom the case is transferred, under the proviso to sec. 200, Cr. P. C., unless and until the Magistrate issuing process has first examined the Complainant, and this is perhaps more necessary in the case of a purdanashin lady than in other cases to enable the Magistrate to satisfy himself that the complaint is really her own action. In the present case, if the complaint is ill-founded, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to fix the Rani with any responsibility for the proceeding.

RANI ABHOYESWARI DEVI v. KISHORI MOHAN BANERJEE.

I see no reason, however, why the Complainant should not be examined under sec. 503, Cr. P. C. The terms of that section are very wide. They refer not only to an enquiry and a trial, but to any other proceeding. The section authorises the examination of any witness, and a Complainant is certainly, in my opinion, a witness. There is, indeed less objection to the first examination of a Complainant than to the examination of a witness under this section, inasmuch as in the examination of a Complainant, before a process is issued, the accused is not entitled to be present or to cross-examine.

It seems to me, therefore, that the proper order to pass in this case is to say that if the complaint on the record is the complaint of the Rani, a point in which we have no materials for a decision, the requirements of sec. 198 have been satisfied. But the Magistrate was wrong in issuing process against the accused persons. In these circumstances, the best course to adopt is to quash the whole proceedings, giving liberty to the Rani to make such further complaint as she may be advised. If such complaint is made, the examination of the Complainant under sec. 200, Chap. XVI, of the Code may be made by a commission which should be directed to a Magistrate.

SHARFUDDIN, J.—I agree.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

REF. 12 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1914,
6, February.

THE EMPEROR
v.
MUKUND SAHU, Accused, Petitioner.

Bengal Excise Act [V. (B. C.) of 1909], sec. 19, cl (4)—Government Notification—Possession of cocaine.

A notification issued by Government under sec. 19, cl. (4) of the Excise Act has the force of law, and under the notification, dated the 20th November 1911, it is an offence for any person other than those specified to have any cocaine at all, except with a medical man's prescription and then only 5 grains. In all cases, the burden of proof to show under what authority he obtained cocaine lies on the accused.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., dated the 6th January 1914, by R. Sheepshanks, Esq., Sessions Judge of Muzaffarpur, recommending that additional evidence might be directed to be taken under sec. 428, Cr. P. C., in the case in which the Petitioner was convicted by Babu Girindra Chandra Banerji, Deputy Magistrate of Muzaffarpur, by his order, dated the 16th September 1913, under sec. 46, Act V of 1909, of possessing cocaine, an exciseable article, in contravention of the Act and of the Board's Notification No. 5978B, dated the 27th November 1909, read with sec. 19 of the Act and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 6 weeks.

The facts will appear from the Sessions Judge's letter of reference set out below:

"On the morning of the 18th July 1913, on receipt of certain information, Excise

THE EMPEROR v. MUKUND SAHU.

Sub-Inspector Mohabir Prosad with his jamadar and peon searched the shop of accused in his presence and in that of search witnesses, and in a narrow room a large wooden box was found. The box was brought out of the room and in it were found (1) a small box and (2) a cylindrical tin box. In the small box were found one one-dram glass phial full of a white powder and two blue labels bearing on them the printed word Cocaine. In the cylindrical tin box were found 31 small paper packets of a similar white powder, containing about 2 grains each. The phial and packets were forwarded to the Chemical Examiner, whose report runs—'Cocaine Hydrochlorate has been detected in the contents of the glass phial and of the 31 paper packets.'

"The accused pleaded not guilty stating that the phial and packets were not found in his shop. He put in a petition praying that a reference might be made to the Chemical Examiner in order that the quantity of cocaine found in the phial and packets might be ascertained, but this was rejected.

"The trying Magistrate on the 16th September 1913 found the accused guilty under sec. 46, Act V of 1909, of possessing cocaine in contravention of the Act and sentenced him to 6 weeks' rigorous imprisonment, the quantity of cocaine found being confiscated and sent to the Collector.

"Applicant has been convicted under sec. 46 of the Excise Act of 1909 of possessing more than 20 grains of cocaine without a license, pass or permit. The Magistrate states in his judgment that Chemical Examiner's report shows that the powders in the one-dram phial and also in packets are cocaine. This is incorrect. The report is as follows:—'Cocaine Hydrochlorate has been detected in the contents. . . . .' Nothing is said as to the quantity. The offence charged has not, therefore, been established, and the missing link in the evidence should now be supplied. It has been argued in support of the motion, that the facts found do not constitute such exclusive possession on the part of the Applicant as is necessary for conviction, and that the present recommendation should be that the conviction and sentence may be set aside. I cannot accept this view. The articles in question were found in a box in a closed room in Applicant's house. Queen-Empress v. Sangam Lal (1), which has been cited in support of the motion, is in reality against Applicant. The ground on which it is urged that Applicant's possession should be held not to be established is that some labourers were working on the thatch of his house, and may possibly have had access to the box. Whether they had such access or whether the possession of Applicant is established is a question of fact on which the Magistrate has found against Applicant.

"In these circumstances, I have the honour to recommend that additional evidence be directed to be taken under sec. 428, Cr. P. C., in order that the amount of cocaine found in possession of the accused may be ascertained."

Babus Soroshi Charan Mitra and Heramba Chandra Guha for the Accused.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We have only to point out to the learned District Judge that his attention does not appear to have been called to the Government Notification of November 20th, 1911, which will be found in Part I

(1) I. L. R. 15 All. 129 (1893).

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, JULY 13, 1914. [No. 35.

Contents.

NOTES.

City Civil Court.

We have shown in our last issue that the cost of litigation on the Original Side of the High Court, if the client wishes to keep himself within bounds, is not abnormally high. Further, heavy cases on the Original Side are much more quickly disposed of than in the Mofussil Courts. The Judges of the High Court do not take up these cases by instalments as in the Mofussil, but hear them through. Besides, they keep both counsel and witnesses well in hand and as a matter of fact counsel on the Original Side through their training and traditions do not as a rule beat about the bush in the examination of witnesses or in stating their facts or the law. The London Times in its recent article truly diagnosed that the real weakness of untrained judges lay in the fact that through their want of practical familiarity with the rules of evidence and of procedure, they record everything first and try to comprehend the case or law afterwards. Before such judges, members of the Bar cannot be blamed for having everything recorded, lest the judge should lose sight of fundamental points. But before a judge who has practised at the Bar for a good many years, counsel, whatever may be his standing, knows from the beginning how far he will be allowed to go and would seldom transgress the line.

Thus cases which are disposed of on the Original Side in two or three days might take weeks in the Mofussil to decide. So even if the hearings in contentious cases be costly, the quick disposal and greater finality of the judgments, which are seldom appealed against, often compensate for the heavier costs. Since there can be no question that the quality of justice dispensed on the Original Side is of much superior order, if the real grievance is about costs, the remedy can be secured by approaching the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and the learned Judges rather than the Local Government for the disruption of the High Court. If the public are really aggrieved about heavy costs, let them make a representation to the High Court, setting out facts and figures and make practical suggestions for fixing a definite scale of costs for suits up to Rs. 5,000 or even of higher value on an ascending scale. If they are backed up by members of the legal profession, that would strengthen the hands of the Judges.

We do not think that the Local Government will at all be disposed to interfere with the jurisdiction of the High Court in any shape or form without consultation with or rather except at the instance of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice and the learned Judges. His Excellency Lord Carmichael in his very first speech on the assumption of his office as Governor of this Presidency assured the public that he would in no way interfere with the High Court of Calcutta which they have held so much and so long in high regard. Is it reasonable to expect that His Excellency at the instance of an individual member of his Legislative Council will go back upon his words and give the go by to his solemn declaration of policy? The break up of the Original Side on the top of the proposed partition of the High Court will mean the break of this historic tribunal and its weakening as a whole and in all its parts.

While we are confident that the Local Government will decline to interfere with the jurisdiction of the High Court in any of its Divisions, we seriously doubt the wisdom or propriety of the members of the legal profession who instead of approaching the High Court itself, which is an autonomous body, so far as judicial administration is concerned, would approach the Local Government for reliefs either in respect of costs or restrictions which they may regard as unreasonable. It is a well-known fact that the greatest harmony prevails between the Local Government and the High Court, because each is autonomous in its own sphere and we are sure that any attempt to throw any bone of contention between the two will be quietly put aside by the honoured and universally respected heads of each and their Honourable colleagues. We see therefore no sense in moving a resolution in the Local Legislative Council on a subject which in its present form is not even presentable before a debating society.

Costs in Mortgage Suits on the Original Side.

In Sarat Chandra Chaudhuri v. Nahapiet (37 Cal. at p. 913), it was ordered that the first mortgagee was entitled to costs on the Original Side of the High Court on scale No. 2 as against the mortgagor who did not appear, although costs are as a rule on scale No. 1. Here the mortgagee had joined the puisne mortgagee, and the fight was between the two mortgagees, and the mortgagor did not at all appear. It was hard on him to be mulcted in costs as in a defended suit and it is presumably because of this that the Judges sitting on the Original Side have since been taking a more reasonable view in such cases and have been allowing costs on scale No. 1 against such mortgagors. This is, however, not yet generally known to the profession. We may, therefore, state it for their information that in a suit by a mortgagee against the non-contesting mortgagor and in which the puisne mortgagee is made a defendant and appears to prove his case, the uniform practice now on the Original Side is to allow the mortgagee costs as for an undefended suit on scale No. 1 only.

Judgment by consent in Copyright and Patent cases if to be in Court or Chambers—Costs.

The question whether the Plaintiff in a copyright case can compel a Defendant to come before the Court and have a judgment entered against him in open Court and at his expense, when the latter admits infringement and is willing to pay penalty and costs conditionally upon the matter being mentioned in Chambers for being disposed of, came up in the recent case of Smith & Jones Ld. v. Service, Reeve, & Co. before Mr. Justice Sargant in the King's Bench Division on the 16th of June last. In this case, the Plaintiffs sued Defendant amongst other things for infringement of their copyright in design, for injunction restraining future infringement, delivery of articles made in infringement of design, statutory penalty, damages, account of profits and costs. The Defendants entered appearance, pleaded that they had acted innocently, and offered to consent to the injunction asked for, to pay costs up to and including judgment, to pay a fixed amount into Court as penalty with their defence admitting liability.

But subsequent to this in the course of correspondence while the Plaintiffs' solicitor insisted that the judgment must be taken in open Court, the Defendant's solicitor urged that the application should be made by summons in Chambers, as that was less expensive and that if the application was made by motion in Court, he would not be responsible for more costs than for a Chamber application. The Plaintiffs' solicitor, however, made the application by motion in Court and Plaintiffs' counsel urged that matter of this kind should be dealt with in open Court so that it may serve as a warning to others against committing infringement. Counsel for Defendant cited from Annual Practice a passage at p. 536 that if the Defendant consents to the order being made in Chambers and if the Plaintiff moves in Court, he will be allowed costs only of summons in Chambers. Mr. Justice Sargant held, however, that judgments in cases of infringement of copyright and patent should be entered in open Court, and following Mr. Justice Eady's judgment (18 R. Pat. Ca. 276 and 26 R. Pat. Ca. 157) awarded costs of the motion against Defendants.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Banerjee.

With regard to Dr. Sarat Chandra Banerjee who has been appointed President of the Judicial Tribunal of the Calcutta Improvement Trust, we are informed that it is not a fact that he has no experience of the original Courts. As a matter of fact he joined the Alipur Bar as a pleader and practised there for several years in Courts of first instance, and during that time he enjoyed a fairly good practice. It is for improving his prospects in life that he subsequently became enrolled as a Vakil and joined the High Court.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CRIMINAL.)

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 423, 439.

K. BALI REDDI, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 119.

The accused were charged under secs. 148, 302, I. P. C. The Sessions Judge found the accused not guilty of those offences, but guilty under secs. 147, 304, I. P. C. The accused appealed against their conviction and the High Court as a Court of Revision called upon the accused to show cause why they should not be convicted of murder.

Held—That sec. 423 expressly empowered an Appellate Court to alter the finding. The prohibition in sub-sec. (4) of sec. 439 which enacts that "nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise a High Court to convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction" refers to a case where the trial has ended in a complete acquittal, not to a case where the trial has ended in a conviction, but the Court has wrongly applied the law and held that the conviction should be under some section of the Code other than the section properly applicable.

Re S. VIGIARAGHAVALU NAIDU, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 156.
Suicide by accused bailed out—Liability of surety.

When an accused commits suicide, the sureties are not liable for the default of his appearance.

Review.

THE PROVINCIAL SMALL CAUSE COURTS ACT. By Kedar Nath Chaudhuri of the Provincial Civil Service, Judicial Branch, Bengal. First Edition. Published by the Author. 1914.

The above is an annotated edition of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), as amended up to date, containing the rulings of the different High Courts noted under the appropriate sections. The author has endeavoured to present the law on the subject in a clear and comprehensive form, a task in which his own experience as a Judge in the administration of this branch of the law has undoubtedly been of great assistance to him. The references to connected legislative enactments with notes and comments where necessary as also the rules made by the Calcutta High Court under the Act as well as the Amending Act VI of 1914 with the statement of objects and reasons, which have been incorporated in this work, will very considerably enhance its usefulness. We have no doubt that legal practitioners in Mofussil Small Cause Courts will find the book useful.

Notes of Cases.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., and N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2663 OF 1913. GURUPADA MUKERJEE, Plaintiff, Appellant v. GANGADHAR BANERJEE, Defendant, Respondent. 18th June 1914.

Suit for declaration that auction purchase made by Defendant is benami on behalf of the Plaintiff, whether maintainable—Sec. 66, C. P. C.

The facts out of which this appeal arose are shortly as follows. In execution of a rent-decree the lands belonging to the Plaintiff's wife and sister-in-law were sold on 16th June 1910, and the Defendant auction-purchased them. The Plaintiff's case is that he was in intimate terms with the Defendant and that he gave him money to purchase the disputed property on his behalf, but that the Defendant purchased it in his own name fraudulently and that he took the sale certificate and got possession and that he gave all expenses for getting the sale certificate and obtaining possession of that property and that subsequently disputes having arisen between them, the Defendant dispossessed him. The Plaintiff therefore brought the suit for recovery of possession on establishment of his auction-purchased lakhiraj title thereto. The Defendant alleged that he purchased the property with his own money and that he paid all expenses for getting the sale certificate and for obtaining possession of the disputed property and that the suit is not maintainable under sec. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code. The first Court held that the purchase was made with the Plaintiff's money and so gave him a decree. On appeal to the District Judge, he also agreed with the finding that it was with the Plaintiff's money that the property was purchased; but he found that there was nothing fraudulent in the conduct of the Defendant and that the Plaintiff purchased the property in the benami of the Defendant and that the Defendant had not fraudulently or without the Plaintiff's consent got his name inserted in the certificate, and so he held that the suit was not maintainable under sec. 66 of C. P. C.

The Plaintiff preferred a second appeal, and it was contended that such a suit is maintainable in law and that equity being in favour of the Plaintiff he ought to get a decree.

Held:—That the suit is not maintainable in law under sec. 66, C. P. C.

Babu Sarat Chandra Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Atul Krishna Ray for the Respondent.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER, AND RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3182 OF 1912. SM. RAJANIBALA DASI, Appellant v. BHAJAHARI KOLEY AND ANOTHER, Respondents. Heard 22nd May, Judgment 28th May, 1914.

Admissibility in evidence—Road-cess return—Cess Act [IX of 1880 (B. C.)], sec. 95—Authorised agent—Certificated guardian.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff as heir of her deceased husband Sarat Chandra Ghosh to recover against the Defendant No. 1 an eight annas share of the rent for certain holdings. The Defendant No. 2 was the uncle of the late husband of the Plaintiff and owned the other eight annas share in the holding. He was a formal Defendant and no relief was asked against him.

The only point argued in the second appeal was whether the lower Appellate Court rightly rejected certain road-cess returns which had been given in evidence by the Plaintiff in the Court of first instance.

The road-cess returns in question were filed by the Defendant No. 2 during the minority of the late husband of the Plaintiff as his certificated guardian.

It was argued that as the returns in question were not signed by Sarat Chandra owing to his minority and as the Defendant No. 2 as his certificated guardian was not his authorised agent, the returns would not be evidence against him within sec. 95 of the Cess Act, 1880, nor, for the same reason, would that section make them inadmissible in favour of Sarat.

Held, that the returns could not be used as evidence in favour of the Plaintiff.

The words as to the return bearing the signature and address of the person or his authorised agent in sec. 95 of the Cess Act, are directory.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh for the Appellant.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghose for the Respondent.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION—Before FLETCHER and RICHARDSON, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 449 OF 1914. LAKHI NARAN GANGULY, Judgment-debtor, Petitioner v. FELUMANI DASI AND ORS., Decree-holders, Opposite Party. 29th June 1914.

Execution of money-decree—Limitation—No form for certifying payments under Or. XXI, r. 2, C. P. C.—No time fixed for decree-holders to certify payments.

This application for revision arose out of an application for execution of a decree which, according to the judgment-debtor, was barred by limitation. The decree under execution was passed on 5th April 1909. The application for execution was made on 19th December 1913. The decree-holder's case was that there had been three payments made by the judgment-debtor, all endorsed on the back of the decree by the judgment-debtor himself. The date of the earliest payment was 6th March 1911, that of the second was 18th March 1912, and that of the third was 21st February 1913. The judgment-debtor contended that those endorsements were not genuine. He further contended that the payments not having been certified in Court, they could not be recognised by the executing Court. The lower Court held that the endorsements were genuine, and that as there was no time fixed for decree-holders to certify payments, the second contention also of the judgment-debtor failed. The present rule was obtained by the judgment-debtor.

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh (Jr.) for the opposite party showed cause and submitted that there was no time fixed for the decree-holders to certify payments. No form is prescribed for such certifying. No doubt, Or. XXI, r. 2, C. P. C., has omitted the words "as payment or adjustment of the decree" after the words "recognised" from sec. 258 of the old Civil Procedure Code, but that would not help the judgment-debtor in any way. Refers to the judgment of Farran, C. J., in 21 Bom. 122. The decree-holders have certified the payments in question.

[FLETCHER, J.—Have they done so?]

Yes, in their application for execution.

Babu Kshitis Chandra Chakrabarti for the Petitioner submitted that the case in 21 Bom. 122 did not apply to the present case, because it was decided under the old Civil Procedure Code. The new Civil Procedure Code had introduced a considerable change by omitting the words "as payment or adjustment of the decree" after the word "recognised." Refers to Or. XXI, r. 2, sub-rule (3), C. P. C. Payment or adjustment of a decree, which is not duly certified, cannot be recognised by the Court for any purpose whatever.

[FLETCHER, J.—What is the meaning of certification?]

To certify a payment is to record the payment in the Register of Civil Suits. In the present case, it having not been so recorded, the payments were not certified.

[FLETCHER, J.—The decree-holders have certified payments in their application for execution.]

I submit that the Court ought to certify payments.

[RICHARDSON, J.—It has been so done in the judgment of the lower Court.]

The decree-holders ought to file a separate petition for having the payments certified. They cannot do it now after the decree has been barred by limitation.

[FLETCHER, J.—Not necessarily.]

The case of Katubulla Sarkar v. Durga Charan Rudra, reported in 16 C. W. N. at p. 396, clearly lays down that the adjustment or payment of a decree which is not certified cannot be recognised by the Court for any purpose whatever, e. g., for extending the period of limitation.

[FLETCHER, J.—No. It does not lay down how to certify payments.]

I submit that the payment not having been recorded in the Register of civil suits, the payments cannot be recognised by the executing Court for the purpose of limitation.

Held—Payment of decree can be certified by the decree-holder at any time after payment. The period of limitation is fixed for the judgment-debtor only. There is no form by which the payments can be certified. The decree-holders can certify payments by stating the same in their application for execution.

Rule discharged.

THE EMPEROR v. MUKUND SAHU.

of the Calcutta Gazette of November 22nd, 1911, at pages 1586 and 1587. In a case decided by us last year on reference made by the Fifth Presidency Magistrate as to whether the possession of 20 grains of cocaine can be allowed with impunity, the judgment was as follows :—" There can be no doubt as to the answer. We were not referred to the Government Notification of November 20th, and we were not aware of its existence. Under the powers conferred by sec. 19, cl. (4), the Notification has the force of law, and it is an offence for any person other than those specified to have any cocaine at all except with a medical man's prescription and then only 5 grains. In all cases, the burden of proof to show under what authority he obtained cocaine lies on the accused." The learned Judge will, therefore, see that this reference has been made under a misapprehension ; and as we do not feel inclined to interfere in any way with the sentence, the papers must be returned.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard, 23, April.
Judgment, 7, May.

RAI DWARKA NATH SARKAR BAHADUR and anr., Appellants,
v.
HAJI MAHOMED AKBAR and others, Respondents.

Partnership accounts—Duty of each partner to discover all documents—Arbitration, reference of dispute with customer to, by one partner—Others, if bound—Question if one of law—Agreement to refer not originally binding, becoming binding by acquiescence or acceptance of benefit—Question if should be allowed to be taken for the first time on appeal—Partner charged with entering into agreement to refer negligently and improperly—Measure of damages—Onus of proof.

For the purpose of working out a partnership decree, each party to the action is bound to produce and discover all documents in his possession relating to the partnership, and an application by the Plaintiff for discovery of documents in the possession of a Defendant in such an action ought not to have been refused :

Held—That the decision of the High Court in so far as it was of opinion that the accounts taken by the Commissioner (and affirmed by the trying Court) were not properly taken or supported by evidence and must be investigated afresh was correct.

A sum of money, paid by a customer as the result of a reference to arbitration in which the legal personal representatives of a deceased partner were no parties, having been brought into the partnership accounts, the latter who did not dispute the item in the first Court for the first time on appeal contended that not being parties to the reference they were not bound by it :

Held—That the question whether the legal personal representatives of the deceased partner were bound by the agreement to refer and by the award was not a simple question of law to be decided without reference to the facts of the case or any evidence which might have been available if it had been raised at the proper time, and the contention should have been rejected as having been put forward at too late a stage.

An agreement to refer not originally binding might become binding later on by the acquiescence of the party or his acceptance of benefits thereunder.

Held further—That if the legal personal representatives of the deceased partner were not bound by the award, they would not be entitled to relief on the footing that it was binding, but had been negligibly and improperly entered into.

RAI DWARKA NATH SARKAR BAHADUR v. HAJI MAHOMED AKBAR.

That if relief could be given on this footing, the difference between the amount originally claimed against the customer and the amount paid by him under the award would not necessarily be the measure of damages; nor could the onus of proving that it was any less sum be thrown on the person accused of negligent and improper conduct.

HAJI MAHAMAD AKBAR v. DWARKA NATH SARKAR (1) reversed in part.

This was an Appeal from a judgment and decree of the Calcutta High Court passed by Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ., on 21st March 1910, allowing an appeal preferred against the decree passed on 24th September 1907 by Mr. Promotho Nath Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge of Nadia.

The facts which are material for the present appeal sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment and the judgment of the High Court which is reported in 14 C. W. N., 1106. The High Court inter alia held that an award was not binding upon the Plaintiff on the ground that the surviving partners had no authority to refer the matter to arbitration specially after the commencement of a suit for dissolution of partnership.

The material portion of the judgment of the High Court was as follows:—

"It appears, however, that a large sum of money was due from the Secretary of State on account of work done. The surviving partners submitted their bill to which exception was apparently taken; the result was that Sircar alone entered into an agreement with the Secretary of State to refer the matter to arbitration. This was done on the 27th November 1905, that is, more than 6 months after the institution of the present suit by the representatives of Rohim Bux against Sircar and the other surviving partners; the arbitrator made his award on the 28th April 1906, by which it was held that Rs. 77,788 was due on the bill which had been presented for Rs. 1,27,124. This implied a loss of nearly Rs. 50,000 to the firm. The Commissioner and the Subordinate Judge have both treated the award as binding upon the Plaintiffs and conclusive against them. The Plaintiffs challenge this position on the ground that the surviving partners had no authority to refer the matter to arbitration, specially after a suit had been commenced for the dissolution of the partnership. In our opinion, this contention is well-founded and must prevail.

"It is well-settled that it is incompetent to one of the members of a partnership, to bind the firm by a submission to arbitration. . . . .

"We must hold, therefore, that the reference to arbitration by the Sircar Defendant is not binding upon the Plaintiffs, and this conclusion is strengthened by two circumstances; in the first place, as already pointed out, the reference was made after the commencement of the present suit and with full notice of the claim of the Plaintiffs; in the second place, the partnership contract between the parties expressly provided that no partner should, without the consent of the other partners, release or compound any debt owing to or claimed by the firm, and if any partner does so, he should, if required by the other partners, make good to the firm the full amount of such debt or claim. Besides, if there was any urgency, and speedy settlement of the claim against the Secretary of State was needed, the Defendants might have got a Receiver appointed, who might have wound up the business under the directions of the Court. Under such circumstances, the conduct of the Sircar Respondent was wholly unjustifiable. The result therefore is that the award is not binding upon the Plaintiffs. It is open, however, to the surviving partners to show, if they can, that what was paid by the Secretary of State on the basis of the award, was all that was legitimately recoverable from him; in other words, that the claim which had been originally put forward and embodied in the bill submitted, was grossly exaggerated. If this is proved, the Defendants would not be liable for damage on account of the reference to arbitration ; but if they fail to establish this position, they must be held liable for the loss which has been caused by the reference to arbitration. The burden is consequently cast upon them of explaining fully the details of the claim against the Secretary of State ; that is, the grounds on which the claim was advanced at the original figure, and how a reduction could justly be made. This may involve a protracted investigation, but for this the Defendants are entirely to blame, and as they put forward the claim against the Secretary of State, they may legitimately be presumed to have in their possession materials upon which their claim was based."

(1) 14 C. W. N. 1106 (1910).

RAI DWARKA NATH SARKAR BAHADUR v. HAJI MAHOMED AKBAR.

The Defendants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The appeal was heard ex parte.

Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Appellants submitted that the High Court ought not to have allowed the Plaintiff to question the submission to arbitration for the first time at the hearing of the appeal. It was a mixed question of law and fact, and could not be properly decided without evidence. The award was binding. Further, the findings of the Commissioner were rightly affirmed by the Subordinate Judge and ought not to have been set aside by the High Court.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—This was a partnership action instituted by the legal personal representatives of a deceased partner against the surviving partners. By the decree, dated 31st May 1906, as varied by the order of the High Court, dated 26th March 1907, it was directed that a Commissioner be appointed for the purpose of taking the accounts therein referred to, being the usual partnership accounts. The Commissioner made his report on the 14th August 1907 and various objections to it were filed. On the 24th September 1907, the Subordinate Judge overruled these objections and confirmed and gave relief on the footing of this report. The order of the Subordinate Judge was appealed. On such appeal two points were decided by the High Court. In the first place, such Court decided that the report of the Commissioner was unsatisfactory and that the accounts as taken by him were not properly taken or supported by proper evidence and must be investigated afresh. In this respect, after careful consideration, their Lordships see no reason to differ from the High Court. Without going into detail, it will suffice to say that the accounts were taken without production or discovery of the partnership books and documents. For the purpose of working out a partnership decree, each party to the action is bound to produce and discover all documents in his possession relating to the partnership, and an application by the Plaintiff in the action for discovery of the documents in the possession of the present Appellants appears to have been refused.

The second point decided by the High Court stands on a different footing. It appears that the partnership firm had in 1903 entered into a contract with the Secretary of State for India to construct a bridge. The bridge was completed in due course, but a dispute arose between the firm and the Secretary of State as to the amount payable to the firm under the contract. The surviving partners, or one of them, agreed with the Secretary of State that this dispute should be referred to the arbitrament of a Mr. Sanders. The legal personal representatives of the deceased partner were not parties to the reference. The arbitration resulted in the award of a certain sum as payable to the firm, and this sum has been paid and brought into the partnership accounts. On the appeal the legal personal representatives of the deceased partner put forward for the first time a contention that they were not bound by the agreement of reference or the award. The High Court upheld this contention. In their Lordships' opinion the High Court ought to have rejected the contention as having been put forward at too late a stage in the proceedings. The question whether the legal personal representatives were bound by the agreement and award was not a simple question of law, to be decided without reference to the facts of the case, or any evidence which might have been available. The original contract with the Secretary of State is not in evidence, and it is possible that it contained a submission binding on the legal personal representative of the deceased partner. Even if it did not, and the agreement to refer was not originally binding on such legal personal representatives, it may have become binding on them by their acquiescence therein, or their acceptance of benefits thereunder. The point not having been raised prior to the hearing of the appeal there has been no opportunity of ascertaining the relevant facts. Further, assuming that the agreement to refer was not binding on the legal personal representatives, it could hardly follow that they were entitled to relief on the footing that it was binding, but had been negligibly and improperly entered into. And lastly, if relief could be given on this footing, why should the measure of damages be the difference between the amount originally claimed against the Secretary of State and the amount payable under the award, and why should the onus of proving that it was any less sum be thrown on the persons accused of negligent and improper conduct? In their Lordships' opinion the decision of the High Court in these respects was erroneous.

Under the circumstances their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to discharge the order appealed from, and remit the case to the High Court with directions that the Commissioner's Report and the order of the Subordinate Judge confi ming the same be discharged, and the case sent back to the Subordinate Judge in order that the accounts may be taken on the basis of the order of 31st May 1906, as varied by the order of the 26th March 1907, and on the footing that every party is bound to account to the best of his ability and to give full discovery of all documents in his possession relating to the matters in dispute, the costs of the appeal to the High Court being made costs in the action, and the Appellants being entitled to their costs of this appeal.

RAI DWARKA NATH SARKAR BAHADUR v. HAJI MAHOMED AKBAR.

Solicitor: Edward Dalgado for the Appellant.

B. D. Appeal allowed in part.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
Mr. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard, 1, May.
Judgment, 26, May.

BHAIAJI THAKUR, since deceased (now represented by Jalandhar Thakur and anr., Appellants,
v.
JHARULA DAS, Respondent.

Limitation Act (XV of 1877), Sch. II, Art. 124—Shebait's right to take a share of surplus income from offerings—Hindu widow succeeding to shebaitship—Sale of right to take surplus offerings by creditor of widow in execution and purchase by himself—Suit by widow to set aside decree and sale as fraudulent—Dismissal of suit as barred under sec. 244, Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882) if legal—Suit by reversioner for declaration of his right to surplus income—Limitation—Appropriation of income if amounts to dispossession of office, or is act of ordinary trespass only—Res judicata.

One of several co-shebaits of a temple who was entitled to receive a 3½ as. share of the daily surplus income from the offerings to the temple having died, his widow succeeded to the shebaitship. A creditor of the widow, G, obtained a decree against her and caused the 3½ as. share of the surplus daily offerings to be put up for sale, and himself purchased it, and from 1892 onwards went on appropriating the same. The widow's suit to set aside the sale on the ground that both the decree and the sale were fraudulent was dismissed in the view that her remedy was by application under sec. 244 of Act XIV of 1882 and not by a suit. The widow died in 1900, and the Plaintiff, her husband's reversionary heir, brought this suit in 1910 for a declaration that he was entitled to receive the said 3½ as. share of the surplus income. The office of the shebait was a hereditary one which could not be held by any one who was not a Brahmin Panda, and the purchaser was not a Brahmin Panda but a man of inferior caste who was not competent to hold the shebait's office or to provide for the performance of the duties of that office:

Held—That the appropriation from time to time by the purchaser of the income derivable from the 3½ as. share did not deprive G or the Plaintiff of the possession of the office of the shebait, although that income was receivable by them in right of the shebaitship, and Art. 124 of the Limitation Act had no application to the case.

By adversely taking and appropriating to his own use a share of the surplus daily income from the offerings, the purchaser acquired no title and no right to a share of that income. On each occasion upon which he appropriated the share of the surplus income, he committed a fresh actionable wrong in respect of which a suit could be brought against the shebait.

The right to the office of the shebait did not arise from or depend upon the receipt of a share of the surplus daily income from the offerings, although the right to receive it was attached to and dependent on the possession of the right to the shebaitship.

Held, also, that the Defendant's further plea that the suit was barred by res judicata was untenable.

Sec. 244 of Act XIV of 1882 did not apply to a suit to set aside a decree and sale thereunder on the ground that they had been obtained by fraud.

This was an Appeal from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 12th March 1912.

BHAIAJI THAKUR v. JHARULA DAS.

There was an ancient temple of Mahadeoji called Singheswar Temple in Mauza Gouripur, District Bhagalpur. It was a place of public worship for the Hindus, and there was some landed property endowed for the management of the temple. Some Brahmin Pandas, who were shebaits of the temple, performed the sacred worship or puja of the deity, and they received offerings in the shape of money, fruit, sweets, etc., which the devotees made to the deity. After defraying the expenses of the management of the temple and the charities connected with it, the Pandas or priests divided the balance of the income among themselves in proportion to their rights for services rendered by them The right to participate in the said offerings was in return for the services rendered from day to day, and was alleged to be inalienable.

The Pandas entitled to do the puja of the said deity and to manage the said temple belonged to nine families, and one Pratipal Thakur was the head of one of them. He was entitled to a 3½ annas share of the daily nett income from the said offerings. He died leaving a widow, Musammat Grihimoni, who succeeded to a life-estate in all the property left by him. It consisted of the (1) right to receive the said 3½ annas share of daily nett offerings for services of shebaitship, (2) 11 bighas of lakhiraj land in Mauza Kumarkhad and (3) 21 bighas of lakhiraj land in Mauza Khoksi.

By a bond, dated the 29th Asarh, 1281 (corresponding to the 12th July, 1874), the said Musammat Grihimoni mortgaged the said 21 bighas of land in Mauza Khoksi to Jharula Das (Respondent) in consideration of money borrowed by her. It was alleged to be purely her personal debt. Further, by a registered deed, dated the 11th Falgun 1282 (corresponding to the 3rd March, 1875), she sold to the father of the said Jharula Das the 11 bighas lakhiraj land in Mauza Kumarkhad. Jharula Das was a Beldar by caste, that is, to say, he was not a member of the twice-born castes.

Jharula Das (Respondent) sued Musammat Grihimoni for recovery of the money on the said mortgage, and obtained an ex-parte decree against her on the 21st September, 1880. In execution of the said decree, the "income of the Math of Sri Singheswar-nathji Mahadeo . . . . to the extent of 3 annas 6 pies, which belongs to the judgment-debtor," was sold on the 20th November, 1891, and was purchased by Jharula Das, who obtained formal possession thereof on the 30th March, 1892."

Thereupon Musammat Grihimoni instituted a fresh suit (No. 12 of 1895) in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur against Jharula Das (Respondent). She alleged that her right to the 3½ annas share of the surplus profits of the offerings was inalienable, and she therefore claimed to set aside the said sale. It was pleaded against her in defence that her suit was not maintainable under the provisions of sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. This objection was upheld by the Appellate Court, and her suit was dismissed on that ground alone on the 30th March 1898. The question whether the said right was saleable or not was left undecided.

Musammat Grihimoni died in Jaith, 1307 (corresponding to May, 1900), and on her death the whole estate of her husband, Pratipal Thakur, reverted to the present Plaintiff, Bhaiaji Thakur, he being the next reversionary heir under the Hindu Law.

BHAIAJI THAKUR v. JHARULA DAS.

On the 28th January, 1910, he instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur. In his plaint he stated the facts set forth above and claimed (1) possession of the said 11 bighas of lakhiraj land in Mauza Kumarkhad and (2) the right to receive the 3½ annas share of the surplus profits of the said offerings as a shebait.

The Defendant Jharula Das (Respondent) contested the suit and filed a written statement pleading inter alia that the suit was barred by limitation, and by the rule of res judicata.

After recording and examining evidence, both oral and documentary, the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 3rd April 1911. He found that the Plaintiff was the nearest reversioner of the said Pratipal Thakur, deceased, and as such was entitled to recover from the Defendant the said 11 bighas lakhiraj lands in Mauza Kumarkhad and to receive the 3½ annas share of the surplus profits of the said offerings. He held that the suit was not barred by limitation, inasmuch as it was brought within 12 years of the death of the said Musammat Grihimoni. He also held that the decision in Suit No. 12 of 1895 did not bar the present suit. He observed as follows :—

"In the present case, the material points for determination are whether the properties under claim were mortgaged by Musammat Grihimoni for legal necessity and whether the reversioner is bound by the sales. These questions could not be gone into in the previous suit of the Musammat, and so the decision in the previous suit could not operate as res judicata in this case."

He also found that the alienations in question were not made by Musammat Grihimoni for any legal necessity under the Hindu Law, and that they were not binding upon the Plaintiff. He therefore made a decree allowing the Plaintiffs' claim with mesne profits and costs.

Against the said decree the Defendant appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which delivered judgment on the 12th March, 1912. The learned Judges of the said High Court affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge in so far as it related to the said 11 bighas of land in Mauza Kumarkhad. But they held that the Plaintiffs' claim to receive the 3½ annas share of the surplus profits of the offerings was barred by limitation and by the decision in suit No. 12 of 1895, mentioned above. In the course of their judgment they (Coxe & Imam, JJ.) observed as follows :—

"The main question in the appeal is whether the suit, so far as it relates to the temple income, is barred by (i) limitation and (ii) the rule of res judicata. It appears to us that both these questions turn on the point whether Grihimoni fully represented the estate, and this point appears to us to be concluded by authority. It cannot be contended for a moment that there was any collusion or dishonesty about the former suits. In one of them the Plaintiff himself was a party; and that the decision of a suit, fairly conducted, against a widow binds the reversioners is now well settled [see the cases quoted in Lilabati v. Bishun Chobey (1)]. And when the widow occupies the position of a shebait, as in this case, it appears that her sex makes no difference. This was held in Pydigantam v. Rama Doss (2), which was followed in Lilabati v. Bishun Chobey (1).

"There is also authority that decrees

(1) 6 C. L. J. 621, 631 (1907).
(2) I. L. R. 28 Mad. 197 (1904).

BHAIAJI THAKUR v. JHARULA DAS.

against shebaits in honest suits bind their successors. The reason of this is explained in Prosonno Kumari v. Golap Chand (3), Gora Chand v. Makhan Lal (4) and Lilabati v. Bishun Chobey (1), quoted above. The reason is that shebaits with their predecessors and successors form one continuous representation of the idol and consequently subsequent shebaits are regarded as the same persons in law as their predecessors. If this is so, it seems clear that the Plaintiff is bound by the decree passed against his predecessor Grihimoni. It is argued that the validity of the Defendant's purchase was not decided in that case, which was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by sec. 244 of the then Code. But if the Plaintiff is regarded as the same person in law as Grihimoni, this argument must fail. Grihimoni, if she liked, could have attacked the sale under sec. 244 of the Code, and, in that event, would very probably have won her case. But she advisedly preferred to abandon that line of attack and to rely on a regular suit, in which course she was aided and assisted by the Plaintiff. Naturally it was held that the suit was barred. But when she had taken this unsuccessful course with her eyes open, she certainly could not thereafter have pleaded that her right to recover the property had not been decided, and that she was entitled to bring another suit for the purpose of recovering it. And if the Plaintiff is regarded by the eye of the law as the (co. me as Grihimoni, it is evident that he the sa.. ot do so either, more especially the said 2 hen he aided Grihimoni to bring Khoksi to Jharu l suit. It appears to us side ation of mone . 621, 631 (1907). was alleged to be p A. 145 (1875). Further, by a rep 404 (1907).

that the right of the shebaits generally to recover the property was finally extinguished by the decision in the former suit.

"It is clear also that the adverse possession runs from the delivery of possession to the Defendant, and that the suit is long barred. The case clearly comes under Art. 124 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act [see Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadi v. Velu Pandaram (5)]. In that case the contention that a subsequent shebait obtained a fresh start in the calculation of adverse possession was distinctly overruled. The case of Fydigantam v. Rama Doss (2), quoted above, which followed Lilabati v. Bishun Chobey (1), seems to us quite indistinguishable from this case, and is a clear authority that the suit is barred by Art. 124. We have been referred also to Veerathadra Van Baradu Row v. Vellandi Venkatadra (6), in which it was held, following the Full Bench decision in Radhabai v. Anantarav (7), that in a suit for the income of a hereditary office a preceding holder fully represents his successors in matters of res judicata and limitation.

"We need not go into the question how the rights of the Plaintiff are affected by the fact that his own suit was withdrawn. It appears to us that when it is clearly proved that the Defendant has been in possession of the property in suit since 1892, and that a suit by the then trustee of the property for recovery was finally dismissed in 1898, the present suit, so far as it affects the 3½ annas of the she-

(1) 6 C. L. J. 621 (1907).
(2) I. L. R. 28 Mad. 197 (1904).
(5) L. R. 27 I. A. 69: s. c. 4 C. W. N. 329 (1899).
(6) 10 M. L. J. 114.
(7) I. L. R. 9 Bom. 198 (1885).

BHAIAJI THAKUR v. JHARULA DAS.

baiti, is barred both by limitation and by the principle of res judicata."

Mr. A. M. Dunne and Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Appellants submitted that the decision of the Subordinate Judge was right. There was no evidence that Musammat Grihimoni borrowed the money for the service of the idol, and both the Courts had found that there was no legal necessity for it. What was sold in execution was the widow's life-interest in the offerings and nothing more. On her death the husband's reversioner was entitled to shebaitship and the surplus offerings. Gnanasambanda Pandara Sannadi v. Velu Pandaram (5) had no application to the facts of this case. There could be no res judicata against the Plaintiff, nor was the Plaintiff's claim barred by limitation. If time began to run against the Plaintiff, it was from the death of the widow, and not from the date of the purchase in 1892. Both Courts had held that Art. 124 of the Limitation Act, 1877, applied. In any case, the Respondent was a Beldar, a sudra by caste, and he could not possibly be a shebait and appropriate the offerings to the diety which could be taken by the shebait only in lieu of services rendered.

Mr. G. R. Lowndes for the Respondent submitted that the suit was barred by limitation. Under Art. 124 the period of limitation began to run from 1892, when the Respondent took possession of the office of shebaitship. The receipt of the surplus offerings was dispossession from the office. Art. 140 is different from Art. 124, as under the former time runs when the estate falls into possession. It was not the case of a Hindu widow, but of one shebait succeeding another shebait. The female shebait fully represented the diety, and her successor in office was bound by her act: Katama Natchiar v. Rajah of Shivagunga (8).

(5) L. R. 27 I. A. 69: s. c. 4 C. W. N. 329 (1899).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—The Appellants here are the heirs and legal representatives of one Bhaiaji Thakur, now dead, who was the Plaintiff in the suit in which this appeal has arisen. Bhaiaji Thakur was a shebait of an ancient temple of Mahadeoji, called the Singheswar Temple, which is situate in Mauza Gouripur, otherwise Singheswarpur, in the district of Bhagalpur. Bhaiaji Thakur became a shebait of the temple on the death in 1900 of one Musammat Grihimoni who was the widow of one Pratipal Thakur. Pratipal Thakur had been a shebait of the temple, and until his death had been, as such shebait, entitled to receive a 3½ annas share of the daily surplus income from the offerings to, after defraying the expenses of, the temple; on his death his widow Musammat Grihimoni succeeded to his shebaitship and accordingly became entitled to receive the same share of the daily surplus income from the offerings. The right to such 3½ annas share came to Bhaiaji Thakur on the death of Musammat Grihimoni as the next reversionary heir under the Hindu Law to the shebaitship. The shebaits of the temple are Brahmin Pandas who, as shebaits, have to perform, or to provide for the performance of, the sacred worship or puja of the diety at the temple. Jharula Das, who is the Defendant to the suit and the Respondent to this appeal, is by caste a Beldar, and, as a Beldar, is not competent to perform, or to provide for the performance of, the sacred puja to the deity at the temple, and consequently was incapable of acquiring or holding the office of a shebait.

(8) 9 M. I. A. 539 (1863).

BHAIAJI THAKUR v. JHARULA DAS.

In 1880, Jharula Das obtained a decree for money on a mortgage which had been granted by Musammat Grihimoni. In execution of that decree, Jharula Das in 1891 caused the 3½ annas share of Musammat Grihimoni to be put up for sale, and at the sale on the 20th November 1891 purchased the share. Jharula Das on the 8th February 1892 obtained a certificate of sale in which the property which he had purchased was described as the "Income of the Math of Sri Singheswarthanji Mahadeo, which math is situated in Mauza Singheswarthan, pargana Nisankhipur Khurha, to the extent of 3 annas 6 pies, which belongs to the judgment-debtor, within the jurisdiction of the Madhepura Sub-Registry Office Bhagalpur Collectorate."

In November 1892, Musammat Grihimoni and Bhaiaji Thakur brought a suit against Jharula Das to have the sale to him of the 20th November 1891 set aside. That suit was by the permission of the Court withdrawn by Musammat Grihimoni and Bhaiaji Thakur with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action. In 1895 Musammat Grihimoni brought a fresh suit against Jharula Das to have the sale set aside on the ground that the decree and the order for sale had been fraudulently obtained by Jharula Das. The suit of 1895 was dismissed on appeal on the ground that her proper remedy was by an application under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, to dispute the validity of the sale, and consequently that the suit did not lie. Their Lordships fail to understand how sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, could have applied to a suit which in effect was brought to set aside the decree of 1880, and the order for sale on the ground that Jharula Das had obtained them by fraud.

Musammat Grihimoni died in 1900. On the 25th January 1910 Bhaiaji Thakur brought the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur and claimed possession of certain lands and mesne profits and a declaration that he was entitled to receive the 3½ annas share of the net income from the offerings to the temple with other reliefs. In his written statement the Defendant Jharula Das alleged, so far as is now material, that Bhaiaji Thakur was bound by the decree which dismissed Musammat Grihimoni's suit of 1895, and that the decision in that suit operated on the principle of res judicata to defeat the claim in respect of the 3½ annas share. At the trial a defence that the suit was barred by limitation was raised. As to the defence of res judicata, the Subordinate Judge rightly held that the decision in Musammat Grihimoni's suit of 1895 did not operate as a bar to this suit. On the question of limitation the Subordinate Judge found that Jharula Das had not purchased the right of shebaitship, but the Subordinate Judge held that the appropriation by Jharula Das of the 3½ annas share of the surplus income from the offerings to the temple practically amounted to a dispossession and treating Bhaiaji Thakur's suit, so far as it related to the 3½ annas share, as a suit for the establishment of his right to shebaitship and for recovery of the profits of that office, and having found that Musammat Grihimoni had died in 1900, he applied Art. 124 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and decided that the suit had been brought within time. On the 3rd April

BHAIAJI THAKUR v. JHARULA DAS.

1911, the Subordinate Judge gave to the Appellants here, who had been brought on the record as the representatives of Bhaiaji Thakur, who had died, a decree for possession of the land claimed, for possession of the 3½ annas share of the net income from the offerings to the temple, and for mesne profits subsequent to the institution of the suit. From that decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jharula Das appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The High Court in the appeal upheld the decision of the Subordinate Judge so far as it related to the land claimed and to mesne profits in respect of the wrongful possession by Jharula Das of that land, and to that extent by their decree affirmed the decree of the Subordinate Judge. With that part of the decree of the High Court, this appeal is not concerned. Those learned Judges of the High Court considering that Art. 124 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, applied to the claim in respect of the 3½ annas share of the surplus daily income from the offierings to the temple, and being of opinion that the 12 years' period of limitation provided by that Article began to run in 1892, when Jharula Das first began to appropriate to his own use the income of the 3½ annas share, decided that the claim in respect of the 3½ annas share was barred by limitation. They also held that the claim to the share was barred by the principle of res judicata, arriving at that decision apparently on the view that the dismissal of Musammat Grihimoni's suit of 1895 extinguished the claim of the shebaits to the 3½ annas share. Accordingly, the High Court by its decree of the 12th March 1912 set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge, so far as it related to the claim to the 3½ annas share and the profits of that share. From that decree of the High Court, the present Appellants have appealed to His Majesty in Council. The Defendant Jharula Das has not appealed.

On the hearing of this appeal, the contention that the dismissal of Musammat Grihimoni's suit of 1895 extinguished the right of the shebaits to the 3½ annas share and that the claim in respect of that share was res judicata was very properly abandoned; it was untenable. But it was strongly contended on behalf of the Respondent that the claim in respect of that share came within Art. 124 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and was barred by limitation. It is not necessary for their Lordships to consider whether, if that Article applied, the 12 years' period of limitation began to run in 1892 or on the death of Musammat Grihimoni in 1900, as they are of opinion that Article 124 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, does not apply in this case. Bhaiaji Thakur's suit was not a suit for possession of an hereditary office. Jharula Das had not taken possession of an hereditary office. The office of shebait of the temple was an hereditary office which could not be held by any one who was not a Brahmin Panda. Jharula Das was not a Brahmin Panda, he was of an inferior caste, and was not competent to hold the office of shebait of the temple, or to provide for the performance of the duties of that office. The appropriation from time to time by Jharula Das of the income derivable from the 3½ annas share did not deprive Musammat Grihimoni, or, after her death Bhaiaji Thakur, of the possession of the office of shebait, although that income was receivable by them in right of the shebaitship. The right to the office of shebait did not arise from, or depend upon, the receipt of a share of the surplus daily income from the offerings to the temple, although the right to receive daily a share of the net income from the offerings to the temple was attached to and dependent on the possession of the right to the shebaitship. Unless the shebait received their share of the daily net income from the offerings, it does not appear how the ministrations of the temple could be provided for. By adversely taking and appropriating to his own use a share of the surplus daily income from the offerings, Jharula Das acquired no title and no right to a share of that income. On each occasion upon which Jharula Das received and wrongfully appropriated to his own use a share of the income to which the shebait was entitled, Jharula Das committed a fresh actionable wrong in respect of which a suit could be brought against him by the shebait. But it did not constitute him the shebait for the time being or affect in any way the title to the office.

BHAIAJI THAKUR v. JHARULA DAS.

The Appellants here are entitled to have the decree of the High Court so far as it relates to the 3½ annas share, and to the costs in the High Court and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, varied by setting aside that part of the decree of the High Court which relates to the 3½ annas share and those costs, and by giving them a decree for all the costs in the High Court and in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, and a declaration that Bhaiaji Thakur was at the date of the suit entitled to the 3½ annas share of the net daily income of the offerings to the temple. Their Lordships will advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Respondent must pay the costs of the appeal.

Solicitors: Messrs. Barrow, Rogers and Nevill for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. for the Respondent.

B. D. Appeal allowed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 298 OF 1911.

FLETCHER, J.
N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.
1914,
Heard, 28th, 29th and 30th January.
Judgment, 27, March.

HEMENDRA NATH ROY, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
UPENDRA NARAIN ROY, Plaintiff, and others, Respondents.

Digwari tenure, incidents of—Limitations subject to which such tenures are hereditary—Powers of Government to decide fitness of heir—Sanction of Government, if means prior approval—Jurisdiction of Courts—Grounds of disapproval of heir by Government, if open to review by the Court—Sanction of Government, if may be withheld on grounds other than that of fitness—Temporary appointment if signifies approval of fitness for permanent post.

One K, who was a Sardar Digwar, was dismissed for neglect of duty and improper conduct, and two persons were successively appointed to the post, and ultimately the Plaintiff's father. Thereafter on the recommendation of the Police for the re-employment of K, K was informed that in the case of a vacancy occurring, the appointment would be first offered to him. Prior to his death, the Plaintiff's father was allowed leave for six months and the Plaintiff was appointed as being a fit person to act in his place. On the death of his father the Plaintiff was directed by the District Magistrate to act in place of his deceased father until further orders. The widow of K thereupon applied to the District Magistrate on behalf of her minor son praying that he might be appointed in accordance with the promise made to his father, but the District Magistrate rejected her application and confirmed the appointment of the Plaintiff. The Divisional Commissioner reversed this decision of the District Magistrate and appointed K's son not on the ground of Plaintiff's unfitness, but upon his view of the legal rights of the parties. On appeal to the Lieutenant-Governor, the Plaintiff was referred for remedy to the Civil Court and brought this suit:

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

Held—That a Digwari tenure in the District of Bankura which is similar to a Ghatwali tenure is hereditary, but the right of the heir to the tenure is subject to the approval or sanction of the Government, and notwithstanding that the tenure is hereditary, the Government has the power of dismissing the Ghatwal for misconduct.

Per N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—When a Ghatwal is dismissed and has no male member of the family fit to be appointed at the time of his dismissal, there is a forfeiture of the tenure so far as his family is concerned, and where in such a case a stranger to the family is permanently appointed in his place, a subsequently born son of the dismissed Ghatwal on the death of the latter and after the tenure has passed to another family, cannot claim it on the ground that it is his hereditary tenure.

It is for the Government to say whether the heir is a fit and proper person, and so far as that question is concerned, the Government is the sole Judge, and the Civil Courts cannot go into that question; but the Government cannot disapprove of the heir or withhold its sanction upon any ground it likes, and apart from the question whether he is a fit and proper person.

That in the present case, having regard to the proceedings taken, the Plaintiff should be held to have been approved by Government as a fit and proper person.

Per FLETCHER, J.—Sanction in its ordinary signification means prior approval and implies a power to disapprove. It would be contrary to the practice in India to hold that the approval of a person to hold an appointment in an acting capacity is an approval of him for the permanent post.

In view of the authorities that the Court cannot interfere to reinstate a person who has actually been in possession of the Ghatwali land, it must be held that the Court cannot interfere in favour of a person who has never in fact been appointed Ghatwal.

That in the present case, the Plaintiff failed to obtain the sanction of the Government which was a condition-precedent to his succeeding to the Ghatwali lands.

That the decision of the Executive authorities refusing to sanction the appointment of the heir of a deceased Ghatwal as Ghatwal cannot be challenged in the Civil Court on the ground that sanction has been unreasonably withheld.

A Civil Court is not in a position to determine what are the qualifications necessary in a Ghatwal. It is a matter solely for the Executive authorities.

NILMONEY SINGH v. BIKRANATH SINGH (1), JOGENDRA NATH SINGH v. KALI CHARAN ROY (2), DEBEE NARAIN SINGH v. SREE KISHEN SEIN (3), THE SECRETARY OF STATE v. PORAN SINGH (4), LALL DHAREE ROY v. BROJO LAL SINGH (6) considered.

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187, 199 (1882).
(2) 9 C. W. N. 663 (1905).
(3) 1 W. R. 321 (1864).
(4) I. L. R. 5 Cal. 470 (1878).
(6) 10 W. R. 401 (1868).

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 1st of August 1911 against the decree of Babu Mohini Mohan Dutta, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Bankura, dated the 24th of March 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Jogesh Chandra De, Jyotish Chandra Sirkar and Srish Chandra De for the Appellant.

Mr. S. P. Sinha, Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravarti, Lalit Mohan Ghose, Karunamoy Ghose, Sarat Chandra Das and Jyotish Chandra Hazra for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an appeal preferred by the Defendant No. 1 against the judgment of and decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Bankura decreeing the Plaintiff's suit.

The present dispute relates to the office of Digwar of the Ghat Burra in the Pargana Mahisara, in the District of Bankura and the Ghatwali lands held therewith.

Neither the origin of the jaigir nor the precise time at which it was created is known ; but it appears that as far back as 1771, corresponding with 1178 B. S., the villages of which it was composed were held by Jaigirdars who paid to Government ⅔rds of the annual value thereof as revenue and retained the other ⅓rd as remuneration for the services under which the jaigir was held. The villages included in the jaigir were permanently settled as part of the zemindari of which the Defendant No. 3 is the Zemindar. In fixing the Government revenue at the time of the Decennial Settlement, the lands included in the jaigir were assessed at the ⅔rds then payable by the Jaigirdar to the Government and the ⅓rd retained by the Jaigirdar in lieu of services formed no part of the assets of the zemindari in respect of which the Government revenue was fixed.

The above statement I take from the judgment of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Nilmoney Singh v. Bikranath Singh (1). That decision of their Lordships was with reference to the nature of the estate taken by the heir of a deceased Ghatwal in lands situate in the same zemindari and Pargana as the present and the statement is based on a report of Lalla Kanji, Tahsildar of Pachit, made on the 8th of July 1799. This same report is a portion of the evidence in this case being marked "Ex. K."

Their Lordships also found in that case that the Jaigirdar before them was not one of the Ghatwals referred to in the report of Lalla Kanji as being subordinate to and paid by the Digwars out of their jaigirs, "for they were paid by the ⅓rd of the malguzari which they were allowed to retain as compensation for their services."

It is clear therefore that the holding of the Jaigirdar in that case corresponds very closely to the Digwari holding in the present case.

Excluding the report of Lalla Kanji the earliest document that we have in the present case is a document called a Hukumnama [Ex. I (14)], dated the 23rd of May 1847. This document is addressed to Adwaita Charan Rai (grandfather of the Defendant No. 1) and Gour Mohun Rai (ancestor of the Defendant No. 8), the then Digwars of the Burra ghat informing them that they were not entitled to make a gift or permanent settlement of the lands, but that they could only grant pattas limited to the period of their incumbency. The next document we have is the Isamnabisi for the year 1849 (Ex. D). The eighth column thereof is headed "In what year, what date, what person, in whose place and in what capacity appointed temporarily or permanently" and in column 7 these remarks appear which obviously ought to have been placed in column 8 "In the year 1221 Aditya Rai was appointed in place of Madan Rai who was dismissed. Gour Mohan Rai was appointed on the 25th of Bhadra 1238, in place of his deceased father Anand Rai." On the 20th February 1855, one Bistu Das Baistab presented a petition to the Magistrate charging the then Digwars with neglect of duty and other improper conduct. The Magistrate appears to have summoned the Digwars before him; for on the 10th of May 1855, there is an order of the Joint Magistrate of Bankura dismissing Kartick Rai from the post of Sardar Ghatwal and warning Muktaram Rai (who had succeeded Gour Mohan Rai) to be more careful in the discharge of his duties in the future. The order of the Joint Magistrate concluded in these words: "that notification be duly served in the Sadar and Mufassal for attendance of candidates for the post." Accordingly we find that the Joint Magistrate on the 21st of June 1855 (Ex. 92) appointed Rasik Lal Upadhya as Sardar Ghatwal in place of Kartick Rai. Rasik Lal however held the post for a very short time; for it having been brought to the notice of the Commissioner that Rasik Lal was a relative of the Nazir of the Criminal Court at Bankura, and that his appointment was in breach of an order passed by the Superintendent of Police, the Commissioner directed the Joint Magistrate of Bankura to dismiss Rasik Lal and appoint some other person in his place.

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187, 199 (1882).

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

On the 14th of April 1856 the Joint Magistrate of Bankura appointed Rajaram Rai, grand-uncle of the Plaintiff in the place of Rasik Lal, the dismissed Sardar Ghatwal. It appears from a petition (Ex. I) (19) of Manjur Ahmed, Sub-Inspector of Police, addressed to the Superintendent of Police and dated 18th of July 1869 that the Sub-Inspector reported that Kartick had rendered important services to the Police in a criminal case and suggested that Kartick should be appointed in place of "the suspended Sardar Mohendra Narain Rai, so that he will be useful (torn) in the (illegible) case of Pargana Mahisara while public duty will be satis factoriiy discharged." The Superintendent of Police forwarded this petition to the Magistrate endorsing thereon "Forwarded to the Magistrate who is kindly requested to inform the undersigned if there is any serious objection to l is being re employed."

The Magistrate returned the petition with the following endorsement: "None, but I think he should not displace the man apppointed to his (post). Let him (have the next) vacancy." On the 18th of August 1869 Kartick was informed through an order of the Superintendent of Police that he would get the next vacancy.

The suspension that Mahendra was under appears to have resulted in his dismissal; for Ex. M shows that Kartick was appointed Sardar Ghatwal in the vacancy caused by the dismissal of Mahendra. Mahendra appealed against the order dismissing him first to the Commissioner of the Burdwan Division, who rejected his appeal (Ex. F) and then to the Lieutenant-Governor who reversed the order of the Commissioner and directed that Mahendra should be "reinstated in service" (Ex. 95);

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

It appears that in the year 1904 the Pachit Zemindari had become an encumbered estate under the management of the Court of Wards and that proceedings were being taken for the purpose of revising the assessments. Mr. Gupta, the Magistrate and Collector, had summoned 21 Ghatwals (including Mahendra) to appear before him at his camp at Nagardang.

The 21 ghatwals presumably on the ground that they did not wish their assessments to be revised failed to appear before Mr. Gupta.

Thereupon by an order dated the 19th of July 1904 [Ex. L (I)], Mr. Gupta summarily dismissed them. There can be no doubt as regards Mahendra at least that Mr. Gupta's order of dismissal was never acted on. From a letter from Mr. Gupta dated the 6th of August 1904 (Ex. 9) addressed to the Manager of Pachit Encumbered Estate, it appears that Mahendra and the other Digwars had consented to execute kabuliyats for the revised assessments and that the orders for their dismissal would be cancelled in execution of the kabuliyats. This coupled with the fact that Mahendra continued as Digwar down to the date of his death shows conclusively that Mr. Gupta's order of dismissal was never put into effect.

On the 27th of August 1907 Mahendra presented a petition to the District Magistrate (Ex. 98) asking that owing to ill health he might be allowed 6 months' leave and that his son the Plaintiff might act in his place. On the same day the District Magistrate granted Mahendra's prayer.

Before the expiry of his leave Mahendra died. The Plaintiff thereupon presented a petition to the District Magistrate praying that he might be "either appointed in the said post or to be allowed time." Upon a report by the Police upon this petition the District Magistrate passed orders that "Upendra Rai will continue to act in place of his deceased father Mahendra Narain Rai, Sardar of Bharra, until further orders."

Kartik died in the year 1900 leaving his infant son, the Defendant No. 1, and his widow Karunamayi him surviving.

Shortly after the death of Mahendra, Karunamayi acting on behalf of the Defendant No. 1 presented a petition to the District Magistrate praying that in accordance with the promise made to Kartick in 1864 the Defendant No. 1 might be appointed Sardar Ghatwal. The District Magistrate referred this petition for enquiry and report to Babu S. C. Mukherjee, Deputy Magistrate. The Deputy Magistrate reported that Karunamayi's petition should be rejected and that the acting Ghatwal, the Plaintiff, should be appointed in place of his deceased father. On the 16th of June 1908, the District Magistrate confirmed the report of the Deputy Magistrate [Ex (19)].

On appeal to the Commissioner of Burdwan Division, the Commissioner set aside the order of the Magistrate and directed that the Defendant No. 1 should be appointed Sardar Ghatwal (Ex. 130).

Thereupon the Plaintiff appealed to the Board of Revenue, who said they had no jurisdiction in the matter and then to the Government of Bengal. On the 29th of March 1909, the Commissioner of the Burdwan Division was directed to inform the Plaintiff that in the opinion of the Government of Bengal the remedy for any grievance which he may have lies in the Civil Court (Ex. 133).

Thereupon the Plaintiff filed this suit making as Defendants the Defendant No. 1, who is the Appellant before us, the Defendant No. 2, the Secretary of State for

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

India in Council, who has filed a written statement supporting the case of Defendant No. 1, the Defendant No. 3, the Zemindar—the Raja of Panchit, the Defendants Nos. 4, 5, 6 and 7, the Plaintiff's brothers and the Defendant No. 8, the other Digwar of the Burra ghat.

On the appeal before us it has been contended on behalf of the Appellant, first, that the office of Sardar Ghatwal is merely a personal office held under the Government, the Ghatwal being remunerated for his services by the profits of the lands in lieu of wages. Secondly, even if the jaigir in the hands of Kartick was an ancient permanent heritable tenure that upon his dismissal the tenure was forfeited and Mahendra did not hold the lands on such tenure; and thirdly, that in any event the Plaintiff cannot succeed to the jaigir and office without the sanction of the Government.

On behalf of the Respondent it has been urged that the jaigir is an ancient permanent heritable tenure to which the Plaintiff on the death of his father was entitled to succeed as of right. Secondly, if the sanction of the Government was requisite, such sanction has in fact been given or that it cannot be unreasonably withheld and that the acts of the Executive authorities show that the Plaintiff is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and the refusal of the Executive authorities is subject to review by the Court.

If the various appointments and dismissals of the Digwars stood alone, there might be a good deal to be said in favour of the view that the office of Sardar Ghatwal was merely a temporary office held at the pleasure of the Government. But in this case we have the very valuable assistance of the judgment in the case of Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Bikranath Singh (1) to assist us to come to a conclusion in the present appeal. But before passing to the consideration of that judgment, I shall deal with the second point urged on behalf of the Appellant, viz., assuming that Kartick had a permanent heritable holding, on his dismissal the tenure was destroyed and that Mahendra got merely an office which he held at the pleasure of the Government.

I am not inclined to give much force to this argument. Kartick's father was appointed in place of a dismissed Ghatwal and presumably both Kartick's father and Mahendra were placed in possession of the jaigir on the same terms as the original Digwars. This would appear to be so from the payments made by Mahendra, which are proved by the evidence, for the pay of men at the Thana and documents addressed to him, calling on him to perform the duties of his office. The next question is as to whether the sanction of the Government is requisite in order to enable the heir of Mahendra to succeed.

In case of Nilmoney Singh v. Bikranath Singh (1), the question in dispute was whether Ghatwali lands in this Pargana in the hands of a son who had been appointed Ghatwal upon his father's death were assets liable for the payment of the father's debts.

The appeal therefore raised directly what was the nature of the interest the son of a deceased Ghatwal took in the Ghatwali lands upon his father's death. In the course of delivering the opinion of their Lordships, Sir Barnes Peacock made the following remarks (at p. 203 of the Report): "Their Lordships entertained no doubt that whether it was a Ghatwali or not, the tenure was analogous to a Ghatwali tenure of the nature described in the preamble to Reg. XXIX" (at p. 206). "These Jaghirs though hereditary are not governed by the ordinary rules of inheritance under Hindu or Mohammedan Law and are subject to the condition of the Government's approval of the heir." (At p. 207.) "In a case between the Appellant and the Respondent Bikranath Singh, it was held that the holder of the tenure in question in this suit is not responsible for the debts of a former Jaghirdar. The Deputy Commissioner in his judgment said: 'As Jaghirdar the Defendant has what his father had—a life interest in the Jaghir. Whether the son will succeed or not is notwithstanding the tenure is hereditary uncertain, as he may at any moment be dismissed from Government employ', rather he should have said 'may never be sanctioned as Jaghirdar' (At p. 208). It is quite clear that if the Jaghir were transferable without the consent of Government either by descent to an heir or by voluntary sale or sale in execution or otherwise, there would be no security that the transferee would be a proper person to discharge the duties in respect of which lands are held at the reduced rent."

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187 (1882).

We have also been referred to the 4th volume of Sir William Hunter's Statistical Survey of Bengal (p. 254), where it is stated that Ghatwali lands in Bankura are neither transferable nor hereditary.

As against this, the Respondent relies on the judgment of Harington and Mookerjee, JJ., in the case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Kali Charan Roy (2). That was a judgment of these learned Judges on a second appeal, and the report merely gives the judgment without a statement of the facts or of the argument. That case came before the learned Judges on second appeal, so that they were bound by the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court, and what was apparently argued in that case was whether the dismissal of Ghatwal when he had been acting as deputy for his father operated as a dismissal of him after his father's death. Further, the case of Nilmoney Singh Deo v. Bikranath Singh (1) was not referred to in the judgment of and presumably was not cited before the learned Judges. The case did not therefore purport to explain or distinguish the decision of the Privy Council, and I do not think it assists us in dealing with this case of lands within the Pargana Mahisara. Next it was argued on behalf of the Respondent that he did in fact obtain the sanction of the Government. This, it is said, is so, since the Magistrate approved of Upendra acting as Ghatwal and therefore the Government must consider that the Respondent is a person fit to discharge the duties of the office, and it is not open to the Government to disapprove of the Respondent, unless he is unfit for the office.

But the words used in the judgment in the case of Nilmoney Singh v. Bikranath Singh (1) are "the sanction." "Sanction" in its ordinary signification means prior approval and implies a power to disapprove. It would be contrary to the practice in India to hold that the approval of a person to hold an appointment in an acting capacity is an approval of him for the permanent post.

Appointments of practically all posts under the Crown in India are at some time or other held by persons in what is called an acting capacity. This appears from the report in the case of Nilmoney Singh v. Bikranath Sing (1). The judgments in the lower Courts in that case were the decision of the officiating Judge and the decision of a Bench of this Court, one of the members of which Mr. Justice L. Jackson is described in their Lordships' judgment as the acting Chief Justice. I cannot think that the Government intended, nor that the Respondent thought, that when the District Magistrate after the death of his father continued him in an acting capacity that he was appointed to the permanent post with the sanction of the Government. Then it is said that the sanction of the Government to the Respondent's appointment cannot be unreasonably withheld and, that the refusal to sanction is open to review by the Court. But many reasons which may properly be considered by an Executive officer in discharge of his duties could not be considered by a Court. Further, what are the qualifications which the Court should require a Digwar to have? I have no idea. It appears to me to be a matter solely for the Executive authorities. It was admitted by the learned Counsel for the Respondent before us, that the Commissioner had power to overrule the order of the District Magistrate rejecting the petition of the Appellant's mother and confirming the Respondent in the office. I think, it must be taken that the Respondent has failed to obtain the sanction of the Government which was a condition-precedent to his succeeding to the Ghatwali lands.

(2) 9 C. W. N. 668 (1905).

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187 (1882).

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

It was held in the case of Debee Narain Singh v. Sree Kishen Sein (3), that the Civil Courts cannot interfere to reinstate a Ghatwal who has been dismissed by the Police authorities from the land which he formerly held as Ghatwal. Apparently the same view was taken in the case of The Secretary of State v. Poran Singh (4). If these authorities are correct that the Court cannot interfere to reinstate one who has actually been in possession of the Ghatwali land and then dismissed, I am unable to see how the Court can interfere in favour of a person who has never in fact been appointed as Ghatwal.

In my opinion, the judgment appealed against should be reversed and the Plaintiff ordered to pay to the Appellant his costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises relates to a Digwari tenure in the district of Bankura.

The facts appear to be these: One Kartick Roy, the father of the Defendant No. 1, and his ancestors before him held the lands in dispute as Sardar Digwar of Ghat Burra in the Bankura District. Kartik Roy was dismissed for neglect of duty and improper conduct in the year 1855. Notifications were thereupon issued inviting "candidates for the post," and one Rasik Lal Upadhya was appointed in place of Kartick Roy. Rasik Lal was also dismissed shortly after, and on the 14th April 1856, the Joint Magistrate of Bankura appointed Rajaram Rai, the paternal uncle of the Plaintiff's father in his place. In 1863 Rajaram having become incapable of performing the duties, his nephew the Plaintiff's father (Mahendra) was appointed in his place. Mahendra, it appears, was suspended for alleged misconduct in 1869, and while he was under suspension, the Police Sub-Inspector having reported that Kartick Roy since his dismissal had

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187 (1882).
(3) 1 W. R. 321 (1864).
(4) I. L. R. 5 Cal. 470 (1878).

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

been useful in giving assistance to the Police, the District Superintendent wrote to the Magistrate asking him whether he had any serious objection to Kartick Roy being re-employed. The Magistrate thereupon made the following order: "None, but I think he should not displace the man appointed to his (torn). Let him (torn) vacancy." Kartick was accordingly informed that when any Sardari or Sodiali becomes vacant, it will be offered to him in the first instance. Mahendra Narain was dismissed in 1870, and Kartick Roy was appointed in his place. The order of dismissal however was ultimately set aside by order of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and Mahendra Narain was reinstated in the Ghatwali. Mahendra since his re-instatement held the tenure as Ghatwal until the 19th July 1904, when the Magistrate Mr. Gupta summarily dismissed him along with other Ghatwals for failure to appear before him in connection with the revision of the assessment of their tenures. This order of Mr. Gupta, however, was not given effect to, as appears from the facts found by the lower Court, and Mahendra continued to act as before. In August 1907, Mahendra was granted six months' leave owing to ill health, and his son, the Plaintiff, was approved and appointed to act in his place. Mahendra died in October 1907, and thereupon the Plaintiff presented a petition to the Magistrate praying that he might be "either appointed in the said post or be allowed time." The Magistrate ordered that "Upendra Rai will continue to act in place of his deceased father Mahendra Narain Rai, Sardar of Burra, until further orders."

Kartick died in 1900 leaving his widow Karunamayi and an infant son the Defendant No. 1. In 1907 a petition was presented by Karunamayi on behalf of her minor son the Defendant No. 1 to the Magistrate praying that the Defendant No. 1 might be appointed in accordance with the promise made to his father Kartick in 1869. The Deputy Magistrate considered the claims of both the Defendant No. 1 and the Plaintiff, and submitted a report to the District Magistrate who agreed with the former and held that Defendant No. 1 had no right, and confirmed the appointment of the Plaintiff. On appeal, the Commissioner Mr. Maddox, by his order, dated the 11th August 1908, reversed the order of the Magistrate, and held that the tenure was hereditary and that the Defendant No. 1 was entitled to the Ghatwali. Defendant No. 1 was accordingly appointed Ghatwal. The Plaintiff moved the Board of Revenue, but the application was rejected on the ground that the Board had no jurisdiction in the matter. The Plaintiff then moved the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and was informed that "the remedy for any grievance he may have lies in the Civil Court." The present suit was thereupon instituted by the Plaintiff.

The suit was decreed by the Court below, and the Defendant No. 1 has appealed to this Court. The first question for consideration is what is the nature of the tenure? Having regard to the manner in which the Ghatwali in the present case has been dealt with by the Executive authorities down to 1908, the date of Mr. Maddox's order, it would seem as if it was merely a Government service held at the pleasure of the Government. But the liability to dismissal for misconduct or neglect of duty is one of the conditions upon which a Ghatwali tenure is held, and it does not appear from the evidence on the record that any case of succession of the heir of a deceased Ghatwal arose before the year 1908. The tenure is situate in 'Pargana Mahisara' and within the Pachit Zemindari which at one time was included in Birbhum. In the case of Nilmoney Singh v. Bikranath Singh (1), the Judicial Committee had to consider the nature of a jaigir which was also situate in the same pargana and in the same Zemindari. Their Lordships with reference to the jaigir in that case observed as follows :—"Neither the origin of the jaigir nor the precise time at which it was created is known; but it appears that as far back as 1771, corresponding with 1178 B. S, the villages of which it was composed were held by jaigirdars who paid to Government two-thirds of the annual value thereof as revenue, and retained the other one-third as remuneration for the services under which the jaigir was held. The villages included in the jaigir were permanently settled as part of the Zemindari of Pachit of which the Defendant-Appellant is the Zemindar. In fixing the Government revenue at the time of the Decennial Settlement, the lands included in the jaigir were assessed at the two thirds then payable by the Jaigirdar to the Government, and the one-third retained by the Jaigirdars in lieu of service formed no part of the assets of the Zemindari in respect of which the Government revenue was fixed," and that the jaigir although not falling within Reg. XXIX of 1814 (which relates to Birbhum Ghatwali tenures) was a tenure of the nature of those described in the preamble to that Regulation. Their Lordships held that the jaigirs are hereditary, though not governed by the ordinary rules of inheritance, and are subject to the condition of the Government's approval of the heir.

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187 (1882).

The tenure in the present case is not a jaigir, but a Digwari tenure. A Digwari tenure, however, is similar to a Ghatwali tenure.

The nature of Ghatwali tenures, it is true, varies in different places, and the Executive authorities in the present case have appointed and dismissed Ghatwals from time to time. But the Government has the power of appointment and dismissal, and notwithstanding that the said powers were exercised by the Government with reference to the jaigir in the case of Nilmoney Singh v. Bikranath Singh (1) the tenure was held to be hereditary. In the present case, it was stated in a Hukumnama, dated the 23rd May 1847, that "Ghatwali lands are held merely for remuneration for labours for their services." But the incidents of Ghatwali tenures such as the present do not appear to have been well understood before the case of Nilmoney Singh (1) was decided by the Privy Council, nor are all the incidents settled by judicial decisions even now. The report of Lala Kanji, dated the 19th July 1799, which was part of the evidence in, and was relied upon by, the Judicial Committee in that case, is also part of the evidence in the present, and having regard to the fact that the tenure in the present case is situate in the same pargana and in the same Zemindari as that dealt with by the Privy Council in that case, and held under similar conditions, I think, the incidents of the jaigir laid down by the Privy Council should be held applicable to the Digwari tenure in the present case.

We must take it therefore that the tenure is a hereditary one. But before the Plaintiff can be held entitled to succeed,

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187 (1882).

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

it is to be seen whether there was anything to prevent the Defendant No. 1 from succeeding his father Kartick in the Ghatwali. Notwithstanding that the tenure is hereditary, the Government has the power of dismissing the Ghatwal for misconduct. Kartick Roy was dismissed. Now what was the effect of the dismissal of Kartick Roy? There can be no doubt that the dismissal operated as a forfeiture of the tenure, so far as Kartick himself was concerned. It is contended, however, that as the tenure is hereditary, such dismissal did not affect the rights of his heir. It is unnecessary to consider any usage under which the next male heir of the dismissed Ghatwal may be appointed in his place on his dismissal, because in the present case Kartick Roy presumably had no son at the time of his dismissal, which took place so far back as 1855, the Defendant No. 1 not being born then, as he is still a minor. A stranger to the family, viz., Rajaram, was appointed permanently in his place, and the tenure held by him has devolved on the members of his family. The question is whether under these circumstances the Defendant No. 1 can claim the tenure on the death of his father, on the ground that it is his hereditary tenure. It seems to me that the contention, if given effect to, will lead to anomalous results. For instance, a person may be appointed Ghatwal, and dismissed for misconduct, and another (a stranger to the family) appointed in his place. The latter again may be dismissed and a third one (also a stranger) appointed, and so on. If the dismissal of a Ghatwal, under such circumstances, does not operate as a forfeiture of the rights of the heir, the tenure being by its nature hereditary, the heir of each of the dismissed Ghatwals, on their death, may equally claim the tenure on the ground that it is his hereditary tenure. I think, therefore, that where a Ghatwal is dismissed and has no male member of the family fit to be appointed at the time of his dismissal, there is a forfeiture of the tenure so far as his family is concerned, because the estate cannot remain in abeyance for the benefit of the heir who may be subsequently born. And where in such a case a stranger to the family is permanently appointed in his place, I do not see how a subsequently born son of the dismissed Ghatwal on the death of the latter and after the tenure has passed to another family, can claim it on the ground that it is his hereditary tenure. The case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Kali Charan Roy (2) does not in my opinion support the contention of the Appellant. In that case it was held that the dismissal of the Plaintiff, who was acting as a deputy of his father, even if it was intended to operate as a dismissal of his father, could not in law have that effect, and did not destroy the Ghatwali tenure, and that the dismissal of the Plaintiff while he was acting as a deputy of his father did not disentitle him from succeeding on the death of his father. The learned Judges after commenting on the case of Secretary of State v. Poran Singh (4), and pointing out that "the actual decision in that case may be supported on the ground that the Ghatwal had been rightly dismissed by reason of misconduct, and that such dismissal carried with it as a necessary consequence the forfeiture of his tenure" proceeded to discuss whether the Plaintiff's father had been dismissed. Had the learned Judges been of opinion that the Plaintiff in that case was entitled to succeed his father, although the latter had

(2) 9 C. W. N. 663 (1905).
(4) I. L. R. 5 Cal. 470 (1878).

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

been dismissed, it would have been unnecessary to consider whether a certain order of the Magistrate was intended to operate as a dismissal of the Plaintiff's father, and even if so intended, whether it could in law operate as a dismissal of his father. No doubt the Plaintiff in that case was held entitled to succeed on the death of his father on the ground that the tenure was hereditary, although he had been dismissed while acting as deputy of his father. But according to the view taken by the learned Judges, there was no dismissal of the father, and the question we are now dealing with, viz., whether the rights of the heir are affected by the dismissal of the father, therefore, was not considered in that case. There is no authority for holding that although a Ghatwal may be dismissed and another person appointed permanently in his place, the subsequently born heir of the dismissed Ghatwal after any lapse of time is entitled to succeed by displacing the person so appointed or his heir. I am accordingly of opinion that Kartick Roy having been dismissed for misconduct and another person having been appointed in his place, his son the Defendant No. 1 had no right to succeed to the Ghatwali on his death. If the Plaintiff however has no right to the tenure, and it is at the absolute disposal of the Government, the Defendant No. 1 has certainly acquired a right to the tenure, having been appointed Digwar by the Government. But the estate taken by Rajaram presumably was the same as that which was held by Kartick Roy. Tenures held under similar conditions have been held by the Privy Council to be hereditary. The tenure has been the subject of inheritance in the Plaintiff's family for more than half a century. The Plaintiff therefore had a hereditary right and would be entitled to succeed, subject to the approval by Government. Now if the heir of the Ghatwal gets the Ghatwali by hereditary right, subject to approval by Government and not merely by virtue of the appointment by the Government, it is difficult to hold that the Government can disapprove of the heir even if he is a proper person and fit to discharge the duties. In Bukranath v. Nilmoney Singh (5), Mitter, J., observed that " as a general rule, the heir of the last incumbent was considered as eligible to be appointed in the place of his ancestor, unless some special ground of unfitness rendered him incompetent to perform the duties of the jaigir." Markby, J., referring to the admission of the Advocate-General said " he admits that the tenure is a hereditary one, unless there is some special objection to a person entitled to succeed by which, I conclude, is meant something which disqualifies him or unfits him for the personal discharge of the duties, whatever these duties may be, but he claims for the Government the right to appoint, and the right to dismiss the Jaigirdars—a right, however, which is to be exercised (as I understand it) only in cases of disqualification or unfitness or in the absence of any legal heir." The Judicial Committee in that case observed as follows :—" It is quite clear, that if the jaigir were transferable, without the consent of the Government, either by descent to an heir or by voluntary sale, or sale in execution, or otherwise, there would be no security that the transferee would be a proper person to discharge the duties, in respect of which the lands are held at the reduced rent. The transferee might be a person of questionable or even of bad character." The precise nature of the right of the Government or the grounds upon which the right of approval is to be exercised were not necessary to be decided and were not decided in that case. So far as can be gathered from the observations made by the Judicial Committee, the consent of the Government would seem to depend upon the question whether the heir is a proper person and fit to discharge the duties of a Ghatwal. At any rate there is nothing in the judgment of the Privy Council to indicate that Government can disapprove on any ground it likes.

(5) I. L. R. 5 Cal. 389 (1879).

In the case of Debee Narain Singh v Sree Kishen Sein (3), this Court held that the Civil Courts cannot interfere to reinstate a Ghatwal, who has been dismissed by the Police authorities, in the land which he formerly held as Ghatwal. But the Ghatwal was dismissed by the Magistrate for non-performance of his services; and there can be no doubt that the Magistrate has the power to dismiss a Ghatwal for misconduct or neglect of duty. The question raised was whether the dismissal affected his right to continue to possess the Ghatwali lands, and all that this Cour said was that the Civil Court has no power to interfere with the order of dismissal and that the right to possess the lands depends on the tenure of the office. The same observations apply to the case of The Secretary of State v. Poran Singh (4), where it was held that the dismissal of a Ghatwal will carry with it the forfeiture of his tenure. On the other hand, in the case of Lall Dharee Roy v. Brojo Lal Singh (6), it was held that a Commissioner of Revenue is not warranted by law, on the demise of a Ghatwal, to consider the eligibility of rival claimants to a tenure (a perpetual and descendible one) and to reject the claims of the natural heir on considerations purely moral, e.g., having evinced a want of filial respect and dutiful feeling to his father, and that the Plaintiff was quite competent to question the order of the Commissioner by a suit in the Civil Court. One of the learned Judges (D. N. Mitter, J.) observed: "A Ghatwali tenure in Beerbhum is not resumable at the mere good will and pleasure of the Executive authorities." The Ghatwali appears to have been a Birbhum Ghatwali, the incidents of which were governed by the provisions of Reg. XXIX of 1814, and are not exactly those of a Ghatwali which we are dealing with in the present case. But the Ghatwali in the present case is analogous to a Birbhum Ghatwali; and the Government has the power of sanctioning the appointment in either case. The case cited above shows that the Government cannot disapprove of the heir on any ground it likes, and apart from the question of fitness.

If we are to hold that the Government can refuse to sanction or approve on any ground it likes, what becomes of the hereditary nature of the tenure? No authority has been placed before us to show that the Government can do so on any ground, and apart from the question whether the heir is a fit and proper person. So far as the particular tenure is concerned, the authorities have appointed and dismissed Ghatwals from time to time, but there does not appear to have been any case in which the heir of the Ghatwal, although fit, has been superseded by a stranger.

Once it is held that these tenures are hereditary, it seems to me that it cannot be held that the Government can withhold its sanction to the succession of the heir

(3) 1 W. R. 321 (1864).
(4) I. L. R. 5 Cal. 470 (1878)
(6) 10 W. R. 401 (1868)

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

upon any ground it likes. No doubt it is for the Government to say whether the heir is a fit and proper person. So far as that question is concerned, the Government, I think, is the sole Judge and the Civil Courts cannot go into that question. But I am unable to hold that the Government can disapprove of the heir or withhold its sanction upon any ground it likes, and apart from the question whether he is a fit and proper person.

It has been pointed out on behalf of the Respondent that the heir of the Ghatwal in the case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Kali Charan Roy (2) was held entitled to succeed to the tenure, although he had not been approved by the Government and on the contrary had been dismissed while he was acting as deputy of his father. But the question of approval by the Government does not appear to have been raised in that case, and there can be no doubt, as laid down in Nilmoney Singh v. Bikranath Singh (1) by the Privy Council, that the right of the heir to the Ghatwali is subject to the approval or sanction of the Government.

The next question is whether the Plaintiff in the present case has been approved by the Government. It appears that in August 1907, Mahendra Narain, the father of the Plaintiff, applied for six months' leave owing to ill health, and the Deputy Magistrate submitted the following note to the District Magistrate: "Sardar Mahendra Narain being ill, he prays that his son Upendra Narain Roy may be allowed to act for him for 6 months. Upendra is present and seems to be a fit person to act as Sardar. Submitted to Collector for orders." The order of the District Magistrate Mr. R. Krishna on the note was "Approved." It is true, he was appointed in an acting capacity and as deputy of his father for six months, but the fact remains that so far as the ground of fitness was concerned, he was approved. After the death of Mahendra Narain, the Plaintiff was ordered by the Magistrate to continue to "act in the place of his deceased father Mahendra Narain Roy until further orders." Then when the matter came up before the Magistrate upon the application of the Defendant No. 1, the Magistrate confirmed the Plaintiff in the appointment. The above orders taken together go to show that the Plaintiff was approved. The last order of the Magistrate had no doubt been set aside by Mr. Maddox, the Commissioner, who is the higher authority, but he did not reverse the order of the Magistrate upon the ground of unfitness of the Plaintiff, but merely upon his view of the legal rights of the parties, and the Government of Bengal referred the Plaintiff to a Civil Court. There is no suggestion in the proceedings that the Plaintiff was in any way an unfit person and the very fact that the Commissioner considered the legal rights of the parties shows that it was on the footing that both the parties were fit to discharge the duties and were proper persons to be appointed. We have the distinct approval by the Magistrate, having regard to the fitness of the Plaintiff, and the said finding has not up to this time been reversed by any authority. The Commissioner disallowed the Plaintiff's claim merely on the ground that the Defendant No. 1 was under the law entitled to succeed.

If the power of approval is to be exercised with reference to the question whether the heir is a fit and proper person, as I think it is, then the Plaintiff,

(1) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 187 (1882).
(2) 9 C. W. N. 668 (1905).

HEMENDRA NATH ROY v. UPENDRA NARAIN ROY.

having regard to the above proceedings, should be held to have been approved.

I am accordingly of opinion, that the decree of the Court below is correct, and should be affirmed. But in the circumstances, I think each party should bear his own costs.

[The appeal was dismissed by the following order.]

As we are unable to agree in this case under sec. 98, C. P. C., the decree of the lower Court is confirmed and the present appeal dismissed, each party bearing his own costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 97 OF 1912.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.

1913,
10, March.

MADHO PERSHAND,
v.
A. L. WALTON.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907), sec. 6, sub-sec. (2)—Jurisdiction of Court—"Ordinarily resides". Meaning of—Order of adjudication by Court not having jurisdiction—Sec. 47, sub-sec. (1), effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 21, if applies to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The Respondent lodged an application for insolvency in the Court of the District Judge of Midnapur and obtained an order of adjudication. It appeared that the Respondent who was employed as a guard on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway resided at Dungagarh in the Central Provinces and ran his train ordinarily from Dungagarh to Nagpur and only occasionally from Dungagarh to Kharagpur, where he stopped with his son-in-law having no permanent residence there. The application for insolvency was filed immediately after the Appellant had obtained a decree against the Respondent in the Court of the Munsif of Midnapur:

Held—That it could not be held that the Respondent ordinarily resided or personally worked for gain at Kharagpur within the meaning of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 6 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and consequently the Court of the District Judge of Midnapur had no jurisdiction to deal with the application for insolvency filed by the Respondent.

That sub-sec. (1) of sec. 47 of the Provincial Insolvency Act does not directly or by implication make sec. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 applicable to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act and consequently the doctrine that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by an Appellate Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and unless there has been a failure of justice, could not be applied to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act.

Meaning of the term "resides" in sub-sec. (2) of sec. 6 considered.

This was an Appeal from an order of J. Cornes, Esq., District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 30th of November 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Bepin Behari Ghose and Ambica Pada Chowdhury for the Appellant.

Mr. J. W. Chippendale for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal is directed against an order of adjudication made in a proceeding under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1907. The Respondent is employed as a guard on the Bengal-Nagpur Railway. He resides at Dungagarh in the Central Provinces and has worked there for over two years. But he runs his train ordinarily from Dungagarh to Nagpur. He adds that he works also from Dungagarh to Kharagpur, but has no permanent residence at the latter place, where he stops with guard Atkins, his son-in-law. The application for insolvency was lodged in the Court of the District Judge of Midnapur on the 8th August 1911, immediately after the Appellants had obtained a decree against him in the Court of the Munsif at Midnapur. There is no controversy that his debts exceed Rs. 500. Consequently the only question for consideration is, whether the petition has been presented to a Court having jurisdiction under the Provincial Insolvency Act in the local area in which the debtor ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain, within the meaning of sub sec. (2) of section 6. The District Judge has held that as a decree for money has been obtained against him in the Court at Midnapur, the application might be entertained there. This view clearly cannot be supported. It is possible that a suit for realisation of a debt may be instituted in a place other than the one where the debtor ordinarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain. The question for determination consequently is, where does the debtor in this case ordinarily reside or personally work for gain, because there is no room for suggestion that he carries on business within the meaning of sub sec. (2) of section 6 within the jurisdiction of the Court of the District Judge of Midnapur. In our opinion, upon the facts stated, it cannot be held that the debtor ordinarily resides at Kharagpur. The term "resides" is not defined in the statute, but its ordinary interpretation is explained in the case of Kumud Nath Roy Chowdhury v. Jatindranath Chowdhury (1). If the Respondent had ordinarily run his train from Dungagarh to Kharagpur, it might possibly have been contended with some show of reason that he resided in both places, it might also have been argued that he personally worked for gain at Dungagarh as well as at Kharagpur. But, as already stated, he runs his train, ordinarily from Dungagarh to Nagpur, and only occasionally from Dungagarh to Kharagpur. The mere fact that when at Kharagpur he stops with his son-in-law does not show that he resides at Kharagpur, much less can it be said that he ordinarily resides at Kharagpur. The language used in sub-sec. (2) of section 6 is identical with that of section 6 of statutes 46 and 47, Victoria, Chap. 52. With reference to the latter statute, it was ruled in the case of In re Erskine (2) that a man who paid several visits to London during a period of more than a year, and who, when in London, had his bed-room in a lodging house where he slept could not be said to have ordinarily resided in London during the required period. That there may be room for difference of opinion in the application of the law to the facts of a particular case is illustrated by the decision in In re Norris (3), where it was ruled that a foreigner who had a room at a hotel in London for about eighteen months before the presentation of petition and paid for the same continuously during that period had ordinarily resided in London during the required time. The tendency of Courts in this country as is illustrated by the decision in In re Tietkins (4) and In re Rampaul Singh (5)

MADHO PERSHAND v. A. L. WALTON.

(1) 13 C. L. J. 221 (1911).
(2) 10 T. L. R. 32 (1893).
(3) 5 Mor. 111.
(4) 1 B. L. R. O. C. 84 (1868).
(5) 8 C. L. R. 14 (1884).

MADHO PERSHAND v. A. L. WALTON.

has been to construe the expression "ordinarily resides" strictly. [See also In re Cockburn (6), In re Tarineychurn Guha (7), Subramaniam v. Pichai (8)]. But whether the expression be strictly or liberally construed, upon the facts of this case, it is impossible for us to hold that the Respondent ordinarily resided at Kharagpur at the time of the presentation of the application for insolvency. It must further be remembered, as pointed out in In re Erskine (2), that the burden is upon the Petitioner to establish that the Court to which he has presented his application has jurisdiction to entertain it. In the case before us, the Petitioner has failed to discharge that burden. We are not prepared to hold that the Petitioner ordinarily resides or personally works for gain at Kharagpur within the meaning of sub-sec. (2) of sec. 6. Consequently, the inference follows that the Court below had no jurisdiction to deal with this matter.

We desire to add that we cannot accept as well-founded the argument advanced with considerable ingenuity by the learned Vakil for the Respondent that we should apply to this case the principle which underlies sec. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908, in view of the provisions of sec. 47, sub-sec. (1), of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Sub sec. (1) of sec. 47 provides that, subject to the provisions of the Act, the Court, in regard to proceedings under the Act, shall have the same powers and shall follow the same procedure as it has and follows in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction. But this section does not, directly or by implication, render sec. 21 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 applicable to proceedings under the Provincial Insolvency Act. Consequently, we cannot apply to these proceedings the doctrine that no objection as to the place of suing shall be allowed by any Appellate Court, unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and unless there has been a consequent failure of justice. The question of jurisdiction is thus open for examination, and for the reasons assigned, must be decided against the Respondent.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the order of the Court below discharged. But the Respondent will be at liberty to present a fresh application under the Provincial Insolvency Act in a Court of competent jurisdiction. Under the circumstances of the case, there will be no order for costs either here or below.

Appeal allowed.

(2) 10 T. L. R. 32 (1893).
(6) 2 Ind. Jur. N. S. 326 (1867).
(7) 11 B. L. R. App. 26 (187?).
(8) [1911] 4 Bur. L. T 81.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 164 OF 1910

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
Heard, 19 and 20, August.
Judgment, 22, August.

RAM CHANDRA NEOGI, Petitioner, Appellant,

SHYAMA CHARAN BOSE, Objector, Respondent.

Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907, sec 16, sub-sec. (2), cl. (a), secs. 27, 42, sub-sec. (1)—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 60—Direction for deposit in Court of one-fourth of insolvent's monthly salary which exceeded Rs. 40, if legal—Order for adjudication when can be subsequently annulled—"Salary" if "property" of insolvent—Jurisdiction of High Court to give directions regarding order of adjudication, when only the order annulling it is under appeal.

A debtor who was arrested in execution of a decree applied to be and was adjudged an insolvent. In the order of adjudication the insolvent was directed, pending realisation by sale of his assets, to pay a quarter of his monthly salary of Rs. 100 a month into Court until the sum realised from him should equal one-third of the debts for which the creditor had obtained a decree. Subsequently the District Judge annulled the order of adjudication on the ground that the insolvent had failed to abide by the condition regarding payment of one-fourth of his salary :

RAM CHANDRA NEOGI v. SHYAMA CHARAN BOSE.

Held—That the direction regarding the payment of one-fourth of the insolvent's salary could not have been given under the Provincial Insolvency Act. The proper course for the District Judge would have been to direct the Receiver to arrange for payment to him of one-half of the salary earned by the insolvent, "salary" being "property" of the insolvent within the meaning of sec. 16, sub-sec. 2, cl. (a), only one-half of the salary which exceeded Rs. 40 a month being exempt from attachment under sec. 60, C. P. C.

That the subsequent order of the District Judge annulling the order of adjudication could not have been made under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 42, the conditions required by that section being absent in the present case.

That when setting aside, at the instance of the insolvent, the order of the lower Court whereby it annulled the adjudication and which was the only order under appeal, it was open to the High Court to consider what directions should be given regarding the order of adjudication, which was modified to the extent that the condition imposed was discharged, the District Judge being ordered to give the necessary direction according to law.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 15th April 1910 against an order of F. Roe, Esq., District Judge of Zilla 24-Parganas, dated the 11th April 1910.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus Narendra Kumar Bose and Surendra Kumar Bose for the Appellant.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Rishendra Nath Sarkar for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal is directed against an order under sec. 42 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The circumstances under which the order has been made are no in controversy and may be briefly stated. On the 26th May 1909, the Appellant made an application to be declared an insolvent, inasmuch as he had been arrested in execution of a decree. The order for adjudication was made on the 24th August 1909, and the insolvent was directed, pending realisation by sale of his assets existent or suspected, to pay Rs. 25 a month into Court until the sum realised from him should equal one third of the family debts for which the creditor had obtained a decree. It is plain that this direction could not have been given under the provisions of the Provincial Insolvency Act. In fact, on the 24th February 1910, the District Judge recorded an order to the effect that the amount deposited by the insolvent should remain in deposit and that the insolvent should show cause why the adjudication should not be annulled on the ground that the proper order would have been an order for composition under sec. 27 ; at the same time he expressed a doubt, whether the Court had power to order instalments from pay after an order of adjudication had been made. On the 11th

RAM CHANDRA NEOGI v. SHYAMA CHARAN BOSE.

April 1910, he ordered that as the insolvent had failed to abide by the condition that he should pay one-fourth of his salary to the Receiver, the order of adjudication must be annulled. We are now invited to hold that this order for annulment was erroneously made.

There is no room for serious controversy that the order could not have been made under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 42 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Sub-sec. (1) provides that where, in the opinion of the Court, the debtor ought not to have been adjudged an insolvent, the Court shall, on the application of the debtor or of any other person interested, by order, in writing annul the adjudication. The order can also be made if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full or that a composition or scheme has been approved by the Court under sec. 27. In the case before us, the debts of the insolvent have not been paid in full, nor has there been any composition or scheme approved by the Court. Consequently the order can be supported, only if it is established that the debtor should not have been adjudged an insolvent. But it is plain that the debtor was rightly adjudged an insolvent. He had been arrested in execution of a decree and had applied to be adjudged an insolvent. Under the circumstances the order for adjudication was properly made and it could not be annulled under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 42. The position consequently is that the order of annulment made on the 11th April 1910 must be set aside.

The question next arises, what further direction, if any, should be given in this matter. On behalf of the insolvent, it has been contended that the order now under appeal is the erroneous order of the 11th April 1910, and that it is competent to the Court to set aside that order alone. In our opinion it is open to the Court, not only to reverse that order, but also to consider what direction should be given when the order has been set aside at the instance of the insolvent. As already explained, the order for adjudication was properly made on the 24th August 1909; but the condition, which was annexed to that order, was imposed without jurisdiction; consequently that condition must be discharged.

It is desirable to point out in this connection that the proper course for the District Judge would have been to direct the Receiver to arrange for payment to him of one-half of the salary earned by the insolvent. Sec. 16, sub sec. (2), cl. (a) provides that when an order for adjudication has been made, the whole of the property of the insolvent, except so far as it includes such properties as are exempted by the Code of Civil Procedure or by any other enactment for the time being in force from liability to attachment, shall vest in the Court or in the Receiver and shall become divisible amongst his creditors. Now sec. 60 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 provides that one-half of the salary of a public officer is exempt from attachment when the salary exceeds Rs. 40 a month. In the present case, it has been stated to us that the insolvent is in receipt of a salary of Rs. 100 a month as a clerk in the office of the Official Assignee. Consequently, under sec. 60 one-half of his salary is liable to attachment, and, therefore, one-half of the salary is vested in the Receiver appointed by the Court under sec. 16, sub-sec. (2), cl. (a). There can be no room for reasonable doubt that "salary" is "property" of the insolvent within the meaning of sec. 16, sub-sec. (2), clause (a) : this view accords with that adopted in England under the Bankruptcy Act, as is evident from the cases of Re Ward (1), Mercer v. Vans Colina (2) and Re Graydon (3). It has been explained that in making an appropriation of income for the benefit of creditors, the Court acts on the principle of giving to the creditors the surplus after allowing sufficient portion thereof for his proper maintenance according to his condition in life. The Statute law in this country fixes this amount by sec. 60, C. C. P., read with sec. 16, sub-sec. (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the 11th April 1910 set aside and the order of the 24th August 1909 modified in so far as it directed the insolvent to pay into Court Rs. 25 a month, until the sum realised from him should equal one-third of the family debts. The District Judge will now give the necessary directions in accordance with the law as explained in this judgment, and subject to the provisions of sec. 44 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, which entitles him to make an order of discharge of the insolvent under defined circumstances. There will be no order for costs either here or in the Court below.

Appeal allowed.

(1) [1897] 1 Q. B. 266.
(2) [1903] 1 Q. B. 130n (1897).
(3) [1896] 1 Q. B. 417.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 67 OF 1912.

CARNDUFF, J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1914,
Heard, 6, and 26, January.
Judgment, 26, January.

UPENDRANATH SEN ROY CHOWDHURY & ors., Decree-holders, Appellants, BIMALA KANTA SEN CHOWDHURY and ors., Judgment-debtors, Respondents.

Court of Wards Act [IX of 1879 (B. C.)], secs. 48, 60A—Decree obtained against ward before estate taken over, if may be executed in the ordinary manner.

A decree obtained against the ward before his estate came under the management of the Court of Wards can be executed against the ward's property in the hands of the Court of Wards in the usual manner under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code without reference to the order, in which, under sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act, the manager is directed to satisfy the ward's liabilities out of the free funds at the manager's disposal.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 16th of February 1912, against the order of R. Garlick, Esq., Additional District Judge of Zilla Backerganj, dated the 21st of November 1911, modifying the order of the Munsif, 1st Court at Barisal, dated the 1st of July 1911.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—

In execution of a simple money-decree, an attachment was issued under sec. 52 of the Civil Procedure Code against the property of a ward under the Court of Wards and in compliance with the order of the Munsif the Collector attached the cash balance of the estate, i.e., the amount to the credit of the estate in the personal ledger in the Collectorate. Afterwards the manager of the estate filed a petition of objection to the effect that the attachment of the balance in the Collectorate to the credit of a Court of Wards estate was illegal as being contrary to the provisions of sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act. [That section lays down that all moneys received by a manager under the Court shall be devoted to certain purposes in a specified order of priority, and in the table of priority the discharge of instalments of Government revenues and the payment of charges necessary for the maintenance of the ward and the management of the property are given precedence over the liquidation of debts.] It appeared from the evidence adduced in the case that sums due under Class I of sec. 48 were, at about the time when the attachment was issued, very much in excess of the balance to the credit of the estate, and that the maintenance allowance of the ward had not been paid for 6 months.

The Munsif, while conceding that the attachment of the cash balance of the estate was likely to cause serious inconvenience to the management of the estate, held that the attachment must prevail, because he was not satisfied that any sum was due under Class I of the purposes specified in sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act such as must be given priority to the sum due under the decree (which comes under Class II).

On appeal to the District Judge, the Government Pleader, on behalf of the Court of Wards, prayed that the attachment should subsist subject to the payment of the Government revenue and of the daily expenses of the estate, and urged that as the powers of a manager are restricted by the provisions of sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act, the attachment under sec. 60, C. P. C, of property over which he has only a limited disposing power must be subject to similar restrictions.

The District Judge accepted this contention, holding that as no property can be attached which cannot be transferred by or on behalf of the judgment-debtor, and as the power of disposition of the cash balance is restricted by sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act, the attachment also must be subject to similar restrictions. The District Judge accordingly ordered that the attachment shall subsist subject to the provisions of sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act which in his view gave priority to arrears of Government revenue and the ordinary expenses of the estate.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

CARNDUFF, J.—The question raised by this appeal is whether the provisions of sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act, 1879 (Bengal Act IX of 1879), control the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as to the attachment and sale of property in execution of decrees. The Court of first instance held that they did not; the lower Appellate Court has taken the contrary view.

Sec. 48 of the Act of 1879 provides that all moneys received by the manager of an estate in the hands of the Court of Wards shall be applied to certain specified purposes, and that priority shall be given to the purposes included in Class I over those included in Class II, and so forth. Class I includes the payment of all charges necessary for the maintenance, education and religious observances of the ward and

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, JULY 20, 1914. [No. 36.

Contents.

NOTES.

City Civil Court.

We publish in this issue a letter addressed to us by an influential member of the Vakil Bar vehemently protesting against our views concerning the resolution proposed to be moved in the Bengal Council for the establishment of a City Civil Court in this City. The writer charges us with 'vehemence' of language and makes other uncharitable imputations against us. But we leave it to our readers to compare what we had written with the reply and its tone and temper and judge for themselves on which side all the "vehemence" of expression and argument lies. We cannot but regret that the reply far transgresses the limits of forensic latitude and imports into it an amount of heat which makes the learned writer lose sight of the real issues raised by us.

Our point of view of looking at the question is that we would welcome by all means all practical suggestions for the revision of the scale of costs on the Original Side where it really presses hard on litigants, but we would stoutly oppose any attempt to replace or transfer any part of its jurisdiction to any inferior tribunal. The problem of problems before the Indian public now is to raise judicial efficiency and to make the judiciary independent of the executive. The High Court of Calcutta is the only Court in India which is independent of the Local Government, and we are naturally loth that it should be replaced in any degree by a Court which would be controlled in every respect by the local executive. There is not only a strong feeling against it amongst the leaders of the Bar but also amongst the thoughtful section of the public. We are therefore sorry that a member of the Vakil Bar for whom we have high regard should import passion into the question and thus cloud the real issues regarding the question of a City Court.

Adverting to facts, we doubt whether any well-informed member of any section of the legal profession will for a moment question that in matters of procedure, practice, despatch of business and in the effectual and even dispensation of justice there is any Civil Court in this country which comes up to the standard of the Original Side of the High Court. The only objection urged by the learned writer which is deserving of any serious notice is that some litigants in certain class of cases find it costly to prosecute or contest the suits on the Original Side. No doubt some of them do and we are not sure that the parties are not often to blame for that. But assuming that the Original Side procedure proves costly where questions of account, administration and partition are concerned, the duty of a legal reformer should be to suggest practical remedies for keeping costs in such matters within reasonable bounds. But we have had no suggestions in this connection from the learned Vakil or the Hon'ble Member whose cause he espouses.

Barring such matters, the learned Vakil admits that in uncontested mortgage suits on the Original Side—and mortgage suits are seldom contested—the proceedings are less costly and more efficacious than in the Mofussil. He also maintains silence as to the costs in undefended cases and suits for liquidated claims and we may take it that he admits that such suits do not cost more on the Original Side than in the Mofussil. In the course of his long attack, the writer does not also contradict the fact, as he cannot, that ordinary defended suits are also disposed of both quickly and inexpensively on the Original Side. The learned writer goes the length of suggesting, however, that in spite of the inexpensive nature of the remedies in such suits, they should nevertheless be transferred to an inferior tribunal. So his argument comes to this that in any event let us have a less efficient tribunal and by all means lower the judicial standard, because in some matters the Original Side proceedings prove costly.

We quite admit that a suit for Rs. 5,000 may be fought out by the parties for five days, but the chances of their so doing are infinitely greater in the Mofussil than on the Original Side. Ordinarily such suits are disposed of on the Original Side in a few hours. The exception never proves the rule in spite of the common saying that it does. If people choose to incur costs, nothing but good sense can prevent them from so doing. The Hon'ble Member who would have a City Civil Court in this city has himself elicited the fact from the Bengal Government that the defence of a bailiff in the Calcutta Police Court cost the Government Rs. 43,000. We doubt whether ordinarily all the cases tried on the Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction of the High Court, cost the Crown as much in a normal year. So the cost does not often depend on the Court, but varies according to the inclination or the wisdom of the parties. We have never doubted or questioned that the costs in certain classes of cases on the Original Side are quite disproportionate to the relief obtained. But the remedy for that, we repeat, lies in moving the High Court for revising its scale of costs and making it commensurate with the relief. Since it is the scale of costs and not the Court or the Judges who are to blame for this, the law reformer has to direct his attention to where the shoe pinches and not amputate the leg and put up a wooden one in its place.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Judgment of Foreign Court.

RAMANATHAN CHETTIAR v. KALIMUTHU PILLAI, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 163.

The Plaintiffs sought to recover a certain sum of money from the Defendants being balance of the amount with interest due under a decree obtained by them in the Supreme Court of Singapur.

Held—That the circumstances that give jurisdiction are alternatively (1) when the Defendant is a subject of the foreign country in which the judgment has been obtained, (2) when he was resident in the foreign country when the action began, (3) when the Defendant in the character of Plaintiff has selected the forum in which he is afterwards sued, (4) when he has voluntarily appeared, and (5) when he has contracted to submit himself to the forum in which the judgment was obtained.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 133, 145—Deposit.

V. BALA KRISHNUNDU v. NARAYANASWAMY CHETTY, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 175.

The word "deposit" in Arts. 133, 145 is a deposit of goods to be returned in specie. It must be taken to mean the sort of bailment known to lawyers under [illegible] name in the Roman Law of Bailments.

Correspondence.

CITY CIVIL COURT.

TO THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

You have expressed yourself on the question of the Hon'ble Mr. S. N. Roy's proposed resolution on the City Civil Court with an amount of vehemence with which the readers of the Weekly Notes are not generally familiar. But I hope, you will not grudge a little space to an answer from one who, whatever his "professional interests" might be supposed to be, has perhaps in his own humble way taken some interest in public affairs outside the profession.

My chief object will be to meet your arguments such as they are, but I cannot altogether put aside the vast amount of passion, sarcasm and flattery with which you have dressed them up and which certainly are not suggestive of their strength. Thus you have questioned the propriety of Mr. Roy's moving the resolution, first because he is doing so without being asked by anybody, and secondly because as a member of the profession he ought to have approached the Chief Justice rather than the Government. As regards the first proposition, it must be a revelation to most legislators that they are not at liberty to move any resolution which they think would further public interest, if the public is not vociferously clamouring for it. Have you never heard of cases in which the public feelings did not become manifest to those in power till they burst out in a hurricane? And have there not been many occasions on which statesmen have averted calamities by anticipating public clamour? The argument from Mr. Roy's profession is weaker still. Mr. Roy is on the Council not as a Vakil, but as a member of the public. He would hardly be doing his duty, if he allowed his activities as a citizen and a legislator to be hemmed in by every imaginary rule of professional etiquette. Further, I do not know what makes you assume that Mr. Roy did not consult public opinion.

You have been pleased to refer to Mr. Roy's professionl interests. You cannot surely be unaware that Mr. Roy does not depend on his profession for his daily bread. Nor is your appeal ad hominem to His Excellency the Governor and the Chief Justice calculated to give one any better idea of the merits of your cause. In your desperate struggle for a forlorn cause you have struck hard on all sides and have not spared the lions of your own profession. But who ever heard of leading Counsel being engaged by people, as you say, to "gamble in, litigation" "by way of a bet on their favourite Counsel, on the off-chance of securing judicial favour?" The unvarnished fact is that people engage expensive Counsel so that they may get the best legal assistance—the fools, who seek to secure judicial favour thereby, are not many.

In the same category you will excuse my placing the select epithets you have heaped on the poor judges of a hypothetical Court. "A glorified Small Cause Court" with "Judges of indifferent qualifications" reads well, but what, you think, you kill by these expressions is entirely a figment of your imagination. You are perhaps not unaware that the Small Cause Court is what it is chiefly on account of the summary procedure that it follows, which is not likely to be copied in any regular Court. As for judges "with indifferent qualifications" who must be either weak or "self-opinionated," is it seriously contended that the only men who are not so are to be found in the two or three judges who happen to be sitting on the Original Side for the time being? And must it be assumed that the Calcutta High Court, even on the Original Side, has always been a stranger to judges with indifferent qualifications or to judges who are weak or self-opinionated? Nor is it always the case that you get worse recruits for less paid posts than for higher paid ones. There have been judges in the Mofussil who have tried very difficult cases with infinite credit, and the occasions have not been few on which their judgments have been upheld by the Privy Council over the head of the High Court. The fact is that a priori arguments on the quality of judges are always dangerous. The junior who would accept a judgeship for Rs. 3,000 is not necessarily inferior to the man who is earning ten to twenty thousand in the profession, and it does not follow a priori that the latter would make a better judge than the former. Sir Barnes Peacock who held an honoured place among members of the Judicial Committee was not a particularly successful member of the Bar when he came out to India. The salary of a City Court Judge would, I suppose, be high enough to attract all juniors specially with the prospects of promotion to the High Court. The quality of Judges whether in the High Court or elsewhere really depends upon the persons who select them, and if proper discrimination is exercised in the selection of a City Court Judge, there is no reason why good judges should not be available for that Court.

Putting aside these matters which really do not touch the issue, your arguments appear to be founded on (1) the efficiency of High Court Judges, (2) the expedition of work here, and also (3) on the real cheapness of justice in the High Court.

About the ability of judges, I have already spoken of the absurdity of a priori arguments on this head. I may point out that those who want a City Court insist on Judges of that Court being professional men "who have practised at the Bar for a good many years," before whom, as you point out, long drawn cases would be impossible. If Mr. Roy's resolution does not provide for that, it is a defect which should surely be cured and can be cured by a simple amendment. I suppose that would completely meet your argument based on the protracting of cases in the Mofussil so far as there is any substance in it.

The argument from the superior ability of High Court Judges, I may add, really cuts just the other way. Is it not unfair to the tax-payer that these highly paid officers should have a great deal of their time wasted in hearing cases in which there is no "real and substantial contest of law or facts" which, according to your estimate constitute ninety per cent. of the work before all Courts including the High Court. Surely these matters would bear decision by an inferior tribunal, say, a City Court.

In passing, let me note that while I am not sure that the comparative dilatoriness of Mofussil Courts would be borne out by statistics, such delay as there is in the Mofussil would appear to be very largely the result of circumstances there which cannot be reproduced in Calcutta. The Mofussil judiciary is overburdened with work, they have to work with a very imperfectly trained and undermanned ministerial staff; the assistance that they get from the Bar is not half as efficient and technically perfect as the High Court Judges get; their jurisdiction covers a wide area with imperfect communications and with infinite opportunity to litigants to evade the processes of the Courts. The facility with which, under these circumstances, designing litigants can protract cases must needs be infinitely greater than would be possible within the compact area of Calcutta with a vigilant and efficient ministerial staff and a body of able and well-equipped lawyers.

And then, with all this, I believe there is nothing in the Mofussil to compare with the endless proceedings arising out of Gopal Lal Seal's estate, Salaji's estate and other big estates in the present generation and the Bhukailash (Ghosals') estate and the Sobhabazar Raj estate in the last. All these would go to show that Jarndyce v. Jarndyce in not a thing of the past on the Original Side.

Your attempt to make out that the cost of litigation on the Original Side is less on the whole than in the Mofussil is really bold, but with one who knows how facts stand it will hardly pass muster. They will see the point of your referring to undefended mortgage suits, for that is the only case in which it is possible to say that business on the Original Side is cheaper than in the Mofussil. But let us take any other case, say a fairly contested suit of the value of Rs. 5,000. The ad valorem court-fee on the plaint in such a suit in the Mofussil would be Rs. 275. The suit could no doubt be instituted on the Original Side for only Rs. 10, but that represents an insignificant fraction of the real Court costs for which the ad valorem fee stands. In the Mofussil Court, you pay the ad valorem fees for getting practically all the work done by the Court; here you have to pay liberally for every bit of work that you get done by the Court or its officers separately. So assuming that the case is heard for five days and only a reasonable number of witnesses is examined on each side, not more than ten documents on each side are put in and no adjournments are taken, the Court costs of the suit would be about Rs. 250 for the Plaintiff and about Rs. 125 for the Defendant, who, in the Mofussil Court could have managed with not more than Rs. 5 or 6. This is a very modest estimate and assumes a simplicity of procedure which you do not find in the Original Side. So we find that the Court costs on the Original Side for which the ad valorem fee stands in the Courts below, greatly exceed what both the parties together have to pay in the Mofussil Courts. The disproportion would appear all the greater, if we were to take cases like suits for declaration in which fixed fees of Rs. 10 or less are payable in the Mofussil. Your arguments on ad valorem fees might in any event furnish grounds for a revision of the Court Fees Act, but offer none against the establishment of the City Court.

If we pass from Court costs to the fees to be paid to the lawyers, we shall find the difference to be enormous. In the High Court you have got to pay Attorney and Counsel, while in the case supposed you could manage with a single pleader whose fees on the fixed scale would be Rs. 250. In the High Court the Attorney's costs assessed on a moderate scale on the basis of taxing rules as between party and party would come up to between four to five hundred rupees on either side without the Counsel's fees. Costs as between Attorney and client would usually be much more; and it is notorious that people pay much more than taxed costs, for few people care to have bills taxed. As regards Counsel's fees, if the scale as between party and party is taken as a fair index, in the hypothetical case above it would come up to Rs. 2,006, assuming, as is usual, that costs on scale No. 2 is allowed. In any case, the amount could hardly be less than Rs. 1,200 on either side.

It comes to this then that in a suit for Rs. 5,000 both sides have to spend between them about Rs. 4,000, more or less, rather more than less. In the Mofussil the same suit including costs of appeal to the High Court could hardly cost Rs. 2,000 all told. For convenience of comparison I have discussed this hypothetical case with reference to the taxing rules. As an illustration of what the actual costs come up to, I may refer to a case in my personal experience in which the costs for getting a decision on a simple issue went Rs. 15,000 on one side and Rs. 80,000 altogether. Out of the 15,000, over Rs. 3,000 had to be paid for briefing charges, when the actual costs of preparing the brief could not on any estimate have exceeded Rs. 400.

In fact your argument from cost would hardly bear even a superficial examination. If your argument is correct, considering that the High Court is self-supporting, you would have to say that the High Court costs less than a District Court. That would be an excellent argument for abolishing District Courts forthwith and establishing circuits of the High Court all over the country. From the point of view of costs the proposition has only to be stated to be hooted as absurd.

So much for costs. You set much store by the facts that the public are evidently content with the High Court and have not set up a clamour for a City Court. A large part of the public silence is due to the fact that the public do not know that this would be a remedy for what they are daily suffering. By the "public" I do not mean the comparatively few people who can afford the luxury of a litigation in the High Court, but the vast body of poorer people who are compelled to put up with injuries because they have not the means to seek redress in the High Court. One has only to go about among small merchants, middle class property-owners and people with moderate means to see that these unredressed wrongs are a painful reality. It is to this greater public that the City Court would come as a welcome blessing, and with such a tribunal in Calcutta less wrong could be done to poorer people by their more resourceful neighbours, with the strong assurance of impunity that the present costly system of administration of justice gives them. If the proposed City Court is shown to be capable of doing this much, the proposal would seem to be amply justified.

I need only add in conclusion that this question must be decided solely from the point of view of public interest and not from that of the real or supposed interest of one branch of the profession or the other. Speaking personally, I am of opinion that the establishment of a City Court will not really be conducive to the professional interests of the Vakil Bar. I believe the establishment of a City Court will mean a great reduction in the fees of leading Barristers and is bound to tell upon the fees of the leading members of my branch of the profession. The prizes of my branch of the profession would surely be less attractive though the blanks may be fewer. However that may be, the interests of any branch of the profession should not be allowed to obscure the issue from the point of view of public interest.

Yours faithfully,
VAKIL.

his family, for the management and supervision of the ward's property and for the discharge of the Government revenue and other public demands. Class II includes, first, the payment of all rents, cesses and other demands due to any superior landlord in respect of any land held on behalf of the ward, and, secondly, the liquidation of debts payable by the ward.

The view of the learned District Judge is that the words "debts payable by the ward" include decretal debts, and that, therefore, where property in the hands of a manager is attached in execution of a decree, the manager is bound nevertheless to pay the other charges referred to above before he satisfies the decree.

In my opinion, this view cannot be maintained. One has only to look to the provisions of, for example, secs. 23, 23A, 24 and 60A of the Act to infer that the Legislature had no such intention. The learned District Judge has referred to sec. 60A as supporting his view. That section provides that no property which is or has been under the charge of the Court of Wards, shall be liable at any time, except with the leave of the Court, to be taken in execution of a decree made in respect of any contract entered into by the ward without the leave of the Court while his property was under such charge. The inference which I draw from this is that the Legislature did not intend to interfere with the execution of decrees in any cases other than those specified. The other sections, to which I have referred, seem likewise to show that it was not contemplated that the provisions of the general law should be overridden in this connection.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal with costs, discharge the order of the learned District Judge and restore that of the first Court. I would assess the costs at two gold mohurs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree. So far as I can see, all that sec. 48 of the Court of Wards Act does is to lay down instructions for the guidance of the manager in the due course of management and as to the order in which the ward's liabilities are to be satisfied out of the free funds at the manager's disposal. We have been shown nothing in the Act at all similar to the provisions, for instance, contained in sec. 3 of the Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act. The execution of decrees, obtained against the ward before his estate comes under the management of the Court of Wards, is not barred, and sec. 51 of the Court of Wards Act shows that after the estate is taken over, the ward can both sue and be sued, subject to his being properly represented. The provisions in secs. 60 and 60A do not meet the present case, and apart from those provisions, our attention was drawn to nothing in the Act to prevent a decree against a ward from being executed under the general law like any other decree obtained by a creditor against a debtor. The learned Government Pleader has been unable to produce any authority for the view for which he contended. If that was the right view of the effect of sec. 48, I should certainly have expected that some authority would be forthcoming to support it.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.

1914,
Heard, 24, and 27, April.
Judgment, 18, May.

RAGHUNATH DAS and ors., Appellants,
v.
SUNDAR DAS KHETRI, since deceased, and another, Respondents.

Attachment, effect of—Insolvency of judgment-debtor after attachment—Effect—Official Assignee if takes subject to attachment—Official Assignee how to be bound by execution proceedings—Substitution of Official Assignee for judgment-debtor, if necessary—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), secs. 32, 372, if apply—Summons on substituted party to appear, necessity of—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 248—Notice of proceedings, necessity of, to bind Official Assignee—Stay of execution proceedings when judgment-debtor declared insolvent—Insolvent Debtors (India) Act, 11 and 12 Vict., C. 21, sec. 49—Sale without serving notice, effect of—Irregularity.

Attachment in execution of a money-decree followed by an order for sale does not confer on the judgment-creditor any charge on the land.

SARKIES v. BUNDHO BAEE (1) referred to.

An attachment prevents and avoids any private alienation, but does not invalidate an alienation by operation of law such as is effected by a vesting order under the Insolvent Debtors (India) Act of 1848, and an order for sale, though it binds the parties, does not confer title.

Where after an order for sale made at the instance of an attaching creditor, an order vesting the property to be sold in the Official Assignee was made on 8th September 1904, and on the 12th September 1904, the Judge stayed the sale until further orders, and the attaching creditor then applied for and obtained an order for the issue and service on the Official Assignee of a notice calling upon him to show cause why he should not be substituted in the suit for the judgment-debtors; and the Official Assignee though duly served took no notice of it, and when the time fixed by the notice to show cause expired, the attaching creditor applied for and obtained an order not only substituting the Official Assignee as a party in the place of the judgment-debtors, but directing the sale to proceed, and the sale took place and the purchaser obtained the usual certificate which referred to the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors as the property sold:

Held—That the sale was altogether irregular and inoperative.

That the execution could not proceed until the Official Assignee had been properly brought before the Court by taking out and serving on him a notice under sec. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

That the notice served was not a proper notice under sec. 248.

That taking the notice to be a proper notice preliminary to adding the Official Assignee as a party under sec. 32 of the Code, in order to bind the party added, it was necessary after he had been added to serve him with a summons to appear and answer.

That no such proceeding having been taken under either sec. 32 or under sec. 372 of the Code, the Official Assignee (who did not appear to have been aware of the order for sale) was not bound by the sale.

Quære.—Whether these sections were applicable after the final decree.

GOODALL v. MUSSOORIE BANK, LTD. (2) referred to.

(1) 1 N. W. P. H. C. Rep. 172 (1869).

(2) I. L. R. 10 All. 97 (1887).

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

Held—That the judgment-debtors had at the time of the sale no right, title or interest which could, be sold to or, vest in a purchaser.

If the judgment-debt was included in the schedule filed by the insolvents under the Act of 1848, the executing Court was bound to stay the sale under sec. 49 of the Act.

MALKARJUN v. NARHARI (3) did not apply to this case, as no notice was served under sec. 248 of the Civil Procedure Code and the purchaser (the attaching creditor himself) had full notice of and were responsible for the irregularities of the procedure adopted.

GOPAL CHUNDAR CHATTERJEE v. GUNAMONI DASI (4) referred to.

This was an Appeal from a judgment of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 4th June 1912. The facts of the case fully appear from the Judgment of Chitty and Teunon, JJ., which was as follows :—

"This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the Plaintiffs to establish their title to, and recover possession of, certain lease-hold properties along with the colliery, engines, machinery, tools, plant and whatever else there might be standing thereon. The contest is between the Plaintiffs as purchasers from the Official Assignee of Bengal and the Defendants as purchasers in execution of a decree.

"The facts are shortly as follows :—On 1st December 1899, the Defendants granted a patta of coal lands to Atul Nath Chatterji and Rajendra Nath Chatterji at an annual jama of Rs. 3,626-11-10 and a salami of Rs. 4,001. The lessees were two of four brothers, the others being Aghore Nath Chatterji and Chandra Nath Chatterji. The four brothers, who were members of a joint family, became heavily indebted to several creditors. On 6th December 1903, the present Defendants filed a suit against their lessees for rent under the patta, and on 23rd June 1904 obtained a decree against them for Rs. 3,090-10-6 and costs Rs. 350-7 annas. The other two brothers were also parties to that suit as pro formâ Defendants. On 13th July 1904, the Defendants applied for execution of their decree by attachment of the immoveable properties belonging to the judgment-debtors. The lease-hold property was accordingly attached, and 5th September 1904 was fixed for the sale. On that day, the judgment-debtors Nos. 1 and 2 applied for time to enable them to raise money by sale of the attached property, and the sale was accordingly adjourned until 10th September. On the 8th September, all four brothers filed their petition in the Court for the Relief of Insolvent Debtors at Calcutta and, on the same day, the Court made the usual vesting order under sec. 7 of the Indian Insolvents Act. On 30th September 1904, the Defendants applied to the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan to substitute the Official Assignee in the place of the judgment-debtors in the execution proceedings under their decree. On 23rd November, notice was ordered to issue to the Official Assignee to show cause why he should not be substituted in the place of the judgment-debtors and it was made returnable on 22nd December 1904. On 10th January 1905, the Subordinate Judge finding that Mr. Miller had been duly served with the notice, ordered that he be substituted in the place of the judgment-debtors and 6th March 1905 was fixed for the sale of the attached property. On that day, the property was sold and purchased by the Defendants, the decree-holders. On 18th April 1905, the sale was confirmed,* and on the 14th June 1905, an order was made for delivery of possession to the Defendants as purchasers and they accordingly took possession under it. Meanwhile, on the 23rd May 1905, the Official Assignee applied to the Insolvency Court and obtained an order that he should be at liberty to sell either by public auction or private contract to the best purchaser the properties of the insolvents including the lease-hold premises in question. He did not, as a matter of fact, sell at that time; but, on the 24th March 1908, he sold the premises now in question to Hormusji Pestonji Banker alias Billimoria, a Parsi gentleman of Asansol. On the 24th June 1908, three months later, Banker sold the property to the present Plaintiffs. On 16th July 1908, this suit was instituted to recover possession of the property.

(3) L. R. 27 I. A. 216: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).

(4) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 370 (1892).

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

"The learned Subordinate Judge has decreed the Plaintiffs' suit and the Defendants have appealed.

"The first question is one of fact—whether the notice for substitution was duly served on the Official Assignee in the execution case. The Judge says that it is shown to have been served on a clerk of the Official Assignee and, in the absence of evidence to show that this amounted to service on the Official Assignee or that the clerk had authority to receive it, he finds that it was not properly served. This finding appears to us to be entirely against the evidence on the record. The clerk of the Official Assignee, Lakhinarayan Dhar, states that he has been an Assistant in the Official Assignee's office for 29 years. He admits that the notice was served in that office, and that he signed acknowledging the receipt. He states that he received the notice on behalf of the Official Assignee, and made over the copy to Mr. Langer, the Head Assistant. The Small Cause Court bailiff (who has been a bailiff for 30 years and who served the notice) says that he has known Lakhinarayan Babu as the head clerk or Bara Babu for 20 years and that he served notices for the Official Assignee upon him 20 or 30 times. He states that he always served notices for Mr. A. B. Miller on Lakhinarayan Dhar in this manner. There can be no question on this evidence that the notice was served in the Official Assignee's office in the usual way, and, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, we must presume that Lakhinarayan Dhar was a person authorized to receive such notices within the meaning of sec. 75 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. It would have been simple for the opposite party to have called evidence from the Official Assignee's office to disprove this, had it been incorrect. We therefore hold that the notice for the substitution was duly served on the Official Assignee.

"The next question is what was the effect of the sale in execution as against the Official Assignee. It was argued for the Appellants (1) that the Official Assignee was bound by the execution proceedings and by the sale which took place, as we have stated; (2) that the lease-hold interest did not vest in the Official Assignee, because he did not take possession; and (3) that the decree being one for rent, the decree-holders were entitled to sell the lease-hold interest of the insolvents and to give a good title.

* The certificate of sale was in terms following:—

"This is to certify that whatever right, title and interest the judgment-debtors had to and in the properties specified in the schedule have been in execution of decree in Money Suit No. 407 of 1903, sold at public auction on the 6th March 1905, and that at that sale for the consideration of Rs. 1,315 the aforesaid two decree-holders have purchased the properties."

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

"(1) With regard to the first question, it must be conceded that the order for substituting the Official Assignee in place of the judgment-debtors in the execution proceedings was incorrect [see the case of A. B. Miller v. Budhsingh Dudhuria (5)]. But the Official Assignee having been added and having taken no exception to the procedure, the sale must be regarded as having taken place in his presence and as binding upon him. The fact that a person who was not the representative of the judgment-debtors was brought upon the record as such representative would not affect the validity of the sale. See Malkarjun v. Narhari (3). The Official Assignee having taken no steps to have that sale set aside in the manner provided by law, the sale must be taken to be good as against him.

"(2) We cannot accept the second contention raised by the learned pleader for the Appellants that the property had not vested in the Official Assignee. It is true that in cases of lease-hold property the Official Assignee has the right to elect whether or not he will accept the property under the vesting order. If he does so, there is no question that his acceptance relates back to the date of the vesting order. See Abdul Razak v. J. G. Kiernan (6). That was the converse case, and the question there was whether the Official Assignee could be made liable for the rent of the lease-hold property. It was held that, inasmuch as he had taken possession, he must be regarded as having elected to take over the property. Here, he paid no rent, nor did he take actual possession; but the property did vest in him by the vesting order and that he regarded it as having vested in him is made plain by the application which he made to the Insolvency Court, on the 23rd May 1905, for leave to sell the property. He could not sell it unless it were vested in him. That being so, we must hold that the sale was effective as against the Official Assignee and also against the Plaintiffs who claim through him. The Plaintiffs are, in fact, in a dilemma. If the property had not then vested in the Official Assignee, it was sold away, before the Official Assignee acquired any title to it; if it had vested in him—and we think that it had—it was sold in his presence and the sale was binding on him.

"It is not necessary, under these circumstances, to discuss the third point raised by the learned pleader for the Appellants that, the decree being a decree for rent, it gave the Defendants a first charge on the property. But we may say that we cannot understand how that could be the case with regard to a decree of this kind which was for rent of coal lands and not agricultural lands.

"The appeal must be allowed and the Plaintiffs' suit dismissed with costs in both Courts." Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Appellants submitted that the Appellants had established their title to the property in question. It was settled law that mere attachment of property does not create any charge upon the property in favour of the attaching judgment-creditor: Peacock v. Madan

(3) L. R. 27 I. A. 216: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).

(5) I. L. R. 18 Cal. 48 (1890).

(6) I. L. R. 22 Bom. 617 (1898).

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

Gopal (7). After the order of the High Court vesting the property of the insolvents in the Official Assignee, there was no interest or title in the property left in the judgment-debtors. Assuming that the notice of the execution proceeding was served on the Official Assignee, the Official Assignee was not bound to interfere with the sale. What was being sold was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors and not the interest of the Official Assignee in the property. Under sec. 49 of the Insolvent Debtors Act, 1848 (11 and 12 Vict. Chap. 21), the Court executing the decree was bound to stay the execution proceedings. In the section "the said Court may stay the proceedings in such suit or action," the word "may" ought to be construed to mean must. The Court did in fact stay the sale, but afterwards again proceeded with the sale without any jurisdiction. Sec. 372 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, was applicable to a suit only and not to the execution proceedings: Goodall v. Mussoorie Bank, Ltd. (2) and Collector of Muzaffarnagar v. Husaini Begam (8). The only remedy of the judgment-creditors was to prove the debt in the insolvency proceedings. The Official Assignee is a trustee of the property vested in him for the benefit of all the creditors of the insolvents. It would defeat the object of the Insolvency Act, if one judgment-creditor were to be allowed to take the property for himself alone. The Appellants had purchased, the property from the Official Assignee in whom the title to the property really vested on the date of the sale. There was no decree against the Official Assignee and no order of sale was passed against him, and the sale therefore did not affect his title. Reference was made to Hunt v. Bholagir (9).

Mr. Bhugwandin Dubé for the Appellants submitted that the Official Assignee was made a party to the execution case under sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, as the representative of the judgment-debtors. The Court executing the decree had jurisdiction to make the order and it was immaterial whether the order made by it was right or wrong. The Official Assignee had notice of the execution and the order for sale. He had a remedy to object to the sale under sec. 244 [Punchanun v. Rabia Bibee (10)] and not in a separate suit. The Court executing the decree sold the property to the knowledge of the Official Assignee. It had jurisdiction to decide rightly or wrongly, but the remedy of the Official Assignee was to set aside the sale under sec. 244. He did not do so. The Appellants could not succeed without setting aside the sale which had become binding on the Official Assignee. Further, the period prescribed for setting aside the sale was one year from the date of the sale under Art. 12 of the 2nd Schedule to the Limitation Act, 1877, and the Plaintiffs' suit was consequently barred by limitation. Reliance was placed on Malkarjun v. Narhari (3). After the Official Assignee had been made a party to the execution, he must have received all notices relating to the execution proceedings, although they were not printed in the Record.

[MR. AMEER ALI—Referred to Gopal Chundar Chatterjee v. Gunamoni Dasi (4);

(2) I. L. R. 10 All. 97 (1887).
(7) I. L. R. 29 Cal. 428 (F. B.) (1902).
(8) I. L. R. 18 All. 86 (1895).

(3) L. R. 27 I. A. 216, 224: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).
(4) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 370 (1892).
(9) 1 Bom. H. C. R. 251 (1864).
(10) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 711 (1890).

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

absence of notice under sec. 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure vitiates the sale.]

Counsel submitted that it ought to be presumed that the Court held and conducted the sale after complying with all the requirements of the law: Bimola Soondyree v. Kalee Kishen (11). (Counsel asked their Lordships to adjourn the hearing of the appeal in order to enable the Respondent to print such further documents as were necessary, but their Lordships refused the application.) In any case, even if the sale was held without a notice under sec. 248, it was not a nullity and the sale could not be set aside in a separate suit.

[LORD MOULTON.—The terms of the certificate of sale shewed that what was sold was the right, interest and title which the judgment-debtors had in the property at the time of the sale. They had no title by reason of the vesting order. Whether the Official Assignee was a party to the execution or not, his interest in the property was not in fact sold by the Court.]

What was sold was the lease-hold property. It was sold to the knowledge of the Official Assignee. It was admitted that the Appellants purchased the property with full knowledge of the execution proceedings. The Appellants were barred by equity from disputing the sale. At any rate the Appellants' claim as to the moveables was barred by limitation.

Counsel for the Appellants were not heard in reply.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—The action in which this appeal arises is an action for the recovery of a lease-hold colliery. The Plaintiffs (the present Appellants) claimed title to the property under the Official Assignee in the insolvency of the lessees. The order vesting the property in such Official Assignee was made under the Insolvent Debtors (India) Act, 1848, on the 8th September 1904. At the date of this order the colliery had been attached in execution case No. 303 of 1904, in which the lessees were the judgment-debtors and the Defendants (the present Respondents) were the judgment-creditors, and an order had been obtained for the sale of the interest therein of the judgment-debtors. Counsel for the Respondents admitted that attachment in execution of a money-decree followed by such an order for sale does not confer on the judgment-creditor any charge on the land [see Sarkies v. Bundho Baee (1)]. An attachment prevents and avoids any private alienation, but does not invalidate an alienation by operation of law such as is effected by a vesting order under the Act of 1848, and an order for sale, though it binds the parties, does not confer title.

It follows that under the order of the 8th September 1904, the property vested in the Official Assignee free from any charge in favour of the judgment-debtors. The Official Assignee in due course, by order of the Court having jurisdiction in the insolvency, sold the property, and the Appellants derived title through the purchaser. Their title is thus primâ facie a good and valid title, but it is disputed by the Respondents under the following circumstances:

On the 12th September 1904 the Judge in the execution proceedings stayed the

(11) 22 W. R. 5 (1874).

(1) 1 N. W. P. High Court Rep. 172 (1869)

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

sale therein directed until further order. This was the proper and indeed the only thing he could do, for the judgment-debtors had no longer any interest which could be sold. Further, if, as was no doubt the case, the judgment debt was included in the schedule filed by the insolvents under the Act, their Lordships are of opinion that he was bound to stay the sale under sec. 49 of the Act. At any rate, the executor could not proceed until the Official Assignee had been properly brought before the Court, and an order binding on him had been obtained. In their Lordships' opinion this could only be done by obtaining an order for the issue of, and by serving him with, a notice under sec. 248 of the Civil Code of 1882, which was the Code then in force. It was suggested in argument that he might have been made a party to the proceedings either under sec. 32 or under sec. 372 of the Code, but even if these sections are applicable after final decree, as to which there is considerable doubt [see Goodall v. Mussoorie Bank, Ltd. (2)], no proceedings seem to have been taken thereunder. What the judgment-creditors did was this: they applied to the Judge in the execution case for an order, and on the 30th September 1904, and again on the 3rd November, obtained an order for the issue and service on the Official Assignee of a notice calling upon him to show cause why he should not be substituted in the suit for the judgment-debtors. This was not a proper notice under the 248th section. A notice under that section should have called upon the Official Assignee to show cause why the decree should not be executed against him. Had the Official Assignee been served with such a notice, it is at least probable that he would, as in their Lordships' opinion he certainly could, have shewn good cause why the decree should not be executed, the property having under the Act and vesting order been transferred to him for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent generally. It is possible that the notice might be upheld as a proper notice preliminary to adding the Official Assignee as a party under the 32nd section, if that section were applicable, but in order to bind a party added under the 32nd section, he has, after being added, to be served with a summons to appear and answer, and it is not suggested that any such summons was served. Similarly, it is not suggested that any order to carry on proceedings was obtained under the 372nd section.

Having obtained leave in that behalf the Respondents proceeded to serve the notice in question, and their Lordships will assume that the notice was duly served on the Official Assignee. The Official Assignee took no notice of it, possibly because he had no objection to being substituted as a party, and expected to be served with notice of any further application against him. There is no evidence that he knew that an order for sale had been already made. The time fixed by the notice for cause to be shown having expired, the Respondents, without further notice to the Official Assignee, applied for and obtained an order not only substituting the Official Assignee as a party in the place of the judgment-debtors, but directing the sale to proceed. The sale accordingly proceeded. There had to be a fresh sale proclamation by reason of the 291st section of the Code. Such proclamation is not in evidence, but their Lordships must presume in default of evidence to the contrary that the property offered for sale was the property ordered to be sold, that is to say, the right and interest of the judgment-debtors in the colliery. At the sale, the Respondents (the judgment-debtors) having obtained leave to bid became the purchasers. The sale was confirmed by the Court on the 8th April 1905, and on the 25th April 1905, the Appellants obtained the usual certificate which refers to the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors in the property sold. Their Lordships are of opinion that this sale was altogether irregular and inoperative. In the first place, the property having passed to the Official Assignee it was wrong to allow the sale to proceed at all. The judgment-debtors had no charge on the land, and the Court could not properly give them such a charge at the expense of the other creditors of the insolvents. In the second place, no proper steps had been taken to bring the Official Assignee before the Court and obtain an order binding on him, and accordingly he was not bound by anything which was done. In the third place, the judgment-debtors had at the time of the sale no right, title or interest which could be sold to or vested in a purchaser, and consequently the Respondents acquired no title to the property.

(2) I. L. R. 10 All. 97 (1887).

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

Their Lordships' attention was called in this connection to the case of Malkarjun v. Narhari (3), but in their opinion there is nothing in that case which has any bearing upon the present appeal. As laid down in Gopal Chundar Chatterjee v. Gunamoni Dasi (4), a notice under sec. 248 of the Code is necessary in order that the Court should obtain jurisdiction to sell property by way of execution as against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor. In the case in Malkarjun v. Narhari (3), such a notice had been served, and the Court had determined, as it had power to do for the purpose of the execution proceedings, that the party served with the notice was in fact the legal representative. It had therefore jurisdiction to sell, though the decision as to who was the legal representative was erroneous. There being jurisdiction to sell, and the purchasers having no notice of any irregularity, the sale held good unless or until it were set aside by appropriate proceedings for the purpose. The present case is of a wholly different character. No proper notice was served under the section, and the Respondents had full notice of, and indeed were responsible for, the irregularities of the procedure adopted.

The Respondents suggested that with regard to certain machinery which was included in the sale of the colliery by the Official Assignee, and which was also sought to be recovered in this action, the statute of limitations was a good defence. This point does not appear to have been taken at any time prior to the hearing before their Lordships' Board. It was not one of the issues settled by the Court on the action, nor did the Respondents mention it among their grounds of appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge. Their Lordships consider that it involves an inquiry as to the nature of the machinery to which it is said to be applicable, and that it is therefore too late to raise it.

Their Lordships will humbly advise

(3) L. R. 27 I. A. 216: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).

(4) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 370 (1892).

(3) L. R. 27 I. A. 216: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).

RAGHUNATH DAS v. SUNDAR DAS KHETRI.

His Majesty that the appeal ought to be allowed and the decree of the High Court of the 4th June 1912 set aside with costs, here and below, and that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge of Burdwan of the 8th September 1909 ought to be restored.

Solicitors: Messrs. W. W. Box & Co. for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Barrow, Rogers and Nevill for the Respondents.

B. D. Appeal allowed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

P. C. APPLICATION No. 85 OF 1913.

JENKINS, C. J.
WOODROFFE, J.
1914,
5, May.

SYED ABDULLAH HUSAIN CHOUDHRY, Plaintiff, Petitioner,
v.
ANANDA CHANDRA RAY, Defendant, Opposite Party.

Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 12—Application for leave to appeal to Privy Council—Time taken for obtaining copy of decree if may be excluded—Indian Statute permitting exclusion, if ultra vires—Order in Council of 1838—Government of India Act of 1858, sec. 64—Letters Patent, cls. 39, 44—Privy Council Appeals Act (VI of 1874).

An application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council is not time-barred, if excluding the time taken for obtaining a copy of the decree appealed from it is found to have been made within 6 months.

Sec. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908 is within the legislative powers of the Government of India in permitting such exclusion.

This was an application presented on the 22nd December 1913, for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a judgment and decree of this Court passed in Appeal from Original Decree No. 513 of 1910, dated the 16th of June 1913.

This application was made in connection with a suit for rent valued at Rs. 11,000. The judgment of the High Court being one of reversal, an appeal lay to His Majesty as a matter of course. The judgment of the High Court was passed on the 16th June 1913. Application for a copy of the judgment and decree was made on 21st November 1913; the copy was ready on 1st December 1913. The petition for leave to appeal was filed on 22nd December 1913. On the application for leave to appeal coming on for hearing,

Mr. Chuckerbutty (with him Babus Upendra Lal Ray and Bhupendra Chandra Guha) for the Opposite Party submitted that the application was out of time, having been filed six days beyond the statutory period of six months. The provision enacted in sec. 12, sub-sec. (2), Indian Limitation Act, allowing time for taking copy of the decree was ultra vires of the Indian Legislature in view of the order of Her Majesty in Council, dated 10th April 1838, passed under 3 and 4 William IV, C. 41, V. 24, which makes six months' time peremptory and which could not be superseded by an Act passed by the Indian Legislature. Reads the Order in Council from Bentwich's Privy Council Practice, p. 149 (Edn. 1912), Sufford and Wheeler, p. 491, etc., etc., Order in Council, dated 11th April 1838, the provisions of Order in Council of 1838, renewed by sec. 64, C. 106, of 21 and 22 Vict., C. 106 (Government of India Act of 1858). The Indian Legislature must not override Parliamentary legislation concerning India: Letters Patent of 1866, secs. 39 and 44; 24 and 25 Vict., Cap. 10, sec. 11. This is the position taken up by the Legislature in India: sec. 112 of the Civi

SYED ABDULLAH HUSAIN CHOUDHRY v. ANANDA CHANDRA RAY.

Procedure Code, Ilbert's Government of India, p. 179. Cites Queen v. Burah (10), Gajadhur v. Emam Ali (11), Jawahir Lal v. Naraip Das (12), Collector of Khaira v. Pestonjee (13), Alter Caufman v. Government of Bombay (14), In re Sitaram (4), Anderson v. Peryasami (3), Ram Chandra v. Ganasham (6), In re Feda Hossain (15), In re Mahomed Cozum (16), East India Co. v. Syed Ally (17). Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. v. Purna Chandra (8)—the only decision after the Amending Act of 1908—does not touch the point.

It is not necessary to file a copy of the judgment with the application for leave; so there is no necessity for the Legislature allowing an extension of time on this ground.

[WOODROFFE, J.—Is it not the invariable practice to entertain such applications?]

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE.—Such applications are invariably entertained, if presented on the re-opening day, when the period of limitation expires during the holidays.]

The question was never raised before and never considered. The matter was not provided for in former legislation. The six months' time was first embodied in the Civil Procedure Code of 1877 and then re-enacted in the Limitation Act of 1877 and so omitted from the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. The extension of time was first provided for in the Amending Act of 1908. The present question could not have arisen before.

[THE CHIEF JUSTICE—Refers to the preamble to 21 and 22 Vict. and enquires if it does not indicate the intention of the Legislature in enacting sec. 64.]

The section clearly revives the Order in Council of 1838: Secs. 22 and 24 of 3 and 4 Will. IV, C. 41, Order in Council, realise above Statute. Field's Regulations, p. 139, shows how the Sudder Dewani Adawlat came into existence; see 24 and 25 Vict, C. 10, sec. 8, which abolishes Sudder Dewani Adawlat. The provisions of the Order in Council made applicable to the Supreme Court and Judges of that Court sec. 14: Morley's Digest, Vol. I, p. cxxxv.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen (with Babu Surendra Nath Das Gupta) for the Petitioner Appellant to England:—

The provision in sec. 12, sub-sec. (2), Indian Limitation Act, entitling me to compute the time necessary for obtaining copy is quite within the jurisdiction of the Indian Legislature. The legislative powers of that Legislature with regard to the administration of justice in our Courts is defined by sec. 22, Indian Councils Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 67. Among the exceptions provided by that section, the one in favour of the Government of India Act, 21 and 22 Vict., c. 106, is the only provision relevant to the present enquiry. But that exception does not affect the present questions, for the object and scope of 21 and 22 Vict., C. 106, are entirely different, viz., to regulate the administrative government of the country and not the business of our Courts of Justice. Reads the title of the Act, the preamble and the various headings and subdivisions of the Act and the subjects discussed in

(3) I. L. R. 15 Mad. 169 (1891).
(4) I. L. R. 15 All. 14 (1892).
(6) I. L. R. 19 Bom. 301 (1894).
(8) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 510 (1912).
(10) L. R. 5 I. A. 178 at p. 193 (1878).
(11) 15 B. L. R. 221, 223 (1875).
(12) I. L. R. 1 All. 644 (1878).
(13) 3 Moo. I. A. 220 (1843).
(14) I. L. R. 18 Bom. 636 (1894).
(15) I. L. R. 1 Cal. 431 (1876).
(16) 5 Moo. I. A. 196 (1852).
(17) 7 Moo. I. A. 555 (1827).

them. The object of that Act was merely to provide for the transfer of the government of this country from the East India Company to the Crown and to make some changes relating to the control and regulation of that Government which were deemed necessary for that purpose. Sec. 64 clearly speaks of the Charter granted to the Company and the Government, i.e., the executive or administrative government of India. The Act therefore does not in any way fetter the absolute right of the Indian Legislature to pass an Act relating to the administration of justice and the conduct of business in our Courts, e.g., regulating the time within which an application of the present nature may be presented in this Hon'ble Court.

The question is placed beyond the sphere of doubt by sec. 11 of the Charter Act, 24 and 25 Vict., C. 104, authorising the establishment of High Courts and defining their jurisdiction, an Act which was passed in the very same year as the Indian Councils Act. By that section, all orders passed by the Sovereign in Council and relating to the conduct of business in the High Courts are made subject to the legislative powers of the Indian Legislature relating to the administration of justice in this country which powers are unfettered in this respect as already submitted. Reads sec. 11 and also sec. 9 of the Charter Act. The Letters Patent that were authorised by and issued under that Act provide for appeals to the King in sec. 39, and by sec. 44 makes all the provisions contained in the Letters Patent subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council.

The Order in Council of the 10th April 1838 has since been considerably varied by introducing additional provisions for appeal to the Judicial Committee, e.g., cases coming within the second clause of sec. 110, C. P. C. This variation has been made evidently under the authority of the Charter Act, 24 and 25 Vict., C. 104, and the above provision of the Civil Procedure Code and the provision in sec. 39 of the Letters Patent to a similar effect all derive their authority from the Charter Act itself.

[JENKINS, C. J.—Have you looked into the history of Art. 179 of the Limitation Act providing for the six months' time?]

Yes, I have. The provision was originally in the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, and in 1877 it was transferred to and made part of the Limitation Act of that year. The section in the Civil Procedure Code of 1859 provided that the application for leave to appeal might be filed on the opening day, if the Court happened to remain closed on the day on which such six months' time expired. If my learned friend's argument were sound, that provision of the Code of 1859 would also be ultra vires of the Legislature, though it stood and was regarded as good law for at least 18 years, and I take it, even by the Judicial Committee.

Though the question has never before arisen in this form, there are authorities to show that secs. 5 and 12 of the Limitation Act, 1908, apply to an application of the present nature. Refers to Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co. v. Purna Chandra (8). The cases cited by my learned friend do not apply. The Privy Council decision in Gajadhur v. Emam Ali (11) refers evidently to the irregularity of there having been no formal application made to the High

(8) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 510 (1912).
(11) 15 B. L. R. 228 (1875).

Court on which leave to appeal might be granted and which was as a matter of fact granted upon an application for review. The question of limitation though raised in the argument was not decided by their Lordships. The other cases cited are either under the old Limitation Act of 1877 which did not allow time for copy of cases in which neither the question that arose nor the decision given throws any light on the present matter, e.g., Burah's case (10). With them I have no quarrel.

Mr. Chuckerbutty in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an application by one who desires to appeal to His Majesty in Council for a certificate that, as regards amount or value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of sec. 110 of the Civil Procedure Code.

It is conceded that if the application is within time, a certificate ought to issue. It is however contended that the appeal is not within the period of 6 calendar months prescribed by the Order in Council of 1838. To this it is answered that the application is within 6 months from the date of the decree appealed from, if in computing the period of limitation the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree is excluded.

The Order in Council does not expressly allow this exclusion ; but the Limitation Act of 1908, sec. 12, purports to direct it. The question for our decision is whether it was within the competence of the Indian Legislature to enact this provision. The Governor-General in Council has power at legislative meetings to make laws for all Courts within British India subject to certain exceptions, and among them is this, that he cannot make any law repealing or affecting any provision of the Government of India Act, 1858 (24 & 25 Vict., C. 67, sec. 22).

Sec. 64 of the Government of India Act, 1858, provides that all Acts and provisions now in force under Charter or otherwise concerning India shall subject to the provisions of this Act continue in force and be construed as referring to the Secretary of State in Council in the place of the said Company and the Court of Directors and Court of Proprietors thereof.

Therefore it is contended, sec. 12 of the Limitation Act, so far as it relates to an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, was beyond the powers of the Indian Legislature.

This section is not the first instance in which the Indian Legislature has made provisions which purport to modify the absolute terms of the Order of 1838.

Thus by the Privy Council Appeals Act, 1874, it was provided that application by any one desiring to appeal to Her Majesty in Council must ordinarily be made within six months from the date of the decree ; but if that period expired, when the Court was closed, the application might be made on the day the Court re-opened (see sec. 8).

The Bill which afterwards became this Act is said to have been submitted to and approved by the Judicial Committee (see note in Whitley Stokes' Anglo-Indian Codes, Vol. II, p. 435).

I have looked further into this, and found a statement by Mr. Arthur Hobhouse, as he then was, that fully bears out this note. Addressing the Governor-General's Council he said, "The Bill was now put into a shape which was acceptable to the Judicial Committee of the (10) I. R. 5 I. A. 178 at p. 193 (187).

SYED ABDULLAH HUSAIN CHOUDHRY v. ANANDA CHANDRA RAY.

Privy Council. The Secretary of State had been in correspondence with the Judicial Committee at our desire, and they have approved of the Bill as it stood."

This provision was repeated in the Codes of 1877 and 1882 (see sec. 897), and though the section in the Code of 1882 was repealed in 1887, that was not, as I understand, by reason of any doubt as to the competence of the Indian Legislature.

By the Limitation Act of 1877, it was provided that an application for the admission of an appeal to Her Majesty in Council should be presented within six months from the date of the decree appealed against (Article 177).

Though an opinion was once expressed that this provision was repealed by the Code of 1882 [Fazulunnissa v. Mulo (1)], no doubt seems ever to have been entertained as to the power of the Indian Legislature to deal with this subject [Lakshmanan v. Peryasami (2), Anderson v. Peryasami (3), In re Sitaram (4), Thurai v. Jainilabdeen (5), Ram Chandra v. Ganasham (6)]. Prior to 1874, the more general view in this Court seems to have been that when the time for appealing expired in vacation, the petition could not be presented on the day the Court re-opened [Zamvaco v. Skinner (7)]. But I find that it has now become the established practice to receive an application made on the day the Court re-opens, though beyond the prescribed six months, and this has been in reliance on sec. 8 of the Privy Council Appeals Act, 1874, and of the provisions that have taken its place

(1) I. L. R. 6 All. 250 (1884).
(2) I. L. R. 10 Mad. 373 (1887).
(3) I. L. R. 15 Mad. 169 (1891).
(4) I. L. R. 15 All. 14 (1892).
(5) I. L. R. 18 Mad. 484 (1895).
(6) I. L. R. 19 Bom. 301 (1894).
(7) 1 B. L. R. O. C. 39 (1867).

in the Code and the Limitation Acts. It is true that neither the 2nd clause of sec. 5, nor the 2nd paragraph of sec. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1877 has been applied to an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, but that is because an application for that purpose did not come within the terms of either section. The Limitation Act of 1908 has been extended to such an application.

I do not rely on the decision in Eastern Mortgage & Agency Co. v. Purna Chandra (8), as showing that this extension was valid, as the objection to the powers of the Indian Legislature was not advanced in that case. This is the first occasion on which the point has been taken.

But if sec. 8 of the Privy Councils Act of 1874 was within the competence of the Indian Legislature, I think, sec. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908 must equally have been within its power. And I have shown that there is strong reason for thinking that sec. 8 was valid legislation.

The Court's power to deal with applications for leave to appeal rests primarily on cl. 39 of the Letters Patent, which ordains that any person may appeal to the Privy Council in the cases there mentioned, "subject always to such rules and orders as are now in force, or may from time to time be made respecting appeals to ourselves in Council from the Courts of the said Presidency, except so far as the said existing rules and orders are hereby varied and subject also to such further rules and orders as he may with the advice of our Privy Council hereafter make in that behalf."

Cl. 44 of the Letters Patent is in these terms:—"And we also further ordain and declare that all the provisions of these our Letters Patent are subject to the legislative powers of the Governor-General in Council exercised at meetings for the purpose of making laws and regulations and. . . . . may be in all respects amended and altered thereby."

(8) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 510 (1912).

SYED ABDULLAH HUSAIN CHOUDHRY v. ANANDA CHANDRA RAY.

Apart from sec. 64 of the Government of India Act, 1858, there would seem to be no bar to the legislation under consideration. Even if it be that legislation regarding the admission of appeal affects the prerogative of the Crown [see Motichand v. Gunga Prasad (9)], still it would not be deemed invalid by reason of that only, though subject to the power of disallowance by the Crown. Nor do I think the enactment of sec. 12 of the Limitation Act, 1908, so far as it relates to applications for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, is forbidden by sec. 64 of the Government of India Act, 1858.

The whole section must be read, and it must be borne in mind that it is a part of an Act dealing with the transfer to the Crown of the Government of India.

The conclusion then to which I come is that sec. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908 was within the legislative powers of the Government of India, and that the present application is within time. A certificate must therefore issue that as regards amount, value and nature, the case fulfils the requirements of sec. 110 of the Code.

The Respondent must bear the cost of this application which we assess at 3 gold mohurs.

(9) L. R. 29 I. A. 40 at p. 42 (1901).

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES
Nos. 202, 255 TO 258 OF 1912.

COXE, J.
IMAM, J.
1914,
Heard, 24 and 25, March.
Judgment, 2, April.

MUSSTT. SAMBHO KUOR, Defendant No. 3, Appellant,
v.
HARIHAR PERSHAD, Plaintiff, Respondent.

*Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859), secs. 14, 33—Separate share—Whole estate put up for sale, if arrears not deposited within 10 days—Sharers of defaulting share if may buy—Several co-sharers paying dues within 10 days—Purchaser, who is—Right of co-sharer declared, purchaser how may be challenged in Civil Court—*Benami, proof of—Circumstantial evidence—Court's discretion in granting time to deposit deficit court-fees—Mistake—Limitation.

When an order allowing a Plaintiff to deposit deficit Court-fees has been made and complied with, no question of limitation can be raised. But it is not proper for a Court to extend the period of limitation allowed by law to the prejudice of Defendants, by giving the Plaintiff time to deposit deficit Court-fees when there is no question of any mistake, merely to suit the convenience of the Plaintiff.

Direct evidence to prove a transaction benami, cannot be expected, since the whole object of such a transaction is to suppress evidence of the real facts. The true facts can be proved by circumstantial evidence.

When on a share of a revenue-paying estate, in respect of which a separate account has been opened, being put up for sale, the highest offer does not equal the amount due thereon, and the Collector stops the sale and declares that the entire estate will be put up to sale for arrears, unless the other recorded sharer or sharers or one or more of them shall within 10 days purchase the share in arrear by paying to Government the whole arrear due from the share, and more than one such recorded co-sharer separately make the necessary payment within the time specified, the Collector must recognize as purchaser the depositor who first pays the whole amount, or if there are more depositors than one to recognize as joint purchasers those whose payments first amount to the total arrears due.

MUSSTT. SAMBHO KUOR v. HARIHAR PERSHAD.

Sec. 33 of Act XI of 1859 applies to sales under sec. 14, and when the first payer has been declared by the Collector to be the purchaser, a co-sharer who has paid up the arrears subsequently cannot have the sale set aside by suit in the Civil Court except upon proof of the circumstances specified in sec. 33. Such a sale under sec. 14 cannot be attacked as a nullity and as such not requiring proof of those circumstances.

CHOOTURBHUJ DUTT v. ISHRI MUL (2), GOBINDLAL RAY v. RAMJANAM MISSER (3) followed.

Quære :—Whether sec. 14 of Act XI of 1859 precludes sharers of the share exposed for sale from purchasing the defaulting share.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 25th June 1912 against the decree of H. Foster, Esq., District Judge of Zilla Saran, dated the 6th June 1912.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Bejoy Kumar Bhuttacharjee for the Appellant.

Babus Umakali Mukerjee, Gonesh Dutt Singh, Shiva Nandan Ray and Rajendra Prosad for the Respondent.

(2) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 884 (1894).
(3) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 70 (1893).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

No. 202.

COXE, J.—In this case it appears that Tauzi No. 3306 comprised numerous separate accounts. The Plaintiff had an interest in separate account No. 282, the first Defendant in No. 168 and the second Defendant in No. 222. Several of these accounts fell into arrears, among them being No. 222 and the residuary share. They were advertised for sale, and the sale was fixed for the 20th September 1909. On that date No. 222, among others, was put up for sale, but no bids were received. Accordingly the Collector under sec. 14 of the Revenue Sales Act, 1859, declared that the entire estate would be sold unless the other sharers paid up the arrears within 10 days. The next day, the 21st September, the 1st Defendant paid in the arrears due on No. 222 and on the 28th he paid all the sums due on the various separate accounts. On the 22nd September the Plaintiff offered to pay in the money due on the various separate accounts with the exception of the residuary account. The Collector said that they needed no permission of his to deposit the money, and that the question, with whom the shares in default would be settled, would be decided after the expiry of the 10 days. After that on the 4th November the Collector declared the 1st Defendant to be the purchaser on the ground that he had paid in the money first. This order was upheld on appeal by the Commissioner on the 8th February, 1910, and the sale was confirmed. Possession was delivered to the 1st Defendant on the 31st March 1910 and in the following December he sold the property to the 3rd Defendant. On the 7th February

MUSSTT. SAMBHO KUOR v. HARIHAR PERSHAD.

1911, this suit was brought for possession of the whole of No. 222. and in the alternative for possession of half. The learned District Judge held that the first Defendant was a mere benamidar for the second Defendant, who was a defaulting proprietor of No. 222 and not entitled to purchase under sec. 14 of the Act. Accordingly, he decreed the Plaintiff's suit in full. The 3rd Defendant appeals.

An objection taken that the suit was instituted out of time was dropped. It appears that the suit was instituted on the last day with a Court-fee of Rs. 800 in defect. The Sub-Judge, in whose Court the case was instituted, weakly allowed two adjournments to put in this money and subsequently the Court was closed for three days. The money was paid on the opening day. The order of the Sub-Judge was in my opinion quite unjustifiable. It is not proper for a Court to extend the period of limitation beyond that allowed by law, to the prejudice of Defendants, when there is no question of any mistake, merely to suit the convenience of the Plaintiff. But the order having been made and complied with, the question of limitation cannot now be raised.

Next it is contended that the lower Court erred in holding that the 1st Defendant was a benamidar, and it is urged that there is no evidence to support this finding. In my opinion, however, the finding is perfectly right. You cannot expect direct evidence of a benami. The whole object of such a transaction is to suppress evidence of the real facts. But the true facts can be proved by circumstantial evidence, and this has been done in the present case. The learned District Judge has dealt fully with this question, and as I agree with his reasoning and conclusions, it is unnecessary to repeat them. Suffice it to say that in my opinion there can be no doubt that the 2nd Defendant was the real purchaser, both in the purchase by the 1st Defendant in September 1909, and in the sale by the 1st Defendant to the 3rd Defendant in December 1910.

Assuming then that the 2nd Defendant was the real purchaser in September 1909, it must next be decided whether, being a defaulting proprietor of No. 222, he could purchase under sec. 14. The learned District Judge holds that he could not do so, not being "another sharer" within the terms of the section.

The section is not very easy to construe, and perhaps it will be convenient to set it out in full.

"XIV. If in any case of a sale held according to the provisions of the last preceding section, the highest offer for the share exposed to sale shall not equal the amount of arrear due thereupon to the date of sale, the Collector or other officer as aforesaid shall stop the sale, and shall declare that the entire estate will be put up to sale for arrears of revenue at a future date, unless the other recorded sharer or sharers or one or more of them, shall, within ten days, purchase the share in arrear by paying to Government the whole arrear due from such share. If such purchase be completed, the Collector or other officer as aforesaid shall give such certificate and delivery of possession as are provided for in secs. XXVIII and XXIX of this Act, to the purchaser or purchasers, who shall have the same rights as if the share had been purchased by him or them at the sale. If no such purchase be made within ten days as aforesaid, the entire estate shall be sold, after notification for such period and publication in such manner as is prescribed in sec. VI of this Act."

MUSSTT. SAMBHO KUOR v. HARIHAR PERSHAD.

As there is no previous reference in the section to any sharer, the words "other recorded sharer" must, I think, mean "a recorded sharer of a share other than the share exposed for sale." This perhaps would by implication exclude any sharer of the share exposed for sale, even though he himself might have paid his quota of the revenue due on the share exposed for sale. It seems doubtful if the Legislature intended this. It is clear from sec. 53 that defaulting proprietors may purchase at sales for arrears of revenue, and I can see no reason why they should be excluded from sales under sec. 14. Of course at a sale under sec. 14 they merely have to pay the arrears due, whereas at an auction they would have to pay the full value. It may therefore be said that to allow them to purchase under sec. 14 might defeat the law, because such a purchase would come to the same thing as depositing the arrears after the latest day of payment, which cannot be done without the Collector's leave, whereas in the case of an auction they would have to pay the full value. But as they would be entitled to the balance after the arrears were satisfied, the distinction would not make much practical difference. If the defaulting sharer could have purchased the share on the day of sale under sec. 13, and this would seem from sec. 53 to be permissible, it is difficult to understand why he should not purchase under sec. 14. I am inclined to think therefore that the word "other" in sec. 14 is a mere inadvertence, though in the view that I take of the case it is not necessary to come to a definite decision on this point.

Next it is argued that as the Plaintiff did not pay in the arrears due on all the separate accounts, he is not entitled to the benefit of sec. 14. It seems that the framers of the section did not advert to the possibility of more than one separate account falling into arrears and some difficulty might arise in that case. Suppose an estate consisting of 3 separate accounts A, B and C. The revenue of A is paid up exactly with nothing over, and B and C are in arrears to the extent of Rs. 100 each. Declarations are made with respect to B and C. The owner of A hearing of the declaration about B pays in Rs. 100 and becomes the owner. He still apparently may lose both A and B, for the arrears on C, and his purchase of B in that case would go for nothing. But I do not think that in this case the materials justify us in saying that the Plaintiff's deposit was insufficient. The estate could only be sold, if the whole of it was in arrears, and we cannot say that the Plaintiff's deposit was insufficient without proof of that fact. This might depend on the question whether the accounts, which were not in arrears, showed balances in favour of the owners and this question has not been considered. Indeed it would appear at first sight from Ex. II (opposite page 42 of the paper-book) that the arrears on the whole estate were much less than the Plaintiff's deposit.

The next point to be considered is whether the Collector was right in holding that the Defendant was the sole purchaser. It is argued that sec. 14 gives all the co-sharers the right to deposit the arrears for ten days and that no co-sharer can defeat that right by depositing the arrear due a little earlier than his fellows. Reference is made to the case of Debi Pershad v. Aklio Koer (1). In that case however this point did not arise. It was not stated who paid the arrears first. The Collector issued a joint certificate to all those who had paid and the Plaintiff sued to recover a third. The only question discussed was whether he was entitled to a third, or to a share proportionate to his interest in the parent estate.

(1) 4 C. W. N. 465 (1899).

MUSSTT. SAMBHO KUOR v. HARIHAR PERSHAD.

It seems to me that the section was intended merely to give co-sharers a chance of saving the estate and to secure the payment of the revenue and was not at all intended to define the rights of the co-sharers inter se. The words "unless the other recorded sharer or sharers or one or more of them, shall, within ten days, purchase the share in arrear by paying to Government the whole arrear due from such share" mean in my opinion that the purchase is effected by the payment of the arrears. As soon as the payment is made, the purchase is complete and there is nothing left for any one else to buy. The Collector is bound therefore, in my opinion, to recognize the depositor who first pays the whole amount, or, if there are more depositors than one, to recognize as joint purchasers those whose payments first amount to the total arrears due.

Finally, it seems to me that even if the Collector's order was wrong, and even if the purchase was bad as being made by a defaulting proprietor of No. 222, the suit is barred by sec. 33 of the Act. It was held in Chutoorbhuj Dutt v. Ishri Mul (2), that section 33 applies to sales under sec. 14, a view with which I entirely agree, and as the Plaintiff has suffered no injury, the section is fatal to the suit. It is argued that the sale was a nullity and therefore it is unnecessary to annul it. That contention was dealt with once for all in Gobind Lal Ray v. Ramjanam Misser (3). Sec. 33 lays down that sales for arrears of revenue cannot be annulled except in a certain way. The operation of the section had been frequently avoided by holding that some particular defect alleged prevented the sale from being a sale under the Act, or in other words, made it a nullity. All these refinements were swept away by the decision I have quoted, and now a sale for arrears of revenue can only be assailed in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Even if there had been a distinct provision in sec. 14 that a separate account should not be sold to a defaulting proprietor, I think that such a sale could under this decision be questioned only in accordance with the Act. But when there is no such distinct prohibition, the sale cannot possibly be regarded as a nullity.

Next it is contended that the Plaintiff does not want the sale annulled, but merely that he may be declared the purchaser. To accept this contention would in my opinion be twisting the plain English of the statute. The Defendant has been formally declared the purchaser and the land has been delivered into his possession. To take it away from him and give it to the Plaintiff would in my opinion be a manifest annulment of the sale: a complete annulment if the whole land were taken away from him, and an annulment pro tanto if a portion were taken. In my opinion therefore the suit is barred by sec. 33 of the Revenue Sales Act, 1859. The appeal must be decreed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

The same order must be passed in Appeals Nos. 255—258. The decision of benami does not arise in these cases, but they are equally barred by sec. 33 of the Act.

(2) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 844 (1894)

(3) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 70 (1893).

MUSSTT. SAMBHO KUOR v. HARIBAR PERSHAD.

IMAM, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3182 OF 1912.

FLETCHER, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1914, Heard, 22, May. Judgment, 28, May.	SRIMATI RAJANI BALA DASI, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. BHAJA HARI KOLEY and another, Defendants, Respondents.

Cess Act (IX of 1880), sec. 95—Returns filed by certificated guardian of minor, if admissible in favour of minor—"Authorised agent."

A road-cess return filed on behalf of a minor by his certificated guardian is not admissible in favour of the minor.

The words in sec. 95 of the Road and Public Works Cess Act requiring returns filed under the Act to bear the signature and address of the person or his authorised agent are directory only, and the fact that the certificated guardian was not the authorised agent of the minor does not make the returns admissible in his favour.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 22nd November 1912, against the decree of Babu Lalit Mohan Das, Additional Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 19th July 1912, modifying a decree of Babu Malati Nath Bose, Munsif, 2nd Court, Hooghly, dated the 6th September 1911.

The Plaintiff-Appellant was the widow of one Sarat Chandra Ghosh and sued for recovery of an 8as. share of certain arrears of rent due in respect of three jamas held by the principal Defendant Bhaja Hari Koley, making Kalidas Ghose, the malik of the remaining 8as. share and who in the lifetime of Sarat was for some time his certificated guardian, pro forma Defendant. Plaintiff alleged that her husband's share of the rent used to be collected separately, but that the tenants in collusion with Kalidas were objecting to separate payment. The tenant Defendant who alone contested the suit alleged that Kalidas was the sole landlord and that Plaintiff or her husband had no share in the maliki interest and that he had duly paid the rents due to Kalidas. He also disputed the amount of the jamas as alleged in the plaint.

Both the Courts found that Plaintiff's title to an 8as. maliki interest was established by, amongst other evidence, the road-cess returns which Kalidas had filed for himself as also on behalf of the minor Sarat Chandra Ghosh and in which the latter's name appeared as a co-sharer. The Munsif relied on these road-cess returns also to determine the question of the amount of the rents payable on the jamas, and finding that they agreed with those claimed by the Plaintiff gave her a decree on that basis. On appeal, the Subordinate Judge reversed this finding, holding that the road-cess returns were inadmissible in evidence in Plaintiff's favour to prove the amount of the jamas. He accordingly gave a decree to the Plaintiff at the rates admitted by the Defendant, though he rejected certain dakhilas purporting to have been given to the Defendants by the Plaintiff's co-sharer as forgeries.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghosh, for the Appellant, submitted that sec. 95 of the Cess Act did not make the road-cess returns admissible against Sarat or his widow, and equally it did not make them inadmissible in their favour. The returns were not filed by Sarat, nor by his authorised agent. Kalidas was not Sarat's authorised agent. Compare the language of sec. 95 of the Road Gess Act with that of sec. 18 of the Evidence Act. It has been recently held by the Privy Council with reference to this and other sections of the Evidence Act that an admission by a guardian does not bind a minor: Manokarnika v. Haripada (1). Sec. 95, Road Cess Act, has been held to be in the nature of a proviso or exception to sec. 21 of the Evidence Act. If sec. 95 of the Road Cess Act does not stand in the way, the returns would be admissible in favour of Sarat under sec. 32 of the Evidence Act. They were no doubt not proved as required by sec. 32, but no objection to mode of proof was raised at the trial: Ram Prasad v. Sham Narain (2). Moreover, in this case such proof is unnecessary, as the returns are admissible under sec. 19 of the Evidence Act, which applies specially, as the tenant says that he paid the whole rent to Kalidas, and Kalidas's gomasta comes and supports him.

SRIMATI RAJANI BALA DASI v. BHAJA HARI KOLEY.

If Sarat is a stranger to the Road Cess returns, then there is ample authority that such returns are admissible in favour of strangers under sec. 11 or 13 of the Evidence Act: Ram Prasad v. Sham Narain (2), Daitari v. Jugobundhoo (3), Chalho Singh v. Jharo Singh (4).

Babu Bepin Behari Ghosh (Sr.), for the Respondents, submitted that the section expressly makes Road Cess returns inadmissible in favour of the person on whose behalf the returns are filed. The returns here on the face of them were filed as well on behalf of Kalidas himself as on behalf of Sarat. Cites Mahomed v. Safar Ali (5), Nuseerun v. Gouree Sankar (6).

Babu Nagendranath Ghosh in reply:— In the cases cited, the returns were sought to be used in favour of persons who or whose authorised agents filed them. Here they were filed by a person who was not authorised in law to file them. To test the applicability of sec. 95, you have to ask whether the returns would be admissible against Sarat. If not, neither can they be inadmissible in his favour. Sec. 95 applies or does not apply as a whole. It cannot be inapplicable in part and applicable as to the rest.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an Appeal against the judgment of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 19th of July 1912, modifying the decree passed by the Munsif.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiff as heir of her deceased husband Sarat Chandra Ghosh to recover against the Defendant No. 1 an 8 annas share of the rent for certain holdings. The Defendant No. 2 is the uncle of the late husband of the Plaintiff and owns the other 8 annas share in the holding.

The only point that has been argued before us is whether the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court rightly rejected certain road-cess returns which had been given in evidence by the Plaintiff in the Court of first instance.

The Defendant no. 2 is a formal Defendant to this suit, and no relief was asked against him.

The road-cess returns in question were filed by the Defendant No. 2 during the

(1) 18 C. W. N. 718 (1914).
(2) 6 C. L. J. 22 (1907).
(3) 23 W. R. 298 (1875).
(4) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 995, 1005 (1911).
(5) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 407 (1885).
(6) 22 W. R. 192 (1874).

SRIMATI RAJANI BALA DASI v. BHAJA HARI KOLEY.

minority of the late husband of the Plaintiff as his certificated guardian.

Sec. 95 of the Cess Act, 1880 [Act IX of 1880 (B. C.)] provides that "every return filed by or on behalf of any person in pursuance of the provisions of this part shall bear the signature and address of such person or his authorised agent and shall be admissible against such person, but shall not be admissible in his favour."

It has been argued before us that as the returns in question were not signed by Sarat Chandra owing to his minority and as the Defendant No. 2 as his certificated guardian was not his authorised agent, the section allows the returns to be used as evidence in favour of the Plaintiffs. But this argument is not borne out by the language of the section.

The section provides that the returns filed by or on behalf of any person in pursuance of the Act are admissible in evidence against him, but not admissible in his favour.

The words as to the return bearing the signature and address of the person or his authorised agent appear to me to be directory only.

I can see nothing in the section that provides that if for instance a wrong address is given that the return would be admissible in evidence in favour of the person by or on whose behalf it was filed.

I think the learned Judge in the lower Appellate Court was right in refusing to accept these returns in favour of the Plaintiff.

The present appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT NO. 900 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
1914,
4, June.

JOGESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI
v.
MOHIM CHANDRA RAI.

Indian Copyright Act (III of 1914)—Copyright Act (1 and 2 Geo. V, C. 46)—Law Reports, copyright in—Reports of judgment, copyright in—Selection of judgments, copyright in—Judgments obtained by expenditure of time, labour or money by one, if may be reproduced by another—Extracts from judgments and facts taken from record, copyright in—Common source of information, reference to—Injunction, perpetual—Pirated matter, direction for delivery and destruction—Damages, assessment of.

It is generally true that in the reports of judgments, the reporter has no copyright, but it cannot be said that in the selection of cases and in the arrangement of the reporting, the reporter has not the protection of law. One is entitled to report such judgments as he obtains by expenditure of his time, labour, money, but when he fails to exert his own energies, he cannot be allowed to avail himself of other peoples' industry. Nor will he be allowed to take quotations from judgments or facts obtained by another from the records of a case.

The principle is, that whilst all are entitled to resort to common sources of information, none are entitled to save themselves trouble and expense by availing themselves for their own profit of other men's works, subject to copyright and entitled to protection.

LEWIS v. FULLARTON (1) followed.

The Plaintiff abovenamed is the Editor and Proprietor of the Calcutta Weekly Notes wherein are published amongst other things reports of appeals to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and of cases determined by the Calcutta High Court with head-notes, statement of facts, notes of arguments and extracts from judgments of the lower Courts, where necessary. The Defendant No. 1 is the Editor, Proprietor and Publisher of a certain publication known as the Calcutta Case Law, and Defendants No. 2, the printer thereof. It was stated in the plaint that these reports were the result of considerable labour and expense on the part of the Plaintiff and of the staff in his employment. That the Plaintiff claimed an exclusive copyright in such reports and every portion thereof. That the Defendant No. 1 abovenamed systematically printed, reproduced and published reports from the Calcutta Weekly Notes with colourable alterations without the Plaintiff's permission and sold and offered for sale the said Calcutta Case Law containing such pirated reports for the Defendant No. 1's own profit. The Plaintiff gave some instances of such piracies in a schedule annexed to the plaint and craved leave to refer to the offending volumes of the Calcutta Case Law when produced. The Plaintiff prayed for a declaration of his subsisting copyright in the Calcutta Weekly Notes as aforesaid and that the Defendants had pirated from it by printing and publishing the said Calcutta Case Law. That the Defendants, their servants and agents be restrained by perpetual injunction from pirating as aforesaid, and for account of the pirated publication and of its sale and profits made by the Defendants and for damages and the delivery of the unsold copies to the Court for destruction. The plaint was filed on the 30th of August 1913, and on the application of the Plaintiff a rule was issued on the Defendants to show cause why an ad interim injunction restraining them from selling or circulating the pirated publication should not issue.

(1) 2 Beav. 6 at p. 8 (1839).

JOGESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI v. MOHIM CHANDRA RAI.

The Defendant No. 1, the Editor and Proprietor of the said Calcutta Case Law, stated in his affidavit in opposition as also in his written statement which he filed in the case that he had not infringed the alleged copyright of the Plaintiff. That the Plaintiff had not any copyright in the judgment portions of the reports published in the Calcutta Weekly Notes. That the head-notes, statement of facts, etc., in his publication were not similar, but were distinctly different and independant, that he was entitled to get hints, suggestions, references or informations from the Plaintiff's work and that small quotations taken by him with the author's initials did not amount to piracy. That the common errors or omissions pointed out in the plaint were either accidents and coincidences or the result of comparison of the proof-sheets of his publication with the reports in the Calcutta Weekly Notes for the sake of convenience and formed no proof of piracy.

At the hearing of Plaintiff's application for ad interim injunction before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Chitty on the 1st of December 1913, the Defendants No. 2 stated that they had printed only a few issues of the pirated publication and that they did not know that the matter was printed from the Calcutta Weekly Notes, that they had no copy or copies of the said publication in their possession and gave an undertaking in Court not to print in the future any issue or issues of the Calcutta Case Law containing any pirated matter and that they had no intention of defending the suit and were willing to submit to an injunction. Thereupon the Plaintiff waived his claim for damages against him, but the suit being in the nature of a tort he did not withdraw the suit against him, but gave an assurance in Court that he would not ask for costs of subsequent hearing against Defendant No. 2 if he would not defend, but submit to a decree.

JOGESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI v. MOHIM CHANDRA RAI.

Against Defendant No. 1 on the same day an ad interim injunction was granted restraining him from selling, circulating or otherwise disposing of any of the pirated publications. The suit came on for hearing before Imam, J., on the Original Side on the 14th of May 1914.

Messrs. B. Chakravarti, H. D. Bose and B. K. Lahiri for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. N. Basu for Defendants No. 2, the City Printers, Ld.

Defendant No. 1, Mr. M. C. Rai, appeared in person and stated that he was a lawyer of standing and would defend his own case.

Mr. B. Chakravarti after opening the case said :—The Plaintiff's grievance is that the 1st Defendant systematically pirated from the reports of cases published in the Calcutta Weekly Notes in preparing reports for his legal publication, the Calcutta Case Law. The Plaintiff had to employ both in this country and in England a paid staff of reporters for attending Court and obtaining information regarding important decisions of the Privy Council and the Calcutta High Court and for supplying him with references of cases and notes and other materials necessary in reporting the same. The judgments of the Court were also copied by a paid staff of clerks in his employ. Then it required a great deal of labour and discrimination on the part of the Plaintiff and his paid staff to make a selection of cases out of the copies of judgments so obtained. It was not every judgment of which copies were taken that was reported. But it was such cases as the Editor and his paid staff considered worth reporting that were reported. The Defendant published most of these reports in his publication after they appeared in the Calcutta Weekly Notes, with colourable alterations. That he has taken them from the Calcutta Weekly Notes admits of no doubt. He has copied errors and reproduced with identical omissions. He has further copied the judgments and reports with reporters' initials and his explanation is that his clerk or proof-reader considered the initials as part of the judgments. We have given a classified list of instances which will prove the piracy beyond any question. Such instances given in the schedule to the plaint are not exhaustive, but would raise the presumption that the Defendant No. 1 has committed wholesale piracy from the Calcutta Weekly Notes. The Defendant No. 1 has not produced his manuscripts and that amounts to positive proof that he has so pirated. In the schedule annexed to the plaint the Plaintiff gave some of the instances of piracy which may be classed as follows :—

(1) Reports of judgments were reproduced with reporter's note thereon, the latter being in several cases copied verbatim with the reporter's initials.

(2) Facts of cases were reproduced with colourable alterations.

(3) Reports of judgments were reproduced in the same form where a judgment is reported in a particular form in the Calcutta Weekly Notes, e.g., where only such portions of a judgment are reported in the Calcutta Weekly Notes as are considered material to the report omitting other portions with suitable editorial observations, the same portions of the same judgment are published in the Defendant's publication with the same or very similar editorial observations.

JOGESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI v. MOHIM CHANDRA RAI.

(4) Head-notes of cases were reproduced with colourable alterations.

(5) Cases in which the judgment is very short and does not contain the facts of the case are reported in the Calcutta Weekly Notes with the facts given as collected from the records of the case and the head-notes in such cases are, as they can only be, prepared by studying the judgment and the facts together. These judgments were also published in the Defendant's publication without any facts given, the head-notes having been prepared from the head-notes as given in the Calcutta Weekly Notes.

(6) Short head-notes of cases were reproduced verbatim or only with colourable alterations.

(7) Reports of cases in which the Plaintiff corrected obvious errors or mistakes in the judgments were published with the identical corrections. Where, again, in reporting a case there was any error, omission or misprint in the Plaintiff's publication, the same error, omission or misprint appeared in the subsequent report of the same case in the Defendant's publication.

(8) The general arrangement of the reports of cases in the Calcutta Weekly Notes was adopted by the Defendant in reporting the same cases in his publication.

The defence set up by the Defendant is worthless. It is characterised by a frankness which amounts to boldness. His defence is that he can appropriate the fruits of other peoples' labour and expense with impunity. That he can appropriate other peoples' literary property for his own personal gain, because he has been offering his publication pirated from different sources cheap and thus doing public benefit. In every case of larceny, literary or otherwise, a similar plea may be set up, and no Court of law would tolerate such a defence. The Plaintiff prayed for a perpetual injunction restraining the Defendants from pirating from his publication and printing, publishing, selling and circulating the pirated publication, for accounts, for damages, for delivery to Court and destruction of the pirated copies of the Defendant's publication and for such other relief as to the Court might seem fit.

Mr. M. N. Basu after Mr. Chakravarti's opening stated to Court that he was willing to submit to a perpetual injunction on behalf of Defendants No. 2, the City Printers, Ld., and prayed for being excused the costs of this hearing as he intimated at the hearing of the rule for ad interim injunction that he would do so and would not defend the suit.

Mr. Chakravarti.—If the Defendants No. 2 would submit to a perpetual injunction in the form given in the case of The Incorporated Council of Law Reporting in England v. William Green and Sons (2) [vide the English Weekly Notes (1912)], he would not ask for costs against Defendants No. 2 after the 1st of December 1913, when they appeared at the hearing of the rule for ad interim injunction and intimated that they were willing to submit to a perpetual injunction.

(2) [1912] W. N. (Eng.) 243. The injunction given there was in this form:—"Injunction to restrain the Defendants from printing, publishing or selling a series of reports containing any reprints of cases or judgments from the Law Reports of the Plaintiff Council or for otherwise infringing the Plaintiff's copyright in the said Law Reports."

JOGESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI v. MOHIM CHANDRA RAI.

Mr. Chakravarti.—What issues does the Defendant No. 1 raise?

The Defendant then raised issues which after discussion were settled as follows:—

(1) Has the Plaintiff any copyright in the judgment portion of the Report?

(2) Do the instances given in the schedule to the plaint constitute any infringement of copyright?

(3) Is the suit barred by limitation?

(4) To what relief, if any, is the Plaintiff entitled?

Mr. Chakravarti.—Does the Defendant wish me to go into evidence that Mr. Chaudhuri is the Proprietor, Editor and Author of the reports?

Mr. M. C. Rai, Defendant No. 1.—I admit that Mr. Chaudhuri is the sole Proprietor, Editor and Publisher of the reports and also that it is the result of labour and expense on his part as also of the staff in his employment as stated in para. 2 of the plaint and I also admit that he is the Author of the reports.

Mr. Chakravarti.—Does the Defendant admit that the copyright of the Calcutta Weekly Notes is duly registered? [Although I submit that under the new Indian Copyright Act (III of 1914) it is not necessary to register or prove registration.]

Mr. Rai.—I do not dispute that. I do not call any evidence.

Mr. Chakravarti—Puts in Volumes 13 to 18, Calcutta Weekly Notes, and Mr. Rai 1 to 6, Calcutta Case Law.

Mr. Rai.—The real question is, has Mr. Chaudhuri any copyright in judgments? If not, my quoting of error and omissions in judgment won't matter. Refers to sec. 10 of the Indian Copyright Act. Mr. Chaudhuri has not composed the judgments. Refers to Sweet v. Benning (3). There can be no copyright in verbatim reports of judgments. See foot-note in Scrutton's Copyright that the Supreme Court of United States has held that neither a judge nor the State as his assignee can get copyright in his judgment: Bank v. Manchester (4).

Mr. Chakravarti.—American decisions are of no authority in this country. In England also the citation of American authorities is discouraged. Reads extract from an article in the Law Quarterly Review quoted in 15 Calcutta Weekly Notes—notes p. ii, where such citations are condemned as "Trans-Atlantic Excursions." Refers also to In re Missouri Steamship Co. (5). Lord Halsbury, L. C., said:—"The practice of quoting American decisions as authorities is wrong. Among other things it involves an enquiry which often is not an easy one, whether the law of America on the subject in which the point arises is the same as our own." Fry, L. J., observed that it is a waste of time to cite American authorities. Cotton, L. J., also said that he had often protested against it.

Mr. Rai—Refers to Leslie v. Young and Sons (6). A person reprinting Railway Time-tables with omission of some stations and trains cannot restrain another from reprinting from him. In non-copyright matters, I can re-print with errors and omissions. As to how far an author can take advantage of other's books, see Jarrould v. Houlston (7). I have every right to quote reporter's initials; it amounts to acknowledgment. As for reproduction, the copyright prohibits exact reproduction, but I can read and reproduce

(3) 16 C. B. 459 (1855).

(4) 21 Davis 244.

(5) 42 Ch. D. 321 at pp. 330-331 (1889).

(6) [1894] A. C. 335 at p. 340.

(7) 3 K. & J. 708; 3 Jur. N. S. 105 (1857).

JOGESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI v. MOHIM CHANDRA RAI.

the substance from memory. According to Indian law, whole thing must be reproduced to amount to infringement, but in English law a substantial portion would be enough.

[IMAM, J.—You mean to say that you can get round the law by taking facts from another and putting it in your own language ?]

Mr. Rai.—Yes, see Scrutton on Copyright, 3rd Ed., p. 136 (2nd Ed., p. 130). My object is to collect matters for the benefit of the public. If Mr. Chaudhuri committed mistakes, I am not surely to blame for copying them. I did not copy the whole thing. The subject for consideration being same, there must be similarity of thought and language.

[IMAM, J.—Also similarity of mistakes ?]

I avoided exact copying, so I am not within the clutches of law. Refers to Leslie v. Young and Sons (6). Re-prints with omissions and errors, etc., are no infringement: Ager v. P. & O. S. N. Co. (8) permits a subsequent author to use information as guide to common source: Roworth v. Wilkes (9). Extracts must be of material parts. See Cooper v. Stephens (10); also refers to Pike v. Nicholas (11).

Mr. B. K. Lahiri in reply:—The Defendant has cited cases from text-books, and the decisions on which he relies far from supporting his own contention go to support the case for the Plaintiff. In Sweet v. Benning (3), it was never doubted that law reports like any other literary production were protected by the law of copyright. Refers to argument and also to the judgment in the above case. Only Maud, J., doubted, if an honest digest from law reports would amount to piracy. His brother Judges were of opinion, even such digest is not permissible. Defendant's publication is not a digest. He leaves out statement of facts in many cases and pirates Plaintiff's selection of judgments without going to the original sources, without independent labour and expense. Reference given by him at the top of every case reported by him to the Calcutta Weekly Notes shows clearly that he has taken them out of the Plaintiff's reports and that he has not only infringed the copyright in each case, but also in his selection of cases.

IMAM, J.— You need not address me on facts but only let me have the cases on which you rely.

Mr. Lahiri—Refers to Hodges & Smith v. Welsh (12), where relying on English authorities cited therein the Judges held that selections of judgments are protected. There comparative tables are given similar to those given in our schedule to show that colourable alterations as made by the present Defendant would amount to piracy.

That there may be copyright in non-copyright matter by expenditure of labour, judgment and expense is too well-known to require repetition. Refers to Kelly v. Morris (13).

A decision of Wilson, J. (later on the Rt. Hon'ble Sir Arthur Wilson) of this Court in McMillan v. Suresh Chunder Deb (14), which has been accepted by English authorities as laying down good law, held many years ago that an author can acquire copyright in his selection of poems, al-

(3) 16 C. B. 459 at p. 480 (1855).
(6) [1894] A. C. 335 at p. 340.
(8) 26 Ch. D. 637 (1884).
(9) 1 Camp. 94 (1807).
(10) [1895] 1 Ch. 567 at p. 572.
(11) L. R. 5 Ch. 251 (1869).
(12) 2 Ir. Eq. R. 266.
(13) L. R. 1 Eq. 697 (1866).
(14) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 951 (1890).

JOGESH CHANDRA CHAUDHURI v. MOHIM CHANDRA RAI.

though the individual poems were non-copyright matter. In this case, the Defendant had not merely re-printed this selection of poems, but gave different readings, corrected punctuations, added biographical and other notes, yet it was held to be piracy and Palgrave's Selection called "Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics" was protected against infringement of this character. Hogg v. Scott (15), referred to in the above case, lays down to what extent previous works may be referred to by subsequent authors and for what purposes.

In Walter v. Lanes (16), copyright in law reports is recognised. Lord Halsbury lays down that the principle is that a man shall not avail himself of another's skill, labour and expense. Acknowledgment is no defence: Bohn v. Bogne (17). Occurrence of common blunders is infallible test of piracy. So also recurrence of identical passages, and where Defendant denies piracy, such tests would prove his fraudulent intent, and injunction would issue at once. See Kerr on Injunction, 4th Ed., pp. 296 and 298 and 5th Ed., p. 416, and the cases cited therein.

The most recent case relating to copyright in law reports is that of Incorporated Council of Law Reporting v. Green & Son (2). There the Defendants submitted to an injunction, and the form in which injunction was given in that case also prohibited Defendants from taking judgments from the English Law Reports. If judgments obtained and reported by the Council were not entitled to protection, Court would not have given injunction in that form. Kerr on Injunction, in the 5th Edition, at p. 405, cites this case as an authority for the proposition that taking of judgments would amount to an infringement and would entitle to an injunction. In the previous edition of Kerr a doubt was expressed on the point. But selection of judgments is in any case protected.

Pike v. Nicholas (11) cited by the Defendent does not help him. It is an authority for assessment of damages in cases of literary piracy. The basis is that every copy of the offending journal sold must be considered to have replaced one of Plaintiff's. See Kerr on Injunction, 5th Ed., p. 416 and also Woodroffe's Injunction, 3rd Ed., p. 427.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

IMAM, J.—The Plaintiff in this suit is the Proprietor and Editor of a Law-periodical known as the Calcutta Weekly Notes. The first Defendant is the Proprietor, Editor and Publisher of a rival Law periodical known as the Calcutta Case Law. The second Defendant is a company of printers. The suit is to restrain the Defendants from committing piracy on the Plaintiff's periodical, for account of the profits made by the first Defendant by sale of the pirated issues of the Calcutta Case Law, for damages and for other consequential reliefs.

The Plaintiff's case is that the reports of the decisions of this Court as well as of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council published in the Calcutta Weekly Notes are the result of considerable labour and expense on his part as well as on the part of the staff employed by him, and that in his reports he has an exclusive copyright. He complains that the Defen-

(2) [1912] W. N. (Eng.)
(15) L. R. 18 Eq. 444 (1874).
(16) [1900] A. C. 539.
(17) 10 Jur. 420 (1846).

(11) L. R. 5 Ch. 251 (1869).

dants have been systematically pirating reports from the Calcutta Weekly Notes and printing and publishing the same in the Calcutta Case Law. In the schedule to the plaint, some of the instances of piracy have been set out. A comparison of the reports in the Calcutta Weekly Notes with those of the Calcutta Case Law establishes the fact of the latter reproducing the reports of the former with a degree of faithfulness that leaves no room for doubt that the Defendants have availed themselves of the benefits of the Plaintiff's labour.

The second Defendant has undertaken not to print any more of the piracies of the first Defendant. The trial, therefore, has proceeded on the contest of the latter only. The contesting Defendant maintains that the Plaintiff has no copyright in the reports of judgments of any Courts of law and denies the alleged piracy.

It is generally true that in the reports of judgments, the reporter has no copyright, but it cannot be said that in the selection of cases, and in the arrangement of the reporting, the reporter has not the protection of the law. The Defendant is entitled to report such judgments as he obtains by expenditure of his time, labour and money, but where he fails to exert his own energies, he cannot be allowed to avail himself of other peoples' industry. The contesting Defendant, instead of restricting himself to reporting the judgments only, has gone much farther. What he has done in the present case is that he has freely drawn on such portions of the Plaintiff's reports as form no part of the judgment. He has also taken from the Plaintiff's reports the quotations from judgments that were appropriate to the reports. The Plaintiff's reports in many instances contain statements of facts not to be found in the judgments, but have been gathered by the reporters from the records of the cases. The Defendant, no doubt, was at liberty to bestow his labour on collecting the facts for himself, but he was not entitled to avail himself of the labours of another.

"Whilst all are entitled to resort to common sources of information, none are entitled to save themselves trouble and expense by availing themselves for their own profit of other men's works, subject to copyright, and entitled to protection," so said Lord Langdale, M. R., in Lewis v. Fullarton (1). The offending instances in this case are either copying or merely colourable alterations of the Plaintiff's reports accompanied by blind repetition of obvious errors.

I have no doubt in this case that the contesting Defendant has committed literary piracy on the Plaintiff's periodical, and in this view this suit has to be decreed. The result is that the Plaintiff succeeds, and the Defendant No. 1 will be restrained from pirating from the Calcutta Weekly Notes for the purpose of his publication. He is further restrained from selling or circulating any of the copies of the pirated publication since August 1910. The Defendant is directed to render a full account to the Plaintiff of the pirated issues of the Calcutta Case Law published since August 1910 and of the profits made by their sale. He is further directed to deliver in Court the unsold copies of the pirated issues of the Calcutta Case Law, published since August 1910, and the same shall be destroyed. The Defendant No. 1 will pay to the Plaintiff the costs of this suit on scale No. II. The Defendant company is only to be liable for such costs as are occasioned by joining it as a Defendant up to December 1st, 1913.

(1) 2 Beav. 6 at p. 8 (1839).

Mr. H. N. Dutt, Solicitor for the Plaintiff.

Suit decreed.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 595 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914,
Heard,
14, May.
Judgment,
21, May.

MANIPUR DEY, Petitioner,
v.
BIDHU BHUSAN SARKAR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec 133—Claim of right, Magistrate's duty to decide bonâ fides of—Magistrate bound to refer parties to Civil Court, if such claim is not mere pretence—Steps which Magistrate may take, if suit not instituted in Civil Court within reasonable time.

Per SHARFUDDIN, J. (TEUNON, J, dubitante).—Sub-sec. (3) of sec. 133, Cr. P. C., provides that no order duly made by a Magistrate under the section shall be called in question in any Civil Court. From this latter provision it is clear that the provision of sec. 133, Cr. P. C., should be sparingly used. Any order passed under the section cannot be questioned in any Civil Court. It is therefore necessary that if the party against whom the order is contemplated to be passed raises a question that the pathway is not a public property in the sense of the provision of this section, the Magistrate trying the case should be careful not only to decide as to whether the pathway in question is situated on a private land or if it is for public use, but he should, even when the claim of the objection is not substantiated, find whether the claim is bonâ fide or it is set up only to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. If the Magistrate finds that the claim which is set up is a mere pretence, he should then proceed to pass a final order and make the rule issued by him absolute. If however he finds that the claim, although not substantiated, is not a mere pretence and is not raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court, but that it is raised bonâ fide, he should stay his hand and refer the party to Civil Court. And if the party within a reasonable time does not have recourse to Civil Court, the Magistrate may then proceed to make the rule absolute.

This was a Rule granted on 8th April 1914 against the order of Mr. S. C. Gupta, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Manikganj, dated the 28th February 1914, making absolute the order passed under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., and directing the Petitioner to remove the obstruction within two weeks, an application for the revision of which order was rejected by M. Smither, Esq, Sessions Judge of Dacca, on the 31st of March 1914.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Upendra Lal Ray for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. C. Ray and Babu Ramoni Mohan Chatterji for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SHARFUDDIN, J.—This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Dacca to show cause why the orders passed under secs. 133 and 137, Cr. P. C., dated the 28th February 1914, should not be set aside on the ground that having regard to the bonâ fide question of title raised and in the absence of any finding that the objection raised was not bonâ fide, the order is without jurisdiction. It appears from the order of the Deputy Magistrate concerned, that Manipur Dey, the Petitioner before us, on receipt of a notice under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., appeared and alleged that the pathway in question was not a public pathway. The following are the findings of the trying Magistrate with regard to the objection thus raised : "It is contended on behalf of Manipur that the way cannot be called public, if a few neighbours and acquaintances have acquired mere permissive right thereto. . . . It is idle in the present case to urge that the way is Manipur's private property ; it is waste land lying between houses and extending beyond Manipur's house. . . . It is pointed out that the Settlement Department has not recognised the way as a public rasta. It is to be remembered that a rasta which is less than 15 links in width is incapable of representation on the Settlement map (scale 16" to a mile), and is ordinarily ignored in the khatians." Sec. 133 occurs in a chapter headed Public Nuisances, and the section itself deals with unlawful obstruction, etc., of any way, etc., used by the public, etc. ; sub-sec. (2) of sec. 133, Cr. P. C., provides that no order duly made by a Magistrate under this section shall be called in question in any Civil Court. From this latter provision, it is clear that the provision of sec. 133, Cr. P. C., should be sparingly used. Any order passed under this section cannot be questioned in any Civil Court. It is therefore necessary, that if the party against whom the order is contemplated to be passed, raises a question that the pathway is not a public property in the sense of the provision of this section, the Magistrate trying the case should be careful not only to decide as to whether the pathway in question is situated on a private land, or if it is for public use, but he should even when the claim of the objector is not substantiated find whether the claim is bonâ fide, or it is set up only to oust the jurisdiction of the Court. If the Magistrate finds that the claim which is set up is a mere pretence, he should then proceed to pass a final order and make the rule issued by him absolute. If, however, he finds that the claim, although not substantiated, is not a mere pretence and is not raised to oust the jurisdiction of the Court, but that it is raised bonâ fide, he should stay his hand and refer the party to Civil Court. And if the party within a reasonable time does not have recourse to Civil Court, the Magistrate may then proceed to make the Rule absolute. In the present case the objector, who is the Petitioner before us, had contended that the pathway in question was a private property and that only the neighbours and acquaintances had been using it in a permissive way. The question is whether this contention on the part of the objector is a bonâ fide contention or not. From the findings of the lower Court it is clear that the pathway in question is close to the objector's house. It is apparent from the judgment of the lower Court that the path in question has not been shown as a pathway in the map prepared by the Settlement Department. Regard being had to the above two facts, I think it was necessary for the lower Court to have come to a finding as to whether the claim set up by the objector was a mere pretence or whether it was bonâ fide. In this view I am supported by a number of authorities of this Court, viz., the cases of Belat Ali v. Abdur Rahim (1), Matukdhari v. Hari Madhab (2) Luckhee Narain v. Ramkumar (3) and Preonath v. Gobordhone (4).

MANIPUR DEY v. BIDHU BHUSAN SARKAR.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 143 (1903).
(2) 9 C. W. N. 72 (1904).
(3) I. L. R. 15 Cal. 564 (1888).
(4) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 278 (1897).

MANIPUR DEY v. BIDHU BHUSAN SARKAR.

For the above reasons, I would set aside the order complained against and make the rule absolute. I would further direct that the lower Court should try the case from the point reached on the 13th January 1914 and dispose of it according to law.

TEUNON, J.—Having regard to the long series of decisions in which this Court has held that when a person called upon to show cause under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., raises a question of title, the trying Magistrate must decide whether that question has been raised in good faith, I am prepared, in the present case, without agreeing in all the reasons advanced by my learned colleague, to assent to the order proposed by him.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 27 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J. SHARFUDDIN, J. 1914, 13, February.

PROBHAT CHANDRO CHATTERJEE, Petitioner, v. PROSSANNO KUMAR SEN, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 145, 522—Infructuous order directing restoration of immoveable property if bar to proceeding under sec. 145.

An infructuous order under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., which was never carried out is no bar to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate taking proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., in respect of the same property.

This was a Rule against the order of S. Sen, Esq., Deputy Magistrate, Faridpur, dated the 24th October 1913, declaring under sec. 145, Cr. P. C, the Second Party to be entitled to the possession of the disputed land.

On the 1st October 1912, one Ram Charan Mondal, a tenant of one of the first party Petitioners, lodged an information with the Police that the men of the Opposite Party had burnt down and destroyed a number of huts belonging to the tenants of his master in a chur and a case under secs. 144, 426, I. P. C., was started on this information in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate.

On the 13th October 1912, a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., was drawn up by another Deputy Magistrate on a report submitted by the Police in respect of the same chur, although the area included in the proceeding was larger than that in dispute in the case under secs. 144, 426, I. P. C., and the land was attached under cl. (4), sec. 145, Cr. P. C.

On the 21st February 1913, the Magistrate delivered judgment in the case under secs. 144, 426, I. P. C., convicting the accused. On the next day, the Magistrate passed the following order:—"The Complainant files a petition for action under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., to-day. In the judgment my finding is that Complainant and his people were dispossessed by the accused from the chur by criminal force and their huts were demolished and new huts erected by the accused. . . . . I now order that complainant and his people be restored to possession of the same."

On the 25th February 1913, the Magistrate passed the following order:—"As the land is already under attachment in connection with a 145 Cr. P. C. case, I order that my order to give possession under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., be kept in abeyance until further orders."

On the 11th September 1913, the High Court in revision set aside the convictions and sentences in the case under secs. 144, 426, I. P. C., and acquitted the accused, but no direction was given as to the order under sec. 522, Cr. P. C.

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, JULY 27, 1914. [No. 37.

Contents.

NOTES.

Legal Education abroad.

We reproduce elsewhere an article from the English Law Journal contrasting the English system of legal education with those prevailing in the continent of Europe and in the United States. This comparative study of the different legal systems, though brief, is yet full of suggestions which cannot but be useful to those interested in legal education and the training of judges and lawyers for purposes of efficient administration of justice.

Mr. Justice Imam.

We are glad to find it announced that Mr. Justice Imam will be made permanent in the place of Mr. Justice Stephen when he retires from the Bench of the Calcutta High Court after the Long Vacation. Mr. Justice Imam has won the golden opinion of the profession during the term of his temporary appointment on the Bench. He has a strong sense of justice, and both suitors and counsel before him always feel assured that all alike will have a patient hearing, and that justice will be done to their cases. He is both firm and courteous, and painstaking and intelligent, and his judgments are always well-considered. He has within this short time succeeded in securing public confidence, and we are confident that not only will he thoroughly maintain the reputation which he has made for himself, but will enhance it as time goes on. We, no doubt, adhere to our opinion that every effort should be made to get really able and experienced men from the English Bar to fill some of the appointments reserved for barristers on the High Court Benches in India, but in so saying we never meant to say that a fair share of such appointments should not go to the Indian section of the Bar. It would have been an unmerited slight on Mr. Justice Imam and a wrong to the Indian community, if after his excellent record on the Bench he had been superseded when an opportunity occurred for making him permanent.

Sir Barnes Peacock.

We feel bound to correct our Vakil friend with regard to a very unwarranted statement to which he gave currency in the lengthy correspondence we published last week to the effect that Sir Barnes Peacock, the eminent Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court, "was not a particularly successful member of the Bar when he came out to India." As erroneous statements of this kind may be availed of for lowering the efficiency of the High Court Benches and the judiciary generally, we shall mention a few facts which will go to show that Sir Barnes Peacock had risen to a very high position in his profession through his practice at the Bar before he came out to India. He took silk in 1850, and members of the Bar are not made Queen's Counsel unless they enjoy a good practice. Further, it is not generally known that Sir George Jessel, who to this day is regarded as the most brilliant Judge who ever sat on the English Bench, was his pupil and read in his chambers and greatly profited by the training he received under him. We find also from the law reports Sir Barnes appearing as junior to eminent counsel of that time in the House of Lords. In the famous O'Connell case, we find (5 State Trials, N. S.) that not only did Peacock appear as junior to Wilde (who later on became Lord Chancellor—Lord Truro), but at p. 755 of the report we find a note that the point on which the judgment was reversed by the House of Lords was raised by Peacock. All these facts go to show that not only had he enjoyed a practice at the Bar, but also a good reputation of being a learned lawyer which attracted to him pupils of the rare distinction of Jessel. The fact that he was sent out to India as the Law Member of the Governor-General's Council also confirms the view that he was recognised at the time as a worthy successor of Lord Macaulay, and lawyers of the reputation of Maine, Stephen and Hobhouse succeeded him.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

The question whether in a suit for malicious prosecution by abuse of the process of the Criminal Court it is necessary to show that the prosecution was one within the meaning of the Code of Criminal Procedure is not free from difficulty. To succeed in an action for malicious prosecution, the Plaintiff has to prove, first, the prosecution by the Defendant of a criminal charge against the Plaintiff before a tribunal into whose proceedings the Civil Courts are competent to inquire; secondly, that the proceedings complained of terminated in his favour, if from their nature they were capable of being so terminated; thirdly, that the Defendant instituted or carried on such proceedings maliciously; fourthly, that there was an absence of reasonable and probable cause for such proceeding; fifthly, that the Plaintiff had suffered damages unless indeed the proceedings necessarily import damage to his fame or person. A prosecution exists when a criminal charge is made before a Judicial Officer or tribunal and any person who makes or is actively instrumental in the making or prosecuting of such a charge is deemed to prosecute it and any person who prosecutes another in the sense indicated above is liable as prosecutor. This question, namely, who is a "prosecutor" came up for consideration by the Judicial Committee in Gaya Prosad v. Bhagat Singh, I. L. R. 30 All. 525: S. C. 12 C. W. N. 1071. Their Lordships laid down that the answer to the question who is the prosecutor must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. It is not a principle of universal application that if the Police or Magistrate act on information given by a private individual, without a formal complaint or application for process, the Crown, and not the individual, becomes the prosecutor. The mere setting the law in motion is not the criterion; the conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge must also be taken into consideration. In this case it was not necessary for their Lordships to consider whether to maintain an action for malicious prosecution it must be shown that the prosecution was a prosecution within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code.

This was the question for determination in a recent case decided by the Madras High Court (Sheikh Meran Sahib v. Ratnavella Mudali, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 181). In this case, the Defendant filed a complaint before the Magistrate charging the Plaintiff with the offence of defamation. The Magistrate on receiving the complaint adopted a somewhat novel procedure and issued a notice to the Plaintiff and held an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., and after hearing Counsel for both parties dismissed the complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C. The notice recited that the Defendant had filed a complaint before the Magistrate charging the Plaintiff with the offence of having defamed the former and praying that a summons might issue against the latter and continued as follows:— "Notice is hereby given that a preliminary inquiry will be held in the matter of the complaint at this Court at 11 A.M. on the 3rd day of July 1912." The Plaintiff brought an action for recovering damages for malicious prosecution and Bakewell, J., held that the Plaintiff had no cause of action inasmuch as under the Code of Criminal Procedure the prosecution of the accused commences with the issue of process after the complaint has been entertained by the Magistrate and all prior proceedings constitute at most an attempt by the complainant to prosecute the accused, and in the present case no process having been issued by the Magistrate and the notice issued not being warranted by the Code, there was no prosecution of the Plaintiff.

The same view was taken in De Rozario v. Golab Chand Anundjee, I. L. R. 37 Cal. 358. The Plaintiff's case was that the Defendant falsely and maliciously and without any reasonable and probable cause laid a complaint against her under sec. 380, I. P. C., that the Magistrate sent the case to the Police for enquiry and report; that the Defendant thereafter informed the Police Inspector that he did not desire the enquiry to be proceeded with, nor the premises of the Plaintiff searched; that the Defendant failed to appear when the case was called on before the Magistrate who thereupon dismissed the complaint; that the Defendant caused a fresh complaint under sec. 380, I. P. C., to be lodged against her, which complaint was also dismissed. It was argued on behalf of the Plaintiff that the cause of action was complete and it was not necessary in order to maintain an action for malicious prosecution to show that the charge was acted upon by the Magistrate or that process had issued. The prosecution commenced when the complaint was made: Clarke v. Postan 6 C. and P., 423, Imp v. Lakshman Sakharam, I. L. R. 2 Bom. 481, Ahmedbhai v. Framji Edulji, I. L. R. 28 Bom. 226; Addison on Torts, 8th edition, p. 249. Mr. Justice Fletcher held as follows—"There is no doubt that in Ahmedbhai v. Framji Edulji,

I. L. R. 28 Bom. 226, the learned Judge did say that a prosecution commences when a complaint is made, and it is enough if the charge is made to the Magistrate. This statement is made on the authority of a statement taken from Addison on Torts, 8th Ed., p. 249. The case referred to in Addison is Clarke v. Postan, 6 C. and P. 423, which has been considered by Lord Justice Cotton in the case of Yates v. The Queen (L. R. 14 Q. B. D. 648). My opinion is that the decision of Lord Esher and Lord Justice Cotton in Yates v. The Queen (L. R. 14 Q. B. D. 648) is to be preferred on this point to the ruling in Clarke v. Postan (6 C. and P. 423)." His Lordship next considered the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure and held that the Magistrate never issued process and the Plaintiff was not prosecuted and his suit was liable to be dismissed. The same view was also taken in Golapjan v. Bholanath Khetry (I. L. R. 38 Cal. 880). The Plaintiff's contention in the Court of Appeal was—"The gist of the action for malicious prosecution is setting the criminal law in motion without reasonable and probable cause and does not contemplate the issue of process. The object is that a person who is put in risk of loss of liberty or reputation should have a remedy. Prosecution commences when the charge is laid De Rozario v. Gulab Chand Anundjee (I. L. R. 37 Cal. 358) has been wrongly decided. In that case, Fletcher, J., misread Yates v. The Queen (L. R. 14 Q. B. D. 648), and was wrong in holding that the passage in Addison on Torts, 8th Ed., p. 249 "that it was not necessary that the charge should be acted upon by the Magistrate" was unsupported by authority. Clarke v. Postan (6 C and P. 423) and Thorpe v. Priestnell (1 Q B. 159) cover the point. His Lordship the Chief Justice held—"To determine whether or not there was a prosecution, regard must be had to the Criminal Procedure Code. . . ." As process was not issued, the Plaintiff never became an accused; he was not a party to the investigation held under sec. 202, Cr. P. C.; nor was he entitled to claim under sec. 304 the right to be represented by a pleader at that investigation. If, as is said, he was present and was represented by a pleader, that was not by compulsion of law, but at his own free will. In my opinion, therefore, the Court of first instance rightly decided that matters had not advanced to the stage necessary to support a suit for malicious prosecution.

In Crowdy v. Reilly (17 C. W. N. 554) it has been held by Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ., on a review of English and Indian cases that it is not that an action for damages for malicious prosecution lies only when the original proceeding was a prosecution in the sense in which the term is used in the Code of Criminal Procedure. An action for maliciously putting the law in motion lies in all cases where there is concurrence of the following elements: (1) the commencement or continuance of a criminal proceeding; (2) its legal causation by the Defendant against the Plaintiff; (3) its bonâ fide initiation in favour of the present Plaintiff; (4) the absence of probable cause for such proceeding; (5) the presence of malice therein; (6) damage conforming to legal standards resulting to the Plaintiff.

LEGAL EDUCATION ABROAD.

At the outset we are met by the striking circumstance that every other country but our own requires the law student to receive a full and systematic course of instruction before he is qualified to practise. Whether his education is controlled by the State, as in Germany or America, or by a privileged professional corporation, as in Scotland or France, the qualification insisted on embraces at least three years' study by lectures and classes. Not that this instruction is deemed adequate in itself, for in every case there is an additional requirement of a long period of pupilage or apprenticeship, so that the book-knowledge may be deepened by experience It is in England alone, and in the barristers' branch of the legal profession exclusively, that there is no regular requirement either of systematic study or practical initiation, but a man may plead in the Courts who has passed his examination by cramming, and who obtains his experience of the conduct of a case at the expense of his first clients.

SCOTLAND.

An intrant to the Faculty of Advocates in Scotland is required to produce evidence of being duly qualified in general scholarship and in law. He satisfies this condition if he has obtained the degree of Master of Arts in a Scottish university or has graduated in Arts in other recognised universities. In the event of his not having so graduated, he is examined in Latin, Greek (or at his option French or German), Mathematics or Natural Science, Metaphysics or Moral Philosophy, and Logic and History. At the interval of at least one year after he is found qualified in general scholarship, the intrant may proceed with his examination in law, provided that he produces evidence of attendance in a class of Scots law and of conveyancing in a Scottish university; and also evidence of attendance at the university or a recognised school of law in a class of (a) Civil Law, (b) Philosophy of Law and International Law, Public or Private, (c) Constitutional Law and History, and (d) Medical Jurisprudence. He is examined in each of these subjects, but if he has obtained the degree of LL B., he is held to be sufficiently qualified in law without other test. Before admission to the Faculty of Advocates the intrant has further to submit a thesis on a title of the Pandects and defend it before two members of the Faculty; and if he successfully accomplishes this ordeal, his admission is decided by a ballot of the Faculty.

FRANCE.

Similar in many ways to the Scottish system of legal education is the French. The law student, whether he intends to be an avoué or an avocat, must first spend at least three years in a law school (of which there are nine in France) and pass a number of examinations in the Civil Law, French Law and Jurisprudence. If he wishes to become a Doctor of Laws, his studies must be continued over a fourth year. He then reaches the point of his training known as the Stage, and as a Stagiaire he spends another three years in studying more advanced subjects of law and in attendance at the Courts, which he is compelled to do assiduously. He may or may not be in a lawyer's office during this time, at his option. At the end of the period he presents himself to the Council of the particular Bar which he desires to join and has to submit a thesis, before admission, with the right to practice. It is a noteworthy feature of the French system of legal education, as of several other foreign systems, that the student in his apprentice stage is required to take part in the work of legal aid to the poor litigant. In this way he obtains valuable experience of practical work under skilled guidance, by which the national service of rendering law, in its application, equal for all classes is immensely facilitated.

GERMANY.

In Germany, as one might expect, the conception of the lawyer as a member of a learned profession is carried to its fullest development. The amount of preparation which is required of a German law student before he is allowed to start on either a forensic or a judicial career is, to a person trained in the English haphazard ways, almost appalling. The training of the German lawyer begins at the Gymnasium or public secondary school, through whose doors alone a young man at the age of 18 or 19 can pass into the University. And it is impossible for him to follow the legal profession without studying law at the University for a period of at least three years, and, in some States, for at least four years. During this period he must obtain a grasp of Roman law and jurisprudence and of the German Civil Code, and penal law and civil and criminal procedure. At the end of his University period he must apply for admission to the final examination, as a condition of taking which he must show attendance at the requisite number of law lectures and classes. The examination includes the writing of a treatise upon some subject of German law, besides a long oral test and written papers. The successful candidate obtains the degree of Referendar, and then he is entitled to begin the practical part of his education. He becomes an apprentice successively of a judge and a counsellor at law, and divides his time between the Courts and the counsellor's office. This period of practical tuition extends in Prussia over nearly five years, which are divided up as follows: For nine months he acts as assistant in one of the smaller County Courts and keeps the records and drafts the decrees, then he spends a year in a Superior Court, engaged in the study of civil and criminal proceedings and preparing opinions for the judge; for the next year he is in the office of an attorney and a counsellor-at-law, after which he returns to a County Court and may act as a substitute-judge in non-contentious business, finally, he passes nine months in an Appellate Court. His knowledge is tested at the end of this period by a very severe examination conducted by a Government commission of lawyers of the highest standing. The candidate has to submit two written treatises, one on a scientific theoretical question, the other on a judgment in a civil case, and to undergo a long oral examination. If successful, he becomes an Assessor, probably at the age of 28, and can elect whether to follow the career of counsellor-at-law, State attorney or judge. If he chooses the first, he applies for admission to the Bar, and, unless there is some objection to his character, he is admitted, and can at last begin to practise for himself.

THE UNITED STATES.

Turning now to America, we naturally do not find a thoroughness comparable to that which exists in Germany. The standard of qualification, indeed, differs very greatly in the various States according to the relative excellence of the sixty-four law schools which are to be found in the Union. But throughout the Northern States, the minimum requirement is a three years' course at a university law school, followed by a test of fitness for admission to a State Bar, and in the South, where there is a less rigorous standard of attainments, most of the State Bars require a candidate to have passed successively through a three years' course of law studies, following a recognised academic course. While no practical apprenticeship is uniformly required, the celebrated case system devised by the late Professor Langdell, of Harvard, and gradually adopted by nearly every law school in the States, accustoms the student from the beginning of his training to deal with concrete cases in a practical way. As to the relative excellence of the American training at its best, Mr. Bryce, in his 'American Commonwealth' (p. 670), says: 'I do not know if there is anything in which America has advanced more beyond the mother-country than in the provision she makes for legal education'

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Malicious prosecution—Commencement of prosecution.

K. SHAIK MURAN SAHIB v. C. RATNAVELU MUDELI, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 181.

The Plaintiff sought to recover damages for malicious prosecution.

The Defendant preferred a complaint charging the Plaintiff with the offence of defamation. The Magistrate on receiving the complaint issued no process, but only a notice to the Plaintiff, and held an enquiry under sec. 202 and after hearing counsel for both parties dismissed the complaint. The notice was to the following effect—"Notice is hereby given that a preliminary inquiry will be held in the matter of complaint filed by the complainant at this Court at 11 A.M., on the third day of July 1912."

Held—That the prosecution of an accused commences with the issue of process after the complaint has been entertained by the Magistrate and the prior proceedings constitute at most an attempt by the complainant to prosecute the accused and the plaint in the present case disclosed no cause of action.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 92.

N VENKATARANGA v. N. KRISHNA CHARLU, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 184

A suit instituted with the consent of the Collector is a good suit for all reliefs referred to in sec. 92, C. P. C.

Limitation.

RAMANA REDDI v. BABU REDDI, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 186.

Limitation being the result of statute law, no exemption from it can be recognised except what the statute itself provides.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909).

IN THE MATTER OF MEGHRAJ GONGABUX, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 200.

Once an order of adjudication has been made, the debtor who presents his own petition or the Respondent in the case of a creditor's petition becomes an insolvent and remains so until the order of adjudication is annulled or he obtains his discharge. The Court has no jurisdiction to annul the order of adjudication except in the manner provided for by the Act. Under sec. 21 (1) the order can be annulled if the Court is of opinion that the debtor ought not to have been adjudged insolvent or if it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full.

Hindu Law.

MALLIK SAHEB v. ABDUL SAHEB, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 224.

A Hindu widow with the life estate sold the plaint property to the Defendants. The then heir was the daughter of her deceased husband. Thirteen days after the sale the daughter assented to it in writing. In the writing she purported to convey nothing, but merely gave her consent to the alienation by her mother. After her death her husband sought to set aside the alienation on the ground that it was without legal necessity.

Held—That no question of that kind could arise.

That the writer was clearly outside and beyond the scope of sec. 17, cl. (d) of the Registration Act.

Will.

PIRSAB v. GURAPPA, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 227.

An instrument which confers or reserves a life estate to the maker cannot be called a will.

Presumption of right arising from possession.

SITARAM v SADHU, I. L. R 38 Bom. 240

The Plaintiffs brought a suit to recover possession of land alleging that they had been wrongfully deprived of their possession by one R who and the Defendants, who derived title under him, have been in wrongful possession ever since.

Held—That in a suit for recovery of possession based upon title the presumption of right arising from possession applies as much to a Defendant as to a Plaintiff, and the fact of possession within twelve years of suit will not avail unless it is shown to be such a possession as gives a better title to the land than the Defendants can show.

To succeed in ejectment it is only necessary for the Plaintiff to establish such title as carries a present right to possession.

Railway receipts, if instruments of title.

S. AMIR CHAND v. CHHAGANLAL, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 255.

Under sec. 103 of the Contract Act and 137 of the Transfer of Property Act, Railway receipts shall be taken to be mercantile documents of title fulfilling one or other of the two specified conditions, viz, proving in the ordinary course of business the possession or control of goods or authorising or purporting to authorise either by endorsement or by delivering the possession of the document to transfer or receive the goods thereby represented.

Correspondence.

THE STATUS OF ADVOCATES WHO ARE NOT BARRISTERS.

To THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

The letter recently published in your columns regarding the status of advocates who are not barristers in the matter of their eligibility to judgeships of Chartered High Courts has drawn considerable attention in the legal circles of the United Provinces, and while the general feeling undoubtedly is that the argument presented in that letter should not be accepted as sound, the ground for coming to that conclusion are not so easy to find. You, Sir, have brushed aside the argument on the ground that a vakil who had put in ten years' practice becomes on the completion of that period eligible for appointment as a judge and that is a vested right that attaches to his person ever afterwards. With the utmost deference allow me to submit that this chain of reasoning does not appear to me to be sound. To follow it out logically—and all principles are tested by extreme cases—a man who had been a vakil for ten years and afterwards struck off the rolls is eligible for a judgeship, because he had acquired the necessary qualification sometime ago. There are instances in the United Provinces of barristers and vakils who after the necessary period of practice at the Bar laid down in the charter, gave up practice altogether and took to other occupations. One such gentleman who is a resident of the Punjab was removed from the rolls of the Allahabad High Court where also he had enrolled himself as an advocate with his consent because he had taken to another occupation. As I read the charter the person chosen must at the time of his selection belong to one or other of those categories therein specified and then he must be of a certain standing. If at that date he does not belong to one or other of them, the whole thing is at an end so far as he is concerned.

There is, however, another line of argument which has been presented to the public by the Leader newspaper of Allahabad This journal has three amongst the home-made advocates among its directors, and it can therefore be expected to present the case on the other side in its strongest light. Now, it says in an Editorial paragraph that the learned judge in question is a vakil and that he had not ceased to be a vakil, because he was too good a man to remain a Vakil and had therefore been elevated out of that body. Now, that is exactly my point. A man cannot be a vakil and not a vakil at the same time and cannot soar high up in the air and crawl back to the earth at his own pleasure and convenience. One cannot take up this position that if he gets some advantages by being a vakil he is a vakil and if he is under some disabilities by being a vakil he is not a vakil. It is this subtle, this ethereal and this amphibious nature of the attributes of this class of advocates that eludes my limited intellect and still more limited experience and I must frankly say that I cannot appreciate this argument. If there were any doubts in the matter, the Allahabad High Court has finally settled them by removing the names of the advocates who are not barristers from the list of vakils and publishing that list authoritatively without those honoured names. It is further said that this contention regarding eligibility would also apply to the late lamented Mr. Justice K T. Telang. Possibly it would, if the rules were the same, but it does not appear that the point was ever taken and authoritatively settled. The Privy Council had allowed many appeals under the Land Acquisition Act before its attention was drawn to the point that there were no appeals sanctioned by that Act at all and their previous action in such appeals did not stand in the way of their holding that the particular appeal where attention had been drawn to this point was incompetent. Of course there are technical objections, but the whole of the British Indian Code bristles with technicalities and no lawyer need be ashamed of taking technical objections.

There is one remark made in this connection to which I must take strong exception before I conclude. It is that a particular person can be too good an individual to remain a vakil and anybody requires to be elevated out of that body. I cannot forget that the most accomplished Indian lawyer that Allahabad ever produced—the late lamented Pandit Ayodhiya Nath—one, regarding whom Sir John Edge said that any race and and any country might well be proud of him, lived and died as a vakil. Nor would anybody have the hardihood to say that the vakils who could claim the late Sir Bhashyam Aiyanger as one of their body and who now proudly point to Dr. Rash Behari Ghose as their head have any reason to be ashamed of their status or position in life and I strongly protest against the implied insinuation that the word vakil is now in Allahabad a by-word of reproach. The other point to which attention was drawn in the letter in question that by making a few vakils advocates some years ago and by ceasing to advance others to the same status now for some years the Hon'ble and learned Judges have virtually though unwillingly created a most undesirable monopoly which is working to the great detriment of the Vakil Bar has not yet attracted the notice it deserves. A cursory glance at the printed cause lists of the Allahabad High Court will bear out my contention and in order to remedy this state of things and to remove the hardships caused to every vakil of that Bar of over twenty years' standing and of unblemished character there is no other way now left open but going on creating advocates from year to year so that the glory, the halo and the charm now surrounding a few might disappear by being spread over the many.

Yours faithfully,
AN ALLAHABAD VAKIL.

Notes of Cases.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before WOODROFFE and COXE, JJ. APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS 2890 OF 1909 AND 839 OF 1910. BAIDYA NATH PAL, Defendant No. 2, Appellant v. KAILAS CHANDRA DEB, Plaintiff Respondent. 19th June 1914.

Redemption, suit for—Occupancy holding—Purchaser in execution of money decrees, title of—Sylhet.

The land in suit was originally the holding of of one Sonatan. It was purchased in execution of a money-decree by the Plaintiff. Before the purchase by the Plaintiff, Sonatan had mortgaged the property with possession and the Defendant No. 2, the Appellant, was the usufructuary mortgagee. The suits were for redemption and the Courts below had decreed them.

It was urged in second appeal, that as the Plaintiff purchased in execution of a money decree, his purchase was no purchase at all and conferred no title on him.

Held, that the point had been settled by the recent decision of the Full Bench, 18 C. W. N. 971.

The recent decision of the Full Bench was applicable to Sylhet, as the Bengal Tenancy Act had made no alteration in the law with regard to the sales of occupancy holdings.

Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (22 W. R. 22) distinguished.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Babus Mohini Mohan Chuckerbutty and Gopal Chandra Das for the Respondent.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before D. CHATTERJEE and N. R. CHATTERJEA, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 2401 OF 1913. BASANTA KUMAR CHAKRABARTY, Plaintiff, Appellant v. GOPAL CHANDRA DAS, Defendant, Respondent. Heard 6th May. Judgment 11th June, 1914.

Ejectment—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 167—Purchaser, death of, testate—No probate taken of will—Son in possession of estate, if can sue—Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 187.

The father of the Plaintiff purchased a holding in execution of a decree and had notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act issued on the Defendants who were under-raiyats. On the death of his father the Plaintiff brought this suit for ejectment. The plea of the Defendants was amongst others, that the deceased father of the Plaintiff had left a will under which the Plaintiff was only a part-owner of the property in suit and could not as such eject them. The Plaintiff in his deposition admitted that he had heard of the execution of a will by his father. The Defendant produced the will and the Plaintiff objected to its being proved. The Court of first instance allowed the will to be proved and dismissed the suit of the Plaintiff as incompetent.

Held, that the will uncovered as it was by a Probate or a Letter of Administration could not prove that anybody named therein had title to the estate of the testator, and the plea of non-joinder must fail. "If the legal heir had come into possession of the general estate of his father, he can as the legal heir maintain a suit for the benefit of the estate, so long as any other claimant does not establish his right to the same under the will."

Babu Surendra Kumar Bose (for Babu Prео Sankar Mozumdar) for the Appellant.

Babu Kishori Lal Sarkar for the Respondent.

A. T. M. Appeal allowed: case remanded.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before FLETCHER and RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 905 OF 1912. GOPINATH TRIPATI, Defendant No. 3, Appellant v. AJODHYA NATH GHOSH AND OTHERS, Respondents. 10th July 1914.

Doctrine of marshalling does not apply in redemption suit—Defendant claiming through pri mortgagee cannot dispute subsequent mortgage upon which a decree has been passed in a suit in which the prior mortgagee was a party.

Appeal by the Defendant No. 3.—The suit was for a declaration that the mortgage-decree obtained by one Chintamony, the predecessor-in-interest of Defendants Nos. 1/1 to 1/4 and the auction sale held in execution of the said decree were not binding upon the Plaintiff, who was a subsequent mortgagee and in the alternative for redemption of the prior mortgage of Chintamony. One Srinath Chatterjee, the father of the Defendant No. 4, mortgaged the lands in suit and other lands to the Plaintiff in 1898 (simple mortgage). In 1903, Srinath again created an usufructuary mortgage in favour of Chintamony Ghosh, the predecessor-in-interest of Defendants Nos. 1/1 to 1/4. The Plaintiff brought a suit upon his mortgage in 1907 against Chintamony Ghosh and Defendant No. 4. After the mortgage suit had been instituted, the superior landlord of the disputed lands recovered a rent-decree, and the properties were put up to auction in execution of the said rent-decree. Chintamony Ghosh deposited the money under sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and acquired a prior mortgage in respect of the disputed properties. Chintamony brought a suit upon this prior mortgage against the Defendant No. 4 without making the Plaintiff a party Defendant in the case. The Plaintiff obtained a decree upon his mortgage on the 3rd July 1908. Chintamony obtained an ex parte decree upon his statutory mortgage for Rupees three hundred and odd on the 18th July 1908, and the properties were sold to Defendant No. 2 in auction in execution of the said decree on the 22nd February 1909. The Defendant No. 2 sold the said properties to the Defendant No. 3 on the 19th April 1910 for Rs. 925.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit, holding that the Plaintiff was not entitled to redeem.

The Plaintiff appealed, and the lower Appellate Court granted him a decree allowing him to redeem the statutory mortgage.

Babu Mohini Nath Bose for the Appellant submitted that his client was not the mortgagee, but had purchased from a stranger who had purchased the properties at the Court-sale. The Plaintiff had no right to redemption. His position is quite different from that of an ordinary mortgagee. Cited Dr. Rash Behari Ghosh's Mortgage, 3rd Edition, p. 364. His client was a bonâ fide purchaser for value.

[FLETCHER, J.—Your client is not a bonâ fide purchaser. He ought to have been aware of the Plaintiff's mortgage, he should have made searches in the Registration office.]

Referred to sec. 56 of the Transfer of Property Act.

[FLETCHER, J.—That section does not apply to the present case.]

I submit that the doctrine of marshalling applies to the present case: W. R. Gap. No. p. 374, 9 Cal. 406 and 13 Bom. 45.

[FLETCHER, J.—Those cases do not apply. In all these three cases the suit was for the enforcement of mortgage, but in the present case, the suit is for redemption of mortgage. The doctrine of marshalling cannot apply in a suit for redemption.]

One of several properties mortgaged to the Plaintiff has been purchased by my client. He is a subsequent mortgagee.

[FLETCHER, J.—Your client is a prior mortgagee by virtue of sec. 171 of the Bengal Tenancy Act]

The Plaintiff has not proved his mortgage in this case. How is he then entitled to get a decree for redemption?

Babu Kshitis Chandra Chakravarti for the Respondent submitted that the Appellant had purchased from Defendant No. 2 who had purchased in auction sale in execution of the decree obtained by Chintamony upon his statutory mortgage. The Defendant No. 3 claims through Chintamony. Chintamony was a party Defendant in the suit for the enforcement of mortgage by the Plaintiff, and the suit was decreed. This decree was an exhibit in this case. The Defendant No. 3 was thus estopped from raising such a question.

Babu Mohini Nath Bose.—The question of estoppel does not arise in this case.

Held—That the doctrine of marshalling does not apply in a suit for redemption and that the Defendant No. 3 who claimed through the prior mortgagee could not dispute the subsequent mortgage upon which a decree had been passed in a suit in which the prior mortgagee was a party Defendant.

Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER and RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 361 OF 1910. KUMEDA PROSANNA BHUIYA, Appellant v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 2nd July. Judgment, 7th July 1914.

Tenants, status of—Holding more than 100 bighas—Raiyat—Presumption—Limitation—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 103B, 104H and 111A.

The Plaintiff brought his suit for a declaration that he was an occupancy raiyat of certain land mentioned in the plaint. The land in question was situate within the limits of a Government khas mahal. At the trial the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the Plaintiff had failed to prove that he had served notice on the Defendant No. 1 pursuant to the terms of sec. 80 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The other issues the learned Judge decided in favour of the Plaintiff. A remand was directed to the lower Court to try the issue as to whether or not notice under sec. 80 had been served on the Defendant No. 1. The learned Subordinate Judge certified that notice under sec. 80 was in fact served.

The holding in question was of an extent of 203 bighas odd. No document was in existence evidencing the terms on which the Plaintiff held. It was proved that the tenancy in its inception was granted to the predecessor of the Plaintiff for cultivating purposes. The Plaintiff and his predecessors in former settlements were described as having the interest of raiyats. The Plaintiff had also granted rent receipts describing the tenants under him as being under-raiyats.

Held, that the presumption created by sec. 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act was rebutted.

That the Plaintiff and his predecessors having held the land for more than 12 years had a right of occupancy in the land.

The record-of-rights was finally published on the 14th September 1908. The Plaintiff preferred an appeal to the Revenue authorities against the entry on the record affecting his status. The present suit was filed on the 29th of June 1909.

Held that the suit came under the proviso to sec. 111A and not under sec. 104H of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Babus Nilmadhab Bose and Hirendra Nath Ganguli for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Charan Mitra for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal allowed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3662 OF 1912. UMDA BIBI, Plaintiff v. ABDUL SAMAD AND OTHERS, Defendants. 8th July 1914.

Dispossession by landlord—Auction sale, fraudulent—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Sch. III, Art. 3.

There was a jote in the name of Mahomed Ali Miah. After his death the jote was inherited by the Plaintiff, her sister and her brother Sadu Mia. The latter died leaving a daughter Jamila, Defendant No. 5. Plaintiff purchased her sister's share and became malik of 12 annas and Jamila 4 annas of the jote. At the Survey and Settlement of Chakla Roshnabad, the Plaintiff was recorded as co-tenant in possession. In 1898, the Maharaja of Hill Tippera, the landlord, brought the jote to sale for arrears of rent, and purchased it himself. That sale was set aside under sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In 1902, the Maharaja again sued Jamila (who was alone in arrears) for arrears of rent. In execution of the decree Defendant No. 1 purchased the jote on 7th March 1903. Delivery of possession was ordered on 16th June 1903. The Plaintiff brought this suit for declaration of title and khas possession of 12 annas share on 28th June 1910. The first Court held that the title was with the Plaintiff and the suit was not barred by limitation. On appeal it was held that Jamila was a co-tenant with the Plaintiff as proved by the khatian and judgment in sec. 104 case. It was observed :—"There can be no doubt that the auction sale was brought about by the landlord with the deliberate object of depriving the Plaintiff" of her share, and in this view it was held that the Defendant No. 1 was in collusion with the landlord and the suit was, therefore, barred by limitation under Art. 3, Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Held, that in view of the finding of fact in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that there could be no doubt that the auction sale was brought about by the landlord with the deliberate object of depriving the Plaintiff, the article applied.

Amiruddi v. Ulfat (13 C. W. N. 108) and Rudra Narain v. Natabar (18 C. W. N. 353 at p. 353) followed.

17 C. W. N. 817 dissented from.

Babu Hit Lal Guha for the Appellant.

Maulvi A. K Fuzlul Huq for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before COXE AND BEACHCROFT, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3742 OF 1912. RAJA ULLA MONDAL v. AMANAT SARDAR and others. 21st May 1914.

Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 153—Suit for rent—amount of rent disputed—Suit dismissed—Second appeal if lies.

In this case the Plaintiff brought the suit for arrears of rent alleging the rent to be Rs. 16 per year for an area of 6 bighas. The Defendants tenants admitted the relationship of landlord and tenant, but alleged that the rent was Rs. 3 per year for an area of 3 bighas only. The Munsif gave a decree to the Plaintiff at the rate of Rs. 9 per year. The District Judge at Alipore dismissed the suit on the ground that the Plaintiff failed to prove his case. A preliminary objection was taken that no second appeal lay under sec. 153, B. T. Act. The Vakil for the Appellant urged that in that case it might be treated as an application under sec. 115, C. P. Code.

Held, that no second appeal lay, as the suit having been dismissed no rate of rent was determined and even under sec. 115, there was no ground for interference.

Babu Ramatran Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Babu Karunamoy Ghose for the Respondent.

K. M. G.

PROBHAT CHANDRO CHATTERJEE v. PROSSANNO KUMAR SEN.

On the 24th October 1913, the Magistrate who was trying the proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., made his final order declaring the second party to be entitled to possession of the disputed land. The 1st party moved the High Court and obtained a rule to show cause why the order of the Magistrate under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., should not be set aside as made without jurisdiction inasmuch as there was a subsisting order under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., which rendered any order under sec. 145 ultra vires.

Mr. Bagram and Babu Monmotho Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Caspersz and Mr. A. K. Fazlul Haq and Babu Probodh Chandra Roy for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Faridpur and the Opposite Party to show cause why the order under sec. 145 should not be set aside as made without jurisdiction, inasmuch as there was a subsisting order under sec. 522 which rendered any order under sec. 145 ultra vires.

What we understood by the subsisting order under sec. 522 was the order by which the Criminal Court had as a matter of fact restored possession to the person who had been ejected from the property by criminal violence. But having heard from the learned Counsel on both sides the actual facts in connection with this case, we find that possession under sec. 522 was never as a fact delivered to the Petitioner and that there was no bar to any proceeding under sec. 145, which the Magistrate whose concern under that section is only with the peace of his district was entitled to take. It is in vain to say that the Magistrate has no jurisdiction to stay his own order under sec. 522 or that the effect of the conviction being set aside by the High Court does not necessarily do away with the order under sec. 522 and a specific order must be passed by the Appellate Court setting it aside. All that is perfectly true as a proposition of law ; but here as in all questions of possession we have to deal with what is purely a question of fact, and the facts being as they are we find that the order purporting to have been passed under sec. 522 on the 22nd February 1913 was infructuous and was never carried out, and, it was therefore no bar to the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court under sec. 145. To hold otherwise would be to take grave risks of continual breaches of the peace in connection with matters which had been dealt with by judicial orders which had never been carried out. The mere fact that an order has been obtained cannot possibly oust the jurisdiction of another Court which has to deal with the preservation of the peace in face of the fact that the previous order has never been carried out.

The Rule must therefore be discharged.

Rule discharged.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.
LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard, 4 and 5, May.
Judgment, 25, May.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT,
Appellant,
v.
G. NARAYANIAH and others,
Respondents.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), secs. 7, 9, 19, 52—Indian Majority Act (IX of

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

1875), sec. 3—Letters Patent, Madras High Court, 1865, cl. 13—Jurisdiction of District Court and of the High Court in respect of infants, limitations as to—Custody of infants, application by father for restoration and delivery of, if by suit or application—Infants ordinarily resident within jurisdiction, meaning of—Guardian and ward—Hindu father, if may appoint another as guardian of his sons—Authority so given, revocability of—Infants, when to be represented in an application for delivery of custody of their person—High Courts in India if may order person within jurisdiction to take possession of infants residing in England at the risk of habeas corpus—Mandatory injunction—Proper order to make in such cases—Indian Courts and English Courts, conflict of jurisdiction—Common law powers of Chartered High Courts and of District Courts over infants—Indian High Court, power of, to declare infant Ward of Court, for extending minority—Father, if may be appointed guardian—High Court's powers when case transferred from District Court—Issue not raised if can be decided on evidence on other issues.

As in England, so among the Hindus, the father is the natural guardian of his children during their minorities, but this guardianship is in the nature of a sacred trust, and he cannot therefore during his lifetime substitute another person to be guardian in his place. He may, it is true, in the exercise of his discretion as guardian, entrust the custody and education of his children to another, but the authority he thus confers is essentially a revocable authority, and if the welfare of his children require it, he can, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, take such custody and education once more into his own hand. If, however, the authority has been acted upon in such a way as, in the opinion of the Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants, to create associations or give rise to expectations on the part of the infants which it would be undesirable in their interests to disturb or disappoint, such Court will interfere to prevent its revocation.

LYONS v. BLENKIN (1) followed.

Where the Appellant had offered to take charge of the Respondent's two sons and defray the cost of their education at the University of Oxford and the Respondent thought it desirable to take advantage of the offer of giving his sons Western education, notwithstanding the fact that this would entail a loss of caste, and by a letter purported to appoint her (the Appellant) the guardian of his sons and to act as such and the Appellant thereafter left for England with the boys and made arrangements there for their tuition to enter the University of Oxford and defrayed the expenses of their maintenance and education and the father acquiesced in the sons being taken to England in Appellant's custody, but about six months later demanded of the Appellant the restoration of his sons, and on the refusal of the Appellant so to do, instituted a suit in a District Court of Madras for a declaration that he was entitled to the guardianship and custody of his sons and that the Appellant was not so entitled and for an order on the Appellant to hand over such sons to the Respondent or such other person as to the Court might seem fit :

Held—That the District Court had no jurisdiction over infants except such as is conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act.

That the jurisdiction of the District Court is limited by sec. 9 of the Guardians and Wards Act of 1890 to infants ordinarily resident within the district and that it was impossible to hold that infants who had months previously left India with a view to be educated in England were ordinarily resident in the district.

(1) Jac. 245 (1821).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

That a suit inter partes is not the form of procedure prescribed by the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890) for proceedings in a District Court touching the guardianship of infants.

Semble.—That the powers of the Madras High Court to which the suit was subsequently transferred under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent of 1865 relating to the case would seem to be confined to powers which but for the transfer might have been exercised by the District Court.

Where after the suit had been so transferred to the High Court, the Judge on the Original Side of the High Court declared the infants (one of whom was about to attain the age of majority, viz., 18 years) to be Wards of the Court and then under sec. 7 of the latter Act declared that the Respondent was their guardian so as thereby to prolong the minorities of the boys until they attained respectively the age of 21 under sec. 3 of the Indian Majority Act :

Held—That the latter order was not competent to the District Court in the suit in question. Nor was it competent to the High Court, whatever might be its jurisdiction to declare the infants Wards of Court, having regard to the fact that the infants were not before the Court and their interests were not adequately represented before the Judge. Further no order declaring a guardian could, by reason of sec. 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act, be made during the Respondent's life-time, unless in the opinion of the Court he was unfit to be their guardian, which was not the case here.

That although the Respondent remained the guardian of his sons, notwithstanding his letter authorising the Appellant to act as their guardian, and the authority given by him to the Defendant was always revocable, the question was whether in the events which had happened he was still entitled to exercise the functions of guardian and resume the custody of his sons and alter the scheme which had been formulated for their education and was at liberty to revoke the authority in the interest of the minors, and this question had to be determined having regard to the interests and welfare of the minors, bearing in mind their parentage and religion, and could only be decided by a Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants and in their presence.

That the question whether or not it would be to the interest of the minors to deliver them over to their father could not be properly decided without framing a definite issue to that effect and upon evidence admitted as relevant on other issues.

Such an issue can be properly determined only when the infants are properly represented and their wishes ascertained.

That the relief asked for being a mandatory order directing the Appellant to take possession of the person of the infants in England, and bring them to India, and hand them over to their father, and regard being had to the age of the infants, any attempt on the part of the Appellant to comply with this order, would, if the infants had refused to return to India, have been contrary to the law of England and would have at once exposed the Appellant to proceedings on a writ of habeas corpus in England. No Court ought to make an order which might lead to such consequences.

That the utmost that a Court of Competent Jurisdiction in India could do under the circumstances of this case was to order the Appellant to concur with the Respondent, as the infant's guardian, in taking proceedings in England to regain the custody and control of his sons.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

Leave having been given by the Judicial Committee to the infants to intervene in this appeal and they having expressed their unwillingness to return to India or abandon their chance of obtaining a University education in England, the order of the Madras High Court directing the Appellant to take them back to India could not be lawfully carried out without the consent of the boys or without an order from the Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants in England.

The material allegations upon which the suit was brought were as follows :—

The Defendant was the President of the Theosophical Society of which the Plaintiff was a member from 1882. About the end of 1908, the Plaintiff was appointed Assistant Corresponding Secretary to the Esoteric Section of the Society, and he and his family took up their residence at the head-quarters of the Society, Adyar, in a house which he occupied rent-free. In September 1909, he removed his two minor sons Krishnamurti and Nityananda from school, and they received gratuitous instruction at Adyar from one Mr. C. W. Leadbeater and others. The boys were then aged about 14 and 11. The Defendant became acquainted with them in December 1909. On the 6th March 1910, the Plaintiff signed a letter (Ex. A) by which he constituted the Defendant the guardian of his minor sons. In March 1911, the Defendant took the boys to Benares and then to England. Between these dates, the Plaintiff alleged, he became acquainted with facts which led him on 31st December 1911 to ask the Defendant (who meanwhile had returned from England with the boys in October 1911) at Benares (where the boys had been taken by Mr. Leadbeater from Adyar in December 1911) that they should be separated from Mr. Leadbeater. The Defendant having refused Plaintiff's request, the Plaintiff returned to Adyar in January 1912, and as the result of his complaints to various persons, an interview took place between the Plaintiff and the Defendant in the presence of several other members of the Society, at which the Plaintiff agreed that he had no objection to the boys being taken to England, the Defendant having assured him that they had been separated from Mr. Leadbeater who had left India on 13th January 1912. On 26th January 1912, the Defendant left Adyar with the boys for Benares from where they were taken by her to England after short stays in Sicily and Italy, where, it was alleged, Mr. Leadbeater had met them.

On 7th February 1912, the Plaintiff was dismissed by the Defendant from his office of Secretary, and on 19th July 1912 the Plaintiff wrote to the Defendant a letter Ex. AA 6, in which he purported to cancel the letter Ex. A and asked her to hand over to her his two sons. In October 1912, the Defendant returned to Adyar leaving the boys in England, and the Plaintiff instituted the present suit in the District Court of Chingleput, praying for declarations (1) that he was entitled to the guardianship and custody of his two minor sons, (2) that the Defendant Mrs. Besant was not entitled to and was unfit for the charge and guardianship of them and for a direction to her to hand them over to him or to such other person as might be appointed.

After the Defendant had filed her written statement, the case was transferred to the Original Side of the High Court under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent. An amended plaint and written statement were afterwards filed, the relief prayed in the former however remaining the same. The suit was tried and disposed of by Bakewell, J., who declared the minors wards of Court and passed a decree declaring the Plaintiff to be the guardian of the minors and directing that the Defendant should hand over custody of them to the Plaintiff in that capacity.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

The Defendant appealed. The Appellate Court delivered two judgments, one on the question of jurisdiction dated the 17th September 1913 and another on the merits on the 13th October 1913 dismissing the appeal with costs.

In the course of his judgment on the preliminary question of jurisdiction, White, C. J., observed as follows :—

"It was argued that the Guardians and Wards Act being a Code, all common law remedies by suit were superseded by that Act. It was also argued that the learned Judge could only exercise jurisdiction in the suit as a tribunal acting in the place of the Chingleput Court and that if the proceedings by suit in the Chingleput Court were defective, that defect was inherent in the jurisdiction, which the learned Judge purported to exercise in the suit, after it had been transferred to this Court. The Defendant did not contend that, assuming this Court had jurisdiction independent of the jurisdiction exerciseable under the Guardians and Wards Act, this Court would have been precluded from exercising that jurisdiction if the suit had been instituted here, though she did not admit that even in those circumstances there would have been jurisdiction in this Court. As regards this question, sec. 3 of the Guardians and Wards Act expressly provides that nothing in that Act shall be construed to take away any power possessed by any High Court established under the High Courts Act. So far as I know, there is no case in which it has been suggested that the effect of the Act is to cut down the jurisdiction of this Court when proceedings are instituted here and guardians have been appointed by Indian High Courts under their general powers irrespective of the Act. See for instance Re Jiram Luxmon (2). The Guardians and Wards Act is an Act passed in 1890 (VIII of 1890) for the consolidation and amendment of the law relating to guardians and wards. By that Act the earlier regulations and enactments were repealed. There is authority for the Defendant's contention that as regards suits instituted and tried in the subordinate Courts, all common law remedies were superseded by the Act. The Allahabad High Court in Sham Lal v. Bindo (3), a case decided since the passing of the Act of 1890, took this view. The judgment, however, is based mainly on the argumentum ad inconvenienti, and there is considerable force in Mr. Ramasami Iyer's suggestion that the suggested anomalies were not new, but had existed since the Act of 1861. This would also appear to be the view taken by the Punjab Chief Court (32 P. R. 49). See the case referred to by Chandavarkar, J., in his judgment in Sharifa v. Munekhan (4).' The Bombay High Court on the other hand in Sharifa v. Munekhan (4), also decided since 1890, held that the right to proceed by suit was preserved. The question does not seem to have been considered by this Court as regards the Act of 1890, but in a case

(2) I. L. R. 16 Bom. 634 (1892).
(3) I. L. R. 26 All. 594 (1904).
(4) I. L. R. 25 Bom. 574 at p. 580 (1901).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

decided under the Act of 1861, this Court held that that Act did not debar a District Munsif's Court from entertaining a suit by a Hindu father to recover the possession of his minor sons alleged to be illegally detained. See Krishna v. Reade (5). Mr. (Sir John) Trevelyan in his Law relating to Minors (Ed. IV, p. 99), with reference to the jurisdiction of District Courts in matters relating to the appointment of guardians observes: 'There being nothing in the Guardians and Wards Act or in any other enactment to exclude their jurisdiction, the Courts in the districts can appoint guardians in suits brought for that purpose, but in consequence of the existence of a special procedure such suits have fallen into disuse.' It was argued that the decision with reference to the Act of 1861, such as the Madras case to which I have referred, could not be relied on in support of the contention that the common law rights to proceed by suit survived the Act of 1890, since the earlier enactment was an enabling and not a consolidating Act and contained no indication of the intentions of the legislature to supersede the common law right of action. There would be more force in this argument, if indications were to be found in the Act of 1890, that it was the intention of the legislature that all right to take proceedings otherwise than under the Act, should be superseded. There is certainly no express provision in the later Act that the legislature intended to put an end to the common law right of action, and I am not prepared to infer from the general scope and tenor of the Act that this was the intention. Such indications, as there are within the four corners of the enactment, in my opinion, rather point in the opposite direction. We find in sec. 52, the section which amends the Indian Majority Act of 1875, the words 'Any Court of Justice' not 'the Court exercising jurisdiction under the Guardians and Wards Act,' though perhaps too much stress should not be laid on this, since in a section amending the Indian Majority Act (where the words 'any Court of Justice' occur), the words of the enactment which is amended would as far as possible be followed. Again, sec. 48 of the Act of 1890 provides that an order under the Act is final and shall not be contested by suit. Nothing is said as to the right to sue in the first instance being taken away or affected by the Act. I think, the question is governed by the general rule that a special remedy under a special statute does not take away the common law right. The rule is thus stated in Ramayyar v. Vedachalla (6), which is cited in Zemindar of Ettayapuram v. Sankarappa Reddiar (7), 'Where a statute creates a new offence or gives a new right and prescribes a particular penalty or special remedy, no other remedy can, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, be resorted to, but where a statute is confirmatory of a pre-existing right, the new remedy is presumed as cumulative or alternative unless an intention to the contrary appears from some other part of the statute.'

"I am of opinion that the Act of 1890 did not take away any common law or equitable jurisdiction which was vested in a District Court at the time the Act came into force. I think, this objection to the jurisdiction fails.

"I am also of opinion that the jurisdiction of the High Court in this suit is the same as if the suit had been originally

(5) I. L. R. 9 Mad. 31 (1885).

(6) I. L. R. 14 Mad. 441 (1890).

(7) I. L. R. 27 Mad. 483 at p. 493 (1903).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

instituted in the High Court and that it is not restricted to such jurisdiction as could have been exercised by the District Court, if the suit had not been called up by the High Court. Cl. 20 of the Letters Patent no doubt provides that the law or equity and rule of good conscience which is to be applied to the High Court when exercising its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction is to be the law or equity or rule of good conscience which would have been applied by the local Court. But this provision, in my opinion, does not take away or cut down any independent jurisdiction which may be vested in the High Court. In the despatch of the Secretary of State dated 14th May 1862, which accompanied the Letters Patent of that year, it is stated that by cl. 13 the High Court is empowered to call for and to try as a Court of First Instance any suit which the law requires to be instituted before some other tribunal, and that by the exercise of this power the High Court will be enabled to obviate all reasonable ground of complaint when it seems that any hardship or injustice is likely to result from the compulsory institution in a Zilla Court of a suit which, but for the change of system, might have been instituted in the Supreme Court. This is inconsistent with the suggestion that the Extraordinary Original Jurisdiction of this Court is more restricted than its Ordinary Original Jurisdiction. I see no reason for holding that this Court when trying a suit as a Court of Extraordinary Original Jurisdiction should be precluded from exercising any jurisdiction which may be vested in it by law as a Court of Original Civil Jurisdiction. I think, this ground of objection also fails.

"The objection to the jurisdiction which I now propose to consider is taken in the twelfth ground of appeal. This raises the question whether the learned Judge had 'power and authority' under cl. 17 of the Letters Patent to appoint the father the guardian of the persons of the minors and to direct the handing over of the minors by the Defendant to him notwithstanding the fact that the minors were outside the Presidency of Madras when the suit was instituted and when the judgment was pronounced. Jurisdiction as regards infants was expressly conferred on the Supreme Court of Madras by cl 32 of the Letters Patent of 1800 which created the Supreme Court. This clause authorises the Supreme Court to appoint guardians and keepers for infants and their estates according to the order and course observed in that part of Great Britain called England. The language of this clause is quite general and is not qualified by any limitations as to persons or place such as we find in other clauses of these Letters Patent. (See for instance cls. 4, 21, 22, 31, and 41.) The High Court of Judicature at Madras was constituted by the Letters Patent of 1862 issued under the powers conferred by the Indian High Courts Act, 1861. By sec. 8 of that Act on the establishment of the High Court, the Supreme Court and the Court of Sudder Adaulat and Foujdari Adaulat were abolished, and by sec. 9 the jurisdiction of the abolished Courts was, subject to certain limitations, vested in the High Court. In addition to the general vesting of jurisdiction by this section, cl. 16 of the Letters Patent of 1862 expressly conferred upon the High Court 'the like power and authority with respect to the persons and estates of infants, idiots and lunatics, whether within or without the Presidency of Madras as that which is now vested in the said Supreme Court of Madras.' Whatever may have been the purpose for which the words 'whether within or without the Presidency of Madras' were introduced into this clause, it seems clear that it was the intention of the framers of the Letters Patent to confer in express terms upon the High Court, as regards the persons and estates of infants, the same jurisdiction as had up to that time been vested in the Supreme Court. The words 'whether within or without the Presidency of Madras' seem to me to be inappropriate, or at any rate unnecessary both in cl. 16 which relates to jurisdiction as to infants and lunatics, and in cl. 17 which relates to the insolvency jurisdiction of the High Court.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

"In cl. 13, the clause which gave Extraordinary Civil Jurisdiction to the High Court, the words are necessary in order to include any Courts subject to the superintendence of the High Court which might be situated without the Presidency. In the Letters Patent now in force, the Letters Patent of 1865, we find the words 'whether within or without the Presidency of Madras' retained in cl. 13, whilst in cls. 17 and 18, which correspond to cls. 16 and 17 respectively of the Letters Patent of 1862, for these words the words 'within the Presidency of Madras' were substituted. In the despatch of the Secretary of State to which I have already referred it is stated that the reason for the introduction of the words, 'whether within or without' was to make it clear that the Charter was meant to apply to certain extra-local jurisdictions. It may be that the explanation for the omission of the words 'or without' in cls. 17 and 18 of the Letters Patent of 1865 is to be found in sec. 3 of the Act of 1865 (28 Vict., c. 15), which empowered the Governor-General to authorise any High Court to exercise the powers conferred by the Letters Patent in a place not within the limits of the Presidency for which the High Court was established, since the effect of this enactment may have rendered the words 'or without' in cls. 17 and 18 unnecessary, though they would still be necessary for the purposes of the Extraordinary Original Jurisdiction conferred by cl. 13. However this may be, it seems clear that the words 'within the Presidency of Madras' were used for the purposes of territorial limitation, and that they did not qualify or restrict the powers of the High Court with regard to the guardianship of minors. The jurisdiction in connection with the estates and persons of minors is, in my opinion, the jurisdiction which was exerciseable by the Lord Chancellor in England acting for the Sovereign as parens patriæ when the Supreme Court in Madras was instituted. The learned Judge in dealing with this question of jurisdiction referred to the fact that the minors were domiciled in British India. I do not think, when he referred to the domicile of the minors, that he meant to lay it down that an Indian domicile on the part of the minors was necessary to give this Court jurisdiction. Cl. 17 says nothing about the domicile of minors. But it seems to me that the domicile of the minors, or the fact that they are Indians, may be factors to be taken into consideration when the Court is determining whether in a given case it will exercise jurisdiction or decline to do so. If the domicile and residence of the father within the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery in England would have been sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Court in England, I think the same facts mutatis mutandis would be sufficient to give jurisdiction here. Whether the Court either in England or here should exercise the jurisdiction on the strength of these facts alone is a different matter. In determining whether the Court will exercise its jurisdiction, and in what manner it will exercise it, many factors may have to be taken into consideration, amongst others, as it seems to me, the question of domicile.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

"The Defendant also contended that the decree was bad and must be taken to have been made without jurisdiction, because it must necessarily be 'ineffective.' She relied on the proposition in the introduction to Professor Dicey's work, the 'Conflict of Laws,' which is stated as general principle No. III (second edition, p. 40). 'The Sovereign of a country acting through the Courts thereof has jurisdiction over any matter with regard to which he can give an effective judgment, and has no jurisdiction over any matter with regard to which he cannot give an effective judgment.' Professor Dicey says (pp. 41 and 42) that a judgment which is "ineffective" means 'a decree which the Sovereign under whose authority it is delivered has not in fact the power to enforce against the person bound by it, and which, therefore, the Sovereign cannot, even if he choose, give his Court the means of enforcing.' It may be a question whether this principle has any application, whereas in the present case the Courts in England and the Courts in this country act through the same Sovereign. At any rate there can be little doubt that the Sovereign acting through his Court in England has the means of enforcing this judgment. Whether the Court in England would think fit to do so in the circumstances of this case is, of course, another matter. The rule is thus stated by Professor Dicey: 'A guardian appointed under the law of a foreign country (called hereinafter a foreign guardian) has no direct authority as guardian in England, but the Court recognises the existence of a foreign guardianship, and may, in its discretion, give effect to a foreign guardian's authority over his ward.' (Dicey's Conflict of Laws, second edition, Rule 133, p. 475.) It does not follow that because the decree gives the father as guardian no authority, in England, assuming it does not, the decree is 'ineffective.' In the more recent English cases the Courts in England have recognised the foreign guardian. 'The position, however, in England of foreign guardians is a subject on which it is difficult to lay down precise rules, both because, in all matters of guardianship the High Court acts mainly on its discretion and with reference to the particular circumstance of each case, and because the later decisions involve a recognition of foreign guardianship not in reality consistent with the doctrine of the earlier cases that the powers of guardians are strictly local.' (Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 2nd edition, p. 478.) I am not prepared to hold that the judgment in this case is ineffective and therefore bad.

"The contention that the Court in England would say that the decree which it was asked to enforce had not been made by a Court of competent jurisdiction of course begs the question. It was argued that the Court of Chancery has wider powers than any Court acting under statutory powers. But in the present case the statutory power as regards the appointment of guardians for infants is given with express reference to "the order and course observed in that part of Great Britain called England" (see cl. 32 of the Letters Patent of 1800).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

"The test seems to me, would the fact that an infant was resident out of England in itself deprive the Courts in England of power on the application of a father, domiciled and resident in England, to appoint a guardian of the person of the non-resident infant? The answer is surely 'No.' As regards the English cases in Johnstone v. Beattie (8), a case which came before the House of Lords in 1843, it was held that the rights of a Scotch 'tutor' could not be recognized by the Court in England, with reference to a minor residing in England. It was also held that the Court in England had jurisdiction to appoint guardians for the infant, although her domicile and all her property were situated in Scotland. In Hope v. Hope (9), a case which came before Lord Cranworth in 1854, the Lord Chancellor laid it down that the Court of Chancery had jurisdiction over the custody of the children of an English subject though such children were born and at the time the jurisdiction was invoked were resident abroad. In this case the children were born out of the jurisdiction, the mother was resident out of the jurisdiction and an interim order had been made by the French Court entrusting to her custody of the children. In the case before us, the children were born within the Presidency of Madras. The Appellant has not contended that she does not reside within the Presidency and no order has been made by the Court in England with which the order of Bakewell, J., could conflict. The fact that the Defendant must be deemed to be resident within the jurisdiction seems to me to be a matter of importance. In the Hope case (9), the Lord Chancellor said in his final judgment (p. 544):—'If Mrs. Hope had not been abroad, I should have made a short order directing compliance within a limited time, and in default that she should stand committed.' On the facts of the Hope case (9) the Lord Chancellor does not seem to have entertained the least doubt as to his jurisdiction, though in framing his orders he took the greatest care to treat the French tribunal with all respect, and to avoid the possibility of a conflict between the French and English Courts. The final order which the Lord Chanceller made was that within a week the mother should deliver up the children to their father or otherwise concur with him in taking such steps as might be necessary for authorising them to be delivered up to him according to the laws of France. Whether anything was done in pursuance of this order we do not know. Assuming nothing was done this does not affect the question of jurisdiction. The Lord Chancellor was clearly of opinion that he ought to make the order and that the case was not one of the class of cases to which he referred in his first judgment (p. 542) when an order would do no good, but would involve 'a sort of scandal' on the Court by reason of an order being made which the Court could not enforce. Even in this class of cases the Lord Chancellor apparently did not doubt the jurisdiction, but only the desirability of exercising it.

"In In re Willoughby (10), the Court following Hope v. Hope (9) on the applica-

(8) 10 Cl. and F. 42 (1843).

(9) 43 Eng. Rep. 534: 4 DeG. M. & G. 328 (1854).

(10) 30 Ch. D. 324 (1885).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

tion of the infant's next friend, the father (a natural born British subject) being dead, appointed a guardian of an infant born and resident in France, the mother, a French woman, being entitled by the law of France to the status of natural guardian of the infant. The Court of Appeal, affirming Kay, J., were of opinion that the jurisdiction existed, and in the circumstances ought to be exercised. Other English cases were cited to us, but I do not propose to discuss them, as the two cases to which I referred are the only cases, so far as I know, which seem to me to be directly in point. Some Indian cases were cited in the course of the argument. I only refer to those cases where the question of the jurisdiction conferred by the Letters Patent was considered. In In re the Estate of H. G. Meakin (11), a mother residing in Poona was under the powers conferred by the Letters Patent appointed guardian of a child who was resident in England at the time the order was made. The making of the order, however, was not opposed. In In the matter of Srish Chunder Singh (12), on an application under cl. 17 of the Letters Patent, Sale, J., refused to appoint a guardian of the person and property of an infant who was not a British subject and who was outside the limits of the Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction of the Calcutta High Court, there being testamentary guardians and no application having been made to remove them. The fact that the infant was not a European British subject does not seem material to the question of jurisdiction. The learned Judge would seem to have relied on the fact that there were testamentary guardians and also on the fact that under the Guardians and Wards Act the application should have been made to the Court in whose jurisdiction the minor resided. So far as I know, there is no decision with the exception of the case to which I have just referred that an Indian High Court has no jurisdiction under cl. 17 of the Letters Patent, where the infant is outside the jurisdiction when the Court is asked to exercise its 'power and authority.'

"As regards the objection that the minors were not represented, in my opinion neither Or. XXXII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code, nor the principle of law or equity on which the rule is based applies to the present suit. The minors are not parties to the suit, and as from the very nature of the suit there must be the fullest and most careful consideration of their interest before any order is made, it is not necessary that they should be separately represented in order that their interests may be protected.

"I am of opinion that in this case Bakewell, J., had power to appoint the father the guardian of the minors and that the power of the Court to appoint a guardian carries with it a power to make any order which may be necessary to enforce the authority of the guardian.

"I express no opinion as to whether, apart from the power and authority given to the Court by the Letters Patent, this Court would have jurisdiction under the Code of Civil Procedure and the general law to make the decree which is now under appeal.

"In my opinion the objections to the jurisdiction fail."

Oldfield, J., in dealing with the same question observed :—

"The first ground of appeal argued is that these proceedings were taken in the form of an ordinary suit, although the relief claimed could be asked for only by petition under a special Act, the Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), if the terms thereof authorised its grant and the procedure therein prescribed were followed. The objection is substantial, because sec. 9 of the Act requires that an application for the personal guardianship of a minor shall be made to the District Court within the limits of whose jurisdiction he is ordinarily resident, and it is at least doubtful whether this requirement was complied with in the present case when the minors had left the jurisdiction about nine months previously. Secs. 10 and 11 moreover prescribe that certain information shall be given in the petition, which was not given in the present plaint, and that certain notices shall be served. It is not disputed that the relief now given by the learned Judge could have been claimed under the Act. It is argued that it could have been claimed only under it, and that therefore the acceptance of the plaint by the Chingleput District Court and all subsequent proceedings were without jurisdiction. A defect in jurisdiction such as that alleged can be relied on at any time and could not have been cured by the Defendant's waiver of her objection to it; and it is therefore unnecessary to refer to the course of her pleading in this connection. It has been suggested that in any case the plaint can be treated as a petition and the proceedings as proceedings under the Act, the minors having in fact been ordinarily resident within the Chingleput jurisdiction. But, if there were no legal objection to that course and the necessary finding as to residence could be reached, there is still a possibility that the Defendant would suffer prejudice in respect of the merits of her case which debars this Court from such use of its discretion. It is therefore necessary to decide whether the existence of the special Act makes a suit unsustainable under the common law.

(11) I. L. R. 21 Bom. 137 (1896).
(12) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 206 (1893).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

"There is no doubt that the provision of a simple and summary procedure under the Act has made suits rare, if it has not brought them into total disuse; and for that reason, whether or no the right of suits still exists, there are not likely to be many decisions regarding it. There is no Madras case. For, Thiruvengadamier v. Periasami Tevary (13) which was originally relied on turned out on inspection of the record to relate to a petition under the Act. In the other provinces conflicting views have been taken as appears from the references given in Shamlal v. Bindo (3), the High Court of Allahabad and the Chief Court of the Punjab being against and the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts in favour of the survival of the common law jurisdiction. The judgments in all these cases are, however, inconclusive, for the anomaly foreseen in Shamlal v. Bindo (3), as a consequence of the conflict between the decisions of two Courts, could be avoided as easily in this as in other cases by the use of the Court's power to join necessary parties at the instance of the person who was a party to both proceedings. In the matter of the Petition of Kashi Chunder Sen (14) was a proceeding under the Act, the question being whether its scope had been enlarged illegitimately; and the case is important only with reference to certain observations in the judgment of Broughton, J., on one aspect of the matter to which I shall return. In another case not referred to in

(3) I. L. R. 26 All. 594 (1904).
(13) 9 M. L. J. 24.
(14) I. L. R. 8 Cal. 266 (1881).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

Shamlal v. Bindo (3), In the matter of Srish Chunder Singh (12), the question came before a single Judge on application primarily under the Letters Patent but also under the Act. No order in fact was made and there was no question of the existence of a concurrent right to sue. The Bombay case, Sharifa v. Munekan (4), ended in a dismissal on the merits. Perhaps on that account the judgments deal with the question of jurisdiction, one of them only by reference to an unreported case of the same High Court, the other by reference to Calcutta cases.

"In these circumstancs, the Defendant's contention must be dealt with on its merits. It is firstly, that the provisions of the Act and their wording abolish existing remedies under the statute and Common Law expressly or by implication. The Statute Law of 1890 consisted in Madras Regulation V of 1804 (sec. 20) and X of 1831 and the Indian Acts XIV of 1858 and IX of 1861. The three first gave more or less general authority to Courts to appoint guardians and the last empowered District Judges to do so by summary process, at the same time expressly saving the validity of appointments made in suits without restriction as to the grade of the Courts making them. None treated of the rights or liabilities of the guardian or minor. It is clear and it was recognised in Krishna v. Reade (5) in which the sustainability of a suit in a District Munsif's Court was upheld, that a comprehensive remedy was available at Common Law, and in fact it was only as regards two matters, the appointment of a guardian and the procedure by which he could obtain custody of his ward, that the statutes afforded any guidance whatever. The explicit repeal of the statutes by Act VIII of 1890 therefore entailed very little. In the language of the Act there is nothing which in my opinion favours either Defendant or the Plaintiff. There is no reference to remedies, rights or duties under the Common Law or their abolition. There is no doubt no reference to guardians appointed under it, though one might perhaps have been expected in sec. 26 (1), which refers to guardians appointed or declared by the Court or appointed by will or other instrument. The Plaintiff's suggestion that guardianships obtained by suits are included in this and other sections, in those declared by the Court, fails in view of the definition of Court in sec. 4 (5); and it is simpler to assume that the duties of guardians not appointed under the Act was left to be regulated by the Courts which appointed them. Sec. 52 refers to appointments or declarations made by any Court of Justice, and may be a recognition of appointments not made under the Act or by the District or High Court. But it may be intended merely to cover those made by other Courts before the Act was passed. Sec. 7 provides a procedure for the appointment of a guardian, the use of which is restricted to District Courts, but its language in no way excludes the existence of an alternative or is inconsistent with its merely enabling character. There is, it must be held, nothing in the Act itself which supports or negatives Defendant's contention.

"She relies also on the more general argument that Act VIII of 1890 abolished existing jurisdiction and remedies, inasmuch as it is a codifying enactment.

(3) I. L. R. 26 All. 594 (1904).
(4) I. L. R. 25 Bom. 574 (1901).
(5) I. L. R. 9 Mad. 31 (1885).
(12) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 206 (1893).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

That it is one must be conceded. It is statedly intended to consolidate and amend the existing law, and that formula is as explicit as those used in other enactments usually recognised as codes. It repealed the existing statute law exhaustively. It reproduced it and the existing common law so comprehensively that the learned vakil for the Plaintiff has been able to point three topics only as omitted from its purview; and their importance is insignificant or the necessity for their inclusion doubtful. But though Act VIII of 1890 constitutes a code, the consequence alleged by the Defendant does not follow. No doubt 'when a statute gives a new right and prescribes a special remedy, no other remedy can, in the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, be resorted to.' But this statement of the law is incomplete, unless it is remembered that 'when a statute is confirmatory of a pre-existing right, the new remedy is presumed as cumulative or alternative, unless an intention to the contrary appears from some other part of the statute.' The rule is given in those terms in Ramayyar v. Vedachalla (6) and Zamindar of Ettyapuram v. Sankarappa (7), and is moreover based on English authority. It is not material that in Ramchandra v. The Secretary of State (15), only the first portion of it was referred to. For that (it would appear) was owing to the assumption (made rightly or wrongly) that new rights alone were then in question; and this is borne out by the character of the English cases cited, the rights in question in them having been created by statute. Then the rule, thus ascertained as a whole, is useless to the Defendant. For, as was observed above, a common law jurisdiction existed, and the Act is only a re-affirmation of the powers exerciseable and the duties enforceable under it. The one exception among its provisions to this statement is in sec. 58, which postpones the date of majority in cases in which a guardian has been appointed. But its application is expressly extended to all such cases, and is not limited to those in which there has been an appointment by a Court as defined in sec. 4 (5) of the Act. Although therefore the Act is a Code, it cannot be held to bar remedies or to close jurisdiction open at its date; and though they may have fallen into disuse in the mofussil in this Presidency, that cannot affect the Plaintiff's right to use them, when it has not been abrogated in any legal way. This objection to the jurisdiction therefore fails.

"The first of Defendant's more general objections to it is that no trial could be held when the minors were not impleaded separately, or represented by a guardian ad litem in accordance with Or. XXXII, r. 5 (2), Code of Civil Procedure. This rule reproduces sec. 444 of the Code in force when Krishna v. Reade (5) and the Calcutta and Bombay cases above referred to were decided, and I observe that the minors concerned were not made parties in them, and that the minor is not among the persons to whom notice must go in proceedings under Act VIII of 1890. But the short answer to this objection is that whatever its weight may be held to be, if it is urged by the minors as ground for discharging the order against them, it has not been shown how the Defendant, who did not take it before the learned Judge, can take it here.

"In order to meet the statement of De-

(6) I. L. R. 14 Mad. 441 (1890).
(7) I. L. R. 27 Mad. 483 (1903).
(15) I. L. R. 12 Mad. 105 (1888).

(5) I. L. R. 9 Mad. 31 (1885).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

fendant's last and most important objection to the jurisdiction, it is necessary to refer to the learned Judge's own statements regarding it. In the order of the 22nd April 1913, he said, 'with regard to the jurisdiction of this Court under cl. 13 of the Letters Patent, the power thereby conferred appears to be analogous to that of the High Court of England to remove actions from inferior Courts by writ of certiorari, and I think that this Court has the same powers in the trial of a suit removed from the District Court as in the suit instituted here.' Now if only cl. 13 is in question, it is clear that the learned Judge's powers were under cl. 20 only, those of the District Court of Chingleput, from which the suit was transferred. But in para. 15 of his judgment he said, 'with regard to jurisdiction Plaintiff's children are subjects of the King-Emperor, domiciled in British India, and are only temporarily resident in England where they were taken by Defendant for purposes of education. The Defendant has also, in my opinion, broken the understanding, by which she was allowed to take them beyond the jurisdiction. In these circumstances I am clear that this Court has jurisdiction to pass orders as to the custody of the children, and is bound to enforce such orders by all means in its power.' It is not clear how far Defendant ever abandoned her intention of contesting the issues relating to jurisdiction, but the learned Judge has dealt with them shortly, because as he said, he understood her to do so. Probably on this account he has not stated explicitly the nature of the jurisdiction he professed to be exercising, but has only referred to various foundations for it, the nationality and domicile of the minors and Defendant's conduct as constituting a cause of action. The Defendant has argued that these foundations are useless, that no other is available, and that the minors being resident outside British India, if a suit could be brought at all, neither the District Court of Chingleput nor the learned Judge was entitled to entertain it. She has maintained this directly and also with reference to the principle of effectiveness.

"It is in my opinion unnecessary to consider at any length one answer to this argument that the learned Judge could pass the decree under appeal in the exercise of the powers conferred by cl. 17, Letters Patent, because his action can, I think, be justified, without reference to it. I therefore do not deal with the very careful discussion of the history of the clause which has taken place. I observe only that the powers conferred by cl. 17 are those exercised by the defunct Supreme Court, that is, those which would be exercised by the Court of Chancery in England, and that whilst those powers have been exercised in cases referred to before us, and can be exercised without any special invocation by petition or otherwise, the foundation for that exercise (so far as has been shown) has always been, and presumably must be, some proceeding pending before the Court in the legal use of its powers. This is material, because in the present case the legality of the proceedings and of their institution in the Chingleput District Court is denied, and the transfer under cl. 13, Letters Patent, to this Court cannot be treated as validating them. Ledgard v. Bull (16), cl. 17, therefore can be relied on only to supplement powers which the learned Judge must be shown to have had already under cls. 13 and 20, and with reference to the nature of the relief he could give, and only in case there was already a legally instituted proceeding before him, that is, in case the Chingleput District Court had jurisdiction.

(16) I. L. R. 9 All. 191 (1886).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

"To return to the foundations for his jurisdiction, to which the learned Judge referred, there are no doubt some expressions used in English cases, to be cited later, which imply that nationality and domicile weighed with the Court of Chancery in the circumstances under consideration. But it is doubtful whether in them the jurisdiction was founded on the nationality or domicile of the minors alone; and I desire, if possible, to justify the learned Judge's action on grounds unconnected with the exercise of the special powers of that Court. The Defendant denied that she had been guilty of the breach of any agreement within or outside the jurisdiction. But neither the agreement in question, that of 19th January 1912, nor its breach is the whole or a major part of the subject-matter of the suit; and therefore, though the agreement could ordinarily be sued on in Chingleput District, where it was made, it is unnecessary to pursue this further. The questions are whether any other legal justification for the institution of the suit at Chingleput is available and whether the non-residence of the minors is material.

"The law as to the suits, of which in general Indian Courts are empowered to take cognizance, is stated primarily in sec. 9, Code of Civil Procedure. They have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature, the meaning of the last two words being restricted in a manner not at present material, by an explanation. This general statement is further qualified by reference (1) to the provisions of the Code itself, (2) to any express or implied bar. The latter exception no doubt covers suits excluded expressly or impliedly from the jurisdiction by other enactments. The question is to what extent it also recognises the exclusion of suits under the provisions of unwritten, including private international, law, if such excluding provisions exist. The alternative is with reference to the first qualification above referred to. That the only further test of jurisdiction is supplied by secs. 15 to 20 which prescribe the Court entitled to try each class of suit with reference to territorial considerations. If these sections can be treated as establishing a general criterion applicable in cases of competition not only between Courts in British India, but also between them and Foreign Courts, the jurisdiction of the Chingleput District Court is clear, since the case is covered by sec. 20 (a) relating to the Defendant's residence, not the locality of the cause of action. The suit is not one referred to in any of the earlier sections. The rules stated in the various portions of sec. 20 are alternative. The Defendant gave her residence in her written statement as alternately Adyar in Chingleput District, Benares and England, and as she was served at Adyar it is not necessary to go through authorities to show that for the purposes of the section she must be held to have been resident there. These sections have been treated as affording the criterion above referred to as between Indian and Foreign Courts in a number of decisions and there are indications that they were intended to do so in the general absence of any restrictions on their operation and in the explanation to sec. 16, which imposes a restriction material in the present connection and so far as it affects the proviso to the section, constituting a deliberate departure from the private international law recognised by English Courts and stated in Pen v. Baltimore (17).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

"In Annamalai Chetty v. Murugusa Chetty (18) it was however observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council, 'in both Courts in India it was apparently assumed that the question of jurisdiction turned on sec. 17 (now sec. 20) of the Code of Civil Procedure and that though the Defendant was a foreigner and although the cause of action arose in a foreign country and although the Defendant did not personally reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of any Court in British India . . . . yet he could be sued' in a British Indian Court; and it was said that this assumption required more attention than it had received. It is true that in the same judgment their Lordships expressly approved the decision in Girdhar Damodar v. Kassigar Hiragar (19). In it one learned Judge said that the Court was not concerned with questions of International Law and had only to determine whether the Defendant was a person against whom the legislature had permitted a suit to be filed in which a decree could be passed and executed against his person and property within the jurisdiction. The other in the portion of his judgment at page 666 to which reference is made in the foot-note to the Madras case, quoted Companhia de Mozambique v. British South Africa Company (20) to the effect that the question whether the Courts of a nation will or will not entertain jurisdiction of any dispute is to be decided by the municipal law of the nation itself thus far concurring in his colleague's adoption of that law as supplying the test required. But he continued the quotation, and it is to this and his connected observations that I understand the judgment of the Privy Council to refer. 'If there is a proper inference to the same effect as that of express legislation the result is the same. But there are certain rules which have by universal consent indicated the circumstances from which the inference may legitimately be drawn.' It was with such inference and the question whether the circumstances supported it that the Privy Council and the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court were concerned in the cases under discussion, since in both the phrases 'carries on business' was under interpretation. But no such inference is under discussion or need be drawn in the present case in which reference only to the Defendant's residence and sec. 20 (a) is necessary and the facts required for its application are not in doubt. Here, therefore, there is no reason for resort to the principles of Private International Law.

"Nor does the fact that the minors are not at present resident within the Chingleput jurisdiction afford such reason. It has been pointed out that the various portions of sec. 20 are alternative, and there is therefore no reason for considering the place where the cause of action arose, or the minors' whereabouts as determining it. I shall refer later to the validity of the learned Judges' decision against the minors themselves and the possible consequences of the Plaintiff's failure to implead them. In the present connection it is sufficient that this is an action in personam, and that to quote the rule as stated at p. 361, Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 2nd Edition, 'the Courts of a foreign country have jurisdiction where at the time of the commencement of the action the Defendant was resident (or present) in such country so as to have the (17) 1 Vesey Sen 444 (1750).

(18) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 544 (1903).
(19) I. L. R. 17 Bom. 662 (1893).
(20) [1892] 2 Q. B. 358.

benefit and be under the protection of its laws.' I deal below with the argument from the doctrine of effectiveness. But for the present purpose the principle just referred to is sufficient, and there is nothing in the words cited or in any other authority adduced to derogate from its effect or to show that the absence from the jurisdiction of the object of the claim, be it minors or chattels, is sufficient in itself to deprive the Court of jurisdiction otherwise obtained.

"Lastly, the doctrine of effectiveness as enunciated at p. 40, Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 2nd Edition, has been invoked. It is stated there as follows: 'The Sovereign of a Country acting through the Courts thereof has jurisdiction over any matter with regard to which he can give an effective judgment,' and the Defendant would define effectiveness shortly as 'the power of the Court to carry out its own decrees without resort to any other force than that of its Sovereign.' It is urged that the learned Judge has no power to carry out his decree without resort to the force of a Sovereign, other than the Government of India, and that he therefore could not pass it. This, however, assumes as I understand it that the doctrine must be applied not only to cases in which the whole relief claimed would be beyond the powers of the decreeing Court to enforce, but also to those in which only a part of it would be so. That assumption is not supported by authority. The distinction drawn between judgments wholly and partially enforceable by the decreeing Court is material, because the judgment before us would appear to be of the latter description.

"So far as appears from the work cited, the majority of the cases in which the doctrine has been applied related to claims to immoveable property. But it has been held that it did not prevent the Court from granting relief on claims to the specific performance of contracts or to equities connected with such property in so far as such relief could be given in personam by action against the Defendant within the jurisdiction. No doubt the Defendant attempted to distinguish such cases as Pen v. Baltimore (17) on the ground that only the execution of a conveyance which the Court itself could execute on behalf of a recalcitrant Defendant, was in question. But that is not the ground taken in the judgment, and such an explanation would be useless in other cases such as those enumerated at p. 47, Lewin on Trust, 9th Edition, in which the Court interfered to direct an account of rents and profits to order foreclosure of a mortgage to relieve against the fraudulent conveyance of an estate and to prevent a Defendant by injunction from taking possession. As appears from Pen v. Baltimore (4) and other decisions, the Court's jurisdiction is not negatived, because the remedy within its power does not enable it to make a comprehensive disposal of the matter in dispute. It is sufficient that assistance can be given to the Plaintiff as regards one stage in the working out of his rights, in the case mentioned the obtaining of a conveyance, and the fact that as to the further stage in that case, the Plaintiff's maintenance in quiet enjoyment, nothing can be done, does not debar him from suing or the Courts from granting the relief within its competence.

"It was for relief of this kind which might or might not turn out to be finally sufficient, that Plaintiff asked in the present suit. He prayed for a declaration and injunction in the terms already stated. No doubt he chose to do so without making the minors parties, and it may be a question how far he will be able even in India, in case they return there, to execute his decree against their persons. And in England he no doubt will not be able to execute or sue on his decree in the ordinary sense. But 'a foreign guardian has, unless interfered with by the Court, control over the person of his ward while in England.' (Dicey, p. 478.) And the Plaintiff may fairly have been willing to trust to his son's recognition of his rights as father and appointed guardian, after they have been freed from other influences in England or in India, in case of their return. It is however more important that the decree asked for might have been or may be still regarded as likely to be effective in two other ways as the basis either of proceedings in execution here against the Defendant personally under Or. XXI, r. 13, or of proceedings in England.

(17) 1 Vesey Sen 444 (1750).

"It is especially in connection with the former that the Defendant's attitude before the learned Judge becomes important. The minors were in England, but she was served and was within the Chingleput jurisdiction. Primâ facie, therefore, she was available for the imprisonment, and her property for the attachment by which under Or. XXI, r. 32, a decree such as that of the learned Judge granting an injunction would be enforceable, and until after the date of the decree there was nothing before the learned Judge to suggest that the injunction would be ineffective owing to the Defendant's inability to comply with it. He was therefore entitled to assume that his decree would to this extent be effective and his urisdiction good. He no doubt subjected the Defendant to a mandatory injunction to hand over custody of the minors, and if her ability to do so had been denied in her written statement that injunction would perhaps have been framed in negative terms, forbidding her to interfere with their return, or the Plaintiff's efforts to regain them. But it was given in the terms asked for in the plaint, and Defendant did not demur to them. It is only in this Court that she has alleged that the minors, who are aged eighteen and fifteen, refuse to return, and that though she has ceased to supply them with funds and has deposited money for their passages to India, she cannot coerce them further. I assume her good faith, but all this was first disclosed after, and was not hinted at before, the judgment under appeal. It is not in my opinion open to Defendant to contend in appeal that the learned Judge's powers were ineffective ab initio, because of possibilities as to which she was silent, until the exercise of those powers had been decreed.

"Lastly, the judgment will be effective, in so far as it can be used as a basis for proceeding in any Court in England or elsewhere outside British India, within whose jurisdiction the minors may be. I have hitherto refrained from reference to English cases as to guardianship because they were decided by the Court of Chancery, and it was necessary to exclude the special characteristics of its jurisdiction from consideration. There can however be no objection to reliance on them in the present connection when the doctrine of effectiveness under discussion must be supported as of international validity and reciprocity, and equal status as between the Courts concerned must be assumed. This is in fact recognised expressly in the judgment of Cotton, L.J., in In re Willoughby (21). And it will in any case be safe to refer to these decisions if it is remembered that the English High Courts' mode of dealing with foreign judgments is a better test of the doctrine maintained by it than are the rules by which it has defined the boundaries of its own authority. Though the reference to them is primarily intended to support the position that the decree creating a guardianship is effective in so far as it can be the basis of proceedings in foreign countries, it will be seen that some of the decisions are also in Plaintiff's favour as negativing the necessity for the residence of the minors within the jurisdiction.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

"In Johnstone v. Beattie (8) it was no doubt held that 'the right and duties of a foreign tutor and curator cannot be recognised by the Courts of this country with reference to a child residing in it. The result is that such foreign tutor and curator can have no rights as such in this country.' And in Dawson v. Jay (22) the Court appointed an English guardian for an English minor in England, refusing custody to a guardian appointed in America. But other cases are less uncompromising. In Nugent v. Vetzera (23) the Court no doubt maintained the guardians appointed in England. But it was careful to reserve to the foreign guardian the right to exclusive custody of his wards to which he was entitled by the order of the Court of his own country, and the right to that custody was the immediate matter in dispute. It is material, with regard to the argument above referred to, from the non-residence of the minors that no question appears to have been raised in this case as to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court to appoint Vetzera as guardian, although it appears from the statement of facts that the minors were at the date of his appointment outside its jurisdiction for the purpose of education, like the minors in the case before us, so also in the next two cases Hope v. Hope (9) and In re Willoughby (21) the minors and the opposing party (in whose custody they were) being in France, and though there has been a formal settlement of property in the former case the Lord Chancellor expressly declined to base his decision appointing a guardian on it.

"To return from this digression as to non-residence to the bearing of these two cases on the doctrine of effectiveness, in neither of them was there any person within the jurisdiction against whom the Court could have expected to enforce its order, and they are therefore strong authorities, since only the possibility of the English appointment being utilised in a foreign Court could have been in question. It must be conceded that in each of them the foreign Court had stayed its hand in order that the decision of the English Court might be known and that a conflict between the Courts of the two countries was improbable. But the right of the English Court to interfere was contested strenuously and considered fully. In these circumstances it was said in Hope v. Hope (9) that there was not a want of jurisdiction, but only a want of the power of enforcing it, and in In re Willoughby (8) to make a quotation which represents the tenor of both decisions fairly. 'It may well be that the French Court may give effect (though I do not say they ought to give effect) to our order and make it operative by giving to the persons, whom

(8) 10 Cl. and F. 42 (1843).
(21) 30 Ch. D. 324 (1885).
(22) III. DeG. M and G. 764 (1854).
(23) L. R. 2 Eq. 704 (1866).

(9) 48 Eng. Rep. 534: 4 DeG. M. and G. 328 (1854).
(21) 30 Ch. D p 324 (1885).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

the Court here thinks ought to be appointed guardian, power in France to deal with the infant, or it may, if it thinks fit, appoint those persons guardians. It will be entirely a question for the French Courts. If, on the other hand, the French Court thinks that other persons ought to be appointed guardians, that is a matter with which we in no way interfere.' All this mutatis mutandis might be said in the present case, and it is sufficient to show that no ineffectiveness was to be apprehended in the decree to be passed which could have deprived the learned Judge of jurisdiction. No doubt the English or other Court which, before the Plaintiff may attempt to use his decree, will have other and valuable foundations for any decision it may reach, the increased age of the minors and perhaps a vive voce expression of their preference, an advantage of which the learned Judge was deprived. But authority justifies the belief that the learned Judge's decision also will have weight with the English Court, and if not indispensable to the Plaintiff will be of material assistance to him. In that direction, as well as in those already indicated, it will therefore be effective. The objection to it, based on its alleged ineffective character, accordingly fails."

In the final judgment which was delivered by the Chief Justice he dealt with the question of the right of a father to the control and custody of his minor children and certain other questions of law which arose in the case in the following terms:—

"I propose first to state what appears to me to be the law as to the rights of a father to the control and custody of his minor children. I do not think it has been suggested that the exposition of the law relating to this matter contained in the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley in In re Curtis (24) is not still the law of England. It is there laid down that the Court of Chancery cannot decide upon the custody of infants simply with reference to what is most for their benefit and cannot interfere with the rights of a father unless he so conducts himself as to render it essential to the safety and welfare of the children in some serious and important respect, either physically, intellectually or morally, that they should be removed from his custody. The Vice-Chancellor in his judgment cited the case of Re Fynn (25) in which Lord Justice Knight Bruce made the following observations: 'Of the present case I may say that were I at liberty, as I am not, to act on the view which out of Court I should as a private person take of the course likely to be most beneficial for the infants, I should have no doubt whatever upon the question of interfering with the father's power. Without any hesitation I should do so, to what extent and in what manner I do not say. But there may and must be many cases of conduct, many cases of family differences, family difficulties and family misfortunes, in which, though interposition would be for the interest and advantage of minor children, Courts of Justice have not the means of interfering usefully, or, if they have the means, ought not to interfere. . . . "A man may be in narrow circumstances, he may be negligent, injudicious and faulty as the father of minors, he may be a person from whom the discreet, the intelligent, and the well disposed, exercising a private judgment, would wish his children to be, for their sakes

(24) 28 L. J. Ch. 458 (1858).
(25) 2 DeG. and S. 457 (1848).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

and his own, removed ; he may be all this without rendering himself liable to judicial interference, and in the main it is for obvious reasons well that it should be so. Before this jurisdiction can be called into between them, the Court must be satisfied not only that it has the means of acting safely and efficiently, but also that the father has so conducted himself, or has shown himself to be a person of such a description, or is placed in such a position, as to render it not merely better for the children, but essential to their safety or to their welfare in some very serious and important respect that his rights should be treated as lost or suspended, should be superseded or interfered with. If the word 'essential' is too strong an expression, it is not 'much too strong.' The Defendant suggested that the law as laid down in In re Curtis (24) was altered by the Guardianship of Infants Act, 1886 (49 and 50 Vict., c. 27). No doubt this enactment altered the law, but its provisions as it seems to me do not touch the general principles to which Kindersley, V. C., referred. The cases in which the Courts have refused to deliver over a child when it has arrived at years of discretion to its father on a writ of habeas corpus are not in conflict with the rule of law that a father is entitled by the law of England to the custody of his children till they attain the age of 21. In dealing with these habeas corpus cases, Cotton, L. J., in his judgment in In re Agar Ellis (26) says: 'But there are cases where undoubtedly the Court declined to interfere on habeas corpus in order to hand the child over to the father or to interfere with it when it was of the age of discretion, the age of sixteen in the case of girls, and the age of fourteen in case of boys. For what reason is that? When an infant is so young as not to be able in the eyes of the law to exercise a discretion, then unless that infant is in the proper custody, that is to say, the legal custody, and the very object of suing out a habeas corpus is to have it ascertained whether the person who is sought to be brought up is under duress or imprisonment, but nobody can be placed in the position of being under duress or imprisonment if he expresses a wish to remain where he is at the time the writ is issued, that is to say provided the person is competent to express such a wish ; and, if he does, it is the duty of the law to regard it.'

"In In re Agar Ellis (26) the minor was a girl of over 16. In that case it was held that the Court will not interfere with the authority of the father as regards the control and education of his children until they attain the age of 21, except (1) where by his gross moral turpitude he forfeits his rights, or (2) where he has by his conduct abdicated his paternal authority, or (3) where he seeks to remove his children, being wards of Court, out of jurisdiction without the consent of the Court. The Defendant pointed out that in the Agar Ellis case (3) the children were in the custody of the father when proceedings were instituted by the mother. This no doubt is so, but for the moment I am only dealing with the principles of law which govern this question, and I would give him greater rights than if they were not. In regard to the question of the benefit of the infant, Bowen, L. J., in the same case said at page 337, 'then we must regard the benefit of the infant, but then it must be remembered

(24) 28 L. J. Ch. 458 (1858).
(26) 24 Ch. D. 317 at p. 331 (1883).

(26) 24 Ch. D. 317 (1883).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

that if the words 'benefit of the infant' are used in any but the accurate sense, it would be a fallacious test to apply to the way the Court exercises its jurisdiction over the infant by way of interference with the father. It is not the benefit to the infant as conceived by the Court, but it must be the benefit to the infant, having regard to the natural law, which points out that the father knows far better as a rule what is good for his children than a Court of Justice can. . . . . Except in cases of immorality, or where he (the father) is clearly not exercising a discretion at all, but a wicked or cruel caprice, or where he is endeavouring to withdraw from the protection of the Court, which is entrusted with such protection by law, the custody of the infant, as a rule, this Court does not and cannot interfere, because it cannot do so successfully, or I should rather say because it cannot do so with the certainty that its doing so would not be attended with far greater injury both to the infant itself and also to general social life. . . . . . . As soon as it becomes obvious that the rights of the family are being abused to the detriment of the interests of the infant, then the father shows that he is no longer the natural guardian—that he has become an unnatural guardian—that he has perverted the ties of nature for the purpose of injustice and cruelty. When that case arrives the Court will not stay its hand; but until that case arrives it is not a mere disagreement with the view taken by the father of his rights and the interest of his infant that can justify the Court interfering.' Mr. Simpson, in his book on the Law of Infant, on page 131, third edition, suggests that the law as laid down in In re Agar Ellis (26) 'seems to be too narrow a statement of the law as at present administered,' and the learned author refers to the judgment of Fitz-Gibbon, L J., in In re O'Hara (27). The strongest passage in the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice which could be relied upon as supporting the suggestion that the judgment in In re Agar Ellis (26) is too narrow a statement of the law is the following :—'It appears to me that misconduct or unmindfulness of parental duty, or inability to provide for the welfare of the child, must be shown before the natural right can be displaced. Where a parent is of blameless life, and is able and willing to provide for the child's material and moral necessities in the rank and position to which the child by birth belongs, i.e., the rank and position of the parent, the Court is, in my opinion, judicially bound to act on what is equally a law of nature and of Society, and to hold, in the words of Lord Esher that 'the best place for a child is with its parent.' Of course I do not speak of exceptional cases, where special disturbing elements exist which involve the risk of moral or material injury to the child, such as the disturbance of religious convictions or of settled affections, or the endurance of hardship or destitution with a parent as contrasted with solid advantages offered elsewhere. The Court acting as a wise parent is not bound to sacrifice the child's welfare to the fetish of parental authority by forcing it from a happy and comfortable home to share the fortunes of a parent, however innocent, who cannot keep a roof over its head, or provide it with the necessaries of life.' With all respect to the learned author, to my mind there is nothing in this passage which

(26) 24 Ch. D. 317 (1883).

(26) 24 Ch D. 317 (1883).
(27) 2 Ir. R. 232 (1909).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

indicates that learned Lord Justice intended in any way to dissent from the principle laid down in In re Agar Ellis (26). In Thomasset v. Thomasset (28), Lindley, L. J., said that 'independently of writs of habeas corpus the Court of Chancery exercised the power of the Crown as parens patriæ over infants, and in exercise of this jurisdiction the power of the Court has always been much more extensive than that possessed by Courts of Common Law under a writ of habeas corpus.' The Lord Justice then refers to a case of Todd v. Lynes (29) where a father obtained an order for the delivery to him of the custody of his son, a young man of 17, who had been persuaded by the Defendant to leave his father and enter a monastery under the charge of the Defendant. As is pointed out in Thomasset v. Thomasset (28), what the wishes of the boy were does not appear.

"In Reg v. Gyngall (30), Lord Esher, M. R, pointed out the distinction between the Common Law jurisdiction under which the Common Law Courts used to deal with these matters by 'habeas corpus' (I take it that the learned Judge did not mean this was the only way in which the Common Law jurisdiction could be exercised) and the Chancery jurisdiction. 'At Common Law,' the Master of Rolls said, 'the parent had as against other persons generally an absolute right to the custody of the child unless he or she had forfeited it by certain acts of misconduct.' The Chancery jurisdiction was a paternal jurisdiction 'in virtue of which the Chancery Court was put to act on behalf of the Crown as being the guardian of all infants.' I do not think the Master of Rolls meant to suggest that in the exercise of this jurisdiction the natural rights of the parent were not considered. All that was laid down was that a Court of Chancery could supersede the natural rights of a parent if the welfare of the infant demanded it. In Reg v. Gyngall (30), the Master of Rolls cited with approval the passage from the judgment of Knight Bruce, V. C., in In re Flynn (25) to which I have referred. I may also refer to Re McGrath (31), a case in the Chancery Division decided a year before Reg. v. Gyngall (30).

"As regards the Indian cases, the High Court would seem to have acted in accordance with the principles of the decision in In re Agar Ellis (26), see Krishna v. Reade (5) and Pollard v. House (32). Certain Indian authorities were cited by the Defendant. In In the matter of Saithri (33), the application was for an order in the nature of a habeas corpus. On the facts of that case the Court was not satisfied that the application by the mother was 'bonâ fide,' the mother being a servant earning 8 annas a month and having no home of her own; and was of opinion that the mother had precluded herself by her conduct for eight years from demanding that the child should be given up to her and further that to do so would be most detrimental to the welfare of the child. In Sarat Chandra Chakarbati v. Forman (34), the application for (26) 24 Ch. D. 317 (1883).

(28) [1894] P. 295.
(29) Unreported. Vide Simpson's Law of Infants, p. 127.
(30) [1893] 2 Q. B. 232.

(5) I. L. R. 9 Mad. 31 (1885).
(25) 2 DeG. and S. 457 (1848).
(26) 24 Ch. D. 317 (1883).
(30) [1893] 2 Q. B. 232.
(31) [1893] 1 Ch. 143.
(32) I. L. R. 33 Mad. 288 (1910).
(33) I. L. R. 16 Bom. 307 (1891)
(34) I. L. R. 12 All. 213 (1889).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

the custody of the minor was made not by his father but by his brother. The report says that the father had 'gone to Benares to end his days there' (p. 219). I am unable to assume from this, as the Defendant invited us to assume, that the natural rights of the father had devolved upon the elder brother. In view of what I conceive to be the law, I feel considerable doubt as to whether I should be prepared to follow the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Bindo v. Shamlal (35), and of this Court in Muthuveerappa Chetty v. Lingammah (36). In Mokoond Lal Singh v. Nobodip Chandra Singha (37), the Court decided on the facts of that case that the primâ facie right of the father was displaced. See also In the matter of Joshy Assam (38). In the case of Re Gulbai and Lilbai (39), where it was held that the interest, well-being and happiness of the minors ought to be the paramount consideration of the Court, both the parents were dead. It was suggested by the Defendant, though I do not think the contention was very seriously pressed, that the law of England was more favourable to the natural rights of the father than the Hindu Law. I do not think, this has been suggested in any of the Indian cases and I am not prepared to accede to it. In Muthuveerappa Chetty v. Lingammah (36), the learned Judges no doubt say that the texts of Hindu Law do not recognise any absolute rights of guardian in any one, but neither does the law of England.

"So far I have dealt with the general question of the natural rights of the father. In this case, however, we have what purports to be an express delegation of the father's rights by Ex. A, the letter of the 6th March 1910, and what purports to be an express revocation of that delegation by Ex. AA6, the letter of the 11th July 1912. It does not seem to be material whether the letter Ex. A is to be regarded as a waiver or an express delegation of the Plaintiff's paternal rights. If it is to be regarded as a waiver, it does not in itself operate so as to preclude the father from reasserting his rights. If it is to be regarded as an express delegation, I think the delegation is primâ facie revocable, though there may be circumstances which would lead a Court to hold that the delegation ought not to be revoked. In In re Agar Ellis (26), Cotton, L. J., said on p. 333: "the father, although not unfitted to discharge the duties of a father, may have acted in such a way as to preclude himself in a particular instance from insisting on rights he would otherwise have, as where a father has allowed in consequence of money being left to a child, the child to live with a relative and be brought up in a way not suited to its former station in life or to the means of the father. There the Court says, you have allowed that to be done, and to alter that would be such an injury to the child that you have precluded yourself from exercising your power as a father in that particular respect, and then the Court interferes to prevent the father from having the custody of the child, not because he is immoral or has forfeited all his rights, but because in that particular instance he has so acted as to preclude himself from insisting on what otherwise would be his right. That

(35) I. L. R. 29 All. 210 (1906).
(36) [1911] Mad. W. N. 561.
(37) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 881 (1898).
(38) I. L. R. 23 Cal. 290 (1895).
(39) I. L. R. 32 Bom. 50 (1907).

(26) 24 Ch. D. 317 (1883).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

was the case in Lyons v. Blenkin (1), which has been cited.'

"There can be no question in this case that the agreement of March 1910 has been acted on. In The Queen v. Barnardo (40), Lord Esher said that if the parent revoked the agreement before it had been acted on, it would not be binding. Lord Justice Lindley, however, laid down the law in much more general terms. He said in page 315: 'notwithstanding such an agreement the parent would be the legal guardian of the child, and she is incapable of binding herself not to exercise her rights as such. She could, therefore, revoke the agreement at any moment, as could any other guardian in a similar case.' Mr. Justice Wallis in Pollard v. House (32) stated the law in much the same way. He said on page 292: 'This delegation of parental authority to the Plaintiff is revocable at any time, and it is the duty of the parents and guardians to revoke it if used to the detriment of the children.' This question is discussed by Mr. Simpson on p 135 and by Sir E. J. Trevelyan in his book on The Law of India relating to Minors, on p. 70. The latter states the law thus :—

"'A father may also lose his right to the guardianship of his children and to the control of their education, where he has permitted another person to maintain and educate them, and it would be detrimental to the interests of the children to alter the manner of their maintenance or the course of their secular or religious education. The Court will not, when he has acquiesced for some time, permit him arbitrarily or capriciously to alter the mode of their maintenance and education or to take them from the custody in which he has allowed them to remain.' There are further observations on the subject on page 132. As the authorities were very elaborately discussed in the course of the arguments in this Appeal, I have thought it necessary to refer to them at some length. I am prepared, however, to accept and apply the succinct statement of the law which is to be found in Lord Halsbury's Laws of England, volume 17, p. 107: 'After a surrender by him' (the father) 'of the custody has actually taken place, he can recover the custody unless his doing so would be injurious to the interests of the child.'

"The Defendant contended with reference to my judgment on the question of jurisdiction that, inasmuch as the jurisdiction exercised by the learned Judge was the Equity Jurisdiction given by the Letters Patent, the Court would look solely to the welfare of the infants. I cannot accede to this. I do not think that the Courts in Equity have ever proposed to look solely to what appears to them to be the welfare of the infant, without regard to the natural rights of the father. The judgment of the Master of the Rolls in R. v. Gyngall (30) speaks of the 'suppression' of the natural rights. This seems to me to involve that the natural rights must be recognized and considered.

"There is one other question of law to which I desire to refer before I pass to the facts. The effect of the appointment of the father as guardian in this case was to extend the period of minority of the elder boy to the age of 21. At the time the order was made, the elder boy was nearly 18, the ordinary age of majority under the Indian Law. We were

(1) Jac. 245 (1821).
(32) I. L. R. 33 Mad. 288 (1910)
(40) 23 Q. B. D. 305 (1889).
(30) [1893] 2 Q. B. 232.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

referred by the Defendant to In the matter of the Petition of Nazirun (41), where it was held that an application for the certificate of guardianship under Act XL of 1858 which, if granted, would prolong the minority of the infant from 18 to 21, should not be granted when the alleged minor is admittedly on the point of attaining the age of 18, unless under particular circumstances, as where very great weakness of mind was proved, or where it was shown that there was some absolute necessity for making such order. The words 'absolute necessity' are of too general a character to enable us to derive much assistance from this decision.

"The fact that a minor is nearly 18 when an order is asked for, which will have the effect of extending his minority, is no doubt a matter to be taken into consideration by any Court which is called upon to determine whether in all the circumstances of the case such an order shall be made."

Pending the appeal before the Judicial Committee, the minors, one of whom had already attained the age of 18 years, obtained the leave of the Board to intervene in the proceeding and were heard through counsel.

Mr. Younger, K. C., Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. Turnbull appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. Younger submitted that the High Court had no jurisdiction to make the decree. There was no jurisdiction in the District Court to make a decree. The High Court did not possess a greater jurisdiction than that of the District Court. Even if the High Court had greater jurisdiction, it should not have made the decree, as it was contrary to the principles laid down by Lord Eldon, that is, "that a Court of Chancery could not be asked to appoint a father the guardian of his own son." The Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, was a complete Code that abolished all previous enactments. It applied to the whole of British India. Under it the procedure was by petition and not by suit. The Defendant was within the jurisdiction of the District Court, but neither the father nor the sons were within that jurisdiction. Under sec. 9 of that Act the jurisdiction of the District Court was confined to infants ordinarily resident in the District. The minors were not so residing at the time of the suit, and that Act therefore did not apply. Reference was made to the following authorities as to whether the Guardians and Wards Act was a complete Code or not: Shamlal v. Bindo (3), 32 Punjab Records, p. 49, Sharifa v. Munekhan (4), Krishna v. Reade (5). In any case, the real interests of the minors ought to have been considered by the Courts. The elder boy had become major and he could not be compelled to leave England by the Appellant. Indeed both the boys refused to go to their father and the Appellant had no power over them. On the contrary, if the Appellant persisted in doing anything to compel the boys, in order to hand them over to their father, she would expose herself to habeas corpus proceedings in England. The Appellant objects to the mandatory order. Reference was made to the following: Hope v. Hope (9), In re Willoughby (10). The boys were

(41) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 19 (1880).

(3) I L. R. 26 All. 594 (1904).
(4) I. L. R. 25 Bom. 574 (1901).
(5) I. L. R. 9 Mad. 31 (1885).
(9) 43 Eng. Rep. 534: 4 DeG. M. and G. 328 (1854).
(10) 30 Ch. D. 324 (1885).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

not made parties to the suit, although they were most affected by the decree, inasmuch as it took away the majority of the one and extended the minority of the other. To an application under the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, the minors are necessary parties. It was not in their interests to go back to India and lose the benefit of education in this country. The Court of Chancery was the only Court which was competent to make an order regarding the persons of minors residing in England. The Plaintiff might apply to that Court, but the decree of the High Court could not be supported.

The Lord Advocate of Scotland, Mr. Robert Munro (with him Mr. W. R. Sheldon and Mr. W. Turnbull), who appeared for the boys, stated that the boys were passionately desirous of staying in England and extremely averse to going back to India.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent submitted that the High Court had jurisdiction to make the order. The Plaintiff had a right of suit under the Code of Civil Procedure, and the suit was properly instituted in the Court of the District Judge which had jurisdiction over the Defendant. The question at issue was, who was the guardian of the boys, the Plaintiff or the Defendant? After the institution of the suit it was properly transferred to the High Court which had an independent jurisdiction of its own to make the decree binding on the Defendant. The proceedings in suit were not started under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act which was inapplicable to the present case. In any case, the suit was competent for obtaining the declaratory relief sought by the Plaintiff. The Guardians and Wards Act did not preclude an independent suit like the present.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR said that as at present advised his view was that the proceedings in the Court below were altogether misconceived and brought in a wrong form, and for that reason ought to fail, without prejudice to any further proceedings which the father might take in proper form.]

Mr. Kenworthy Brown asked whether the difficulty was that the boys were not represented in the Court in India.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is more than that. The boys not being represented, the issues were not properly framed, and the mind of the Court was not properly directed to the true question, but it was not the fault of the Court.]

Mr. Kenworthy Brown said, a great deal of attention was paid to the issue. If their Lordships had come to the conclusion that the proceedings in the Court below had been misconceived, he did not wish to occupy their attention further.

[THE LORD CHANCELLOR said, their Lordships had made up their minds as to the course which they would take. They would humbly advise His Majesty that the judgment of the Court below could not stand, for the reason—the only reason—they had discussed that day. Their Lordships would give their reasons at a future date.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—This is an Appeal from an order made by the High Court of Madras in its Appellate Jurisdiction on the 29th October 1913 confirming with a variation as to costs a decree of Mr. Justice Bakewell in a suit in which G. Narayaniah (the present Respondent) was Plaintiff, and Annie Besant (the present Appellant) was Defendant. The decree declared that J. Krishnamurti and J. Nityananda, the sons of the Plaintiff, were wards of Court and that the Plaintiff was guardian of their persons, and ordered the Defendant to hand over the custody of the wards to the Plaintiff as such guardian.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

The facts which gave rise to the action were as follows :—The Plaintiff is a Hindu residing at Madras. He is a Brahmin, but is not well off, having an income of some 160*l.* per annum only. He was for many years a member of a society called the Theosophical Society, of which the Defendant was President, and was well acquainted with her. He had two sons, J. Krishnamurti and J. Nityananda, born respectively on the 11th May 1895 and 30th May 1898. Early in 1910 the Defendant offered to take charge of these sons and defray the expense of their maintenance and education in England and at the University of Oxford. The Plaintiff thought it desirable to take advantage of the opportunity thus afforded of giving his sons a Western education, notwithstanding it would entail a loss of caste. He accordingly accepted the Defendant's offer, and by a letter to the Defendant, dated the 6th March 1910, affected to appoint the Defendant to be guardian of their persons and authorised her to act as such from that time forward.

In their Lordships' opinion the principle on which the legal effect of such a letter falls to be determined do not admit of dispute.

There is no difference in this respect between English and Hindu law. As in this country, so among the Hindus, the father is the natural guardian of his children during their minorities, but this guardianship is in the nature of a sacred trust, and he cannot therefore during his lifetime substitute another person to be guardian in his place. He may, it is true, in the exercise of his discretion as guardian, entrust the custody and education of his children to another, but the authority he thus confers is essentially a revocable authority, and if the welfare of his children require it, he can, notwithstanding any contract to the contrary, take such custody and education once more into his own hands. If, however, the authority has been acted upon in such a way as, in the opinion of the Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants, to create associations or give rise to expectations on the part of the infants which it would be undesirable in their interests to disturb or disappoint, such Court will interfere to prevent its revocation. [Lyons v. Blenkin (1).]

Shortly after the Respondent accepted her offer, the Appellant took charge of the boys, and they have since been in her custody and she has defrayed the expense of their maintenance and education. In February 1912, they left India in her company, and after staying with her for some time in Sicily and Italy finally accompanied her to England, where she left them under the charge of Mrs. Jacob Bright, having made arrangements for their having a course of tuition such as would enable them to enter the University of Oxford.

Though the Respondent's confidence in the Appellant appears to have been shaken sometime previously for reasons to which it is unnecessary to refer, he assented to, or at any rate acquiesced in, the departure of his sons in her company for Europe. Nevertheless on the 11th July 1912 he wrote the Appellant a letter cancelling his previous letter of the 6th March 1910, demanding that his sons should be restored to his custody and threatening proceedings if such demand were not complied with. The Appellant who had returned to India refused to comply with such demand, and the Respondent thereupon commenced a suit in the District Court of Chingleput, in the Madras Presidency, asking to have it declared, that he was entitled to the guardianship and custody of his sons, and that the Appellant was not entitled to, or in any case was unfit to be in charge and guardianship of such sons, and for an order on the Appellant to hand over such sons to the Respondent or such other person as to the Court might seem meet.

(1) Jac. 245 (1821).

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

In their Lordships' opinion this suit was entirely misconceived. It was not, and indeed could not be disputed that the Plaintiff remained the guardian of his children notwithstanding that he had affected to substitute the Defendant as guardian in his place. The real question was whether he was still entitled to exercise the functions of guardian and resume the custody of his sons and alter the scheme which had been formulated for their education. Again, it was not and could not be disputed that the letter of the 6th of March 1910 was in the nature of a revocable authority. The real question was whether in the events, which had happened, the Plaintiff was at liberty to revoke it. Both questions fell to be determined having regard to the interests and welfare of the infants, bearing in mind, of course, their parentage and religion, and could only be decided by a Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants, and in their presence. The District Court in which the suit was instituted had no jurisdiction over the infants except such jurisdiction as was conferred by the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890. By the 9th section of that Act the jurisdiction of the Court is confined to infants ordinarily resident in the district. It is in their Lordships' opinion impossible to hold that infants who had months previously left India with a view to being educated in England and going to the University of Oxford were ordinarily resident in the district of Chingleput. Further, a suit inter partes is not the form of procedure prescribed by the Act for proceedings in a District Court touching the guardianship of infants. It is true that the suit was subsequently transferred to the High Court under cl. 13 of Letters Patent, 1865, but the powers of the High Court in dealing with suits so transferred would seem to be confined to powers which but for the transfer might have been exercised by the District Court.

Again, the relief asked for was a mandatory order directing the Defendant to take possession of the persons of the infants in England, bring them to India, and hand them over to their father. Considering the age of the infants any attempt on the part of the Defendant to comply with this order, would, if the infants had refused to return to India, have been contrary, and would have at once exposed the Defendant to proceedings in this country, to the law of this country on writ of habeas corpus. No Court ought to make an order which might lead to these consequences. The most which a Court of Competent Jurisdiction in India could do under circumstances such as existed in the present case, was to order the Defendant to concur with the Plaintiff as the infants' guardian in taking proceedings in this country to regain the custody and control of his sons.

The difficulties and anomalies of the procedure adopted by the Plaintiff are well illustrated by the history of the proceedings. After the transfer to the High Court, issues were settled in the ordinary manner. There was no issue as to whether it was or was not desirable, in the interests of the infants, that they should give up all idea of a Western University education, and return to India. It was urged that the High Court did in fact consider their interests. If it did so, it must have been upon evidence admitted as relevant on other issues, and it is by no means apparent that, had a proper issue on the point been directed, further evidence would not have been available. At any rate on such an issue, the necessity of the infants being properly represented before the Court, and of ascertaining what they themselves desired, could hardly have been overlooked.

Mrs. Annie Besant v. G. Narayaniah.

At the trial of the action some difficulty appears to have been felt by reason of the facts (1) that the suit was not such as to make the infants wards of Court, and (2) that the elder infant would within a very short time attain his majority according to Hindu law. The Trial Judge sought to overcome those difficulties (1) by declaring the infants wards of Court, and (2) by taking advantage of sec. 3 of the Indian Majority Act, 1875, as amended by sec. 52 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, and declaring under sec. 7 of the latter Act that the Plaintiff was their guardian so as to prolong their minorities until they attained respectively the age of 21 years. It was hardly contended that any such order was competent to the District Court in the suit in question. It is alleged, however, that when once the suit had been transferred to the High Court, the High Court had a general jurisdiction over infants which they could exercise at pleasure, and that the directions in question were properly given by virtue of such general jurisdiction. It is to be observed, however, that whatever may have been the jurisdiction of the High Court to declare the infants to be wards of Court, an order declaring a guardian could only be made if their interests required it, and, as appears above, they were not before the Court, nor were their interests adequately considered. And further, no order declaring a guardian could by reason of the 19th section of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890, be made during the Respondent's life, unless in the opinion of the Court he was unfit to be their guardian, which was clearly not the case.

Since the appeal has been presented, the infants have obtained the leave of the Board to intervene therein and be heard by counsel. Counsel on their behalf have appeared before their Lordships' Board and stated that the infants do not desire to return to India or abandon their chance of obtaining an University education in this country. The order of the High Court directing the Defendant to take them back to India cannot be lawfully carried out without their consent or without an order from the Court exercising the jurisdiction of the Crown over infants in this country. It is and always was open to Respondent to apply to His Majesty's High Court of Justice in England for that purpose. If he does so, the interests of the infants will be considered, and care will be taken to ascertain their own wishes on all material points. Their Lordships do not consider it desirable to express any opinion of their own on questions with which only the High Court in England can deal satisfactorily. It is enough to say that the order made by the Trial Judge in India as varied by the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction cannot stand, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the same ought to be discharged, and the suit dismissed with costs both here and in the Courts below, but without prejudice to any application the Respondent may think fit to make to the High Court in England touching the guardianship, custody, and maintenance of his children.

MRS. ANNIE BESANT v. G. NARAYANIAH.

Solicitors : Messrs. Lee and Pembertons for the Appellant.

Solicitors : Messrs. Calder, Woods and Pethick for the Interveners.

Solicitors : Mr. Douglas Grant for the Respondent.

B. D. Appeal allowed with costs.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 1525 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
Heard, 17 and 26, November.
Judgment, 26, November.

HIRJI BALDEO, Petitioner,
v.
MANBHUM DISTRICT BOARD, Opposite Party.

District Board of Manbhum, bye-laws framed by—Bengal Local Self-Government Act [III (B. C.) of 1885], sec. 2 (2)—Encroachment, hanging verandah if is.

A hanging verandah would be an encroachment if it amounted to an unlawful gaining upon the right of user by the public. That right extends to all forms of traffic which have been usual or customary and also all that are reasonably similar or incidental thereto. The question whether a hanging verandah amounted to an encroachment would depend in each case upon the question whether in the particular circumstances it constituted an invasion of the public right of user as described above.

The public have a right of user not merely on the roadway, but also on the side lands attached to the road.

This was a Rule granted on the 15th September 1913 against an order of Mr. N. Martin, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Dhanbad, dated the 22nd of May 1913, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 2 (2) of the District Board Bye-laws and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 50, an appeal from which order was dismissed by T. Lubey, Esq., Deputy Commissioner of Purulia, on the 8th of July 1913.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mullick for the Petitioner.

Babu Atulya Charan Bose for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner has been convicted of a breach of a bye-law promulgated under sec. 139 of the Bengal Local Self-Government Act. The material portion of the bye-law is as follows :—"No person shall on any road by means of any building without the permission of the Chairman or other authority named in the bye-law make or cause any encroachment." This rule was issued upon the ground that the construction of a hanging verandah does not amount to an encroachment.

Upon a careful reading of the evidence in the case with the judgment of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate and the judgment of the District Magistrate in appeal, we are of opinion, however, that it was proved and found by both Courts that apart from the hanging verandahs, the Petitioner had dug foundations and erected a

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, AUGUST 3, 1914. [No. 38.

Contents.

NOTES.

Father's remedy against deprival of custody of children.

The net result of the decision of the Privy Council in Mrs. Annie Besant v. G. Narayaniah reported at p. 1089 of the current volume appears to be that the proceeding by the father for recovery of the custody of his infant sons was materially defective inasmuch as the infants, one of whom was about to attain majority and the other was 14 years of age, were not made parties and their wishes were not consulted, as they should have been, since the principal issue in such a proceeding must be whether the change of custody would be for the benefit of the infants. Their Lordships also appear to hold that the infants who were not residents in India could not be made parties to a proceeding in India relating to their guardianship under the Guardians and Wards Act. The Defendant herself was however resident within the jurisdiction, and their Lordships are by no means to be understood as laying down that the Courts in Madras were not competent to grant to the Plaintiff appropriate reliefs against the Defendant, but they point out that the relief actually granted, viz., a mandatory order directing the Defendant to take possession of the infants in England and bring them over to India and produce them in Court here, was one which should not have been passed by the High Court, considering that any attempt on the part of the Defendant to carry out the order, would, if the infants did not choose to acquiesce, lay her open to habeas corpus proceedings in England.

No exception can be taken to the above application of well-established principles of law bearing on the custody of infants to the facts of the present case. That the exercise of jurisdiction by the Court at Chingleput and by the Madras High Court in this case was irregular and misconceived cannot be questioned, specially where the High Court purported to declare the infants Wards of Court and appointed the father their guardian with no other end in view than that of extending the period of their minority. The judgment, however, raises grave doubts as to what, in a positive sense, the jurisdiction of the District Courts or of the High Courts in India is or should be in proceedings of this nature. It is to this aspect of the matter to which we would like to draw the attention of the public and the legislature. Their Lordships say clearly enough that proceedings in District Courts relating to the guardianship of infants lie exclusively under Act VIII of 1890. Questions relating to the guardianship of minors cannot therefore form the subject of suits in the ordinary Civil Courts in the Mofussil. It is also stated in the judgment equally clearly that a father by reason of sec. 19 of the Act is incompetent to institute proceedings under the Act for declaration of his rights of guardianship and for consequential reliefs under the Act.

What then is the father's remedy where his rights as guardian of his minor children, assuming that they are all residents within jurisdiction, are interfered with? Are we to infer that he can neither sue in the District Court, nor apply to it under Act VIII of 1890? If so, has he any right of action or application in any other Court in India? Can the High Court entertain his grievance, and, if so, under what jurisdiction and according to what procedure? We do not find any answer to these questions in the judgment of the Privy Council, and naturally so, as in the circumstances of the case, their Lordships were not required to decide them. Assuming that the High Court can entertain a father's complaint in the case mentioned, does that provide a suitable remedy for this class of cases, when they arise in the Mofussil? If the District Court can entertain an application by a stranger to declare a father unfit to be his children's guardian, there is nothing in reason to exclude its jurisdiction to entertain a complaint by the father seeking to recover custody of his own children. If no application under the Guardians and Wards Act is competent, surely a suit would lie in the Court of the District Judge for a declaration of the father's rights and for such relief as may be necessary to work them out.

That is really the substance of the decisions of the High Courts in India to the effect that Act VIII of 1890 did not repeal the general jurisdiction of District Courts to entertain suits relating to the guardianship and custody of minors, and we should be sorry if the judgment of the Privy Council should be understood as definitely negativing that jurisdiction. If it has, then surely the legislature should step in and do away with this anomaly. The District Courts should undoubtedly have jurisdiction to entertain a father's suit or application for declaration of his rights as guardian and for recovery of custody of his minor children as against persons interfering with his rights. Such jurisdiction would of course have to be exercised in accordance with principles so lucidly explained in their Lordships' judgment. What we contend for is that a father whose rights of gurdianship over his minor children have been interfered with should not be left in doubt either as to the Court whose protection he is to invoke, or as to the procedure he is to adopt to vindicate his rights ; nor, if he is a resident in the Mofussil, should he be compelled in every case to come up with his plaint to the Original Side of the High Court for remedies which the local Courts are perfectly competent to give to persons other than the father.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Suit for damages against Secretary of State

ROSS v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 55.

The Plaintiff brought a suit to recover damages from the Secretary of State for India in Council in respect of two orders made by the Collector of Ganjam by one of which a local agent working under the Assam Labour and Emigration Act 1901 was suspended and the depôt maintained by him closed to recruiting, while by the other the local agent was dismissed and also for alleged defamation of the Plaintiff by the Governor of Madras in Council in the following order—"Government see no reason to doubt that there had been illegal recruitment in the agency tracts of the Ganjam district by sirdars working under the Assam Labour Supply Association and are of opinion that the conduct of Mr. Ross (the Plaintiff) in that matter has not been wholly above suspicion.'

Held—That as regards liability to be sued, the Secretary of State is in no position different from that of the old East India Company before the passing of the Government of India Act, 1858.

That the liabilities of the East India Company cannot have been any less than those of the Crown in England on a petition of right.

That this is not a case in which a petition of right would lie against the Crown at the instance of the Plaintiff.

That even if the suit had been brought against the members of the Madras Government at the date of the order and this Court had jurisdiction to entertain such a suit it must have failed on the ground that the publication having been made by such Government in the execution of its duty and without exceeding it is absolutely privileged.

Res judicata.

BAYYAN NAIDU v. SURYA NARAYANA, I. L. R. 37 Mad. 70

The rule of res judicata applies subject to the other provisions of the section not only to a suit tried before, but to an issue decided in a previous suit provided that the matter directly and substantially in issue in the latter suit was raised as a substantial and direct issue in the previous suit. The section requires that the matter or issue should have been heard and finally decided by such Court. It does not say that it should have been decided in explicit terms. It cannot be doubted that if an adjudication on a matter is necessarily involved in the decision in a prior suit, the section must be understood to lay down that it must be taken to have been heard and finally decided.

Reviews.

THE LAW OF PARTNERSHIP. By J. A. Strahan, M. A., LL. B., Bar-at-Law and H. Oldham, B. A., LL. B, Bar-at-Law. Sweet and Maxwell, Ld, London. 1914. Price 10s.

The law of partnership has been lucidly explained within the moderate dimensions of this book which does not extend beyond 226 pages of boldly and clearly printed matter. From the treatment of the subject, one would hardly suspect that it is a commentary on the English Partnership Act of 1890. The method followed by the English annotators is very different from that of Indian commentators of Codes. The cases are not crowded under the sections, but the essential elements of the sections have been analysed and explained by reference to the general principles governing them. These latter have been deduced from the leading decisions, and the authors have as a rule quoted from the judgments in explaining the law. The work gives one a reliable and yet succinct view of the law. The chapter on Partnership in the Indian Contract Act has been printed in the Appendix which will enhance its usefulness in India.

ELEMENTS OF THE LAW OF REAL PROPERTY (Adapted to the requirements of Indian Students). By Baidyanath Banerjee, B.L. Rai M. C. Sarkar Bahadur & Sons, 75-1-1 Harrison Road, Calcutta, Publishers. 1914. Price Re. 1 8.

Students of law in this country have to study

English Real Property, because the law of property obtaining in India, although it has not much in common with the English law, yet drives its roots deep into the same soil and derives some of its guiding principles from that law. For a proper apprehension of the Indian law of property (most of it codified), it is therefore necessary for the Indian law student to know at least the elements of the English law of Real Property. The real difficulty with him however is that he is not sure how much of it he must know for the purposes of the profession which he is going to adopt, and he generally solves it by acquiring that minimum which enables him to secure a pass at the examination. This may be unsatisfactory from the point of view of sound education, but from the practical point of view it is eminently reasonable and there is thus abundant justification for manuals like the one in hand, which is not an out-and-out cram book, and which succeeds in clearly enunciating the leading principles and also in illustrating them in a manner which appeals to the Indian student. We have no doubt, the little book will be duly appreciated by those for whom it is intended. Those of them however who are desirous of doing something more than merely getting through the examination would of course have nothing to do with this class of literature, if they should even allow their thirst for knowledge to be confined within the covers of that indispensable students' book, Williams on Real Property.

TAGORE LAW LECTURES, 1912. Codification in British India. By Bijay Kisor Acharyya, B. A. (Cal.), LL. B. (Edin.). Calcutta. S. K. Banerji & Sons, Book-sellers & Publishers, 53 & 55, Harrison Road, Calcutta, 1914.

This work is the result of immense industry and conscientious and painstaking research. The subject "Codification in British India" is, it must be conceded, not a very inviting one, and yet one endowed with the historical sense may make the apparently dry matter embedded in the Regulations and Acts (both repealed and unrepealed) of the British Indian Government tell an interesting tale fraught with very human interests. This historical sense the author displays to great advantage throughout the work. He has literally succeeded in bringing order and arrangement out of chaos, and his examination of the development of codification in India and of the various views from time to time held and expressed regarding it by persons in authority is highly suggestive and is likely to afford invaluable assistance to those in whose hand the orderly evolution of Indian Law for the time being rests. The progress of codification in India has been marked by great inequality, excessive interference verging indeed on paternalism in some aspects, and excessive, almost nervous, conservatism in others. The time has now come for pursuing a more comprehensive policy in matters of legislation, and Mr. Acharyya's work is a most opportune contribution to this end. We do not think it necessary to consider the work in detail. There is room for difference of opinion on many points on which the author has expressed an opinion—but that does not in the least make his own contribution to the subjects discussed less valuable. The subject has been dealt with by him under the following heads:—(1) History of codification in British India; (2) Necessity of codification in British India; (3) Influence of the condition of people on codification in British India; (4) How objections to codification have been met in India; (5) Genesis, principles, form and interpretation of Anglo Indian Codes; (6) Progress of codification in British India; (7) How far codification has touched Hindu and Mahomedan Law; (8) Feasibility of further codification; (9) Codification of customary law; (10) Codification of the personal laws of Hindus and Mahomedans. There is, we notice, a great deal of repetition which perhaps in many cases is unavoidable in the presentation of what must be regarded as a new subject—and which may not unlikely be avoided in later editions. Altogether, the book is a praiseworthy and in a large measure successful attempt to grapple with a new and somewhat difficult subject.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Nocton v. Lord Ashburton. Before THE LORD CHANCELLOR and LORDS DUNEDIN, ATKINSON, SHAW and PARMOOR. 19th June 1914.

Solicitor and client—Solicitor's liability in damages for improper advice—Action lies for breach of fiduciary relation—Intention to defraud unnecessary.

This was an action by Lord Ashburton against Mr. Nocton who was the solicitor of the Plaintiff, who claimed damages for loss caused by the improper advice of the Defendant. The solicitor advised his client to release certain property from a mortgage held by the client, and he acted on it. The result of the transaction was an abstraction from the Plaintiff's security of property worth from £20,000 to £30,000 without a particle of advantage to the Plaintiff and to the direct benefit of the Defendant.

The Court of Appeal held that the Plaintiff was entitled to damages on the ground of fraud. On the Defendant's appeal it was urged that the Defendant did not consciously intend to defraud his client. No fraud being proved, it was submitted that the only alternative was to treat the action as one of mere negligence at law unconnected with misconduct. But that alternative was precluded by the way in which the case had been conducted.

Their Lordships repelled the contention, and dismissed the appeal. In the course of his judgment the Lord Chancellor said, he did not take the view that they were shut up within the dilemma they supposed. There was a third form of procedure to which the statement of claim approximated very closely, and that was the old bill in Chancery to enforce compensation for breach of a fiduciary obligation. There appeared to have been an impression that the necessity which recent authorities had established of proving moral fraud in order to succeed in an action of deceit had narrowed the scope of that remedy. For the reasons which he was about to offer to their Lordships, he did not think that this was so. Under the authorities in Derry v. Peek (14 App. Cas. 337), Angus v. Clifford, [1891] 2 Ch., 449 and Low v. Bouverie, [(1891) 3 Ch., 82), it must now be taken to be settled that nothing short of proof of a fraudulent intention in the strict sense would suffice for an action of deceit. That was so whether a Court of Law or a Court of Equity, in the exercise of concurrent jurisdiction, was dealing with the claim and in this strict sense it was quite natural that Lord Bramwell and Lord Herschell should say that there was no such thing as legal as distinguished from moral fraud. But when fraud was referred to in the wider sense in which the books were full of the expression, used in Chancery in describing cases which were within its exclusive jurisdiction, it was a mistake to suppose that an actual intention to cheat must always be proved. A man might misconceive the extent of the obligation which a Court of Equity imposed on him. His fault was that he had violated, however innocently because of his ignorance, an obligation which he must be taken by the Court to have known, and his conduct had in that sense always been called fraudulent, even in such a case as a technical fraud on a power. It was thus that the expression "constructive fraud" came into existence. The trustee who purchased the trust estate, the solicitor who made a bargain with his client that could not stand, had all for several centuries run the risk that the word fraudulent might be applied to them. What it really meant in this connexion was, not moral fraud in the ordinary sense, but breach of the sort of obligation which was enforced by a Court that from the beginning regarded itself as a Court of Conscience.

Where, as in the present case, a solicitor had had financial transactions with his client, and had handled his money to the extent of using it to pay off a mortgage made to himself or of getting the client to release from his mortgage a property over which the solicitor by such release had obtained further security for a mortgage of his own, a Court of Equity had always assumed jurisdiction to scrutinize his action.

Since the Judicature Act any branch of the Court might give both kinds of relief, and could treat what was alleged either as a case of negligence at common law or as one of breach of fiduciary duty. The judgment of Sir George Jessel in Cockburn v. Edwards (18 Ch. D. 449) might, he thought, really be regarded as an illustration of the latter jurisdiction.

The conclusion at which he had arrived was that the action ought properly to have been treated as one in which the Plaintiff had made out a claim for compensation either for loss arising from misrepresentation made in breach of fiduciary duty or for breach of contract to exercise due care and skill.

Mr. P. O. Lawrence, K. C., Mr. Peterson, K. C., and Mr. Manning for Mr. Nocton.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C., Mr. C. E. E. Jenkins, K. C., and Mr. A. B. Terrell for Lord Ashburton.

B. D. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before FLETCHER AND RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 873 OF 1912. MOHESH CHANDRA GHOSE, APPELLANT v. BANKO BEHARI MUKERJEE and others, Respondents. 9th July 1914.

Civil Procedure Code, sec. 47—"Representative" of judgment-debtor, purchaser after sale, if—Suit to recover from, if lies.

In this case the Plaintiff brought the suit for possession of a 2 annas and odd share in certain lands purchased by him in 1906 at an auction sale held in execution of a decree for arrears of rent. After confirmation of the sale, but before any sale-certificate was taken by the decree-holder purchaser, the disputed property was purchased by the Defendant No. 2 in 1907. The suit was instituted in 1911. The suit was decreed in both the lower Courts. Objection was taken on the ground that the suit was not maintainable under sec. 47, Civ. Pro. Code. Cases in 18 C. W. N. 27[illegible] Cal. 709,34 were relied on.

Held, that the suit was maintainable, as the Defendant No. 2 who was the transferee from the judgment-debtor after the sale was not his representative as contemplated in sec. 47 C. P. C, and as the judgment-debtor did not appeal, the appeal was dismissed.

Babu Karunamoy Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Satis Chandra Mukerjee for the Respondent.

K. M. G.

HIRJI BALDEO v. MANBHUM DISTRICT BOARD.

platform which actually encroached upon the surface of the road. The ground upon which the Rule was issued, therefore, fails.

The question whether a hanging verandah can in any circumstances be an encroachment, has however been argued before us. An encroachment is an unlawful gaining upon the right or possession of another man : Easton v. Richmond (1). In the case of a District Board road, the right to the soil ordinarily rests with the owner of the land adjoining the road. But the public have an extended right of user in the road for the protection and control of which the District Boards were created. A hanging verandah therefore would be an encroachment, if it amounted to an unlawful gaining upon the right of user by the public. That right extends to all forms of traffic which have been usual or customary and also all that are reasonably similar or incidental thereto : [R. v. Mathias (2)]. The question whether a hanging verandah amounts to an encroachment would depend in each case upon the question whether in the particular circumstances it constituted an invasion of the public right of user as described above.

We may add that the public have a right of user not merely on the roadway, but also on the side lands attached to the road.

We have thought it right to express our opinion in this matter, as the point was argued at length and with considerable ability on behalf of the Crown.

The result is that the Rule is discharged.

Rule discharged.

(1) L. R. 7 Q. B. 69, 73 (1871).

(2) 2 F. & F. 570 (1861)

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM CHIEF COURT OF LOWER BURMA.]

LORD SHAW.
LORD MOULTON.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1913,
Heard, 13 and 14, November.
1914,
Judgment,
25, February.

MA NHIN BWIN, Appellant,
v.
U. SHWE GONE, Respondent.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Succession—Daughters separated from father—Death of one—Preferential heir, father or sister—Dhammathats, authority of—Manu Kyay Dhammathat, pre-eminence of—Patriarchal Society in Burma.

When one of two daughters of a Burmese Buddhist, who had left their father's establishment and lived a life separate from and independent of their father, died, the surviving daughter was according to Burmese Buddhist law preferred to the father as her heir

Of the various Dhammathats usually reckoned as 36 in number and which are all referred to as authoritative sources of law amongst the Burmese, but varying in the weight of their authority, that of the Manugye or Manu Kyay Dhammathat (which was issued by Royal authority in 1756) is and has been accepted by the British Government as the highest.

The succession of brothers and sisters in preference to the parents of a deceased childless person being established beyond doubt by the Manu Kyay, no reference to the other Dhammathats was necessary to clear up any ambiguity.

Held, also, upon a review of the other Dhammathats that the balance of their authority was in favour of the sisters and brothers being preferred to the parent.

This rule of succession, was laid down

Ma Nein Bwin v. U. Shwe Gone.

with reference to the fact that the daughters in this case had separated from their father, it being expressly ruled by their Lordships that this case should not be held as dealing with or affecting parental rights in cases where the family continues to live together.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

Messrs. F. J. Coltman and H. Houston, for the Appellant, submitted that the decision of the Chief Court that under Burmese law a father succeeds to the estate of a daughter in preference to the sister, is erroneous at any rate in the case where the sisters are living together apart from the father. An analysis of the texts of the Dhammathats dealing with the rights of parents to inherit, as appearing in U. Gaung's Digest of Burmese Law, Vol. I, ss. 310 and 311, shews that out of thirty-six texts only ten deal specifically with the claim of a brother or a sister as opposed to that of a parent. Of the ten texts which deal with this specific question, six or seven support the right of the brother or sister, if it is observed that the term "co-heirs" includes brothers and sisters, (Digest, s. 11). There is no Dhammathat which gives the preference to the parents where the children are living apart. The Manu Kyay, s. 19, as translated in s. 311 of the above Digest, says as follows :—"The general rule is that relatives of previous generations shall not inherit the property of their descendants. But if a person dies leaving neither wife, children, brothers nor sisters, his parents become his sole heirs." The translation of s. 19 in Richardson's Manu Kyay, 3rd Ed., 1891, is probably more literal; the second sentence is there rendered " . . . . . if the parents be alive and the deceased has no other relations, they shall inherit his property;" and "relations," as appears from ss. 17, 19, 22 and 25, is used as meaning brothers and sisters. The Manu Kyay has always been treated as of the highest authority and its clear statement of the law in favour of the Appellant is not contradicted by any Dhammathat. The Rajabala and other texts in clear language confirm the Manu Kyay.

There is no judicial decision adverse to the Appellant, though there are dicta which appear to be against her contention. The actual decision in Maung Chit Kywe v. Maung Pyo (1) was that brothers and sisters of the father of the deceased are preferred to a step-father. The learned Judge in the course of his judgment said :—"The Burmese law is opposed to the ascent of the inheritance, but when it cannot go by descent the inheritance is allowed to ascend, first to father and mother, and failing them to the first line of collaterals, and in the absence of heirs in that degree to the grandfather and grandmother and the next line of collaterals." The decision was based upon s. 19 of the Manu Kyay, but if by the above dictum it was intended to exclude brothers and sisters, the dictum is contrary to the terms of that section. In any case it was obiter. It was, however, followed in Ma Sa Bwin v. Ma Thi (2) as an affirmative statement of the law, though it is there misquoted, and it was also followed in Maung Shwe Bo v. Maung Pya (3) in which the judgment was again founded on s. 19 of the Manu Kyay, and in Ma Po Hmon v. Maung Kan (4). None of these decisions, however, were

(1) (1895) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901) Chan Toon L. C. 388.

(2) (1898) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 111; 1 Chan Toon L. C. (446).

(3) (1899) Printed Judgments (1893-1900), 524; 1 Chan Toon L. C. 476.

(4) (1899) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 157; 2 Chan Toon L. C. 87.

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

relevant to the present question. In the last named case it was held that a mother is preferred to a step-brother or step-sister of the deceased. A step-brother or step-sister, however, stands upon a different footing to a full brother or sister, not being "heirs" within s. 10 of the Digest or "co-heirs" within sec. 11, and the decision is consequently distinguishable. [The following were also referred to: Mi A. Pruzan v. Mi Chumbra (5); Mi San Hla Me v. Kya Tun (6); Ma Gun Bon v. Maung Po Kywe (7); Ma E. Dok v. Maung Ngwe Hlaing (8); and ss. 24, 25, 27, 28, 97, 320-323 of U. Gaung's Digest.] The preponderating weight of authority in the Dhammathats, more specially that of the Manu Kyay, is in the Appellant's favour, and there is no relevant decision which supports the Respondent's right of inheritance.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Eddis, for the Respondent. The Buddhist law in Burma is founded on the Institutes of Manu, the Dhammathats being equivalent to the Dharmashastras in Hindu law: Burge's Colonial and Foreign Law, Vol. I, p. 59. As a consequence, the law of inheritance in Burma is substantially the same as among Hindus. The Chief Court was right in the view that though there are some Dhammathats which appear to support the Appellant's contention, the preponderance is in favour of the Respondent. An examination of the texts referred to in the Digest supports this. The three texts of greatest authority are the Dhammavilasa, the Manu Kyay, and the Manu Vannana, of which the first named is the oldest. According to the translation in Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law, VII, Inheritance, p. 9, sec. 26 of the Dhammavilasa says:—"If a man dies without children or grandchildren, let his mother and father get his property; in the absence of mother and father let the younger or elder brother get it." Sec. 58 of this text (p. 17 of the above Notes) strongly supports the same view. Sec. 45 of the Manu Vannana, as appears from Jardine's Notes on Buddhist Law, V, p. 19, reproduces and confirms s. 26 of the Dhammavilasa. There is no passage in the Manu Kyay which says that brothers and sisters exclude the parents, if living, or which contradicts the rule as laid down in the Dhammavilasa and the Manu Vannana. (Richardson's translation of the Manu Kyay, ss. 1, 15, 18, 19, 22, 29, 32 and 56 was referred to.) (The cases referred to in the argument for the Appellant were discussed.) The decision in Ma Po Hmon v. Maung Kan (4) is directly in point, since the fact that it related to step-brothers and not to full brothers had no bearing upon the actual decision. (Chan Toon's Principles of Buddhist Law, pp. 15 and 16, and Forchhammer's Essay on the Sources and Developments of Burmese Law, pp. 36, 96, 104 and 108 were also referred to.)

Mr. Coltman in reply: Whatever may be the law as to the devolution of ancestral property, the brother and sister, when living apart from the parents, take before the parents in the case of self-acquired property. Sec. 29 of the Manu Kyay is an exception in favour of the parent and confirms the Appellant's read-

(5) (1874) 1 Chan Toon L. C. 180.

(6) (1894) Printed Judgments (1893-1900), 116; 1 Chan Toon L. C. 279.

(7) (1897) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 66; 1 Chan Toon L. C. (406).

(8) (1898) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 109; 1 Chan Toon L. C. (445).

(4) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 157.

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

ing of s. 19. If the decision in Maung Chit Kywe v. Maung Pyo (1) be examined, it will be found to be not consistent with s. 58 of the Dhammavilasa, but consistent with s. 19 of the Manu Kyay.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivedred by

LORD SHAW.—This is an Appeal from a Judgment and Decree of the Chief Court of Lower Burma. The Judgment is dated the 14th June 1910, and it reverses a Decree of the same Court in its Original Civil Jurisdiction, dated the 16th February 1909. The Appeal is also from an Order dated the 2nd September 1910 which rejected the Appellant's application for a review of the Decree first mentioned.

The question to be afterwards dealt with is one of wide-spread importance, affecting the rights of succession in Burma. It is, however, necessary to state the circumstances, which are few and plain, in such a way as to show the limits of the decision which is about to be pronounced. These will appear as the narrative proceeds.

The Respondent, U. Shwe Gone, had three daughters by his first marriage. These were Mah Nhin Bwin, the eldest, Mah Nhin Boo, about two years younger, and Mah Nhin Ghine, about six years her junior. The eldest, Mah Nhin Bwin, is the Appellant in this case. She was born about the year 1865.

These three sisters lived together apart from their father. They traded in cocoanuts in the Municipal Bazaar at Rangoon. This state of matters lasted for many years, and one of the outstanding facts in the case is the complete separation of these ladies from their father, who had married again. They were, in fact, independent traders. In later years their business appears to have been of considerable importance. One part of it, for instance, mentioned in the proceedings, is three cargoes of Nicobar nuts, of which one of the ladies was consignee, and the combined value of which amounted to a large sum. In the year 1899, the three sisters bought a house in Rangoon with money derived from the profits of their trading, and they thereafter always lived there together. What were the exact relations in the eye of the law as between these three ladies need not be determined in this case. Whether they were all, or any two of them, in full partnership or in joint adventure with each other does not require to be decided in view of the events of death which happened, and of the opinion on the legal point of succession which is afterwards to be announced.

In May 1905, Mah Nhin Ghine died. Her sister, Mah Nhin Boo, took out Letters of Administration and took possession of her property. Their father, the Respondent, however, made a claim thereto, and threatened proceedings, but nothing further was done. In June 1906, Mah Nhin Boo died of plague. Of the three sisters, the Appellant was thus the sole survivor.

Should it accordingly be determined, as the Respondent contends, that he, being the father of these two deceasing ladies, is entitled by the law of Burma to succeed to their property as their heir in preference to their surviving sister, then the corpus of the estate, whether it originally belonged to the one sister or the other, or to both, will go to him. If, on the other hand, as the Appellant, the surviving sister, contends, it be the case that she is entitled as such to succeed as heir to her sisters, then again the entire corpus of the estate of both will pass to her in preference to her father. The point to be determined in this case is which of those two contentions is correct according to Burmese Buddhist law.

(1) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1892-1906), 184.

Ma Nhin Bwin v. U. Shwe Gone.

A subsidiary question was raised in the Appeal. It was founded upon allegations of commercial partnership existing between the Appellant and her sister, Mah Nhin Boo. Separate issues, which in appropriate circumstances might come to be of great importance under the law of Burma, were raised as to the rights of a surviving partner on the one hand in a full partnership, and on the other in a limited partnership or co-adventure. These questions have not been lost sight of, but they are superseded by the conclusion to which their Lordships have come as to the right of succession in law by the father on the one hand, or by the sister on the other. The right of succession being determined in favour of the surviving sister carries with it and covers subsidiary rights of partnership as among the sisters inter se. No pronouncement accordingly is necessary in regard to the separate case under this head

A still further question has been argued, and it is well illustrated by the course which the case took in the Courts below. The learned Judge in the Court of First Instance held that by Burmese Buddhist law the Respondent, the father, was entitled to succeed to the estate of his two deceased daughters in preference to the Appellant, their sister. But he also held, however, that the father by his conduct, which in the opinion of the Court amounted to "desertion and intentional and deliberate neglect of the ordinary duties of affection and kindred," had forfeited the right of succession which would otherwise have opened to him, and that for this reason the suit, which was to declare such a right of succession, must fail. On this latter point the Appellate Court came to a different conclusion, holding that the Respondent's conduct had not been so grave and reprehensible as to justify forfeiture. Accordingly agreeing as it did, with the Court of First Instance, that the father fell to be preferred as the heir entitled to the succession to his daughter's estate, they affirmed that right and gave decree in his favour. But the Appellate Court, in reaching their conclusion as to the import of the Appellant's conduct, showed very clearly by their judgment that, so far as actual separation in life of the daughters from their father was concerned, this had been established beyond doubt; and in short it may be taken as a salient fact in the present case that the life lived for years by these ladies was lived as a life separate from and independent of their father.

The need for this fact being pointedly alluded to is that their Lordships are desirous that the present case should not be held as dealing with or affecting parental rights in cases where the family continues to live together. The rights of a parent in Burma in such circumstances appear, according to their traditions and text-books, and to Eastern patriarchal ideas, to be of a high order; and they indeed recall to the mind various drastic rules of the earlier Roman Law with regard to the scope of the patria potestas. Many illustrations arise in the books, but one may suffice. It is mentioned in even the Manu Kyay, the authority of which is the subject of separate treatment hereafter, that an impoverished parent could sell his children into slavery. These observations are, of course, not made, to give any colour to the view that rights to such an extent still remain in modern Burmese law or practice, but to indicate that the idea of the powers of a parent in his patriarchal capacity over an undivided household may lead to conclusions which hold no place in rules of succession to the estate of children who have left the father's establishment and become separately settled in life.

MA NEIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

On the broad, distinct and simple issue now to be determined, it might have been thought that the recorded traditions and legal institutes of the country would have been clear. Unfortunately, it is very far from being so. This may no doubt be accounted for to some extent by the fact alluded to by Burge (Colonial and Foreign Law, I. 60) that litigation was appealed to "when the parties refuse such compromises as may be suggested by relations and village elders." This salutary practice of compromise has the disadvantage, however, that its results do not enter the records or procure the stamp of authority for a guide in future cases. So far as these results or the decisions of local native tribunals are concerned, they appear to have failed to find a place in the chronicles of the people.

There were, however, as there are still, documents that could be appealed to, all of them authoritative, but varying in the weight of their authority. These are the Dhammathats, usually reckoned as thirty-six in number. They form the expositions of inter alia customs and judicial rules, their dates of issue varying sometimes by many hundreds of years. It is no doubt true that with regard to them a certain evolution can be traced, and it seems by those who have written on this subject also to be admitted that they differ from the ordinary legal institutes in the sense, that a change of dynasty was sometimes accompanied by a fresh composition in the shape of a new, and, it might be a comprehensive Dhammathat, which, while not removing or extinguishing its predecessors, appeared upon the scene clothed with the authority of the fresh Government and containing the latest revisal of accepted juridical doctrine.

It appears to be acknowledged that the laws or rules, contained in the earlier Dhammathats, were in their remotest origin derived from the laws of Manu, which reached Burma by way of Southern India. But with the establishment of Buddhism and the spread of Buddhist doctrine, came, in the course of time, the not unnatural desire to strengthen the sanctions of juridical rule by associating its foundations, the Dhammathats themselves, with the religious sentiments of the people, and in the later Dhammathats the commands, precepts and principles are represented as truly being emanations from the spirit of Buddha himself.

This state of matters must have made the administration of justice still dependent on a comparison of Dhammathat with Dhammathat and a balancing of the weight of their authority. It cannot be said that at the present moment such difficulties have disappeared. Traces of them, indeed, are plain enough in the present case, and one cannot peruse the judgments under review without noting the care with which the learned Judges of Burma address themselves to this task.

There are two views which may be taken. Either the subject is dealt with sufficiently by a single, clear or governing authority, or the Dhammathats as a whole must be collated, and judgment determined by the best balance which can be framed as the result of their dicta. The Judges of the Court below have adopted the latter course, and with regard to it their Lordships are not satisfied that even on such a collation the balance has been correctly struck. But the importance of the subject induces their Lordships to put on record how this matter stands according to all the Dhammathats, if the version contained in the Digest of the Burmese Buddhist Law concerning inheritance and marriage, prepared by Mr. U. Gaung, be taken. Mr. Gaung was a member of the Legislative Council of the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Digest was prepared under the authority of the late Judicial Commissioner and is published with the sanction of the Government of Burma.

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

As showing the variety and conflict of the Dhammathats, reference may be made in particular to secs. 310 and 311 of Volume I of the Digest of Burmese Buddhist Law on the subject of inheritance. Sec. 310 refers to "relatives of previous generations who are not entitled to inherit," and the rule of the Manu Kyay is thus cited :—

"The Rule whereby elder relatives are debarred from inheritance is as follows —The co-heirs live apart from one another, one of them dies without leaving a wife or a husband or a child, his or her estate shall be partitioned among his or her younger brothers and sisters, but not among the elder co-heirs."

The point of the citation is as to the significance of the word "co-heirs" in this passage, and that is illustrated by sec. 311, where Mr. Gaung quotes from the Dhammava :—

"The five kinds of co-heirs are the following, namely, one's elder and younger brothers elder and younger sisters, and their children."

It would thus appear that it was not within the conception of the Manu Kyay on this particular sec. 310 to reckon the parent as having a preferred right to the co-heirs. The co-heirs came first, namely, the brothers and sisters of the deceased; and the point of the section is that as among these it was the younger brothers and sisters that were preferred to the elder co-heirs As stated, the introduction of the parent as to be preferred to brothers and sisters as a class and as a whole is completely negatived.

But their Lordships recognise that the real difficulties of the case—and that the difficulties are real is established not only by the consideration given to the matter by the learned Judges in the present case, but by the course of Burmese decisions to which they refer—arise from the construction of sec. 311. That section deals with "relatives of previous generations who are entitled to inherit."

The conflict had better be exhaustively set forth, and the forces on either side stand in this way :—

On the side of preferring the parents and ignoring the brothers and sisters, the Dhammathats stand as follows :—

Manu.—"On the death of a person leaving "not even a casually adopted son, his or her parents may inherit."

Various other Dhammathats are cited by Mr. Gaung to the same effect as this extract from Manu.

Vilasa.—"In the absence of descendants the parents are entitled to inherit.

This is repeated—almost literally—in Dhammathat Kyaw, in Nandaw and in Vannana.

Razathat—"If the deceased person leaves no wife, children, grandchildren, or other descendant, his parent, grandparent, or other relatives of previous generations are entitled to succeed to the estate."

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

To the same effect is the extract from Varulinga, namely, "In the absence of sons, including those publicly or casually adopted, the parents are entitled to inherit."

Finally comes Kyannet.—"In the absence of wife and children, the parents are entitled to inherit the estate of their son."

It is plain that these extracts do not proceed upon the principle of express exclusion of a right of succession by brothers and sisters. The brothers and sisters are omitted or ignored in the statement of the succession.

On the other side, the same section (sec. 311) cites later Dhammathats which give very ample warrant not for ignoring, but for recognising, and for placing in priority to parents, the rights of succession on the part of brothers and sisters. The historical light in which these later Dhammathats should be viewed will be remarked upon later. But meantime this observation may be made. The opinion appears to be entertained that the Burmese Empire was in the 18th Century of the Christian Era one of the greatest Empires of the Eastern world. But it is at least certain that in the middle of that century a strong attempt was made to put the jurisprudence of Burma into a settled and more easily referable form. In the reign of Alompra, one of his Ministers, a Judge, completed a prose Dhammathat, known as the Dhamma, and the citation from the Dhammathats affirmatory of the right of succession on the part of brothers and sisters as in preference to parents becomes thereafter fairly clear.

These citations are as follows:—

The Dhamma.—"If a deceased person has neither co-heirs nor descendants, his or her parents shall inherit the estate."

It has been already made clear that co-heirs include brothers and sisters, and the exclusion of a right of succession by the parents if such brothers or sisters are alive is thus plain.

The Manu Kyay.—"The general rule is that relatives of previous generations shall not inherit the property of their descendants. But if a person dies leaving neither wife, children, brothers nor sisters, his parents become his sole heirs."

The Vannana has been already cited as ignoring the rights of brothers and sisters in one passage, but in another the situation is expressed thus:—"Failing children, the parents or brothers and sisters of the deceased are entitled to inherit."

The Rajabala.—"In the absence of husband or wife, children, and brothers or sisters, the parents are entitled to inherit."

The Manu.—"If children living apart from their parents die leaving neither heirs nor co-heirs, their parents inherit the estate."

Cittra.—"In the absence of heirs, parents, grandparents or other relatives are entitled to inherit."

Kyetyo.—"In the absence of other relatives, the parents are entitled to inherit."

It will be subsequently shown that by the use of the phrase, "in the absence of other relatives," is meant simply "in the absence of brothers and sisters." This would necessarily appear to be so. And it is from this body of authority quite manifest that the right of parents is not only not preferred, but is on the contrary very plainly postponed to the rights of succession on the part of brothers and sisters.

With regard to the Dhammathats as a whole, it has to be admitted that the figurative language so frequently employed becomes little helpful in expiscating the idea of inheritance. "It is natural," says Razathat, "for sea-water to flow back into the ocean after entering rivers and streams"; and in another passage, "When lakes are full, the overflow is returned to rivers and streams, and tidal water always flows back to the ocean." In later centuries the mind of the commentators was still struggling with these figurative expressions; as, for instance, in the Manu Vannana: "In the absence of wife and children, the parents inherit. Why so? Because of the water which flows into the sea, a portion returns up the river." The figure which earlier appears is the simple one of water which cannot find an outlet being borne back to its source; but as the Dhammathats develop, it is found that the source of the returning water cannot be reached until the intervening inlets and creeks have all been filled up, and there appears to be the conception accordingly, not of at once reaching to the source, namely, the parent, without having exhausted the collaterals, namely, the brothers and sisters. These struggles with figurative language appear even in the decisions in recent times in the Courts in Burma, and, as is not obscurely indicated in some of these Judgments, they rather perplex than help the mind.

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

In their Lordships' opinion the balance of the authority of the Dhammathats is upon the side of the sisters and brothers of the deceased being preferred to the parent. It has been already noted that there is nowhere throughout any of the Dhammathats a specific exclusion of brothers and sisters, and it may further be added that the language of the earliest Dhammathats, where collaterals are, as has been stated, either omitted or ignored, seems not to be analysed or explained or the omission accounted for in the later Dhammathats holding the same view, and the concurrence is a mere repetition. Their Lordships incline to the opinion—and a special reason therefor will be immediately given—that a clearer note is struck by the Dhammathats from the time of the 12th Century of the Burmese, or from about the middle of the 18th Century of the Christian, Era. Brothers and sisters as such, co-heirs as such, and relatives as such, are all dealt with and find a place in the discussion, and wherever they appear as a class they appear in the first rank, that is to say, in the rank preferred to parents.

But these views of their Lordships are fortunately confirmed by another and an historical consideration. There can be little doubt that in the middle of the 18th Century of the Christian Era the conquest and subjugation of the country by Alompra was accompanied by a serious attempt by him and his high functionaries of State to place the jurisprudence of the country in a position of fresh and settled authority. One of his Ministers, supposed to be a Judge, issued under the Royal authority one Dhammathat in prose, known briefly as the Dhamma. Another, "in charge of the Moat of the City of Shwebal," and taken by Dr. Forchhammer to have been Alompra's Minister of War, compiled in prose the Manugye or Manu Kyay Dhammathat, and it is this document last mentioned which was issued by Royal authority in 1756, and which obtained the commanding position which it seems to have occupied for a succeeding period of nearly 170 years.

What was the attitude of the British

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

Government in respect to these particulars constituting the foundations of Burmese law? A period of about a century in the case of Lower Burma and a period of about 130 years in the case of Upper Burma intervened between the Alompraic Code and the British occupation. During this intervening period the Burmese jurisprudence had existed on the footing just described.

It would have been, of course, open to the British Government to adopt the ancient practice of issuing a fresh and authoritative Code. But it was more in accord with the genius and practice of the extension of British rule and of the incorporation of various races and populations within the British Empire to accept the native laws in their main elements in so far as they contained a working system of jurisprudence which was in accord with the traditions and habits of the people. This latter course was adopted. An instance to hand may be cited: In 1892, after the overthrow of King Theebaw and the establishment of settled order in Upper Burma under the British rule, a Circular was issued "for the assistance of the Courts in dealing with questions of Buddhist Law." The Circular issued a translation of the Letters Patent in use under the Burmese Government for the appointment of Judges. A list of Dhammathats was appended to it, but, as showing the complexity of the subject, the Judicial Commissioner adds that he "will be glad of information regarding any copies that may be extant of any of these Dhammathats other than the more commonly known ones." After a recital of many resounding titles of the Sovereign, including that of "Mighty Fountain of Justice," the Circular proceeds thus:—

"Now with respect to the office of Judge, it is on this wise: In the Kingdom of which we are the Sovereign Ruler our numerous subjects must not be permitted one to oppress another, and the Judges must admonish and chastise, repress, and judge. In case of dispute they must, in accordance with the Dhammathats, enquire into the causes of the people and decide between them. And for this purpose they are appointed to the Courts as Judges."

This is the general rule, involving as it does that judicial task the difficulty of which has been already mentioned.

To recur to the Manu Kyay—which for so long had been recognised as the leading guide in the administration of justice, Prof. Forchhammer, in his Treatise on the Sources and Development of Burmese Law, thus describes it:—

"This Law Book is written in plain Burmese with very little Pali intermixed. It is not really a Code or a Digest of Law, but rather an encyclopædic record of existing laws and customs and of the rulings preserved in former Dhammatha's. Manu Kyay does not attempt to arrange the subject-matter or to explain or reconcile contradictory passages; religious elements are freely introduced; unjust judges shall suffer punishment in Hell with head downwards; a man to whom deposits are made must be a strict performer of his religious duties; a person guilty of perjury will be visited by preternatural punishments."

And having dealt with the development of Burmese jurisprudence and made a division of it into three periods, Dr. Forchhammer concludes thus:—

"The Manu Kyay incorporates the contents of the Law Books of the first and second periods and records laws and customs existing among the people of his time. It deals with the religious laws and usages of the Brahmins and the monastic rules of the Buddhist clergy. It allows the Buddhist element to predominate and draws largely from the Buddhist Scriptures."

It is not seriously disputed that the authority of this text-book, where it is clear, as among the Dhammathats, is of the highest rank. And accordingly, when British rule was extended over Burmese territory, the recommendation to the judicial officers substantially accepted this situation as it was found. In the words of Dr. Forchhammer :—

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

"The Manu Kyay is to this day the most widely read and studied law book in Burma, and after the British had taken possession of this province, the natives pointed to this Dhammathat as containing the body of laws by which they had been governed."

Much has been done during the last thirty years to extend the knowledge of the various Dhammathats; and the labours and encouragement of the Judicial Commissioner, Sir John Jardine, have greatly assisted this extension. The Manu Kyay itself has been textually translated by Dr. Richardson, and is in familiar use as a work of reference; and their Lordships do not understand that the pre-eminent authority of this Dhammathat has been lowered by the labours of other authors or the translation of other Dhammathats.

On the point in issue in the present case, the Digest of Mr. Gaung represents the dicta of the Manu Kyay thus :—

"The general rule is that relatives of previous generations shall not inherit the property of their descendants. But if a person dies leaving neither wife, children, brothers nor sisters, his parents become his sole heirs."

There does not seem to be any room for ambiguity here. Both classes are dealt with. The one class—wife, children, brothers and sisters—are specifically and exclusively preferred to the other class, namely, parents.

In the 10th book, chapter 19, of Dr. Richardson's translation, the text reads thus :—

"Though this is the law (that property shall not ascend), why is it also said, the father and mother of the deceased have a right to his property? Because if the parents be alive and the deceased has no ther relations, they shall inherit his property."

In short, the Manu Kyay is clear that the property cannot ascend to parents unless there be no other relations, and "relations," it should be added, are as appears clearly from chapters 17, 19, 22 and 25 of the same book, synonymous with brothers and sisters.

Their Lordships do not think it necessary accordingly to pursue the enquiry further. In this Dhammathat, which still remains of the highest authority, the succession of brothers and sisters in preference to parents is established beyond doubt. This being so, the other Dhammathats do not require to be appealed to to clear up any ambiguity. Were that appeal to be made, it would, in the opinion of their Lordships, as already stated, lead to the same result.

The doubt, however, thrown upon the subject by the judgments of the Courts below can be explained to some extent by a brief glance at the development of authority on the subject.

The sense of the Manu Kyay and the authority of its rule, as above expounded, seem to have been accepted in Burma until the year 1894 On the 12th November of that year there occurred the case of Mi San Hla Me (6), and the narrative is observable :—

"The two lower Courts have held that according to Buddhist Law property cannot ascend where there are collateral heirs, and they have awarded Plaintiff's claim. The general rule that property shall not ascend is laid down in the Manu Dhammathat, Book 10, Secs. 1, 18, 19, but the rule is not without exceptions"

(It may be noted that the "Manu Dhammathat" here referred to is simply the Manu Kyay.)

The exception referred to in that case had reference to the separation of one from his adoptive brothers and sisters, and to an adopted son living with his adoptive mother. It is manifest that this so-called exception has nothing to do with the present broad and general case. And it is also clear that the law as above laid down was held to be the general law of Burma.

(6) (1894) Printed Judgments (1893-1900), 116; 1 Chan Toon L. C. 279.

MA NGIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

Thereafter, however, a certain mischance arose by way of what is reported as an obiter dictum in the case of Maung Chit Kywe (1) in the year 1895. The substantial question in the case is described as "whether the brothers and sisters of the father of the deceased, Mah Pean, who was unmarried, have, under the rules of inheritance in the Dhammathats, a title to the estate of Mah Pean superior to any title of the Defendant as step-father living with deceased." Here it is also quite clear that the broad and simple question now to be determined was not before the Court. The step-father was held to have no equitable claim, but in the course of the judgment there occurs this sentence :—

"The Buddhist law is opposed to the ascent of inheritance, but when it cannot go by descent the inheritance is allowed to ascend, first to the father and mother, and failing them, to the first line of collaterals, and in the absence of heirs in that degree, to the grandfather and grandmother and the next line of collaterals.

By "the first line of collaterals" is here meant the line of the father and mother, and it will be observed from this sentence that the true line of collaterals, namely, the sisters and brothers of the deceased themselves, appears to be excluded from the succession, although on each of the higher lines they are included ; that is to say, uncles and aunts would be preferred to the grandfather, although brothers and sisters would not be preferred to the father. Whatever may be said of this reasoning, at all events it is probably sufficient to observe that it is not applicable to the question in the present case, and it was not necessary to that decision.

In 1897, however, the case of Mah Gun Bon (7) was tried, determining that the estate of a deceased step-parent or grandparent goes by descent to the step-children or grandchildren in preference to collateral relatives by blood. Again it must be observed that the broad and simple question now to be determined was not before the Court. Many citations are made from the Dhammathats and, as generally happens, these texts appear to be somewhat inconsistent with each other, but whether they are so in reality or not is difficult to say. After much examination the learned Judge says :—

"From these various authorities and from the other Dhammathats of which there are printed translations, it is clear that, when the ascending line and the descending line fail, the collateral line succeeds, and probably brothers and sisters would be preferred in certain instances to parents."

No indications are given of what this probability is, and it may be sufficient with regard to this authority to say that it does not cover the simple point now to be determined.

The case of Mah E. Dok (8) (18th May 1898) was referred to. It was a case with reference to adoptive parents. Various texts were cited, concluding with sec. 211 of the Attathanyepa Vannana, which says :—

"Where there is no younger brother or sister, then the property may revert or ascend to the elder members of the family, such as elder brothers, elder sisters, parents, or grand-parents."

And the learned Judge says :—

"Although the last-quoted text throws some

(1) (1895) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901) Chan Toon L. C. 382.

(7) (1897) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 66 ; 1 Chan Toon L. C. (406).

(8) (1898) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 109 ; 1 Chan Toon L. C. (445).

MA NHIN BWIN v. U. SHWE GONE.

doubt on the subject, there seems to be good authority to the rule that parents are entitled to inherit in the absence of direct descendants. There has been no argument on the point."

The "good authority" here referred to appears to have been the cases just cited, and in their Lordships' judgment the case of Mah E. Dok (8) does not advance the proposition in any respect.

Reference was also made to the case of Maung Shwe Bo (3) (27th February 1899), the head-note of which is this :—

"The Buddhist Law is opposed to the ascent of inheritance, but when it cannot go by descent, the inheritance is allowed to ascend, first to the father and mother, and, failing them, to the first line of collaterals, and in the absence of heirs in that degree to the grandfather and grandmother and the next line of collaterals."

It is to be noted that "the Respondents in this case were not represented by Counsel and were unable to afford the Court any assistance in dealing with the difficult point of law involved." In those circumstances the Judge, perhaps not unnaturally, accepted the Chit Kywe case (1) as a guide, and with that their Lordships have already dealt.

It is manifest that the clear and broad issue now to be determined has never been the subject of judicial decision, and that no series of precedents can be relied upon in justification of the Judgments of the Courts below. Out of respect to the Judges, and in view of the embarrassments produced by the cases cited and by the conflict among the Dhammathats, as well as of the importance of the general question being authoritatively settled, their Lordships have thought it right to make an independent investigation so as, if possible, to clear up the whole question. In the result they are of opinion that the right of the Respondent, the father of the deceased, cannot be maintained as against the right of the Appellant, her sister.

(1) (1895) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901) Chan Toon L. C. 388.

(3) (1899) Printed Judgments (1893-1900), 524; 1 Chan Toon L. C. 476.

(8) (1898) 2 Upper Burma Rulings (1897-1901), 109; 1 Chan Toon L. C. (445).

Their Lordships will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the Judgment of the Court below be reversed, and that the suit stand dismissed, the Plaintiff, Respondent to pay to the Appellant the costs of the proceedings here and in the Courts below.

Solicitors: Messrs. Arnould & Son for the Appellant.

Solicitors: Messrs. Sanderson, Adkin, Lee & Eddis for the Respondent.

B. D. Appeal allowed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

L. P. APPEAL NO. 95 OF 1913.

JENKINS, C. J.
CHATTERJEE, J.
1914,
Heard, 26 and 27, March.
Judgment, 27, March.

BADIATANNESSA BIBEE, Defendant No. 2, Appellant,
v.
AMBIKA CHARAN GHOSH, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Purdanashin lady executing mortgage for husband's benefit—Proof of intelligent execution—Explanation—Independent advice—Undue influence—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 16.

Where a purdanashin lady was induced by her husband to give a mortgage by way of security at a time when she was living with her husband and the evidence was that the document was read and explained to her by the husband in the presence of the mortgagee :

Held—That the Court would not be justified in holding that the mortgage was fairly taken or that the lady executing it was a free agent duly informed of what she was about ; and the mortgagee must be taken to have been aware of the influences under which the lady came to execute the document.

BADIATANNESSA BIBEE v. AMBIKA CHARAN GHOSH.

Held (without expressing any opinion as to whether sec. 16 of the Contract Act requires the undue influence to proceed from a party to the suit)—That the undue influence which may affect a purdanashin lady's understanding of a document may proceed from a third party.

GIREESH CH. LAHOREY v. BHUGOBUTTY DEBIA (1), BANK OF MONTREAL v. STUART (3), IN RE COOMBER (4), KANHAYA LAL v. THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LD. (2) referred to.

This was an Appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 25th July 1913 against the decree of Sharfuddin, J, dated the 27th of June 1913, passed in Second Appeal No. 2695 of 1911.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babus Mohendra Nath Ray, Brojendra Nath Chatterjee and Shyam Lal Bose for the Appellant.

Babu Ram Charan Mojumdar and Babu Sajani Kant Sinha for Babu Debendra Nath Bagchi for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—This is an appeal from a judgment of Mr. Justice Sharfuddin who has confirmed the decree of the lower Appellate Court by which the previous decree of the Munsif had been reversed.

The suit is one brought by a mortgagee against a man and his wife on a mortgage bond.

With the rights against the man we have no concern, for this appeal has merely to do with the right of the mortgagee, the Plaintiff, against the wife.

The transaction was one from which the wife derived no direct benefit for herself, as she was giving a mortgage by way of security for her husband. In these circumstances it is contended on behalf of the wife that she being a Mahomedan purdanashin lady is not bound by the mortgage.

It was said by the Privy Council in Gireesh Ch. Lahorey v. Bhugobutty Debia (1), that the committee has always been careful to see that deeds taken from purdah women have been fairly taken, that the party executing them has been a free agent, and duly informed of what she was about. The burden of establishing this rests on him who claims against the purdanashin lady ; so that what we have to see is whether on the findings of the lower Appellate Court such a case has been made out.

I have said that the lady herself derived no direct benefit from the transaction, and we have it in evidence that when a similar transaction of an earlier date was proposed, the lady, at that time living with her husband's father and brothers, under their advice repudiated the execution by her of a document which has been represented to us as having been somewhat similar in effect.

At the time when this document was executed, the lady was living with her husband, and it is found as a fact by the lower Appellate Court that she evidently acted under the influence of her husband in consenting to mortgaging her house for her husband's debt. The learned Judge goes on to say that "though this would have rendered the transaction invalid as between husband and wife, he did

(1) 13 M. I. A. 419 (1870).
(2) 17 C. W. N. 541 (1913).
(3) [1911] A. C. 120.
(4) [19■■] 1 Ch. 723 at p. 730.

(1) 13 M. I. A. 419 (1870).

BADIATANNESSA BIBEE v. AMBIKA CHARAN GHOSH.

not think that it affected the validity of the mortgage so far as the Plaintiff was concerned, as he acted in good faith."

Now, the Plaintiff is a muktear and he was present on the only occasion when the contents of the document were read, and, it is said, explained to her. Who was the person who read the document and explained it? The husband—the husband whose undue influence procured the execution of the document by his wife. Who was present when this reading and explanation took place? Among others the mortgagee, so that we not only have the fact that all that is shown is a reading and explanation of the document by the husband but the knowledge of the mortgagee that that was the means whereby it could be suggested that she was a free agent and duly informed of what she was about.

In my opinion it is impossible in these circumstances to accept the view that the undue influence of the husband had nothing to do with the matter. The mortgagee himself must have known the influences under which the lady came to sign the document. What the explanation is that was given to the lady we do not know; but I should not expect a very critical questioning or a very elaborate explanation, between one who exercised undue influence, and another, over whom he exercised it.

It may be, as has been suggested before us, that sec. 16 of the Contract Act, as it now stands, requires that the undue influence should proceed from a party to the suit and that the language of the section is in this respect narrower than of the section for which it was substituted. I do not wish to express any definite and conclusive view on this point at present, but the undue influence which may affect a purdanashin lady's understanding of a document may proceed from a third party. In the very instructive judgment of Lord Moulton in Kanhaya Lal v. The National Bank of India, Ld. (2), it is made clear that the word 'coercion' and, by parity of reasoning, the other words which have a special definition for the purposes of Chap. II of the Contract Act, are not by that definition deprived of the wider meaning that they may otherwise possess for other purposes.

This case is in its circumstances similar to that which came before their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bank of Montreal v. Stuart (3). It was held there, in circumstances substantially undistinguishable from the present, that the lady was not bound by the transaction into which she purported to enter with the creditor of her husband for the benefit of her husband; and, their Lordships came to that conclusion, although the lady in her evidence repudiated the suggestion that there had been undue influence.

It appears to me that the findings in this case fall short of establishing that the mortgage was fairly taken or that the lady executing it was a free agent duly informed of what she was about. I have already stated the situation in which the document was explained to her; and, if I may adopt the language of another judgment of Lord Moulton, Lord Justice Moulton, as he was at that time, in In re Coomber (4), I would say that it has not been shown that any independent person free from any taint of the relationship, or of the consideration of interest which would affect the act, has clearly put before the lady what are

(2) 17 C. W. N. 541 (1913).
(3) [1911] A. C. 120.
(4) [1911] 1 Ch. 723 at p. 730.

BADIATANNESSA BIBEE v. AMBIKA CHARAN GHOSH.

the nature and consequences of the act, and the advice, if advice was given, was certainly not removed entirely or at all from the suspected atmosphere: nor had the lady an opportunity of learning, from the clear language of an independent mind, precisely what she was doing.

In this view of the case it appears that while we cannot uphold the judgment of Mr. Justice Sharfuddin and the decree of the Subordinate Judge, it will be unprofitable to send back the case, and we must, therefore, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court so far as it relates to Defendant No. 2 and restore the decree of the Munsif so far as it relates to that Defendant. As between the Plaintiff and Defendant No. 2, the Plaintiff must bear her costs of this litigation in all the Courts.

CHATTERJEE, J.—I agree.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2401 OF 1912.

D. CHATTERJEE, J.
N. R. CHATTERJEA, J.
1914,
Heard, 6, May.
Judgment, 11, June.

BASUNTA KUMAR CHUCKERBUTTY, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
GOPAL CHUNDER DAS, Defendant, Respondent.

Will of which probate has not been taken, whether can be proved—Succession Act (X of 1865), sec. 187—Proper representation of testator's estate, where no probate taken.

SARBAMUNGOLA DEBI v. MAHENDRO NATH NATH (2) is authority for holding that a will of which probate has not been taken may be proved in a proceeding other than a proceeding under the Probate Act.

But a will uncovered by a probate or letters of administration cannot prove that anybody named therein has title to the estate of the testator.

A legal heir of a testator in possession of his general estate can maintain a suit for the benefit of the estate so long as any other claimant does not establish his right to the same under the will.

PROSUNNO CHANDRA BHATTACHARYA v. KRISTA CHAITANYA PAL (1), CHOONY LAL BOSE v. OSMOND BIBEE (3) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th August 1912, against a decree of Babu Biroja Ch. Mitra, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Faridpur, dated the 23rd May 1912, affirming a decree of Babu Banwari Lal Banerjee, Munsif at Goalundo, dated the 15th September 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Surendra Kumar Bose (for Babu Preo Sankor Majumdar) for the Appellant.

Babu Kishori Lal Sarkar for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The father of the Plaintiff purchased a holding in execution of a decree and had notices under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act issued on the Defendants who are under-raiyats. On the death of his father the Plaintiff brought this suit for ejectment. The plea of the Defendants was, amongst others, that the deceased father of the Plaintiff had left a Will under which the Plaintiff was only a part-owner of the property in suit and could not as such eject them. The Plaintiff in his deposition admits that he has heard of the execution of a will by his

(1) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 342 (1878).
(2) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 509 (1879).
(3) I. L. R. 30 Cal. 1044 (1903).

BASUNTA KUMAR CHUCKERBUTTY v. GOPAL CHUNDER DAS.

father. The Defendant produced the will, and the Plaintiff objected to its being proved. The Court of first instance allowed the will to be proved and dismissed the suit of the Plaintiff as incompetent.

It has been contended before us that the Courts below are wrong in allowing the Will to be proved and should have proceeded to try the suit, notwithstanding the Will which could be proved only in a proper proceeding under the Probate Act.

It is contended that so long as probate is not taken, the estate of the testator must be represented by the heir-at-law. In the case of Prosunno Chandra Bhattacharya v. Krista Chaitanya Pal (1), Mr. Justice Markby said :—"I think that until some other claimant comes forward, the party who takes possession of the estate of a deceased Hindu must, in the present state of the law, be treated for some purposes as his representative and a judgment obtained against such a representative is not a mere nullity." The reason given was that otherwise the remedy of the creditor against the estate might be barred by an intentional delay in taking out probate. In the case of Sarbamungola v. Mahendro Nath (2), Mr. Justice White allowed a Will to be proved ; although no probate had been granted of the same, the heiress was allowed to prove it for the purpose of construing it and shewing that it was void. This latter case is authority for upholding the proof of the execution of the Will ; that however is not sufficient for passing title under the Will. Sec. 187 of the Succession Act applies to the Wills of Hindus and no title under the Will can be established in any Court of Justice unless a probate or letters of administration with the Will annexed has been granted by a competent Court. The Will therefore uncovered as it is by a Probate or Letters of Administration cannot prove that anybody named therein has title to the estate of the testator. The plea of non-joinder must therefore fail. The question however still remains to be decided—does the Plaintiff represent his deceased father so as to be competent to maintain the suit ? The case of Prosunno Chandra Bhattacharya v. Krista Chaitanya Pal (1) is authority for holding that he might, if he is in possession of his father's estate represent him for the purpose of being sued by a creditor. In the case of Choony Lal v. Osmond Bibee (3) the residuary legatee as well as the heir ab intestato were substituted as the representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor, and it was held that the representation was complete. Mr. Justice Markby, in the case of Prosunno Chandra (1), says "the executor does not represent the deceased by virtue of the Will until he has obtained probate. Who then represents the deceased who has left a Will until probate has been obtained ? Surely some one must do so, or the law would not have provided that the statute of limitation should run between the death and the grant of probate and it undoubtedly does." If this be the reason why the party in possession should represent the deceased until the Will is proved so far as a claimant against the estate is concerned, there is no reason why the heir in possession should not represent the estate for the benefit of the estate against persons liable to the estate. Just as the decree against the party in possession may be available to the creditor for work-

(1) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 342 (1878).
(2) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 509 (1879).

(1) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 342 (1878).
(3) I. L. R. 30 Cal. 1044 (1903).

ing out his remedy against the executor when he obtains probate, the decree obtained by the party so in possession may enure to the benefit of the claimants under the Will when they can rely on the same as their deed of title. The heir-at-law may claim adversely to the Will, he may impeach the validity of the Will notwithstanding that execution is proved: he may have various defences available to him against any claimant under the Will.

In any case, if he can prove that he has come into possession of the general estate of his father, he can as the legal heir maintain a suit for the benefit of the estate, so long as any other claimant does not establish his right to the same under the Will.

The learned Munsif in this case was satisfied with the mere proof of the execution of the Will. The Will although in Court was not even put to the Plaintiff when he was examined. We think that the judgments of the Courts below should be set aside, and the case sent back to the first Court for decision on the merits after allowing the parties opportunity for adducing such evidence as may be relevant. The Plaintiff is entitled to the costs of this and the lower Appellate Court. The costs in the first Court will abide the result.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2255 OF 1912.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1914, 14, May.

PROMODE RANJAN GHOSH, Defendant, Appellant, v. ASWINI KUMAR NAG, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Nim-howla lease, stipulation in, against voluntary alienation by tenant to person other than landlord—Purchase of tenure by stranger at sale in execution of money-decree—Purchaser if acquires good title—Landlord if can sue original tenants for rent and obtain decree binding on tenure.

The Plaintiff purchased at an execution sale the right, title and interest of the tenants in a nim-howla tenure. Notwithstanding the purchase by the Plaintiff which was duly notified to the landlord, the latter brought a suit for rent against the tenants and obtained a decree. The Plaintiff brought a suit for declaration that this decree was not binding on him and that the tenure in his hands was not liable to be sold in execution thereof. The lease which created the nim-howla provided as follows :—"Let it be known that if you find it necessary to transfer the nim-howla tenure, you will transfer it to me for proper price. You will not be at liberty to transfer it to any person other than myself. If you transfer it to any other person, such transfer will be invalid."

Held—That there being no covenant against involuntary alienations and no covenant for re-entry, the Plaintiff acquired a good title by his purchase and consequently it was not open to the landlord to sue the original tenants with a view to obtain a decree whereby he could proceed against the tenure in the hands of the Plaintiff.

This was an Appeal against a decree of Babu Jogendra Nath Bose, Subordinate Judge of Khulna, dated the 3rd May 1912, confirming a decree of Babu Naro Nath Mukherjee, Munsif, Bagerhat, dated the 21st July 1911.

The Judgment of the Subordinate Judge was as follows :—

"The Plaintiff has purchased the nim-howla right of the Defendants Nos. 2 and

PROMODE RANJAN GHOSH v. ASWINI KUMAR NAG.

3, in execution of a money-decree against their father. After this the malik obtained a decree for rent against the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 for the nim-howla on a compromise. This suit has been brought for a declaration that the decree does not affect the Plaintiff, that the nim-howla cannot be sold in execution of the said rent-decree. The only defence which needs consideration now in this appeal is whether the nim-howla was transferable. The suit has been decreed and the Defendant No. 1 (malik) has appealed. The first point which arises for consideration is that about the law applicable to this case. The lower Court has applied sec. 10 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Appellant's pleader contends that as the nim-howla was created before the passing of the Act, the Act is not applicable and cites Hari Nath Karmokar v. Raj Chandra Karmokar (8). I think his contention is right. Under the previous law, nim-howlas were transferable. There is a clause in the nim-howla patta to the effect that if the nim-howladar wants to sell the property, he must sell it to the lessor and will not be able to sell it to any one else. On this the Appellant's pleader contends that the Plaintiff's purchase has not conferred any right on the purchaser. The Plaintiff has however purchased it in execution of a decree and there is nothing in the patta against sales in execution of decrees. The contention is only with respect to voluntary sale by the nim-howladar. The restriction cannot be construed into a restriction against sales of all kinds. The decisions in Nilmadhab Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar (3), Goloknath Roy v. Mathuranath Roy (4) are in favour of the Respondent. The Appellant's pleader wants to distinguish the decisions saying that there is a general restriction of sales in this case as mentioned in the decisions alluded to above, as the patta authorizes sales to the malik, but I think the word 'general' as used there does not mean 'absolute.' I think the principle laid down in these cases is that when the restriction does not refer to Court-sales specifically, the restriction does not make sales in execution of decrees void. I do not believe recognition by the prior malik, but as the appeal fails on the point discussed, I do not discuss this point at length. The Appeal is dismissed with costs."

(3) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 826 (1890).
(4) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 273 (1891).
(8) 2 C. W. N. 122 (1897).

Babus Jogendra Chandra Ghosh, Anilendra Nath Ray Chowdhury and Smritish Chandra Ghosh for the Appellant.

No one for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal on behalf of the landlord Defendant in a suit for declaration that the Plaintiff is not bound by a decree for rent obtained by the landlord against the tenant Defendants. The Plaintiff is the purchaser, at an execution sale, of the right, title and interest of the tenant Defendants in a nim-howla tenure which lay originally in the District of Backergunge, but is now included in the District of Khulna. Notwithstanding the purchase by the Plaintiff, which was duly notified to the landlord, the latter brought a suit for rent against the tenant Defendants and obtained a decree. The Plaintiff asks for a declaration that this decree is not binding on him and that the tenure in his hands is not liable to be sold in execution of this decree. The question consequently arises, whether the Plaintiff has acquired a valid title to the tenure by his purchase at the execution sale. The determination of this question depends upon the terms of the nim-howla lease of the 20th February 1878, which provides as follows:—"Let it be known that if you find it necessary to transfer the nim-howla tenure, you will transfer it to me for proper price. You will not be at liberty to transfer it to any person other than myself. If you transfer it to any other person, such transfer will be invalid."

On behalf of the landlord Defendant it has been argued that the tenure was expressly made non-transferable except in one event, namely, a transfer by the tenants to the landlord, and that consequently the Plaintiff has not acquired a valid title by his purchase. There are two obvious answers to this contention. In the first place, there was no covenant against involuntary alienation, as there was in the case of Vyankatraya v. Shivrambhat (1) where there was a covenant that the tenant would not let the land of the tenancy be sold, or attached and sold, in satisfaction of judgment-debts. It follows consequently that the Plaintiff has acquired a valid title by his purchase. This view is supported by a long series of decisions amongst which may be mentioned Tamaya v. Timapa (2), Nilmadhab Sikdar v. Narattam Sikdar (3), Goloknath Roy v. Mathuranath Roy (4), Parameshri v. Vittappa (5). In the first of these cases, it was pointed out that where land had been sold against the will of the lessee by the act of a Court, the lessee could not be said to have voluntarily transferred his interest and thereby committed breach of a covenant not to assign.

In the second place, it is clear that, as there was no covenant for re-entry, the Plaintiff has acquired a valid title. In support of this proposition, reference may be made to the case of Basarat Ali Khan v. Manirullah (6) in which it was pointed out, on the authority of the decision of Blackburn, J., in Williams v. Earle (7), that where no right of re-entry is reserved, though there is a covenant binding on the tenant not to assign, the assignment is nevertheless operative. If the assignment in the case before us be thus deemed operative, it necessarily follows that title passed to the Plaintiff, and it was consequently not open to the Defendant to sue the original tenants with a view to obtain a decree whereby he could proceed against the tenure in the hands of the Plaintiff.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is confirmed and this appeal is dismissed.

(1) I. L. R. 7 Bom. 256 (1883).
(2) I. L. R. 7 Bom. 262 (1883).
(3) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 826 (1890).
(4) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 273 (1891).
(5) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 157 (1902).
(6) I. L. R. 36 Cal. 745 (1909).
(7) L. R. 3 Q. B. 739, 9 B. & S. 740 (1868).

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 587 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1914,
19, June.

MUNSHI ABDUL KADIR, Decree-holder, Petitioner,
v.
SHAHABAZPUR CO-OPERATIVE BANK and others, Opposite Party.

Co-operative Societies Act (II of 1912), secs. 19, 20—Priority of registered societies to other creditors, how enforceable—Rateable distribution—Sec.

MUNSHI ABDUL KADIR v. SHAHABAZPUR CO-OPERATIVE BANK.

73, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), if applicable—Charge if any.

By an application made under sec. 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure a registered Co-operative Society cannot enforce its prior claim within the meaning of sec. 19 of Act II of 1912, as against a judgment-creditor at whose instance property is going to be sold, if they have no decree or a charge under sec. 20 of the said Act.

Other remedies may still be open to such Society.

This Rule was issued against the order of the Munsif, 1st Court, Nabinagar, in Title Execution Case No. 147 of 1913 of 26th February 1914. The Petitioner Abdul Kadir in execution of his decree against one Samiraddi, Opposite Party No. 5, attached, among other things, his paddy and jute crops and a few heads of cattle belonging to him, after the Court had overruled the objections of the judgment-debtor. After attachment, but before sale, the Opposite Party Nos. 1—4, the Shahabazpur Co-operative Bank and three of its managing members, filed an application before the Munsif which purported to have been one under sec. 73 and Or. 21, r. 66 of the Code of Civil Procedure praying for an enquiry and for enforcement of the prior claim of the Society under Act II of 1912 upon the cattle and crops so attached in respect of a debt of of Rs. 100 amounting to Rs. 108 and odd with interest due to the said Society from Samiraddi who was a member of the Society. Their allegations were that the judgment-debtor had borrowed the said sum in order to purchase seed-grains and the cattle attached, and that no other creditor could get the sale-proceeds of the crops and the cattle in priority over the Bank. The attaching decree holder Abdul Kadir opposed the application.

The Munsif found upon the evidence that the money lent by the Bank was spent in the purchase of seed-grains and the cattle attached, although the decree-holder had attempted to prove otherwise and that the Bank did lend the amount to Samiraddi as evidenced by the entries in the Bank account-books and the statements of witnesses, and he was of opinion that although the petition purported to have been one under sec. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code, it was really one under sec. 19 of Act II of 1912 and upon the above findings held that the Bank was entitled to enforce its outstanding demand in priority to the attaching creditor under sec. 19 of the Act, and allowed the Bank to take out the major portion of the sale-proceeds.

Moulvi A. K. Fazlul Huq for the Petitioners submitted that the application under sec. 73 of the Civil Procedure Code was incompetent inasmuch as the Bank had no decree against the judgment-debtor, and so it could not claim rateable distribution with the Petitioner; persons coming under that section must be decree-holders. Nor does cl. (a) of that section cover this case inasmuch as the Bank has no charge upon the properties attached and sold. It is only sec. 20 of Act II of 1912 that contemplates a charge, but that section is not applicable here, because it contemplates a charge upon the share or dividend, etc., of a member. And sec. 19 of the Act does not create any charge in favour of the Society. Submits that the order of the Munsif passed under sec. 73, C. P. C., is illegal and without jurisdiction.

Mr. Rasul (with him Babu Upendra Kumar Ray) for the Opposite Party in showing cause submitted—Assuming there was some difficulty as to the application of sec. 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Munsif's order is quite clear when he says—"This is an application under sec. 73, C. P. C, for enforcing the charge of the Applicant who appears for one Co-operative Bank. The Applicant comes under sec. 19 of Act II of 1912." The application is dealt with as one really under the new Act. Sec. 19 is an enabling section, and the Society is entitled to enforce its outstanding demands under this section. In the face of the provisions of sec. 19, an application need not be made under the Civil Procedure Code or any particular section thereof. The learned Munsif does not treat this application as one under sec. 73, C. P. C., as is quite apparent from his order.

Sec. 19 does create an equitable charge in favour of the Society, although the expression 'charge' or 'lien' does not occur there. It creates a charge upon the specific classes of property mentioned in cls. (a) and (b) of that section. Act II of 1912 is a special Act and gives certain special privileges to the co-operative societies. The heading under which sec. 19 is placed shows clearly that such societies are given special privileges and that for obvious reasons. In this section, the Society is given priority to other creditors to enforce its claim upon two classes of property only and nothing more. These are the crops or other agricultural produce, when the Society has supplied the seed or manure or lent money for purchase of seed or manure, and secondly upon the cattle, fodder, implements, etc, supplied by the Society, or when it has lent money for the purchase thereof. The judgment-debtor may have lots of other properties, but the special privilege conferred by this section does not extend to those properties. The Society in order to proceed against those properties must proceed just like any other creditor. But where, as in the present case, the Society looks to the crops and cattle only for the realisation of its dues and it is clearly found that the seed-grains and the cattle were purchased with the money lent by the society, the Court has jurisdiction to give relief to the Bank under this section, and the learned Munsif's order is quite correct. The entries in the account-books of the Bank filed in this case as well as oral evidence prove the debt due to it, and in order to enforce its prior claim under sec. 19, the Bank need not obtain a decree or a certificate; for that cumbrous process would itself defeat one of the purposes of the Act, namely, speedy realisation of the money due to the society which had been advanced for the promotion of thrift and self-help among agriculturists.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Rule which was obtained by the decree-holder in an application under sec. 73 of the Code of Civil Procedure made by a Co-operative Society for enforcing a charge under sec. 19 of Act II of 1912. The application was undoubtedly made under sec. 73, and under that section we are of opinion that the Co-operative Society could have no priority to other creditors, unless there are one or more persons than one who have made applications to the Court for the execution of decrees for payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtors. To hold otherwise would be to give these Co-operative Societies a power which even Government in its much discussed certificate procedure does not claim. They would claim in other words to recover money without either decree or certificate or any legal title to enforce their debt. Admittedly there is no charge within the meaning of sec. 20 of the Co-operative Societies Act, so that the proviso to sec. 73 does not come in. It is possible that under sec. 19, the Society might have raised an objection to the attachment by reason of other sections of the Code of Civil Procedure, but with that we are not concerned. It appears to us perfectly clear that under sec. 73 the claim of a Co-operative Society cannot be enforced, unless they have a decree or a charge under sec. 20

The Rule therefore must be made absolute and the order of the lower Court set aside without prejudice to any action which the Society may deem fit to take, if so advised.

The Petitioner is entitled to his costs in this Rule which we assess at one gold mohur.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

REF. NOS. 2 TO 7 OF 1914

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1914,
30, January.

KING-EMPEROR
v.
RIHR CHAMAR, Accused.

Labour and Emigration (Assam) Act (VI of 1901), secs. 2, 152, 162, 164—Illegal recruitment of cooly—Repatriation at the expense of the employer—Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

In a case under sec. 164 of the Assam Labour and Emigration Act for illegal recruitment of coolies, the Sub-Deputy Magistrate while acquitting the accused, made an order that the proprietor of the garden should deposit the expenses of repatriation of the coolies in question :

Held—That the Sub-Deputy Magistrate not being appointed by the Local Government within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Act, his order was ultra vires.

That the order was also bad on the ground that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate did not call upon the employer to show cause against the order, there being an acquittal of the accused and nothing to show undue influence or coercion.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C, dated the 2nd of January 1914, made by J. A. Woodhead, Esq, District Magistrate of Faridpur for revision of an order of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Goalundo, dated the 19th of April 1913, acquitting, under sec. 245, Cr. P. C., the accused who was charged with an offence under sec. 164 of the Emigration Act and directing the coolies recruited to be repatriated at the cost of the employer.

Certain persons were sent up for illegal recruitment of coolies and were all acquitted by the Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Goalundo, who however passed an order to the effect that the coolies were to be repatriated at the cost of the employer to whose estate they were being conveyed. The District Magistrate made a reference to the High Court as stated above.

Mr. Gregory with Babu Hemendra Kumar Das for the Accused.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference from the learned Magistrate of Faridpur in six cases in which the Sub-Deputy Magistrate acquitted certain persons of offences under sec. 164 of the Labour and Emigration (Assam) Act, VI of 1901, and at the same time passed an order that the proprietor of the garden should deposit the expenses of repatriation of the coolies in question in each case.

KING-EMPEROR v. RIHE CHAMAR.

The Magistrate points out to us that the Sub-Deputy Magistrate's orders were entirely without jurisdiction inasmuch as sec. 2 of the Act defines the Magistrate as the Magistrate of the District, Sub-Divisional Magistrate or other persons appointed by the Local Government to perform the functions of the Magistrate under this Act, and this Sub-Deputy Magistrate was not so appointed by the Local Government. His orders therefore are clearly ultra vires, and the Magistrate asks us to set aside the order directing that the employer should bear the costs of repatriation. The learned Counsel who appears for the employer takes the further ground that inasmuch as the accused were acquitted and there is nothing to show that there was any undue influence or coercion and the employer was not called upon to show cause, as the law directs, the order was a bad one.

Upon both these grounds, we think, that the order must be set aside and the amounts if paid must be refunded.

We do not express any opinion as to what the result of setting aside the Sub-Deputy Magistrate's orders as wholly without jurisdiction may be upon the acquittal of the accused persons. The only order which we are now concerned with is the order for repatriation.

This judgment will govern all these six cases.

Order set aside.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 249 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1914,
6, March

CHIRAGUDDIN, Accused
v.
EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Circumstantial evidence necessary for conviction, nature and character of—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec 380.

The Petitioner was convicted under sec. 380, I. P. C., for theft of a number of currency notes and the findings were that he as well as five other persons entered the room at or about the time the notes were stolen, that his brother in-law was present when two of the stolen notes were cashed in Calcutta, that shortly after the theft he was in possession of a large sum of money for which he could not satisfactorily account.

Held—That circumstantial evidence must be exhaustive and exclude the possibility of guilt of any other person or must point conclusively to the complicity of the accused.

That in the present case the evidence did not fulfil the conditions of circumstantial proof at all.

This was a Rule granted against the order of M. Yusuf Ali, Deputy Magistrate of Ranchi, dated the 12th of December 1913, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 380, I. P. C., and sentencing him to suffer two years' rigorous imprisonment, which order was, on appeal, modified by D. H. Kingsford, Esq., Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur, on the 19th December 1913, by altering the sentence to one of eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200, or in default six months rigorous imprisonment.

The material facts appear from the judgment.

CHIRAGUDDIN v. EMPEROR.

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Ranchi to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioner should not be set aside on the ground that there is no incriminating finding against him in the judgments of the Courts below.

The Petitioner was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment under sec. 380, I. P. C., for complicity in a theft of currency notes from the office of the Secretary, Public Works Department, Bihar and Orissa Secretariat. That sentence was reduced in appeal by the learned Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur to one of 18 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 200, in default six months' additional rigorous imprisonment ; and the findings against the Petitioner were three in number and amounted in the learned Judicial Commissioner's opinion to exhaustive circumstantial evidence that he was one of the guilty parties.

Now the three points are these—first, the opportunity, in that he entered the room at about the time the money was stolen and in Mr. Priday's absence. But the learned Judicial Commissioner himself holds that there were at least five other persons who entered the room during Mr. Priday's absence, and it is clear in fact that the opportunity was not the Petitioner's exclusively.

The second point is that the Petitioner's brother-in-law Tuni was present when two of the stolen notes were cashed in Calcutta two months later at the shop of Jamaluddin by one Alijan, who is Tuni's brother-in-law, in circumstances which indicate dishonest knowledge on the part of Tuni. It is perfectly clear that this cannot be any evidence whatever against the Petitioner. No man can be responsible for the dishonest acts of his brother-in-law ; and no connection in time or place is shown between the Petitioner and Tuni with reference to the changing of these notes.

The third and final ground against the Petitioner is that shortly after the theft he was in possession of a large sum of money for which he cannot satisfactorily account. The defence account for it in a rather curious way. It is suggested that the Petitioner being a peon on Rs. 5 a month may have derived the money from some other illegitimate sources. That obviously is a very sound, if not a very moral, argument, and there is nothing whatever to indicate that the money which was in the possession of the Petitioner was a portion of the stolen money. Indeed the facts seem to negative it, for the theft was in respect of currency notes in the denomination of Rs. 150 to the value of Rs. 350 and a sum of Rs. 210 in cash and 10-rupee notes ; and the evidence against the Petitioner is that on the 12th and 21st May he deposited in the Post Office Savings Bank the sums of Rs. 29 and Rs. 155 respectively, total Rs. 184 The learned Judge remarks that this closely corresponds with the sum of Rs. 210 stolen in cash and 10-rupee notes. This is obviously not sufficient to show that this money was derived from the proceeds of this particular theft. The circumstantial evidence must be exhaustive and exclude the possibility of guilt of any other person, or must point conclusively to the complicity of the accused. It is obvious that this evidence does not fulfil the conditions of circumstantial proof at all.

CHIRAGUDDIN v. EMPEROR.

The Rule must therefore be made absolute. The conviction and sentence are set aside and the Petitioner will be released from bail. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 638 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
30, May.

BISESUR SING
v.
KING-EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 517, if applies to immoveable property.

Sec. 517, Cr. P. C., has no application to immoveable property.

This was a Rule granted on the 29th April 1913 against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad dated the 25th April 1913.

The material facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal, Ramtaran Chatterji and Suresh Chandra Mukerji for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This was a Rule on the District Magistrate of Gaya to show cause why the order under sec. 517 should not be set aside on the ground that the order is entirely illegal and without jurisdiction.

The facts of this case may be shortly stated to be that the Petitioners dispossessed the Complainant of his garden by breaking the padlock of its gate and entering it, whereupon they were convicted of an offence of criminal trespass.

There is no evidence to show that there was any force or violence used in the commission of the offence. The Magistrate who tried this case passed an order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., restoring the garden to the Complainant. The question in this case is whether sec. 517 of the Code applies to moveable and immoveable property alike. We have no hesitation, after comparing sec. 517 with sec. 522, in saying that the former section has no application to immoveable property. If that section had any application to immoveable property, the provisions of sec. 522 would become superfluous; because if the word "property" comprehends both moveable and immoveable property, sec. 517 then becomes much more comprehensive in its meaning than sec. 522. The Magistrate obviously proceeded to pass an order under sec. 517 in this case on the interpretation of the word "property" which, being commonly applicable to moveable and immoveable property alike, has been taken to mean by him property of either kind.

In this connection, as to the interpretation of the word "property," the learned Vakil on behalf of the Petitioners has drawn our attention to the case of Jugdown Sinha v. Queen-Empress (1), where the word "property" as used in sec. 405, I. P. C., has been explained to mean moveable property only. Similarly, in sec. 517 from the language employed we do not understand the word "property" to mean immoveable property. In the case of Ahmed Ali v. Keenoo Khan (2), where a person had been dispossessed of a bungalow and its contents, it was contended with force, and Brett and Ryves, JJ., held that in respect of them, orders ought to have been passed under secs. 522

(1) I. L. R. 23 Cal. 372 (1895).
(2) I. L. R. 36 Cal. 44 (1908).

BISESUR SING v. KING-EMPEROR.

and 517, Cr. P. C. Although the point was not discussed, we clearly see that the learned Judges in that case did not think that an order under sec. 517 could have been made in respect of the bungalow.

Following, therefore, the decision above referred to, we make this Rule absolute and set aside the order under sec. 517 passed in respect of the garden.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 1721 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
21, November.

SHEONANDAN SINGH and another, Petitioners, v. BHOLANATH PATTAK, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 517—Setting aside of order by High Court—Re-delivery of possession.

The Petitioners were convicted under sec. 426, I. P. C. The Magistrate directed the Police under sec. 517 to deliver possession of a garden over which the Petitioners were alleged to have obtained possession by means of trespass. The order under sec. 517 was set aside by the High Court in revision on the application of the Petitioners, but the Magistrate refused to re-deliver possession of the garden to them.

Held—The order of the High Court setting aside the order under sec. 517, Cr. P. C., carried with it the incident of restoration of the garden in question to the Petitioners.

The High Court directed the Magistrate to restore possession of the garden in question to the Petitioners through the Police.

This was a Rule granted on the 3rd November 1913 against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad, dated the 1st day of August 1913, refusing to direct the Police to re-deliver possession of the garden in dispute to the Petitioners.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Debendranarain Bhattacharjee for the Petitioners.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule arose out of a case in which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad convicted the Petitioners under sec. 426, I. P. C., and directed the Police under sec. 517, Cr. P. C, to deliver possession of a garden over which the Petitioners were alleged to have obtained possession by means of trespass. Against this order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate the Petitioners moved this Court and obtained a Rule which was made absolute.* On the Petitioners' applying to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for re-delivery of the possession of the garden to them, the Magistrate passed the following order—"My order re delivery of possession has been set aside by the High Court and there the matter ends. I am not aware of any law authorising me to direct the Police to restore the garden to Petitioners' possession. File." Against that order of the Magistrate the Petitioners obtained this Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Gya to show cause why the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad should not be directed to order the Police to deliver possession of the garden in question to the Petitioners.

No cause is shown against this Rule, and we are of opinion that it must be made absolute. The first Rule that we made absolute on the 30th May last set aside the order under sec. 517. Clearly our order of the 30th May last carried with it the incident of restoration of the garden in question to the Petitioners.

---

* Bisesur Sing v. King-Emperor, p. 1146 ante.

SHEONANDAN SINGH v. BHOLANATH PATTAK.

We now direct that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aurangabad through the Police do restore possession of the garden in question to the Petitioners.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 471 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1914,
23, April.

MAHOMED ASHRAFUDDIN and ors., 1st Party, Petitioners,
v.
SHEIKH KARIM BUKSH and ors., 2nd Party, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 133, scope of—Claim of right, Magistrate bound to determine bonâ fides of, before appointing jury—Case in which bonâ fide claim of right raised as also appointment of jury asked for—Duty of jury to hear parties and evidence.

Sec. 133, Cr. P. C., contemplates only an enquiry as to the existence or non-existence of the obstruction complained of and not an enquiry into a disputed question of title, and where a bonâ fide claim of private right is raised, the Magistrate cannot make an order under the section, but should leave the determination of the question to the Civil Court.

When once a party who raised a private right has asked for a jury and has had the case referred to the jury, the jury are bound to hear the parties and such witnesses as they may desire to be heard.

When a second party to a proceeding under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., raises a question of private right and insists on having it decided, the Magistrate should look into the bonâ fides of that claim before submitting the case to a jury.

Where however the second party raised the question of private right and also stated that if it was thought proper a jury might be appointed and a jury was appointed who on evidence held that inasmuch as a question of title was involved, the proceeding could not be proceeded with and the Magistrate on perusing the materials placed before the jury decided that the matter was one for the Civil Court and dropped the proceedings:

Held—That the Magistrate was justified in making the order passed by him.

This was a Rule granted on the 23rd of March 1914, against an order of Babu S. C. Ghosh, Deputy Magistrate of Bhagalpur, dated the 26th of February 1914, dropping the proceedings under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., and referring the parties to go to the Civil Court.

The facts briefly stated are these:

The Petitioners on 26th December 1913 applied to the Deputy Magistrate of Bhagalpur for proceeding under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., against the Opposite Party second party, for the removal of a big block of wood that was placed by him on a passage called Mirdana Lane which was the only carriage way leading to the house of the Petitioners and the Opposite Party.

Notice to remove the nuisance was served on the Opposite Party who asserted that the alleged passage was the courtyard of their house and that neither the public nor the Petitioners had any right of way therein. The Opposite Party also stated that if it be thought proper, a jury might be appointed.

Five persons were appointed to act as jurors under sec. 133, Cr. P. C.

Several witnesses were examined on behalf of the Petitioners, but none on behalf of the Opposite Party.

Four jurors reported that they had no jurisdiction to decide whether the way was a public one or not, and that because a question of title was involved, the first party alleging that the way is public and the second party asserting that it was a portion of his courtyard, the proceeding under sec. 133, Cr. P. C., ought not to be followed.

MAHOMED ASHRAFUDDIN v. SHEIKH KARIM BUKSH.

The Deputy Magistrate accepted the verdict of the majority of the jurors and dropped the proceedings.

Mr. Akbari and Babu Ray Guru Sharan Proshad for the Petitioners.

Maulvi Mahomed Ishfaq and Maulvi Sayed Mahomed Taher for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We do not think that this is a case which calls for our interference. If there has been any technical irregularity, which we do not say there has been, it is clear from the findings on the evidence recorded before the jury that there was a bonâ fide claim of private right raised by the second party, and where that is the case, the Magistrate cannot make an order under sec. 133, but should leave the determination of the question to the Civil Court. See Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu (1). This is a case where the second party who raised the question of private right is supporting the order of the lower Court, and the person who originally asked for the obstruction to be removed as detrimental to the public interests is now strenuously arguing before us that we ought to allow the Magistrate to enter into a second enquiry to establish what really amounts to his private right to take carts along the alleged road. It is not as if there was no evidence on the record.

(1) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 562 (1890).

The effect of the jury's enquiry was to give the Magistrate sufficient material to enable him to judge for himself that this was a case of civil dispute, and the jury made their procedure perfectly correct by declining to decide the question themselves, as it involved the question of private or public right. They cited several authorities of this Court, and there seems to be nothing in those authorities which would militate against the course which has been followed in this case. When once a party who raised a private right has asked for a jury and has had the case referred to the jury, the jury are bound to hear the parties and such witnesses as they may desire to be heard. Then again the jury have held on the authority of the same case [Queen-Empress v. Bissessur Sahu (1)], that it is beyond their scope to decide whether the way obstructed is or is not a public way; and there are still stronger authorities in two cases, in Askar Mea v. Sardar Mea (2), Lal Meah v. Nazir Khalashi (3), that when the second party raises a question of title, the case then becomes one for the Civil Court. The section contemplates only an enquiry as to the existence or non-existence of the obstruction complained of and not an enquiry into a disputed question of title. Against this we have cited before us the case of Dularam Deb v. Baisnab Charan Deb (4). There is no authorised report of the facts of this case, but from the judgment, a copy of which appears at p. 846 of the report, it would seem that the question there was one where the jury had been directed by the Magistrate to decide the question of public or private right in

(1) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 562 (1890).
(2) I. L. R. 12 Cal. 187 (1885).
(3) I. L. R. 12 Cal. 696 (1886).
(4) 10 C. W. N. 845 (1906).

MAHOMED ASHRAFUDDIN v. SHEIKH KARIM BUKSH.

opposition to the objections of the second party who objected that he had a private right, and it has always been held in this Court that where the second party raises such a question and insists on having it decided, the Magistrate should look into the bonâ fides of that claim before submitting the case to a jury, and that is where the irregularity if any has occurred in this case. The Magistrate submitted the case to the jury upon the application of the second party who had the power to object to his doing so, but did not object; and had the jury come to a decision upon the point and the Magistrate had come to no decision, it might have been necessary in the interests of justice to send the matter back. But it is clear in this case that the jury collected the evidence and then very properly found that they had no jurisdiction to decide the civil question. The matter was referred to the Magistrate who, we presume, perused what was before the jury and the maps which also go to show that there were other ways to approach the complainant's house, and he decided that this was a matter for the Civil Courts. We think that he is quite justified in doing so and we decline to interfere.

The Rule is discharged.

Rule discharged.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 1723 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
5, December.

SADASIB MANDAL, Accused, Petitioner,
v.
EMPEROR on the Complaint of Purna Chandra Nag, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 522—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 147, 349—Restoration of possession of immoveable property—Criminal force, meaning of—Rioting with the common object of causing violence to inanimate object—Applicability of sec. 522.

Where the accused was convicted of rioting for causing violence in the prosecution of a common object, viz, by destroying the Complainant's fencing and raising a new fencing on the Complainant's land:

Held—That violence having been caused in this case to the fencing only and not to any person, there was no criminal "force" as defined in sec. 349, I. P. C., and no order directing delivery of possession could be made under sec. 522, Cr. P. C.

This was a Rule against an order of H. R. Wilkinson, Esq., Assistant Magistrate of Dacca, dated the 18th day of September 1913, convicting the Petitioner under secs. 147 and 379/114, Cr. P. C., and sentencing him to 3 months' rigorous imprisonment under each section for concurrent terms and directing restoration of the disputed land under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., which order was, on appeal, modified by W. A. Seaton, Esq., Additional District Magistrate of Dacca, dated the 29th September 1913.

The facts will appear from the judgment of the Assistant Magistrate, the material portion of which is as follows:—

"The Complainant says that between 1 and 3 A.M. on 11th Posh (December 27th) he was awakened by cries to discover 60 or 70 men, including Sadashib Mandal and seven others whom he recognised, breaking down his iron fencing and pelting his house with brick-bats. On his protest they threw the brick-bats at him and his relations and eventually went off with the materials of the fencing and set up a new fencing of their own, in a different place, of bamboo.

"The reason given is a dispute over a strip of land with Srish Babu, landlord of Sadashib (see the map—Ex. 5). Sadashib's house is in the east of the Nags', and in the Nags' place there is a tank ; the Nags say that their fencing was some 8 cubits east of the tank, and that Sadashib and other tenants of Srish had demolished this fencing and a piece at the north-east corner, and had set up a bamboo and Mandar fencing along the bank of the tank, so that it should appear as if the contested strip belonged to Sadashib.

SADASIB MANDAL v. EMPEROR.

* * * *

"I . . . find the case proved against Sadashib Mandal ; and as the number of men engaged was more than five and as they used violence in prosecution of a common object, viz, the demolition of the Nags' fence, he is guilty of rioting under sec. 147. As they removed the fencing, he is also guilty of theft under sec. 379 in connection with sec. 114, I. P. C. ; for though it cannot be proved that he actually with his own hands moved the fencing, yet he was present with the others and joined in the conspiracy for removing the fence, which was removed in furtherance of that conspiracy.

"I therefore find him guilty under sec. 147 and sentence him to three months' rigorous imprisonment, and guilty under secs. 379/114 and sentence him to three months' rigorous imprisonment, the sentences to run concurrently.

"Under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., I order complainant to be restored to the possession of the disputed land by the removal of the bamboo fencing."

Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Petitioner.

Babu Heramba Chandra Guha for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioner was convicted of the offence of rioting under sec. 147, I. P. C., and of abetment of theft under sec. 379, read with sec. 114, I. P. C, and sentenced on each count to three months' rigorous imprisonment. The charge under sec. 147, I. P. C., set out the common object of the rioters to be destruction of the Complainant's fencing and raising of a new fencing on the Complainant's land. The conviction under sec. 379, read with sec. 114, was set aside on appeal. There was further an order passed under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., directing delivery to the Complainant of the piece of land that had been taken possession of by the Petitioner unlawfully.

The findings of the lower Courts clearly show that though there was the conviction under sec. 147, I. P. C., it was not for the use of criminal force but for causing violence in prosecution of the common object. In sec. 349, I P. C., the term "force" is defined as being applicable to force when used in connection with human body ; and under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., delivery of immoveable property may be made to the person who had been dispossessed of it when the accused is convicted of an offence attended by criminal force. In the present instance violence was caused to the fencing and not to any person. Under the circumstances the order under sec. 522, Cr. P. C., should not have been passed inasmuch as there was no use of criminal force to any individual. This Rule therefore must be made absolute and the order directing delivery of possession of the land in question to the Opposite Party is set aside.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL NO. 783 OF 1913.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1913,
17, December.

RAMAN BEHARY DAS, Appellant,
v.
THE KING EMPEROR, Respondent.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 222, 233—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 409, 477A—Misjoinder of charges—Falsification of accounts and criminal breach of trust.

Where the accused was charged with three offences under sec. 477A and three offences under sec. 409, I. P. C., and tried and convicted :

Held—That the trial was void by reason of misjoinder of charges.

That sec. 222 does not cover two sets of offences any number of which may be tried together. Sub sec. (2) of sec. 222, Cr. P. C, cannot be applied to sec. 477A, I. P. C.

That sec. 233, Cr. P. C., must be strictly followed save and except where the law itself provides an exception and the joinder of three charges under sec. 409 and three charges under sec. 477A is not covered by any of the exceptions provided in the subsequent sections of the Code.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 12th September 1913, against an order of S. E. Stinton, Esq , Sessions Judge of Sylhet, dated the 28th of July 1913, convicting the accused under secs. 477A and 509, I. P. C, and sentencing him to undergo two years' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused who was a cashier in charge of the cash book in the Executive Engineer's Office, Sylhet, was charged under sec. 477A, I. P. C., with falsifying 3 items on the debit side purporting to show payment of certain sums into the treasury. In the Sessions Court a charge of misappropriation under sec. 409 in respect of these three items was added. The Sessions Judge convicted the accused of those charges and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment under each section, the sentences running concurrently.

Mr. Gregory and Babu Ambika Charan Das for the Appellant.

Mr. Bagram and Babu Manindra Nath Banerjee for the Crown

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal from the judgment and sentence of the learned Sessions Judge of Sylhet who in partial agreement with both the assessors convicted the Appellant Raman Behary Das of three offences under sec. 477A and three offences under sec. 409, I. P. C, and sentenced him to two years' rigorous imprisonment under each section, the sentences to run concurrently.

We are met at the outset by the objection that this trial is wholly void by reason of misjoinder of charges and that this is so is perfectly clear from the authority of Kasi Viswanathan v. The Emperor (1) The same principle has been affirmed in more than one case recently decided by the Criminal Bench of this Court, and there cannot be the slightest doubt that sec. 222 does not cover two sets of offences any number of which may be tried together. The second clause of the section refers to cases of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, and it is held that it is not necessary to specify the separate sums which have been embezzled, provided that the time included between the first and the last date on which the sums were misappropriated shall not exceed one year. This sub-section cannot be applied to sec.

(1) I. L. R. 30 Mad. 328 (1907).

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, AUGUST 10, 1914. [No. 39.

Contents

NOTES.

Criminal Sessions.

The fourth Criminal Sessions commences its sittings from date, Mr. Justice Stephen presiding.

Personal and property rights of an alien enemy.

The declaration of war by Great Britain against Germany has had the immediate effect of affecting the legal status of all resident Germans in this country as also the relative rights and obligations between them and British subjects. Every German subject or person of German nationality or domicile (in its limited international sense) would be regarded as an alien enemy. The Government may expel them from the country if they like. During the South African war the British subjects were so expelled from the Transvaal. But the usual practice is to allow the enemy subjects a reasonable time to withdraw from the belligerent country unmolested. In the Continental countries they ordinarily so depart, but if some choose to reside, they are not now made prisoners, as used to be done in earlier times, but are allowed to reside with the necessary safeguards. In the Turko-Italian war and in the Russo-Japanese war this practice was followed. They are registered and are put under surveillance; arms and even valuables are taken away from them This is done to keep them out of harm's way. If they conduct themselves as peaceful citizens, they are allowed to trade but not with the enemy country. The proceeds by way of rent or otherwise in landed property or from mines or funds payable to enemy subjects may be taken charge of by Government and refunded to them or compensation made after the conclusion of peace. If after the specified time allowed them to withdraw, they are found to leave for joining their country's force they may be arrested and made prisoners. Those who are allowed to reside may not join any invading force under pain of death. If they do or attempt to do this they will not be entitled to the privileges of prisoners of war.

Commercial intercourse with alien enemy.

All commercial intercourse with alien enemy is prohibited. A British subject or even a resident neutral who has trade or commercial connections in Germany will since the outbreak of war also acquire an enemy character unless he severs forthwith such connections. No British subject may trade or enter into any transaction with an enemy subjec which might result in a remittance or transmission of money to the enemy country. All enemy Banks have therefore to suspend their business and any money or funds that may be found in their custody may be taken charge of or sequestrated by Government. But such monies and funds are not confiscated but refunded on the conclusion of peace. Interests on foreign bonds are on this principle also suspended. So are all insurance premiums, interests, etc., payable to the enemy country. All interests payable on mortgages or debts to an alien enemy are likewise suspended. Foreign cargoes already paid for may be cleared but not any in respect of which payment has got to be made to an enemy subject or enemy country. Any attempt to carry on trade with the enemy country by a subject will make his goods and vessels liable to confiscation by Government. All contractual obligations between a British subject and an enemy subject are suspended. All executory contracts entered into before the outbreak of war are avoided. All partnerships with them are dissolved.

Right of suit between subjects and alien enemies.

The general principle accepted by English and American Courts is that war in itself involves a general prohibition of intercourse between persons residing in the territories of the respective belligerents. This is a rule not merely of international law but of municipal law as well. This rule is based on the political ground that stoppage of commercial intercourse brings pressure on the enemies while its continuance would operate to strengthen their hand. From a legal point of view this rule is supported on the ground that an alien enemy has no persona standi in judicio and this fact alone excludes the possibility of any legal commerce being carried on between an alien enemy and a subject. Since an enemy person has no judicial status it must necessarily follow that he is not entitled to sue nor be sued in a country which is at war with his. But this rule is subject to relaxation by the Sovereign authority. If he concedes right of intercourse, right of suit would necessarily follow. (See The Hoop case.) With reference to alien subjects resident in the country, the same general principle would obviously apply to them as well, but it is usual for the Government of the country tacitly or expressly to grant the resident alien subjects license to trade, provided they behave as peaceful citizens. But in the course of trading intercourse between alien enemies and subjects or resident neutrals, a great deal of legal complication may, all the same, arise.

Let us take the simplest case of contractual obligations between an alien enemy and a subject or resident neutral. The ordinary incidents of war are that all contractual relationships between them are suspended, executory contracts avoided, and partnerships dissolved. It would therefore naturally follow that right of suit is also suspended. Since Wells' case (1 Ld. Raym. 282) it may be taken as a general principle of the English law that "debts already subsisting between individuals divided by the line of war are suspended during the war, both as regards the right of action of the creditor and the duty of payment on the part of the debtor." But the Sovereign, as we have already said, may give permisson to an alien enemy to sue in His Majesty's Courts. With this view sec. 83 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been enacted. During the war, alien enemies carrying on internal trade with subjects usually carry on cash transactions, unless they are given liberty or license to sue.

In respect of past transactions or debts, whether an alien enemy may be sued at the time of war is also a difficult question. The Sovereign has every right to arrest or detain him in his territory and take possession of his property without any process of law. A creditor cannot expect a more effective mode of preventing him from escaping from his obligations. But if he is sued during the pendency of the war he may surely object to being sued because as the country's laws do not recognise any judicial status in him he may be hampered in making his defence. Every suit means reciprocity of remedies. Thus an alien enemy sued may claim a set off or put forward counter claims and if he is allowed to advance such pleas, it amounts to conferring on him the right of suit. It may also necessitate communication with the enemy country which is also prohibited. Then in the result of the suit a decree may have to be passed in an alien enemy's favour, costs allowed, execution issued, sales of property effected at his instance and the proceeds paid to him by Court. We doubt if any Court in British India would be prepared to take the responsibility upon themselves of bringing about these consequences by allowing any suits to be instituted against an enemy subject without authority of the Executive Government. The Sovereign authority in the land is more competent to judge of the character and conduct of the alien enemy than a Court of law and therefore it is desirable that sanction to sue or be sued in respect of an alien enemy should always be taken from the head of the Executive Government. The Code of Civil Procedure makes no provision as to whether an alien enemy may be sued in the British Courts. But we have said before that if the Executive Government have given an alien enemy a tacit or express license to reside he may be sued. Alien enemies are however entitled to the protection of criminal law, and necessarily they are amenable to criminal law, and may also be held civilly liable for torts. When alien enemies are expressly or impliedly authorised to reside, the consequences of licensed residence will attach to them.

Law of limitation if suspended in respect of alien enemies during war and need for legislation.

Although right of suit may be suspended against alien enemies during the pendency of war, the right would revive on the conclusion of peace and in the meantime the operation of the law of limitation would be suspended. According to American and English jurists, limitation cannot be pleaded by persons who may not sue or be sued owing to the suspension of their rights during the pendency of war. This seems to be quite the reasonable view. The suspension of right of suit means not only the suspension of substantive rights but also the law of procedure. This suspension arises out of the Order of King in Council declaring war on a foreign Sovereign. Such Order of King in Council is binding on Prize Cou ts. The Indian Courts are bound to take judicial notice of Ord rs of King in Council published in the Official Gazette. It is curious that the Indian Limitation Act amongst the disabilities embodied in secs. 6, 7, 8 and 9 makes no mention of any disabili ies arising out of a state of war. On the contrary, sec. 9 being strictly construed would imply that time will not cease to run during the time of war. But we are sure that when right of suit becomes suspended in consequence of declaration of war by Sovereign, His Majesty's Courts in India would surely take the equitable view that in such cases, as the right of suit became suspended by act of the Sovereign, the law of limitation also became suspended along wi h it. In any event this is a question that should receive the immedia e attention of the Government of India and of the Indian Legislature. Pending legislation the Governor-General in Council may issue an Ordinance in this behalf. The urgency of the matter will be appreciated from the fact that German Banks and Trading Corporations which have suspended payments or may yet suspend payments cannot very well be sued till the conclusion of peace. If in the meantime limitation would begin to run against Indian and British depositors, and they might be punished more by this aggressive war than the alien enemy.

CASUS BELLI OF THE PRESENT WAR.

Every war has some sort of justification. But the present war of Germany against France and England hardly admits of any moral justification. It is purely a series of acts of aggression on the part of Germany that has forced France and G eat Britain to go to war wi h her. France and Great Britain have practically exhausted all possible means which are consistent with their self-respect for the preservation of European peace before taking up arms in defence of their hearth and home and their respective prestige and interests both at home and abroad. Austria may or may not have a just grievance against Servians in connection with the assasination of her heir-apparent. But even the suspec ed complicity of some Servian officials with the abominable crime of an anarchist band would hardly justify her violation of the sovereignty of Servia and going to war with her. Austro-Hungary is, however, under the rule of a more or less arbitrary Monarch and the Teutonic race to which he belongs. The inhabitants of Servia, the Balkan States and also a substantial section of Austro-Hungary largely belong to the Slav race. The Russians are their kith-and-kin. Besides Russia's treaty obligations with the Balkan States, politically these States form a buffer between Russia and Austria. So on the declaration of war by Austro-Hungary against Servia, Russia could claim political justification by her treaty obligations and even moral justification by reasons of affinity of race and blood for coming to the rescue of the Servians. Germany, however, by reason of her treaty obligations to Austro-Hungary would have been jus ified in joining her ally, on Russia participating in the war between Austria and Servia, assuming that the declaration of war by Austria against Servia was in any view justifiable. But even before Russia committed any act of war against Austria, the German Emperor peremptorily called upon the Tsar forthwith to offer to him an explanation as to the reason for the mobilisation of Russian troops. England offered to mediate, with the co-operation of the European powers, between Austria and Servia. France readily agreed to the proposal and even the Tsar was anxious to meet the Kaiser evidently with a genuine desire for the preservation of European peace. Whatever opinion we may have of the Tsar's Government, it would be universally admitted that as a Monarch or at any rate as an individual he has always had a genuine longing for peace. But in singular contrast to him stands out in bold relief the personality of his neighbour the Kaiser whose watchward in life has ever been "War." He has not only been the spoilt child of his own nation but also of the whole of the Teutonic race.

With the progress of culture and industry in the Nineteenth Century and after, even the nation who under the leadership of Napolean only a century ago fought and overran the whole of Europe singlehanded has become one of the most industrious, frugal and sensible nations in the World. The French like the English Government cannot go to war against the wishes of the people. In 1870 the war was forced upon the French people in the interests of an effete and imbecile monarchy. The French people at heart were averse to it even in 1870 and they are still more so to day. They still maintain a powerful army and navy not for aggression but for self-preservation. With singular patience the English and Franch Ministers implored the War-god of Europe not to break the peace of nations and set back the world, but he was obdurate. France in self-defence had to mobilize her army. The Kaiser regarding himself as the Master of Europe asked her equally peremptorily to explain why she was mobilising her army. The forbearance of these friendly nations and of Great Britain was taxed to the breaking point, yet they continued to negotiate for peace. It is after Austria had marched her army into the Balkans, that Russia in sheer self-defence blew up a bridge and even after declaration of war between Russia and Germany in consequence, France and Great Britain continued to carry on diplomatic pour parlor for the preservation of peace. Great Britain in no way sympathised with Russia in her participation in war and put on the latter an amount of diplomatic pressure which well nigh threatened to break down the friendly understanding that has existed between these countries since some years past But the masterful monarch was determined to drag France and England into war along with Russia and his next move was to violate the neutrality of Luxemburg and Belgium which had been guaranteed by Germany, England and France. The offer of neutrality to England in respect of the west coast of Belgium and France, after the violation of her treaty obligations to England and giving her casus belli was a height of hypocrisy almost unsurpassed in the history of the world. If England had accepted the offer, her international position would have been at once reduced to that of Belgium or Holland and she would have from that day been regarded by Europe as a neutral power, not in her own sovereign right as a first class power, but as one whose neutrality had been preserved by the sufferance of Germany. Germany would then have been at liberty to attack the French Fleet in the Mediterranean with her partners in the Triple Alliance and the latter would have been practically the mistress of the Mediterranean which would have involved not merely the loss of her trade route but also of her high-way to the East. What would then have been the position of Egypt, India and Australia, one may falter even to speculate. The present war is being described as an European war, but the fate of the East is as intimately connected with it as that of any country or nation in Europe. We wish our people to realise that the interests of India are as intimately involved in the issues of this war as that of Great Britain and perhaps much more than that of any colony or protectorate in the British Empire.

From our review of recent events it is evident that the present war is a purely aggressive war on the part of Germany. Let us enquire next what may be the real reason and object of the imperious Kaiser to provoke war with France and Great Britain in this manner. Sir Edward Grey in his lucid speech of last Monday has taken us back to the Algeciras Conference and the Agadir incident in 1906, when Germany was bent upon forcing war on France over the Morocco question and it was the diplomatic support of Great Britain that saved the situation. But this intervention of Great Britain at the critical moment when Germany wanted to secure a footing in the South Coast of the Mediterranean must have been rankling in the Kaiser's heart ever since. Germany has been for the last twenty years carrying on practically a war in armaments and naval programme against any possible combination of France and England. Her jealousy of British trade and position in the East and Britain's naval supremacy over the seas is too well-known to require any repetition. This long-standing tension between these rival powers no doubt became more acute since the Morocco incident. But Sir Edward Grey has preserved a discreet silence over more recent events in the East which have to a great extent served to precipitate the present crisis.

The Turko-Bulgarian War would have surely involved Europe in a general war, if Turkey had only been a Christian power. It is an open secret that while Germany helped Turkey with money and supply of arms, France did the same to Bulgaria, and England not only lent her diplomatic support to Greece by reason of the relationship between the Royal houses of Greece and Great Britain, but also acted as a peace-maker between Turkey and the Balkan States. Austria who had previously annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina, at the time of this Eastern war, made no secret of her intention to annex Montenegro and to acquire an outlet in the Mediterranean by wresting the ports of Antivari and Salonica which would then be converted into naval bases and placed in direct communication with the land forces by means of railways. She had surely the warmest support of Germany in her intentions which would have placed these allies in a position to keep their war-vessels out in the Mediterranean. But this nice little plan was frustrated by the diplomatic support of the Triple entente to the Balkan States and Greece. At the conclusion of peace, Great Britain managed to get the upper hand in Cyprus and also acquired a substantial interest in the Bagdad Railway. So not only was the diplomacy of the Triple Alliance completely baffled, but Germany's long contemplated scheme of having a line of railway under her exclusive and independent control giving her an outlet into the Persian Gulf was also at the same time shattered. As we have already said, if Turkey had been a Christian power, Germany and Austria would have taken up arms on her side openly, not for any love of Turkey, but in their own interests and for their own aggrandizement. It is out of deference to the opinion of the Christian world that they refrained from joining a non-Christian Power in a war against the Christian States. Since then Austria with the support of the Triple Alliance has been seeking to annex and partition Albania, which would also mean the fall of Servia and Montenegro into her clutches. Russia with her treaty obligations could not be an idle spectator of the scheme. While this plan was being matured, the assasination of the Austrian Crown Prince and the supposed complicity of some Servian officials furnished the excuse not merely to Austria but also to Germany to throw its gauntlet to the Triple entente. The Kaiser himself is not only his own Foreign Minister, but is also the Commander-in-Chief of the German army and navy. He has been advancing in years and feels that the time for stamping his name on the pages of history is fast slipping by. He entertains a very high opinion of himself and feels that his legitimate position as the premier Monarch of Europe and necessarily of the World is not being sufficiently recognised. Then again every stroke of his policy that has met with rebuff from the more sober-headed statesmen of Europe has raised his ire against France, and England in particular. The objective of the Kaiser is not merely to cripple the British trade, and deprive her of the supremacy over the seas, but as we have already explained, to deal a serious blow to her supremacy in the East. Thus while the aggression of Germany is wholly unjustifiable from the point of view of international morality, the declaration of war by England and France against Germany being in self-defence is both just and proper from whatever point of view we may choose to regard it.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Hindu Law.

JANKIBAI v. SHRINIVAS, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 120.

Members of a joint and undivided Hindu family hold family estate jointly and are seized of it "per my et per tout." The joint tenants have each of them the entire possession as well of every parcel as of the whole. On the death of a co-parcener of a joint Hindu family his share and interest in the family property is automatically absorbed and the surviving co-parceners become the full owners of the whole estate. Such co-parceners are not the heirs of the deceased. They inherit by survivorship.

Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869)—Marriage between a Christian woman and a Parsi.

NUSSERWANJEE v. ELEONORA, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 125.

The Petitioner, an English woman professing the Christian religion, was married in London to a Parsi whose parents resided in Bombay. After marriage the couple came to Bombay where they resided for some time and again left for London when the Respondent left the Petitioner who came back to Bombay and filed her petition for restitution in the Bombay High Court.

Held—That the Court had no jurisdiction to grant a decree for restitution either against a Parsi Respondent or a Respondent not within the Presidency.

That the Petitioner was not residing in India at the time of the petition. In order to give the Court jurisdiction the residence of the Petitioner must be bonâ fide and not casual or as a traveller.

Execution of decree—Limitation.

BAI UJAIN v. BAI RUXMUNI, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 153.

An application for execution of a decree was made on the 8th August 1908, whereupon order was made for execution as to part of the decree. This order was appealed against and was stayed from 9th January to 16th February 1909. On 12th August 1911, a fresh application for execution was made.

Held—That for purposes of limitation the period during which the stay order was in force was to be excluded.

Mortgage bond—Limitation.

DINKAR v. CHAGANLAL, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 177.

A mortgage bond attested by one witness is inoperative.

A suit though in form a suit for money due on a bond may be in substance a suit for compensation for breach of a contract within the meaning of Art. 116 of the Limitation Act and the period of six years provided in that article would apply if the bond is registered.

Review.

THE ANNUAL DIGEST OF INDIAN CASE LAW, 1913. By M. B. Dorai Swamiengar, B. A., B. L. Published by M. B. Doraiswamiengar, B.A, B.L, at "Rama Vilas," Mylapore. 1914.

We have great pleasure in extending our customary welcome to this annual digest originally started by the late lamented Mr. Srinivasa Aiyar and since his death taken up and ably continued by the present compiler. The notes of cases are as usual concise and well arranged and cross-references plentiful.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

PRIVY COUNCIL.*

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.	BHOWANIDAS VERAMAL
LORD MOULTON.	& Co., Appellants,
LORD PARKER.	v.
1914,	RABIABAI and others,
	RESPONDENTS.

Special leave, application for—Inference from facts proved—Question of law.

This was an application for special leave to appeal from a judgment of the Bombay High Court, dated the 11th November 1913.

One Abdool Latiff purchased the property in dispute in the name of Haji Ahmed, and the Petitioners claimed title from the said benamidar.

The issue between the parties was as to who was the owner of the property. The trial Judge held that the property belonged to the estate of the said Abdool Latiff. He held that the recitals in the conveyance were quite sufficient to show that Abdool Latiff was the owner, and that the Petitioners were thereby put upon enquiry, but they did not take reasonable care to ascertain that the said Haji Ahmed had power to make the transfer to the Petitioners.

On appeal the Bombay High Court affirmed the judgment and decree of the trial Judge. The High Court refused leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, holding that no question of law was involved therein. Hence this petition.

Sir Robert Finaly, K. C. (with him Mr. G. R. Lowndes), for the Petitioners, submitted that the finding of the Courts below was not based on the recorded evidence. It was not denied that Haji Ahmed was a benamidar, nor was the good faith of the Petitioners challenged. The Petitioners' case satisfied the requirements of sec. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882. There was nothing in the recitals in the conveyance which put the Petitioners on enquiry. The appeal involved a question of law, namely, whether the inferences were properly drawn from facts proved. Reference was made to Ramgopal v. Shamskhaton, L. R. 19 I. A. pp. 228, 232.

Their Lordships rejected the petition.

Solicitors: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co., for the Petitioners.

B. D.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before SHARFUDDIN and TEUNON, JJ. CRIM. REV. NO. 807 OF 1914. SADANANDA MANDAL, 1st Party, Petitioner v. KRISHNA MANDAL, 2nd Party, Opposite Party. 24th June 1914.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 145, 356 (3)—Memorandum of evidence in proceeding under sec. 145, if legal.

The Rule was issued upon the District Magistrate of Jessore and the Opposite Party to show cause why the order of the trying Magistrate adjudging possession to be with the 2nd Party should not be set aside on the ground that the depositions of witnesses were not recorded by him in the manner prescribed by sec. 356, Cr. P. C. The Magistrate in his explanation said that a memorandum of the substance of the depositions was taken in accordance with the provisions of cl. 3 of sec. 356, Cr. P. C, and that that was sufficient compliance with the law;

Held, that cl. 3 of sec. 356 did not apply to this case and the memorandum was insufficient. The Rule was therefore made absolute and the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate set aside.

Babus Hari Bhusan Mookerjee and Satish Chandar Ghatak for the Petitioner.

Babu Narendra Kumar Bose showed cause.

Rule made absolute.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before JENKINS, C. J., AND N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE NO. 493 OF 1913. SATISH CHANDRA GHOSH, Defendant, Appellant v. JAGANNATH PROSAD LAL AND ANOTHER, Plaintiffs, Respondents. Heard, 25th and 26th June 1914 and 2nd July 1914 Judgment, 7th July 1914.

Ex parte decree, sale in execution thereof—Purchase by decree-holder—Ex parte decree set aside as fraudulent—Sale set aside whether affects bonâ fide purchasers for value from decree holder.

This appeal arose out of a suit for partition instituted by Srimati Rameswari Dassi against the Defendant-Appellant. The Plaintiff claimed two-thirds share in Schedule 'Ka' lands of the plaint and one-third share in the two plots in Schedule "kha" of the plaint lands. The Plaintiff's husband Jadunandan had two other brothers, Shibnandan and Ramnandan. The properties were all ancestral properties. Shibnandan died first in 1900 leaving a widow named Jasoda Dassi and a predeceased son's widow named Bhagwani Dassi as his heirs. By a will executed before his death he made his brother Ramnandan an executor and Ramnandan took out probate and administered the estate for some time and then died in 1905 childless, leaving his elder brother Jadunandan as his heir. Then Jadunandan died early in 1906. In 1906 Jasoda and Bhagwani brought a suit for accounts against Rameswari as heir of Ramnandan on the ground that Ramnandan was liable for accounts to them as executor to Shibnandan's estate. They got an ex parte decree and in execution of that ex parte decree they purchased the one-third share of the ejmali properties belonging to Ramnandan which Rameswari got by inheritance on 17th January 1908 at Rs. 1,500 only. They sold their rights and interests in the two-thirds share of the ejmali by a registered kobala to Satish Chandra Ghosh on 14th October 1909. In 1910 Rameswari came to know of the ex parte decree and she then applied to set aside the ex parte decree. The ex parte decree was set aside as a fraudulent one on 24th April 1911, and the auction sale was also set aside on 29th July 1911. The present suit for partition was then instituted on 11th September 1911 against Satish Chandra Ghosh, the purchaser. The defence inter alia was that so far as the one-third share of Ramnandan was concerned, the Plaintiff could not get back the properties from the Defendant, as he was a bonâ fide purchaser for value from the decree-holder auction-purchaser and as he was not a party to the proceeding for setting aside the decree and sale, he was not bound by them. The Subordinate Judge held that he was bound and gave the Plaintiff's heirs a decree, as the Plaintiff died pending suit."

On behalf of the Appellant it was contended that the Defendant being a bonâ fide purchaser for value, his rights by purchase remained unaffected, although the decree and sale were set aside. Reference was made to Shaik Ismail Rowther v. Rajab Rowther, I. L. R. 30 Mad. 295; Marimuthu v. Subbaraya, 13 M. L. J. 231 and Pratinga Koer v. Madhavanand Ram, 14 C. L. J. 476, and Leake on Contracts, 6th Ed. 262.

On behalf of the Respondents it was contended that the ex parte decree having been set aside as fraudulent and the sale having been also set aside, the Appellant who is a private purchaser from the decree-holder auction-purchaser has no longer any right to the lands sold at the auction sale. He stands in the shoes of his vendor and his title depends upon the title of his vendor, the decree holder auction-purchaser. The case of Zainalab din Khan v. Mahomed Ashgar Ali, reported in I. L. R. 10 All. 166 (P. C.), was a complete answer to the Appellants. In that case the term decree-holder in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council includes persons claiming under the decree-holder and private purchasers from the decree-holder purchaser were included in the term "decree-holder." Reference was also made to Syed Nathadu Sahib v. Nallu Mudaly, I. L. R. 27 Mad. 98, 101, where private assignees from decree-holders were placed in the same position as decree-holders themselves. References were also made to Leake on Contracts, 6th Edn., pp. 263 264 and Addison on Contracts, p. 593, 10th Edn The case reported in Pratinga Koer v. Madhavanand Ram, 14 C. L J. 476, was clearly distinguishable and I. L. R. 30 Madras case was not an authority in the face of the Privy Council case of Zainalabdin Khan v. Mahomed Ashgar Ali, I. L. R. 10 All. 162.

Held—Following the Privy Council case of Zainalabdin Khan v. Mahomed Ashgar Ali, I. L. R. 10 All. 162, that the Appellant stood in the shoes of their vendor and the decree having been set aside, the sale also failed.

Babus Sarat Chandra Ray Chaudhuri, Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Bhudeb Chandra Ray, for the Appellants.

Babu Atul Krishna Ray, for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—Before D. CHATTERJEE AND WALMSLEY, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER NO 443 OF 1913 WITH ORDER NO. 0302 OF 1913. SAHDEO SINGH AND OTHERS, Appellants v. KULDIP SINGH AND ANOTHER, Respondents. Heard, 9th and 10th July. Judgment, 22nd July 1914.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 170 (3)—Deposit by transferee of a portion of non-transferable occupancy holding, if valid.

The purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding made a deposit under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and it was accepted by the learned Munsif. The landlord then objected, but his objection was disallowed. He appealed to the District Judge who thought the appeal was incompetent. He then preferred a second appeal and an application for revision of the order of the Munsif.

Held, that the purchaser of a part of a holding of an occupancy raiyat was entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Jugal Mohini v. Srinath (12 C. L. J. 609) and Radhika v. Rakhal Raj (13 C. W. N. 1175) followed.

Jotindra v. Durga (10 C.W.N. 638) not followed.

That the sale of part of an occupancy holding which was not transferable by local custom or usage conferred an interest on the purchaser and the landlord was not ordinarily entitled to enter on the part sold.

Doyamoyi v. Ananda (18 C. W. N. 971 F. B) referred to.

Babu Akhoy Kumar Banerji, for the Appellants.

Babu Joges Chunder Roy and Rajendra Prosad, for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN and MULLICK, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 655 of 1908 WITH RULE No. 590 OF 1909. KALI CHARAN MAHTO, Appellant v. SHEO NARAIN SINGH AND OTHERS, Respondents. Heard, 29th June. Judgment, 13th July 1914.

Appeal—Non-transferable occupancy holding, purchaser of a portion of—Representative—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 244—Sale under rent law—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 173, 174.

The Appellant was the purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding. The holding was sold in execution of a decree for rent on the 20th March 1908 and purchased by one Gouri Sankar Singh. On the 31st March 1908, the Appellant made an application to have the sale set aside. In that application the Appellant sought relief not only under sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but also under sec. 174, Bengal Tenancy Act, and secs. 310A and 244 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. The Munsif came to the conclusion that the auction-purchaser was not a benamidar for the judgment-debtor, and that therefore sec. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, did not apply. He accordingly dismissed the application. The District Judge, to whom the Applicant appealed, held that there was no appeal against an order under sec 173 and declined to interfere.

Held—That neither sec. 173 nor sec. 174 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was applicable; that sec. 310A of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 was not applicable to execution proceedings under the Tenancy Act by virtue of sec. 170, Bengal Tenancy Act, as amended by Bengal Act I of 1907.

That the Applicant as a purchaser of a portion of a non-transferable occupancy holding was a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of sec. 244 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Sreemati Dayamayi v Ananda Mohan Roy (18 C. W. N. 971 F. B.) followed. The question whether the sale should be set aside on the ground of fraud or under the provisions of sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, was a question between the parties to the suit or their representatives and therefore both an appeal and a second appeal lay.

Babu Surendra Nath Ghosal, for the Appellant.

Moulvi Muhammad Mustafa Khan, for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal allowed. Rule discharged.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before FLETCHER AND RICHARDSON, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1619 OF 1913. BAIKUNTHA NATH GUI AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. LALCHAND SAMANTA AND OTHERS, Defendants, Respondents. 17th July 1914.

Application under r. 6, Or. 34, C. P. C., for personal decree against mortgagors—Suit instituted more than 6 years from due date of payment—Whether payment of interest by one co-mortgagor who was karta of joint family extends the period of limitation.

This appeal arose out of an application by the mortgagee decree holders to obtain a personal decree, against the judgment-debtors mortgagors. The mortgage was executed on 29th January 1900 by several members of a joint family. The due date for payment was 13th April 1901. The mortgage suit was instituted on 23rd January 1909, and the decree was passed on 9th March 1909, and the mortgaged properties were sold and purchased by the decree-holders. The present application was filed on 8th February 1911 for obtaining a personal decree under r. 6, Or. 34, C. P. C., as the decretal amount was not fully satisfied by the sale of the mortgaged properties. The executants of the mortgage were three brothers and two nephews who were two sons of two other brothers. Some interest was paid by one of the executants, Goberdhan, on 6th March 1906. The decree-holders contended that 'Goberdhan was the karta of the joint family and that payment of interest by him within 6 years from the due date of payment gave rise to a fresh period of limitation and that they were therefore entitled to get a personal decree against all the Defendants. Goberdhan denied that he paid the interest. The other contesting Defendants alleged that there was a dispute between Goberdhan and themselves, and that they were not bound by payment, if any, made by Goberdhan, and they further alleged that they were separate at the time of the alleged payment and that Goberdhan was not their karta. The Munsif held that Goberdhan was the karta at the time, and that payment by him was binding on all the judgment-debtors and so granted the application. The Subordinate Judge on appeal held that there was no evidence to show that Goderdhan was such a karta as is contemplated by the Hindu Law, and assuming that he was such a karta, any payment made by him, one of the co-contractors, will not bind the rest, and he therefore held that the decree-holders were entitled to get a personal decree only against Goberdhan.

On appeal to the High Court by the Plaintiffs decree-holders, it was contended that payment by the karta of a joint Hindu family is payment by a duly authorised agent within the meaning of sec. 20 of the Limitation Act, and the case of Saroda Charan Chakravarti v. Durgaram Dey Singh, 14 C. W. N. 741 : 11 C. L. J. 484 was cited as an authority.

For the Respondents it was contended that the finding that Goberdhan was not the karta of the family, as is contemplated by the Hindu Law, concludes the appeal. Assuming for argument's sake that he was the karta, any payment of interest made by him did not bind his co-mortgagors. Reference was made to sec. 22, cl. (2) of the Limitation Act and to Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar, I. L. R. 25 Mad. 220, 234 (F. B.). The case cited by the Appellants is distinguishable.

Held, following Narayana Ayyar v. Venkataramana Ayyar, I. L. R. 25 Mad. 220, 234 (F. B.), that the payment by one co-mortgagor did not extend the period of limitation, although he might be the karta of the family.

Dr. Rashbehary Ghosh and Babu Bepin Behary Ghosh, for the Appellants.

Babu Atul Krishna Ray, for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

RAMAN BEHARY DAS v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

477A, I. P. C., as was pointed out in the case of Queen-Empress v. Matilal Lahiri (2). Sec. 233 must be strictly followed save and except where the law itself provides an exception, and this joinder of three charges under sec. 409 and three charges under sec. 477A is not covered, as was pointed out in the Madras ruling, by any of the exceptions provided in the subsequent sections of the Code. It is true that it was not necessary for the learned Judge to have drawn up three charges under sec. 409, inasmuch as by reason of sec. 222 one charge would have been sufficient. In the same way it is perhaps doubtful whether it is necessary to draw up three charges under sec. 477A. A series of alterations in accounts made to cover a defalcation might all be charged in one charge under the provisions of sec. 477A and there are not three distinct offences committed by an accused person merely by reason of the fact that he makes more than one false entry to cover one defalcation. But the false entry in that case can only relate to one defalcation. It is impossible to take a series of false entries referring to three different defalcations in the same trial, although it might be possible to try three defalcations in one charge, or to try a whole series of falsified accounts in one charge. The two could not be combined in the manner in which they have been combined in this case. Such misjoinder is, since the well-known ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Subramania Ayyar v. King-Emperor (3), absolutely fatal to the trial which must accordingly be held to be void.

We have heard the learned counsel at some length upon the merits, and we do not wish to say anything which would prejudice the case, inasmuch as after giving the matter our most patient consideration we are convinced that this is a case where the ends of justice require that there should be a re-trial, and that re-trial should be held upon the charges under sec. 477A upon which the accused was originally committed to the Court of Sessions. The charge should be framed as nearly as possible in the words of the section itself. We may refer to the ruling in Emperor v. Rash Behari Das (4) as showing what we mean. It was there held that where an accused in making entries which are charged against him was in reality furthering a fraud that had already been committed, that fell within the purview of sec. 477A. But it would appear upon that ruling to be safer to set out the separate items of falsification in separate charges. We therefore on the whole think that the case should be re-tried upon the three charges under sec. 477A as originally committed to the Sessions.

The conviction and sentence passed upon the Appellant are set aside and he will remain on the same bail pending his re-trial before the Court of Sessions as ordered above.

Appeal allowed.

(2) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 560 (1899).

(3) 4 C. W. N. 866: s. c. I. L. R. 25 Mad. 61 (1901).

(4) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 450 (1908).

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER, CENTRAL PROVINCES.]

LORD MOULTON.
LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914, 29, June.

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR and ors., Appellants, v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR and anr., Respondents.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—"Sapindaship," *definition of, if governs inheritance or marriage only—*Bhinna-gotra sapindas or bandhus, who may succeed as—Limit of five degrees and mutuality to be satisfied—Classes of bandhus enumerated in Mitakshara, if to be extended—Interpretation of rules of Hindu Law—Suit in ejectment—Plaintiff to strictly prove title.

Sapinda relationship, according to the Mitakshara, is based not on the presentation of funeral oblations, but on descent from a common ancestor, and in the case of females, also on marriage with descendants from a common ancestor, this relationship ceasing—not merely for purposes of marriage but generally and therefore for purposes of inheritance also—after the seventh degree from the propositus on the father's side and fifth on the mother's.

The word "bandhu" in the system of the Mitakshara bears a distinct and technical meaning signifying the bhinna-gotra sapindas, and the limitation of the five degrees clearly applies and can only apply to the bhinna-gotra sapindas.

Besides being within the fifth degree from the propositus, a bandhu to be entitled to succeed to the inheritance must be so related to the propositus that they are sapindas to each other.

Held, accordingly, that the Plaintiffs who were the paternal grandfather's son's son's daughter's daughter's sons of the propositus were not his heirs, both because they were his bhinna-gotra beyond the fifth degree and also because the element of mutuality was wanting between them and the propositus.

The ruling in GRIDARI LALL v. THE BENGAL GOVERNMENT (4) that the enumeration of bandhus who are entitled to succeed is not exhaustive but merely illustrative, hardly warrants the conclusion that the classes specified by Vijnaneswar, viz., atma-bandhus, pitri-bandhus, matri-bandhus can be added to.

LALLUBHAI v. MANKUVARBAI (1), UMAID BAHADUR v. UDOI CHAND (3), BABU LAL v. NANKURAM (5) referred to.

The Hindu Law contains its own principles of exposition, and questions arising under it cannot be determined on abstract reasoning or analogies borrowed from other systems of laws, but must depend for their decisions on the rules and doctrines enunciated by its own law-givers and recognised expounders.

In order to succeed in an action of ejectment the Plaintiff must strictly prove his title.

This was an Appeal from a decree and judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, dated the 23rd March 1910, which affirmed a decree and judgment of the Court of the District Judge, Balaghat, dated the 26th February 1907.

The question for determination in this Appeal was whether the Appellants were under the Mitakshara law the heirs of one Lakshman Rao deceased.

The relationship of the parties appears from the pedigree set out in their Lordships' judgment.

The said Lakshman Rao was the last male owner of the property in suit with

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388 (1876).
(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 (1880).
(4) 12 M. I. A. 448 (1868).
(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339 (1894).

the exception of a two anna share in each of the villages of Kattipar and Gosaintola and a four-anna share in the village of Pipartola. He died in or about the year 1851, leaving him surviving a widow, Janki Bai, and a daughter, Chitku Bai. Janki Bai, who succeeded Lakshman Rao, died in or about the year 1883, and was succeeded by Chitku Bai, who died on the 7th May 1894. Chitku Bai did not leave any issue her surviving, and the heirs of the said Lakshman Rao would, therefore, be entitled to succeed to the property left by him. But on Chitku Bai's death, her husband Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar, Respondent No. 1, obtained possession thereof. In the year 1900, Chitku Bai's husband adopted Venkatesh, Respondent No. 2, as his son. The present suit was instituted by the Appellants, as Plaintiffs, on the 25th March 1906, in the Court of the District Judge, Balaghat, against Chitku Bai's husband and his adopted son, as Defendants. The Appellants by their plaint alleged that the family to which they and the said Lakshman Rao belonged was governed by the Benares School of the Mitakshara law; that they were Lakshman Rao's bandhus or bhinna-gotra sapindas; and that as such they were his nearest heirs and entitled to succeed to the property in suit. The Appellants, therefore, prayed for a decree for possession of the same.

The Respondents, by their written statement, dated the 16th July 1906, contended that the Appellants did not "come within the definition of bandhus or bhinna-gotra sapindas of Lakshman Rao entitled to succeed to his estate." The Respondents also pleaded that the law applicable to the case was the Western School of the Mitakshara law under which Chitku Bai took an absolute estate in her deceased father's property, and that on her death it went to her own heirs. Both Courts in India have found that the Benares School of the Mitakshara law was applicable to the case, and that under that School of law Chitku Bai took the ordinary estate of a Hindu female, and that on her death the property in suit would devolve upon the heirs of Lakshman Rao. The Respondents further contended that the said shares in the said three villages of Kattipar, Gosaintola and Pipartola were the self-acquired property of Chitku Bai, and, therefore, her own heirs would be entitled to succeed to the same. Both Courts in India upheld this contention and held that the Appellants were not entitled to succeed to that portion of the property in suit.

On the pleadings, the District Judge settled several issues of which only the following is material:—

"17. Are the Plaintiffs heritable bandhus of Lakshman Rao, and, as such entitled to the property in dispute?"

The District Judge, Mr. G. G. Ranade, recorded the oral and documentary evidence adduced by the parties, and, on the 26th February 1907, delivered his judgment. On the said issue his opinion was as follows:—

"Issue No. 17.—This is the most important point in this case. In fact the whole case hinges upon this very important issue. If the Plaintiffs are heritable bandhus of Lakshman Rao, then they are entitled to succeed to the property in suit and the Defendants are no longer any sharers of the same, but if the Plaintiffs are not heritable bandhus, the case of the Plaintiffs must entirely fail and the Defendant No. 1 is the only person entitled to succeed and to retain the property which he has got.

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

The established case law on the point is first of all discussed in the case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3). It has been expressly said there that the author of the Mitakshara in verse 3, sec. 5, uses the word sapinda in the sense of connection by particles of one body and not in the sense of connection by funeral oblations and that in order to determine whether a person is a sapinda of the propositus within the meaning of the definition given by the author of Mitakshara in Achara-kanda (chapter treating of rituals), it is necessary to see whether they are related as sapindas to each other, either through themselves or through their mothers and fathers. If this test is applied to the present case, it is to be seen whether the Plaintiffs are the sapindas of the common ancestor, Timajipant, and whether Lakahman Rao is the sapinda of Timajipant. A reference to the genealogical table will at once show that the deceased Lakshman Rao is the third person from the common ancestor, while the Plaintiffs are the sixth in degree from Timajipant. The Plaintiffs claim the property as bandhus through their mother, Mt. Rango Bai, the wife of Martand Rao Waikar. As a female comes in the inheritance and the present inheritance is claimed through a mother, the sapindaship from the Plaintiffs goes as far as Sadashivapant. It does not reach the common ancestor, Timajipant. This important care of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) has been followed in various cases, and it has been again quoted as an authority in the recent case of Babu Lal v. Nankuram (5). On page 345 it is said that "again a sapinda of the propositus, to be capable of inheritance, must satisfy a further condition, namely, that he must be so related to the propositus, that the propositus is also a sapinda of him, either directly or through the father and the mother. This mutuality of sapinda relationship between the propositus and the heritable sapinda is assumed as a necessary condition in the case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) and the authority for this is to be found in the text of Manu, Chapter IX, 187, cited in the Mitakshara, Chapter II, sec. 3, as interpreted by Balambhatta and Visvesvarbhatta, the two leading commentators on Mitakshara. The text according to these commentators, means this, that 'the property of a near sapinda shall be that of a near sapinda.'

This is the established law on the subject, but the learned counsel for the Plaintiffs contended that even in the case of a female, that is, when inheritance is claimed through a mother, sapinda relationship goes up to the 7th or at least 6th degree and the authority of Golapchandra Sarkar Shastri has been quoted (Hindu Law by Golapchandra Sarkar, page 262).

Bandhus are 'भिन्नगोत्राणां सपिण्डानां बंधुशब्देन ग्रहणात्' bhinna-gotra sapindas are bandhus. In the present case the Plaintiffs are of a gotra different from that of the family of Asirgaday. The sapindaship is defined as:—सपिण्डतातु पुरुषे सप्तमे विनिवर्तते। समानोदकभावस्तु जन्मनाम्नोरवेदने॥—that sapinda relationship ceases in the 7th degree from the father. The author of the book referred to above takes the verse to mean 7 degrees both from the father and mother. He does not take practically into consideration the subsequent verse of याज्ञवल्क्य 'पंचमात् सप्तमादूर्द्ध्वं मातृतः

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 (1880).
(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339 (1894).

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 (1880).

पितृतस्सप्तमा,' which means that sapinda relationship is restricted to 5 degrees in the case of a mother and 7 degrees in the case of a father. It was contended that this definition of sapinda relationship has been given in the याज्ञवल्क्य Smriti for the purpose of marriage and not for the purpose of inheritance. This contention of the Plaintiffs is not supported by any authority. The authorities are against the Plaintiffs. In the case of Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1), it has been decided on page 427 that the relation of sapindaship, as given by Vijnaneswara and Nilkantha, is not different for the purpose of inheritance from that for the purpose of marriage. 'If Vijnaneswara and Nilkantha contemplated such a distinction for the purpose of inheritance and sapindaship, for the marriage and ceremonial or religious purposes, they would have expressly said so.' Messrs. West and Bühler in their valuable work on Hindu Law regard the sapindaship the same both for the purpose of marriages and for the purpose of inheritance. On page 434 it is said that 'it is quite consistent with the adoption of community of particles as the basis of sapindaship and it is an additional proof that he did not limit that doctrine to marriage or ceremonial matters.'

"The view taken by the learned author, Golapchandra Sarkar Shastri, is not the view as taken by the commentators and as accepted by custom.

"Mr. Martand Rao also quoted निर्णयसिंधु. It is a work prepared by कमलाकरभट्ट by the end of the 17th century. This कमलाकरभट्ट was the uncle of the famous गागाभट्ट (Gagabhatt) who performed the installation ceremony of Shivaji in 1674 at Raigad in the Bombay Presidency. The authority of निर्णयसिंधुकार is of great importance, and though he on page 217 says that 'आसप्तमात् रिक्थविच्छित्तिर्भवति', that is, the inheritance goes as far as 7 degrees and then it ceases; he further says that in the case of mother it is restricted to 5 degrees only.

"On page 490 of the Digest of West and Bühler (3rd edition, Volume 1, printed at the Bombay Education Society's Press, Byculla, 1884) it is said that in the mother's line the sapinda relationship ceases with the 5th person. In the present case it ceases with Sadashivapant and does not go up to Timajipant. Plaintiffs are not therefore the heritable bandhus of Lakshman Rao.

"The opinion of Sarvadhikari (Tagore Law Lectures, 1884) is against the contention of the Plaintiffs. After giving the definition of bandhus on page 702 he goes on to page 705 and there says that five is to be substituted for four in the case of father's bandhus. If the deceased or his ancestor be related through father's mother, then five degrees, instead of four, should be counted on both directions. The table, which he has given on page 712 III (Mother's bandhus), is exactly applicable to the present case. There the sapinda relationship goes as far as B only, that is, in the present case as far as Sadashivapant only and does not go as far as Timaji. On page 490 of the Digest of West and Bühler it is said that the deceased's great-great-granddaughter's son is no longer a sapinda and the same view was held in Giridari Lall v. The Bengal Government (4). Vide page 160 of Volume II of Judgments of Privy Council by D. Sutherland. In the present case the Plaintiffs are the मातृबंधु

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388 (1876).

(4) 12 M. I. A. 448 (1868).

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

(matri-bandhu) of the deceased and they come last of all, that is, after the आत्मबंधु and पितृबंधु (atma-bandhus and pitri-bandhus) are exhausted.

"It was contended by Mr. Martand Rao, the guardian of the Plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3, and by the learned Counsel, Mr. Mitra, Barrister-at-law, that the author of the Tagore Law Lectures, 1884, Mr. Rajkumar Sarvadhikari, has said, on page 705, that the word five should be substituted for four in the case of father's bandhus. It was argued from this that if a concession is given in the case of father's bandhus, why on the same analogy a concession should not be given in the case of mother's bandhus? I admit that the author does not give any reason for this, but there is no reason why the same concession should be given in the case of mother's bandhus when the Shastras do not allow that. The Court is not to see what law will be convenient to the parties or in particular to the Plaintiffs, but the law as it exists is to be administered. I do not see therefore any reason why the Plaintiffs who are decidedly bandhus through mother should have that concession. Mr. Martand Rao had further argued that Apararka, a commentator on the Yajnavalkya Smriti, also supported the view of Mitakshara and that in the case of females too, the sapindaship goes as far as the 6th degree. I must say that Apararka is not in conflict with Mitakshara and I must say that proper meaning of the verse पञ्चमात् सप्तमाद्दूर्ध्वं मातृतः पितृतस्तथा is as has been given above. Apararka is a late commentator and his work is an authority in Kashmir. He was a sovereign who reigned in the Konkan between 1140 and 1186. The words in Mitakshara तथाच मातरमारभ्य ... तत्पितृपितामहादिगणनायां पञ्चमपुरुषवर्त्तिनी मातृतः पंचमीत्युपपद्यते clearly shows that the sapinda relationship goes up to the 5th person including the mother. The son of that mother does not become a sapinda of the common ancestor. The case becomes different when the sapindaship is claimed through father. Had Mt Sako Bai had a son instead of a daughter, Mt. Rango Bai or Janki Bai, the sapinda relationship would have come to the Plaintiffs under the rule that sapinda relationship through father goes as far as the 6th degree.

"The case in Musstt. Umroot v. Kulyandas (8), was cited as authority by Mr. Martand Rao to support his contention that relations through mother up to the 7th degree can become sapindas and that in the absence of any preferential heir a person who comes within 7th degree through his mother can succeed to the property. I have read the report, and from that report it is quite clear that that was not the opinion of the Court. It was the case of Musstt. Umroot v. Kulyandas (8) and the Court had given certain points for the opinion of the Shastris of the Court and the Shastris in giving their opinion had said that 'under the word bandhus, the author has included the asagotras also wherefore should there be neither the abovenamed relations nor yet the bandhu or cognate on his side then the children of Raghunathdass are the lawful heirs, though not specified by the author in the text, because they are within 7th generation though in the female line.'

"This case has been referred to in the Digest of West and Bühler on page 489 and it has been said there 'that this assertion is too wide and vague to be of any use.' Further, the Shastris were not asked their opinion on this point,

(8) 1 Borradaile's Rep. 814, 828 (1820)

but they gave their opinion as an obiter dictum and the Court has not acted upon the opinion of the Shastris. With due deference to the Shastris who gave that opinion, I must say that the interpretation as put on the verse of Yajnavalkya is wrong.

सपिण्डतातु पुरुषे सप्तमे विनिवर्त्तते । समानो-दक भावस्तु निवर्त्तेताचतुर्द्दशात् ॥

This is the verse taken by Mitakshara from वृद्धमनु. This verse shows the sapinda relationship amongst persons of the same gotra and not for persons bearing a gotra different from that of the common ancestor. In order to have a different gotra, a female, as a daughter or sister, etc., must intervene. Again the same verse has been taken by Manu in his book called मनुस्मृति, Chapter V 60, and what the commentators have said upon that verse is very important and it supports the view that I have taken. On page 211 of that book as printed at the Nirnaya Sagar Press, Bombay, in the year 1884, the author has said—

तदुक्तं मत्स्य पुराणे 'लेपभाजश्चतुर्थाद्याः पित्राद्याः पिण्डभागिनः। पिण्डदः सप्तमस्तेषां सापिण्ड्यं साप्तपौरुषं' मागोत्रत्वेपीयं सपिण्डता। अतएव शंखलिखितौ। 'सपिण्डतातु सर्वेषां गोत्रतः साप्तपौरुषी'।

"These sentences leave no room for any doubt as to what was the meaning intended by Yajnavalkya. Here it has been clearly and unmistakably said that the verse quoted above indicates the relation of sapindaship in the same gotra and not a gotra different from that of the common ancestor. It is not applicable to bandhus who are bhinna-gotra sapindas I need not therefore say that the translation of the above verse, as made by Golapchandra Sarkar Shastri in his book on Hindu Law on page 48, is not correct. 'But the sapinda relationship ceases in the 7th degree (from the father and the mother). Samanodaka relationship however ceases, if the descent and the name are unknown.' (Manu 5, Chapter 60.) There is no other definition of sapindaship given anywhere in the works on the subject.

"The opinion as given by the Shastris in 1814 at the time when the case in 1 Borradalai was reported has no base or foundation and it appears to be only the personal opinion of the Shastris and it was entirely an obiter dictum.

"Moreover the case is very very old. It was decided nearly a century ago when the law on the subject of bandhus was not discussed and settled. It has now been a settled law that unless there has been a mutual sapinda relationship, the bandhus cannot inherit and they are not heritable bandhus. It is not the opinion of the English Judges, but it is the opinion of the Shastras on the subject and the same opinion has been held by the public on this difficult question. Even Mr. Golapchandra admits that there must be some limit to the sapinda relationship, otherwise the whole thing would be in confusion. Golapchandra Sarkar on page 72 of his book comments on the dictum as laid down in the Calcutta case [Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3)] and says 'that I have not been able to find out any dictum in the Achara-kanda in support of the view taken by the High Court of Calcutta.' I need not say much as regards the opinion of Golapchandra Sarkar. It is opposed both to the established law on the subject and opposed to usages. All along the restriction is observed as far as mother is concerned. On the authority of the rulings quoted above I hold that the Plaintiffs are not heritable bandhus of the deceased and that they cannot inherit the property in dispute."

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 (1880).

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

In the result the District Judge dismissed the suit.

Against the said decree of the District Judge the Appellants filed their Memorandum of Appeal in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, and the Respondents filed their Memorandum of Objections. On the 23rd March 1910, the Judicial Commissioner Mr. H. V. Drake-Brockman delivered his judgment expressing his agreement with the decision of the Court below on the issue in question, and passed a decree dismissing the Appeal with costs. In the course of his judgment the Judicial Commissioner observed as follows :—

"In the case of Gridari Lall Roy v. The Bengal Government (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council said that when the text of the Mitakshara is doubtful on any point, the Viramitrodaya, as a work of authority in the Benares School, may be referred to for the purpose of removing the doubt. In this connection I have referred to Shastri Golapchandra Sarkar's translation of the Viramitrodaya. At pages 199-200 will be found the passages corresponding to Mitakshara II-5-6 and II-6-1. The entire work is on Inheritance and appears to contain no reference to any restriction on sapindaship other than the ordinary one of seven degrees. On the other hand, the Dattaka-Mimansa in sec. VI-10 and 11 (Stokes' Hindu Law Books, 600) refers to both Vrihat Manu and Gautama as limiting sapindaship to the fifth degree on the mother's side in connection with succession.

"The lengthy argument for the Appellant included nothing to show that in applying Vijnaneswara's detailed definition of the term sapinda to his rules of inheritance, the Judges—one of them a Hindu and famous as a Sanskritist—who decided Babu Lall v. Nankuram (5) departed from any rule of interpretation which they were bound to observe. In Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) the Full Bench said :—

'It is a well understood rule of construction among the authors of the Institutes of Hindu Law that the same word must be taken to have been used in one and the same sense throughout a work, unless the contrary is expressly indicated.'

"Now the very elaboration of the definition in the Achara kanda seems to indicate that it was to be of general application. The same inference may also be drawn from its position in an early part of the Mitakshara. Some weight must also be attached to the fact that not a single case of inheritance by a person standing in a position corresponding to that of the Plaintiff-Appellants has been reported in the books or shown to have been allowed in practice. Lastly, the decision of my learned predecessor, Mr. Ismay, in Rangu Bai v. Ganpat Rao (6) given after 30 years' service in these Provinces, may fairly serve as an indication that local usage is inconsistent with such a claim as the present one. In Collector of Madura v. Muttu Ramalinga Sathupathy (7) their Lordships said :—

'The duty, therefore, of a European Judge who is under the obligation to administer Hindu Law is not so much to inquire whether a disputed doctrine is fairly deducible from the earliest authorities as to ascertain whether it has been received by the particular School which

(4) 12 M. I. A. 448, 466 (1868).

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119, 126 (1880).

(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339 (1894).

(6) 14 C. P. L. R. 185.

(7) 10 W. R. P. C. 17, 21 (1868).

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

governs the district with which he has to deal and has there been sanctioned by usage. For under the Hindu system of law clear proof of usage will outweigh the written text of the law.'

"Altogether I do not see my way to reversing the lower Court's decision on this difficult question. A very clear case should, I think, have been made out to justify an Englishman in differing from a Brahman whose service as a Judge in these Provinces had extended over nearly 16 years when he wrote his judgment."

Against the said decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, the Plaintiffs preferred the present Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Appellants submitted that the Plaintiffs were heritable bandhus of Lakshman Rao under Mitakshara, Ch. II, 6. "Sapinda" there means a relation by blood. The word is first used in the Mitakshara in a generic sense for purposes of inheritance, and means nothing more than a blood-relation—"parts of the body." It is also used in a specific sense in three ways—first, for marriage, second, for purposes of impurity at death, etc., and third, for offering funeral oblations: [Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3)], G. Shastri's Hindu Law, pp. 52 and 80, West & Buhler, Hindu Law, 3rd Ed, p. 120. In the text of Manu, "To the nearest sapinda the inheritance next belongs," the Mitakshara takes "sapinda" to mean "relation." Throughout the Mitakshara, "sapinda" is used in the generic sense. There is a distinction between rules of succession in Mitakshara and in the Dayabhaga, where the rules are based upon funeral oblations. It is not so in the Mitakshara. Under the Mitakshara, one may be unable to offer funeral oblations, but that will not preclude him from inheriting: Mayne's Hindu Law, 7th Ed., p. 7 and pp. 678 and 697. In Manu, a "sapinda" is to the man himself and the three immediate descendants: Mayne, p. 689. The result is that the power of performing shradh is not an index to the right to inherit. In Mit. Ch. II, 5, 6, "sapinda" is used in a restrictive sense qua funeral rights and in reference to the gotra only. Even within a gotra the right of inheritance is not limited to sapindaship in the narrow or funeral-oblation sense: [Gridari Lall Roy v. The Bengal Government (4)]. G. Shastri's Viramitrodaya, p. 299. The case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) is an obiter dictum. Sapinda was erroneously translated by Colebrooke into 'Kinsman connected by funeral oblations of food.' West & Buhler have pointed that out. The correct view was taken in Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1). However, it did not lay down that sapindaship must be mutual. The doctrine of mutual sapindaship is based on the opinion of Sarvadhikari in Tagore Lectures and is not warranted by Achara kanda. If sapindaship is blood-relationship, then all sapindaship will naturally be mutual. The meaning of "sapinda" is discussed differently by several writers: Mayne's Hindu Law, 679, Mandlik's Hindu Law, p. 390, Mandlik's Yajnavalkya, p. 167, Sarvadhikari's Hindu Law, p. 688, Banerjee's Law of Marriage, p. 63, Sarkar's Vyavastha-Chandrika, Vol. 1, Part 1, p. 193. "Sapinda" is used in the sense of impurity: Manu, Ch. III, 5, Ch. V, 57, Ch. IX, 187, Mayne's Hindu Law, pp. 103 and 681. The restrictions placed upon "sapindas" in marriage are quite modern; some text-writers count six

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 at p. 124 (1880).

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388 (1876).
(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 at p. 124 (1880).
(4) 12 Moo. I. A. 448, 463 (1868).

degrees, whereas others only four degrees. The prohibited degrees of marriage have nothing to do with funeral oblations or with inheritance. If the rule as to prohibited degrees were applied to inheritance, it would produce the absurdity that a son might inherit where a father could not. The original texts dealing with the subject are given in Shastri's Hindu Law, p. 54, and the following pages where the matter is fully discussed. As to the decided cases, it must be conceded that the majority were against the Appellant, but it was submitted that they were decided on erroneous principles. Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) was an obiter dictum, and the reasoning on which it was based was erroneous. Babu Lal v. Nankuram (5) assumed that sapindaship was limited to the oblation rule. It is not an authority against the Appellant's case. Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1) was misapprehended by the Subordinate Judge. In Mussit. Umroot v. Kulyandas (8), the Shastris gave their opinion that the marriage limitation did not apply to inheritance. Mimansa, Ch. XI, 10 and 11, deals with marriage and not succession. The whole principle of Mitakshara under Chap. II, secs. 6 and 7, is that after all the blood relations are exhausted, the inheritance goes to the fellow-student, etc. The reason of the law ought to prevail over the letter of the Code and the rule of prohibited degrees which would produce absurdity ought not to be applied. During the argument reference was made to the following:—Morley's Digest, pp. 201 and 205; 'Parot Bapalal Sevakram v. Mehta Harilal Surajram (9), Venkatagiri v. Chandru (10); Ghose's Hindu Law.

Mr. G. R. Lowndes (with him Mr. G. E. A. Ross, K. C.) for the Respondents submitted that the Courts below were right. Appellant's case in the Indian Courts was that bandhu relationship through a mother was limited—the limit being 7 degrees. This was also the case made here at first (see First Reason in Appellant's case). Now this is thrown over, and it is claimed that there is no limit at all in the case of any bandhus. The discussion in India has always been whether the claimants came within the limits of bandhu relationship, e.g., Manik Chand Golecha v. Jagat Settani Pran Kumari Bibi (11). In all the 800 years, no commentator even has suggested such a view except Mr. Golapchandra Sarkar Shastri. The basis of the contention is a fallacy.

The Achara-kanda says that all sapindas are blood-connections, that sapindaship means connection by blood and not connection by funeral oblations, but this does not mean "all blood-connections are sapindas."

In Mitakshara, Chs. V and VI, a clear distinction is drawn between sapindas and samanodakas. First the sapindas are to take, and on failure of them the samanodakas. This of itself shews that "sapindas" in this chapter are a limited class.

The term sapinda here is most carefully limited to the nearest male gotrajas This is so both in sec. V·5, and sec. V 6. In V·5 Colebrooke's Translation omits the important words "a saptamat" at the end, and the last sentence should run—"In this manner must be understood the

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388 (1876).
(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 at p. 124 (1880).
(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339 (1894).
(8) 1 Borradaile's Rep. 314, 328 (1820).
(9) I. L. R. 19 Bom. 631 (1894).
(10) I. L. R. 23 Mad. 123 (1899).
(11) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 518 (1889).

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

succession of gotraja-sapindas up to the 7th degree."

The omission is clearly stated in Jolly's Lectures, pp. 209-210. In sec. V-6 the limitation of sapindas to the 7th person is re-iterated and the authority of Vrihat Manu quoted for it. The work of Vrihat Manu from which the quotation is taken has not survived. The term means either "the old Manu" or more probably "the original Manu."

If therefore in speaking of gotrajas the term sapinda is clearly limited to 7 degrees, it is almost impossible to believe that the same word is not at least equally limited in sec. V-3, where it is used in the explanation of the term bandhus as being bhinna-gotraja sapindas.

The limitation of the term gotraja-sapindas to 7 persons is intended to embrace those who offer both the whole pinda and the lepa or fragments. In older works the two classes are distinguished as sapindas and sakulyas, but though this distinction is not maintained in the Mitakshara, and the term sapindas is used to denote both classes, the distinction between them and the samanodakas is clearly maintained.

When we come to the bandhus, we find that the right of inheritance is confined to bhinna-gotraja sapindas, there being no recognition as heirs of any bhinna-gotraja samanodakas, no such class being in fact known to Hindu writers at all.

The case of the Appellants in the Indian Courts was that all bandhus within 7 degrees are entitled to inherit, there being no distinction in matters of inheritance between bandhus claiming through the mother and those claiming through the father.

In the case of bandhus claiming through the mother the limitation is 5 degrees and not 7.

The argument on this is largely based on the untranslated first part of the Mitakshara which deals with ceremonials, usually known as the Achara-kanda.

This limitation is also equally applicable in the case of inheritance.

The rule is ancient. See Manu, III, 5; Apastamba, II, 11, 15-16; Gautama, IV, 2-5; Vasistha, VIII, 1-2.

The modern commentators of weight have assumed that the limitation of 5 degrees through the mother applies to bandhu inheritance: Mayne, 690-2, 786-87; West and Bühler (3rd Ed.), 121, 488-9, Jolly's Lectures, Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1), Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3), Babu Lal v. Nankuram (5), Bhyah Ram Singh v. Bhyah Ugur Singh (12). See also the Dattaka-Mimansa, S. VI, 10, where he is dealing with the question of succession of adopted sons and passages quoted in the first Court's judgment from the Nirnaya-Sindhu and Apararka.

Against this there is only the opinion of G. Sarkar Shastri who is alive, and might have been called as an expert to support his own view as he was in a case which was heard recently by this Board.

The reason for the adoption of some limitation for sapinda relationship in the matter of marriage is said in the Achara-kanda that without it all the world would be connected and there would be no possibility of marriage. The same reasoning would equally apply to inheritance.

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388 a pp. 426-7 (1876).
(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 a pp. 124-5 (1880).
(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339, 345 (1894).
(12) 13 Moo. I. A. 373, 380 (1870).

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

It is suggested that the adoption of this rule in matters of inheritance would lead to an absurdity inasmuch as the Appellant's sons in this case (claiming through their father and so having 7 degrees) would clearly be bandhus, but there is no doubt that the rule did apply in the case of marriages where equally absurd results would be produced.

Parallel with this confining of inheritance to members of the gotra, we find that they only could perform the necessary funeral ceremonies.

The parvana shraddha could only be performed by sapindas and sakulyas. Samanodakas (as their name implied) only made general offerings of water. But no one connected through a female could perform any of the shraddha ceremonies. See the account of the shraddha in Manu, III, 215 16.

It may be doubtful whether inheritance depended upon the right to perform shraddha, but there can be no doubt that the two went hand in hand and were intimately connected.

Yajnavalkya was the first to introduce bandhus as heirs and he also was the first to mention the offering of a cake to maternal' ancestors. See Yajnavalkya, S. 242, Mandlik's translation, p. 190.

It would seem therefore that by Yajnavalkya's time (which was 500 years probably after Manu) it had become customary to offer the pinda to maternal ancestors, and consequently (or currently) it had become customary to allow those who could offer it to inherit, and this let bandhus in.

It seems quite clear that the only cake offered to maternal ancestors was offered to 3 ascendants of the mother. No lepa was offered to higher ascendants and no water-offerings (corresponding to those of the samanodakas); so the right of inheritance corresponding to the offering made would be confined to 5 degrees counting the offerer, and this is the exact limit of inheritance, which we say is allowed to persons claiming relationship through the mother.

This may only be a coincidence, but, if so, it is a remarkable one, and we submit, it affords a rational explanation of why sapinda relationship through the father extended to 7 degrees and through the mother to only 5.

Although by the period of the Mitakshara the right of inheritance may have come to depend upon blood-connection and not the right to offer funeral oblations, there can be no doubt that the latter had still great influence upon the right of inheritance, and the two were still regarded as going together.

See also Mitakshara, II, ii, 6: "The daughter's son is to 'give' the funeral oblation and possess the inheritance."

This intimate connection of inheritance and funeral rites in post-Mitakshara times has also been fully recognised by the Courts. See Soorendra Nath Roy v. Heeramonee Burmoneah (13), Amrito Kumar v. Lukhinarayan (14), Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1). It is also clearly recognised by the Viramitrodaya which has high authority (s. 157-8).

The three classes of bandhus recognised are atma-bandhus, pitri-bandhus and matri-bandhus and they are mutually exclusive.

It has no doubt been held that the members of each class mentioned in the text are only illustrative and not exhaustive :- Gridari Lall v. The Bengal Government (4);

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388, 427 (1876).
(4) 12 Moo. I. A. 448 (1868).
(13) 12 Moo. I. A. 81, 96 (1868).
(14) 2 B. L. R. (F. B) 28, 89 (1868).

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

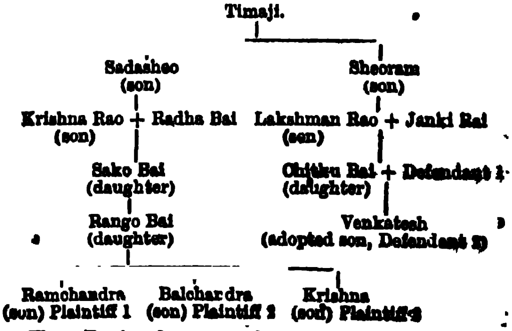
but it has never been suggested, much less held, that the classes themselves are not exhaustive? See Muthuswami Mudaliyar v. Supambedu Muthukumara-swami Mudaliyan (15), Amrito Kumar v. Lukhinarayan (14), Ratnasubbu Chetti v. Ponnappa Chetti (16), Mayne, 688.

The limit in each class is the common ancestor and no one who is not descended at least from the great-grandfather would be a bandhu at all.

The bandhu's wife would no doubt have to be mutual as settled by Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3), and as the limit of ascendants would be the great-grandfather, so the limit in the descending line would be the great grandson.

This would perhaps contract the class of bandhus below the limit of 5 degrees through the mother, but it seems to be the clear reading of S. VI, 1, and is in exact accordance with the dicta in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3), which are otherwise not easy to understand.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., in reply.—The Respondent's argument was not quite consistent with the reasoning in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) and Babu Lal v. Nankuram (5), on which the lower Courts based their judgments.



Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The suit that has given rise to the present appeal was brought by the Plaintiffs in the Court of the District Judge of Balaghat, in the Central Provinces of India, for possession of certain properties which originally belonged to one Lakshman Rao, whose next-of-kin or bandhus they claim to be under the law of the Mitakshara.

Lakshman Rao died in 1851, leaving him surviving his widow Janki Bai and a daughter Chitku Bai, both since deceased. The Defendant Venkatesh is Chitku Bai's husband. On Lakshman Rao's death without male issue his inheritance devolved on Janki Bai. She held possession of the properties in suit as a Hindu widow until her death in 1883, when Chitku Bai succeeded to her father's estate. She died on the 7th of May 1894, leaving the first Defendant, her husband. The second Defendant is a son adopted by him after Chitku Bai's decease.

The present action was not instituted until March 1906. The Plaintiffs claim that the inheritance to Lakshman Rao opened to them on the death of Chitku Bai, and that they are entitled to recover possession of the properties from the Defendants who have no right of succession to Lakshman Rao's estate.

The following genealogical table will explain the relative position of the parties and the exact nature of the claim :—

The Defendants resisted the claim mainly on two grounds ; they alleged, firstly, that the ancestors of the parties had migrated to the Central Provinces from Asirgarh, situated within the Mahratta country, where the law in force conferred

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 at p. 124 (1880).
(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339 (1894).
(14) 2 B. L. R. (F. B.) 28, 37-8 (1868).
(15) L. R. 28 I. A. 83 (1896).
(16) I. L. R. 5 Mad. 69 (1882).

on the daughter succeeding to her father's inheritance an absolute estate descendible to her own heirs; that the family of Timaji was still subject to that law, and that accordingly the estate which Chitku Bai had acquired passed on her death without issue to the first Defendant, her husband. In the second place, they urged that the Plaintiffs had no heritable right or interest in Lakshman Rao's estate as they did not come within the category of bandhus entitled to succeed to his inheritance.

The Courts in India have overruled the first plea, and have held that on settling in the Central Provinces the family of Timaji adopted the lex loci and are now governed by the rules of the Mitakshara generally in force in that Province.

But they have given effect to the Defendants' second contention; they have held in substance that the Mitakshara lays down a well-defined limit where the kinship entitling bandhus to succession ceases, and that the Plaintiffs are beyond that limit. They have accordingly dismissed the suit.

The Plaintiffs have appealed to His Majesty in Council, and the case has on both sides been argued with considerable ability and learning.

In dealing with the arguments addressed to this Board on behalf of the Appellants their Lordships cannot help noticing one circumstance, viz, that in the Courts below, so far as appears from the record, it was not denied that there was a limit to the heritable right of bandhus, the only contention being whether it was seven degrees from the propositus or five as urged by the Defendants. Before this Board, on the other hand, it has been strenuously contended that there is no limit to the succession of bandhus. Their Lordships do not wish, however, to draw any inference from this change of ground, for what they have to determine in this appeal is whether the term bandhus is to be construed as the Plaintiffs argue in the broadest sense, or whether it is subject to any limitation, and in the latter case what that limitation is according to the law by which the parties are governed.

In the Hindu law the succession of heirs individually specified does not present much difficulty; the controversies and divergences amongst Hindu lawyers are chiefly concerned with collateral succession. Manu, the ancient sage, whose identity is lost in the mist of ages, but whose word is regarded as divine, after giving the rules regarding the succession of lineal male descendants and male ascendants, declares: "The property of near sapinda shall be that of a near sapinda."* Sir William Jones in his translation of Manu's Institutes has rendered the passage somewhat differently, but for the purposes of the present judgment it is of little importance.

It is upon this enunciation that all the schools base the right of collaterals to succeed to the inheritance of a deceased person. This refers only to the succession of one male to another, for females inherit by express rules. The right of collaterals, therefore, is dependent on the existence of the sapinda-relationship between the propositus and the claimant. The contest that has arisen in the several schools is with regard to the meaning to be attached to the term sapinda, in other words, what does sapinda-relationship imply, and what is the true test for determining whether a particular person is a sapinda to the deceased or not? Jimutavahana, the author of the Dayabhaga, the guiding authority in the Bengal or Gauriya school, considers it to mean "community in the offering of funeral oblations." He draws his argument from the word pinda, which literally signifies a ball of rice offered at the performance of obsequial rites. Mr. Lowndes is probably right, that in early times the right of inheritance was dependent on the right to participate in the offering of funeral oblations, a doctrine which is part and parcel of the Dayabhaga rules.

* Chapter IX., v. 187. This is the translation given by Mr. Justice Banerjee, in Babu Lal v. Nankuram, I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339

But it is also clear that Vijnaneswara, the author of the Mitakshara, who appears to have flourished towards the end of the 11th and the beginning of the 12th century of the Christian era, some five centuries before Jimutavahana, abandoned the ancient doctrine, and construed sapinda relationship to arise from community of blood, or to use the quaint language of Hindu writers, "community of particles of the same body." His legal conception in this respect will appear clearly from a passage of the Mitakshara, Book I, chapter on Marriage, not included in Mr. Colebrooke's translation. To this passage their Lordships will have to refer later on in the course of this Judgment.

Messrs. West and Bühler in their "Digest of the Hindu Law," whose merit and authority have been recognised by eminent Hindu lawyers, have examined in detail the doctrines of the Mitakshara on this point, and their general conclusion as to Vijnaneswara's legal conception of sapinda relationship is summed up in the following words, that he based it "not on the presentation of funeral oblations but on descent from a common ancestor, and in the case of females also on marriage with descendants from a common ancestor." Mr. Colebrooke in his rendering of the Mitakshara has paraphrased sapinda as a relation "connected by funeral oblations," which resulted in virtually obliterating one of the main distinctions between the Benares and the Bengal schools. But it is now recognised that his paraphrase was erroneous, and that the true theory of sapinda relationship propounded by Vijnaneswara was based on community of blood. It is on this theory of Vijnaneswara that the learned counsel for the Appellants place their chief reliance. The Plaintiffs, it is urged, are unquestionably related to Lakshman Rao by tie of blood; they are, therefore, his sapindas, and consequently, in the absence of nearer kinsmen, entitled to his inheritance. It is to be remarked, as has been observed in previous cases before this Board, that the Hindu Law contains its own principles of exposition, and that questions arising under it cannot be determined on abstract reasoning or analogies, borrowed from other systems of law, but must depend for their decision on the rules and doctrines enunciated by its own law-givers and recognised expounders.

The Mitakshara purports to be a commentary on the work of Yajnavalkya, who is supposed to have lived about the second century of the Christian era, about a thousand years before Vijnaneswara. In the Mitakshara he is spoken of in terms of deep veneration; and his doctrines, developed by Vijnaneswara certainly show a marked advance over the legal conceptions of his predecessors. So far as their Lordships have been able to ascertain, the bandhus, or distant kinsmen related to the deceased through females, make their appearance as heirs first in Yajnavalkya's enunciations. Mr. Borradaile, in the first volume of his Reports of the Bombay

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

Sudder Dewany Adalut Decisions, has given a translation of the Index to the Mitakshara which furnishes a general idea of the scheme of this great and important work of Hindu Law. It consists of two books: the first called the Acharadhyaya "On Established Rules of Conduct or Ordinances"; the second the Vyavaharadhyaya "On the Laws and Customs of the People." Both books, however, are so inter-related that the rules of the one can scarcely be construed without reference to the other.

It is to be noted that in the Vyavastha-Chandrika, the Book on "Established Rules of Conduct" is cited as the Acharadhyaya ("Chapter on Established Rules of Conduct"), whilst in the decisions of the Indian Courts and recent works on Hindu Law, it is referred to under the name of the Achara-kanda ("Division or Part relating to Established Rules of Conduct").

In the third chapter of the Achara kanda, Vijnaneswara lays down the rules relating to the forbidden degrees of kindred, and here he defines his theory of relationship. A translation of this passage is to be found in the "Digest of Hindu Law,"* by West and Bühler, and also in the judgment of the Bombay High Court in Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1) which came on appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and was affirmed by this Board: Lallubhai v Cassibai (2).

That passage runs thus:—

"He should marry a girl who is non-sapinda (with himself). She is called his sapinda who has (particles of) the body (of some ancestor, &c.), in common (with him). Non sapinda means not his sapinda. Such a one (he should marry). Sapinda-relationship arises between two people through their being connected by particles of one body. Thus the son stands in sapinda relationship to his father because of particles of his father's body having entered (his). In like (manner stands the grandson in sapinda relationship) to his paternal grandfather and the rest, because through his father particles of his (grandfather's) body have entered into (his own) Just so is (the son a sapinda relation), of his mother, because particles of his mother's body have entered (into his). Likewise (the grandson stands in sapinda relationship) to his maternal grandfather and the rest through his mother. So also (is the nephew) a sapinda relation of his maternal aunts and uncles, and the rest, because particles of the same body (the paternal grandfather) have entered into (his and theirs); likewise (does he stand in sapinda relationship with paternal uncles and aunts, and the rest. So also the wife and the husband (are sapinda relations to each other), because they together beget one body (the son). In like manner brother's wives also are (sapinda relations to each other), because they produce one body (the son), with those (severally) who have sprung from one body (i.e, because they bring forth sons by their union with the offspring of one person, and thus their husband's father is the common bond which connects them). Therefore one ought to know that whenever the word sapinda is used, there exists (between the persons to whom it is applied) a connection with one body, either immediately or by descent."

Then after refuting certain objections to his explanation of the word sapinda, Vijnaneswara proceeds thus:—

"In the explanation of the word 'asapindam' (non-sapinda, verse 52), it has been said that sapinda relation arises from the circumstance that particles of one body have entered into (the bodies of the persons thus related) either immediately or through (transmission by) descent. But inasmuch as (this definition) would be too wide, since such a relationship exists in the eternal circle of births, in some manner or other, between all men, therefore the author (Yajnavalkya) says:—

Verse 53: "After the fifth ancestor on the mother's and after the seventh on the fathers side."—"On the mother's side in the mother's line, after the fifth, on the father's side in the father's line, after the seventh (ancestor) the sapinda relationship

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388 (1876).
(2) L. R. 7 I. A. 212 (1880).

* Volume I, page 120.

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

ceases; these latter two words must be understood; and therefore the word sapinda, which on account of its (etymological) import (connected by having in common) particles (of one body) would apply to all men, is restricted in its signification, just as the word pankaja (which etymologically means 'growing in the mud,' and therefore would apply to all plants growing in the mud, designates the lotus only) and the like; and thus the six descendants, beginning with the son, and one's self (counted) as the seventh (in each case), are sapinda relations."†

The rendering of the above passages by Pandit Rajkumar Sarvadhikari though apparently more free is certainly instructive and interesting, and deserves quotation as showing what a learned Hindu scholar considered was in the mind of Vijnaneswara when defining the word sapinda.

"The Mitakshara then explains the following words in the next verse of Yajnavalkya, beyond the fifth and seventh degrees on the mother's side and the father's side respectively.

It has been already explained, that the relation of sapinda exists by reason of the connection of the parts of the same body, both directly and indirectly. But such a relationship is possible everywhere, in some way or other, between all men in this wide, wide world without a beginning. So the definition would be too wide. It is for this reason that the sage limits it thus, 'Beyond the fifth, &c.'

The meaning is 'on the mother's side', i.e, in the line of the mother, after the fifth degree: 'on the father's side,' i.e., in the line of the father, after the seventh degree the relation of sapinda ceases.

Although the word sapinda, therefore, may be applied in its etymological sense almost to all men, it is, there can be no doubt, limited in its signification to certain definite individuals, just as the word mud-born is applied only to a lotus.

Thus the father and the other ascendants are six sapindas; and the son and the other descendants are six; and the man himself is the seventh. In case of the division of a line also, the enumeration should be made until the seventh degree, commencing from whence the direction of the line changes. This rule should be applied in every case."*

Their Lordships have no manner of doubt that in the passages quoted above, Vijnaneswara was laying down rules for the limitation of sapinda relationship generally.

It has been suggested in argument that this limitation is with regard to marriage only; that it defines the prohibited degrees within which a man cannot marry. A similar contention was put forward in Lallubhai v. Mankuvarbai (1). The observations on this point of the learned Judges, one of whom was the distinguished jurist Mr. Justice West (co-author of the Digest, and afterwards Sir Raymond West), appear to their Lordships as extremely apposite to the present case.

Chief Justice Westropp in that case at p. 426, said as follows:—

"It has been contended for the Plaintiffs that in the above extracts from the Achara-kanda and the Sanskara-mayukha the respective authors were dealing with sapinda relationship in its ceremonial aspect only, and that when they wrote upon sapinda relationship with reference to inheritance they may be regarded as viewing sapinda relationship in the same light as the author of the Dayabhaga and certain other commentators on Hindu Law. But we think that the burden rests upon the Plaintiffs to show that Vijnaneswara and Nilkantha regarded sapinda relationship as resting on a different basis for the purpose of inheritances from that on which, dogmatically perhaps, but most distinctly, the one has placed it in the Achara-kanda and the other in the Sanskara-mayukha. We do not think that the learned counsel for the Plaintiffs has given any good reason for assuming that the authors intended to make any such difference, nor is it likely that they did.

The religious and ceremonial law of the Hindus as prevailing amongst castes, or in particular

(1) I. L. R. 2 Bom. 388 (1876).

† West and Bühler, Vol. I, p. 102.

* Sarvadhikari's Tagore Law Lectures, p. 608.

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

localities, is generally speaking, almost inseparably blended with their law of succession in the same castes or localities, an opposite condition being exceptional."

As a matter of fact, as Messrs. West and Bühler point out, Vijnaneswara expressly says "wherever the word sapinda is used, there exists (between the persons to whom it is applicable) a connection with one body either immediately or by descent."

In Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) the learned Judges of the Full Bench (one of whom was a Hindu Judge of great eminence) express themselves on this point in the following terms :—

"Having taken great pains in accurately defining the word sapinda in the beginning of his work, and having said in clear words in the passage in question that 'one ought to know that wherever the word sapinda is used, there exists (between the persons to whom it is applied) a connection with one body either immediately or by descent,' it is hardly reasonable to suppose that the author used the word in another part of the same work in a different sense It is a well understood rule of construction amongst the authors of the Institute of Hindu Law, that the same word must be taken to have been used in one and the same sense throughout a work unless the contrary is expressedly indicated."

Nor have the learned counsel for the Appellants been in a position in this case to refer to any authority excepting one, which their Lordships will notice later on, in support of their proposition that the limitations of Vijnaneswara on sapinda relationship are confined to marriage, impurity and exequial rites, and do not relate to inheritance.

The law of inheritance in the Mitakshara, translated by Mr. Colebrooke, occurs in Book II, and forms Chap. VI of that part of the work. It is entitled "dayavibhaga," or "partition of heritage." It is unnecessary to refer to Chap. I of Mr. Colebrooke's Translation, or to the earlier sections of Chap. II, as they deal with subjects which do not come within the purview of this judgment. It is with secs. V, VI and VII of Chap. II that their Lordships are principally concerned. The rendering of the word sapinda as "relations connected by funeral oblations" runs throughout Mr. Colebrooke's Translation. His arrangement of the matter is also different from the original where the subject of inheritance appears to be dealt with in a consecutive form in Chap. VI.

Mr. Colebrooke has split it up into two chapters, divided into sections. (This circumstance is noticed in the Bombay judgment.) Sec. V, Chap. II (in Mr. Colebrooke's Translation), deals with the succession of the gotraja, on failure of "brother's sons." Although gotraja is explained by the term gentiles borrowed from the Roman system, to which no doubt the Hindu system bears a remarkable analogy, it would be more convenient to adhere to the definition given in the Mitakshara itself. Omitting the English equivalents introduced into the Translation, and retaining the Sanskrit expressions, the paragraphs run as follows :—

"3. On failure of the paternal grandmother, gotraja-sapindas, namely, the paternal grandfather and the rest, inherit the estate.

"For bhinna-gotra sapindas are indicated by the term bandhu.

"4. Here, on failure of the father's descendants, the heirs are successively the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather, the uncles and their sons.

"5. On failure of the paternal grandfather's line, the paternal great-grandmother, the great-grandfather, his sons and their issue inherit In this manner must be understood the succession of the samana-gotra sapindas.

"6. If there be none such, the succession devolves on samanodakas, and they must be understood to reach the seven degrees beyond sapindas, or else as far as the limit of knowledge and name extend. Accordingly, Vrihat Manu says—'The relation of the sapindas ceases with the seventh person, and that of samanodakas extends to the fourteenth degree, or, as some affirm, it reaches as far as the memory of birth and name extends. This is 'signified by gotra.'"

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 at p. 126 (1880).

Their Lordships have preferred to adopt for the purposes of this Judgment the translation which was before this Board in Lallubhai's case (2).

It is to be observed that the rule in paragraph 3 is thus stated in the *Viramitrodaya—"On failure of the paternal grandmother, the paternal grandfather and the other sapindas of the same gotra are heirs, since the sapindas (or persons connected through the pinda or body) of a different gotra are included under the term bandhu or 'cognates.'"

The earliest expounders appear sometimes to have used the term bandhu to signify a sapinda without any idea of including cognates. This is clear from a passage of the Viramitrodaya†, where, after quoting the rule as to the succession of collaterals given by Vishnu who places the bandhus immediately after brother's sons, it says as follows :—"Here the term bandhu (kinsman) signifies a sapinda, and the term sakulya (distant kinsman) means a sagotra, or one descended from a common ancestor in the male line (other than a sapinda) ; if by the term bandhu the cognates of the father were comprised, then there would be a conflict with the order mentioned by Jogiswara, "the Contemplative Saint,", i.e., Yajnavalkya. Yajnavalkya himself employs the expression indiscriminately in various places to signify connections and friends. But in Chap. II of his Dharmasastram, he distinctly introduces bandhus as acquiring a heritable right on failure of the gotraja. The passage in Rao Vishwanath Mandlik's translation* is as follows :—"The wife, daughters, both parents, brothers, and likewise their sons, gotrajas (gentiles), bandhus (cognates), a pupil and a fellow-student. Of these, on failure of the preceding, the next following in order is heir to the estate of one who has departed for heaven leaving no putra (lineal male descendants)."

Learned counsel for the Respondents urges that this inclusion of bandhus or cognates forms a marked extension of the right of inheritance to people who until then were not regarded as heirs, and he contends that it is hardly likely, this remarkable change should have been made without any limitation, considering that the sapinda relationship was subject to a limit.

To determine how far this contention is well-founded, it is necessary to examine a little more closely the doctrines of the Mitakshara relating to the succession of collaterals. Vijnaneswara in reality seems to have shaped the rules which govern this branch of the law of inheritance in force in the Benares school. In paragraph 3, sec. V (Colebrooke's Translation) in describing the gotraja sapinda or consanguineous relations sprung from the same stock, he emphasises the fact of their being members of the same family by the specific statement that the sapindas belonging to a different family (gotra)—the bhinna gotra—are included under the designation of bandhus. This is clearly borne out by the passage of the Viramitrodaya already referred to. Henceforth

(2) L. R. 7 I. A. 212 (1880).

* Shastri Golapchandra Sarkar's Translation page 199.

† Ibid, page 142.

* Page 220.

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

the word bandhu, therefore, has, in the system of the Mitakshara, a distinctive and technical meaning, in other words it signifies the bhinna-gotra sapindas.

In paragraph 5 for the word gotraja-sapinda is substituted the more definite term of samana-gotra sapinda. With regard to this Messrs. West and Bühler observe that "The substitution of samâna-gotra for gotraja, as well as the employment of bhinna-gotra to designate the opposite of the term, both show that Vijnaneswara took gotraja in the sense of belonging to the same family." Commenting on the passage relating to the succession of the gotraja sapinda, the Viramitrodaya, which is regarded as one of the most important commentaries on the Mitakshara, says "similarly to the seventh (degree) the sapindas of the same gotra take the estate of a person without male issue."*

This limitation of the seventh degree appears in Yajnavalkya's Institutes, Chap. I, paras. 52, 53, in these words :—"A man should marry a girl . . . . who is not a sapinda of him . . . . who is descended from one whose gotra and pravara are different from him ; and who is removed five degrees on the mother's and seven on the father's side."† The comment of Vijnaneswara on this text of Yajnavalkya has already been given in extenso in a previous part of this judgment, but the following lines may be quoted again with advantage :—"On the mother's side, in the mother's line after the fifth, on the father's side, in the father's line, after the seventh (ancestor) the sapinda-relationship ceases."‡

* See p. 199.

† Rao Vishwanath Mandlik's Transl., p. 167.

‡ West and Bühler, p. 119; Mayne's Hindu Law (7th ed.), p. 691, para. 516.

The translation by Golapchandra Shastri of the passage, in which these words occur, is important, as he is the authority on whose expositions the Appellants chiefly rely. It runs thus :—

"While explaining the term non-sapinda, the sapinda relationship is stated to be directly or mediately through connection with one body, but that relationship of all persons may, in one way or other, be traced with all other persons in this world of eternal transmigrations of the soul with its minute body, and so it would include persons that are not intended to be included; hence it is ordained :—

'and is beyond the fifth and seventh from the mother and from the father (respectively).'

"The purport is, that sapinda relationship ceases beyond the fifth from the mother, i e., in the mother's line, and beyond the seventh from the father, i e., in the father's line."*

It is quite clear, therefore, that the limitation of the seventh degree with regard to the samana-gotra sapindas given by Mitra Misra in the Viramitrodaya is taken from the rule enunciated by Vijnaneswara on Yajnavalkya in the Achara kanda in respect of the cessation of sapinda-relationship.

Now, a bhinna-gotra sapinda is a bandhu according to Vijnaneswara. The classification contained in section VI, chapter II (Colebrooke's Translation) shows clearly who the bandhus are whom Vijnaneswara treats as bhinna-gotra sapindas entitled to succession on failure of the gotraja. The passage as translated by Mr. Colebrooke runs thus :—

"1. On failure of gentiles, the cognates are heirs. Cognates are of three kinds—related to the person himself, to his father, or to his mother, as is declared by the following text. 'The sons of his own father's sister, sons of his own mother's sister, and the sons of his own maternal uncle must be considered as his own cognate kindred. The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt and the sons of his father's maternal

* Hindu Law, p. 54.

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

uncles must be deemed his mother's cognate kindred. The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, of his mother's maternal aunt, and the sons of his mother's maternal uncle must be reckoned his mother's cognate kindred.'

"2. Here, by reason of near affinity, the cognate kindred of the deceased himself are his successors in the first instance, on failure of them, his father's cognate kindred, or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred. This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended."

Here Mr. Colebrooke renders the word gotraja into gentiles, and bandhus into cognates. He also paraphrases the three classes under which Vijnaneswara groups the technical bandhus, viz, the atma-bandhus, the pitri-bandhus and the matri-bandhus as "cognates related to the person himself, to his father, or to his mother."

Their Lordships have little doubt reading these passages by the light of the comments in the Viramitrodaya,* that Vijnaneswara was using the term bandhu in a restricted and technical sense, as implying a relation belonging to a different family but united by sapinda relationship. In fact he expressly says so (paragraph 3, section V, chap. II).

It is not disputed that the Plaintiffs do not come within the three categories mentioned above. But it is urged on the authority of Gridari Lall Roy v. The Bengal Government (4) that the enumeration is not exhaustive but merely illustrative.

In that case the question for decision was whether a maternal uncle not being specifically included in the enumeration of bandhus in the Mitakshara was excluded from succession. Answering that proposition in the negative, and holding that although not expressly mentioned, he was entitled to succeed as a bandhu, this Board observed that the text did not purport to be an exhaustive enumeration of all bandhus "who are capable of inheriting," nor was it cited as such for that purpose by the author; and that it was used simply as a proof or illustration of his proposition that there are three kinds or classes of bandhus. These remarks hardly warrant the contention, which is attempted to be based on them, that the classes specified by Vijnaneswara can be added to.

In the present case, however, it does not seem necessary to their Lordships to enter upon the determination of the question whether the classes can be extended, for the point at issue can be decided on other grounds.

The limitation of five degrees clearly applies, and can only apply, to the bhinna-gotra sapindas. But it is contended that this limitation is confined to prohibition in respect of marriage. As has already been observed, a part of the limitation appears to have been applied to the succession of samana-gotra sapindas; their Lordships are unable to see on what principle can it be said that the other part relative to kinsmen, who are equally sapindas but belong to a different gotra or genus, must be restricted to matrimonial affinity.

Considerable reliance has been placed on the statement of the law by Shastri Golapchandra Sarkar in his work on Hindu Law. Great respect is due to the opinions of that learned lawyer. But it seems to their Lordships that their weight is considerably discounted by his desire, in order to prevent the deceased's property becoming so to speak derelict and thus escheating to the Crown, to bring in the caste-people of the deceased also

(4) 12 M. I. A. 448 (1868).

* P. 200.

RAMCHANDRA MARTAND WAIKAR v. VINAYAK VENKATESH KOTHEKAR.

as bandhus, and the somewhat uncertain note of his conclusion*, where he says :—

"The conclusion, therefore, which appears to legitimately follow from the foregoing consideration, is, that the word bandhu in the Mitakshara means and includes either all cognate relations without any restriction, or at any rate, all cognates within seven degrees on both the father's as well as on the mother's side."

Again, his attempt to widen the signification of the word sapinda by employing the English equivalent of relation does not seem to be supported by the definition of sapinda relationship in the Mitakshara itself.

Reference has also been made to certain passages in Rao Vishwanath Mandlik's valuable work, in which he says that the sapinda relationship for inheritance is not always the same as for marriage or impurity (arising from birth or death). That may or may not be ; but in one part of his work to which the Judicial Commissioner has referred in his judgment, the learned translator of Yajnavalkya distinctly says that sapinda connection in general is "co extensive with that for marriage purposes." Nor in this connection, their Lordships think, can the following passage in the Viramitrodaya be overlooked.

"And the text--'The sapinda relationship, how ever, ceases in the seventh generation '—is to be explained consistently with the text of Yajnavalkya, namely, after the fifth and the seventh from the mother and the father (respectively) to mean that it remains in the seventh but ceases in the eighth generation Hence, as in the case of the unmarried females, the sapinda relationship extending over three generations, as is declared in the chapter on impurity occasioned by death, &c.,) is considered to be with reference to that alone, so it is to be deemed that this sapinda relationship (extending to the fourth degree) is relative to succession alone."†

In the absence of any authoritative text their Lordships do not see their way merely on abstract reasoning to displace a view of the law which has received the recognition of the Courts in India, and which the District Judge, an officer of great experience and learning, says is accepted by "public opinion." As has already been observed, the right of inheritance is founded on sapinda relationship, which, under the Mitakshara, means consanguinity, in a distinct legal sense clearly explained by the author. This bond comes to an end with the fifth degree when the descent is through a female. It seems difficult to conceive that the right to inherit should continue after the relationship on which it is founded, and which gives it birth, has come to an end.

In the case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3) one of the tests employed for determining whether the Defendant in that case was a sapinda of the propositus was the mutuality of sapinda relationship. The doctrine of mutuality is based on the rule enunciated by Manu, and is fully explained by Rajkumar Sarvadhikari in his Lectures at page 690. Another well known Hindu writer of the present day speaks thus of the above rule :—

"It is to be observed here that the wealth of a sapinda is taken by his nearest sapinda, according to the well known text of Manu. From that text it follows that the relation of sapindaship must be mutual Among agnates the relation of sapindaship is always mutual, but among cognates it is not so in a few cases. In order to determine whether any persons are heritable cognates of the propositus 'it is necessary to see whether they are related as sapindas to each other :' Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3). Unless sapindaship is mutual, one cannot be the heir of the other."*

(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 (1880).

* Viramitrodaya, page 157.
† Page 74.

* Commentary on Hindu Law by J. N. Bhattacharya, page 459

In Babu Lal v. Nankuram (5) the rule of the Mitakshara enunciated in the Achara-kanda relative to sapinda-relationship in respect of marriage is assumed as applicable to inheritance. In fact the judgment proceeds on that basis; and the order of sapinda-relationship with its limitations in Rajkumar Sarvadhikari's Tagore Law Lectures is adopted as representing a correct exposition of the Mitakshara law. The doctrine of mutuality is also explained in clear terms :—

"Again, a sapinda of the propositus to be capable of inheriting must satisfy a further condition, namely, that he must be so related to the propositus, that the propositus is also a sapinda of him either directly or through the father or the mother. This mutuality of sapinda relationship between the propositus and his heritable sapindas is assumed as a necessary condition in the case of Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand (3), and the authority for this is to be found in the text of Manu (chapter IX. 187) cited in the Mitakshara, chapter II, section III, verse 3, as interpreted by Balambhatta and Visweswara Bhatta, the two leading commentators on the Mitakshara. The text according to these commentators means this—the property of a near sapinda shall be that of a near sapinda. From this it is clear that a man in order to be a heritable sapinda of the propositus must be so related to him that they are sapindas of each other"

These two decisions of the Calcutta High Court have been challenged on the ground that they represent Dayabhaga views rather than the doctrines of the Mitakshara. To their Lordships the objection seems hypothetical and without any basis excepting the criticisms of Golapchandra Shastri. One of the learned Judges who decided Babu Lal's case (5) was the distinguished Judge and erudite Sanskrit scholar, Mr. Justice Gurudas Banerjee, who was not likely to allow his mind to be confused by Dayabhaga conceptions in determining a case under the Mitakshara law.

The general conclusion to which a close examination of the authorities leads their Lordships may be briefly stated as follows : (a) that the sapinda relationship, on which the heritable right of collaterals is founded, ceases in the case of the bhinna-gotra sapinda with the fifth degree from the propositus ; (b) that in order to entitle a man to succeed to the inheritance of another he must be so related to the latter that they are sapindas of each other, which is only a paraphrase of Manu's rule.

In the present case the Plaintiffs are Lakshman Rao's paternal grandfather's son's son's daughter's daughter's sons. They are his bhinna-gotra beyond the fifth degree, and, as the District Judge points out, the element of mutuality is wanting between them and Lakshman Rao.

Two considerations were strongly pressed on behalf of the Appellants to induce their Lordships to extend the application of the sapinda relation in the case of bandhus beyond the fifth degree mentioned in the Mitakshara. It was urged that it is hardly likely, Vijnaneswara would give a right of inheritance to a spiritual preceptor or guru before kinsmen, however remotely connected. This argument appears to ignore the peculiar and intimate relationship which their Lordships understand exists in the Hindu system between the pupil and the guru who has to initiate him into the mysteries of the Vedic laws and rites, and under whose roof he has to pass many years of his life. It is easy to suppose that in such circumstances the mystical relationship between a spiritual preceptor and a pupil should be regarded as creating a far closer tie than remote relationship of blood.

As regards the other consideration which

(5) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339 (1894).
(3) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119 (1880).

is based on the possibility of the Crown becoming a claimant in the presence of remote bhinna-gotra, their Lordships need only observe that whether such a claim would be justified or even be likely to be advanced, it does not seem necessary to express an opinion in the present case.

Here the Defendant is in possession of Lakshman Rao's estate claiming as heir to his wife, Lakshman Rao's daughter. The Plaintiffs' suit is an action in ejectment, and they must, in order to succeed, strictly prove their title.

It is a matter of satisfaction to their Lordships that they find themselves in complete agreement with the learned Judges in the Courts below. The District Judge is himself a Hindu, versed in Sanskrit, and has examined the authorities in original. His decision is entitled to great weight and consideration.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that this Appeal should be dismissed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Appellants must pay the costs of this appeal.

Solicitor: Mr. Edward Dalgado for the Appellants.

Solicitors. Messrs. T. L. Wilson and Co. for the Respondents.

B. D. Appeal dismissed with costs.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 396 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914,
Heard,
30, April.
Judgment,
5, May.

NARSING CHARAN MAHAPATRA, Petitioner,
v.
THE KING EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 336—Doing an act endangering human life or the safety of others—Temple resorted to by pilgrims on festive occasions—Duty of person in charge to ensure safety of pilgrims attending by license and invitation.

The Petitioner was the lessee of a certain temple from some of the shebaits and was the general manager of all of them. It appeared that on a certain day in the year pilgrims and others in large numbers visited this temple. Close by the gate leading from an outer courtyard into the inner temple there was a well which was surrounded by a masonry platform 1½ to 2 feet high and the ring or parapet of the well stood again about 1 foot above the platform. Early at night on the day of the congregation of pilgrims, an accident having occurred, the Petitioner at the instance of the Police-officer in charge had a light placed on or near the one foot parapet, but at a later hour the Petitioner had the light removed and thereafter between 1 and 2 A.M. while the people were again entering into the inner temple a boy who had no previous knowledge of the well and in the darkness could not see it fell into it.

Held—That the facts constituted an offence within the meaning of sec. 336, I. P. C.

That on the occasion of the festival in question the temple becomes a place of public resort, and it was the bounden duty of the Petitioner as the person in charge to take all reasonable precautions necessary to ensure the safety of those crowding thither by his license and invitation.

This was a Rule granted on the 9th of March 1914 against the order of J. C. Brahma, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Jajpur, dated the 13th January 1914, convicting the Petitioner of an offence under sec. 336, I. P. C., and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 50, an application for the revision of which order was summarily rejected by A. E. Scroope, Esq., Sessions Judge of Cuttack, on the 29th January 1914.

NARSING CHARAN MAHAPATRA v. THE KING EMPEROR.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Upendra Kumar Roy for the Petitioner.

No one for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case the Petitioner has been convicted under sec. 336 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

It appears that in Jajpur in the district of Cuttack, there is a temple known as the Biroja Temple, and that year by year on the Ashtami day pilgrims and others in large numbers visit this temple in order to view the deity therein enthroned and present offerings. There are a number of shebaits, and the Petitioner, it appears, has taken a lease from some of them having a 10-anna interest and for the last few years has been the general manager of all.

Close by the gate leading from an outer courtyard into the chief or inner temple known as the Thakurani temple, there is a well. The well is surrounded by a masonry platform 1½ to 2 feet high, and the ring or parapet of the well stands again about 1 foot above the platform. The well is otherwise unprotected.

On the last Ashtami day, the 8th of October 1913, at about 8 or 9 P.M. while the Police officers on duty were controlling the rush of people seeking entrance into the Thakurani's temple, a man named Dhroba Prusti fell into the well. Thereupon at the instance of the Sub-Inspector-in-charge, the Petitioner had a light placed on or near the one-foot parapet. It has then been found that at a later hour, the Petitioner had the light removed and that thereafter between 1 and 2 A.M. while the people were again crowding into the Thakurani's temple, a boy named Gananath Panda fell in the well. He had no previous knowledge of the well and in the darkness could not see it.

On these facts the Petitioner, who it has been found was in charge of the arrangements, has been convicted under sec. 336, i. e., of doing an act so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life or safety and has been sentenced, as we have already stated, to pay a fine of Rs. 50.

On his behalf it is contended that the facts found do not constitute an offence within the meaning of the section.

We are unable to accede to this contention. On the occasion of the festival in question, the temple, it is clear, becomes a place of public resort, and it was the bounden duty of the Petitioner as the person in charge to take all reasonable precautions necessary to ensure the safety of those crowding thither by his license and invitation. The well in question stands by the path which the pilgrims must necessarily take in order to reach the shrine which they had come to visit, and in omitting to enclose the well, in omitting even to indicate its position by lights, and lastly in removing the light placed near the well at the instance of the officers on duty, it appears to us, the Petitioner acted with gross negligence and thereby endangered the safety of large numbers.

The Rule is accordingly discharged.

Rule discharged.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 539 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914,
21, May.

MOHESWARI PROSHAD SINGH, Petitioner,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 180—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec 411—Theft within British territory—Retention of stolen articles outside British territory—British Courts if have jurisdiction to try accused for such retention of stolen articles.

The accused was found in possession of stolen articles at a place outside British territory. The theft of the articles took place within British territory. The accused was placed on his trial before the Court in British territory having jurisdiction over the place where the theft took place :

Held—That the British Courts had no jurisdiction to try the accused for an offence under sec. 411, I. P. C., committed at a place beyond British territory with regard to the stolen properties.

This was a Rule granted on the 3rd April 1914, against the proceedings taken against the Petitioner under sec. 411, I. P. C., pending trial in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Singbhum.

The Petitioner was a land-holder and a dealer in lac, a subject of the Feudatory State of Kharsawan.

In January 1914, the Railway Sub-Inspector of Jharsuguda, District Sambalpur, submitted a report before Babu Bhabadeb Sarkar, Deputy Magistrate, Chaibassa, alleging that on the 21st November 1910. the Postmaster of Panposh committed criminal breach of trust with respect to 3 Government currency notes of Rs. 100 each which were presentted for registration. The cover was addressed to one Sewmull Japarmal of ...r, was duly registered at Panposh Post-office, duly enclosed in the mail-bag and despatched to the railway station. But the mail sorter when he opened the bag found the cover in question missing, and reported that to the Postmaster. Enquiries were made by the Postal authority, but no clue was obtained. Of the 3 notes, one $\frac{7a}{9}$ 33697 was presented at the Currency office at Calcutta, on 7th June 1912. On getting this information, the Sub-Inspector of Jharsuguda took up investigation and traced the notes thus: Sham Lal Sen of Sonapati, Burrabazar, received it from Ram Chunder Kar, who received it from Hari Pratihari of Saraikella who admitted having got it from Khettra Mohan Shaw of Burudoli who again said he had got it from Petitioner through Raghu Pratihari at Burudoli in Kharsawan.

The Petitioner stated that he knew nothing of the said note, but he sent to Khettra Mohan Shaw through Raghu on the date alleged another G. C. note $\frac{a}{88}$ 73974 for buying lac.

Thereafter in January 1914, Petitioner received a summons under sec. 411. I. P. C.

Babu B. Misra, Deputy Magistrate, took up the case and examined witnesses.

The Petitioner objected that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case as the alleged receiving or retaining did not take place in British India, but the Magistrate disallowed the objection Against this, the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained this Rule.

Babu Bir Bhusan Dutt for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmad for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This was a Rule calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Singbhum to show cause why the proceedings described in the application should not be quashed on the ground that the British Courts had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of retention of stolen articles outside British India. The Deputy Commissioner was further requested to inform this Court whether Panposh or rather the Post-office buildings at Panposh were or were not within British territory.

MOHESHWARI PROSHAD SINGH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

It is admitted that the village Panposh is not within British territory excepting a certain portion of it which comprises the premises of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Co. It is also admitted that Kharsawan, the place where the Petitioner resides, is beyond British territory. The offence under sec. 411, I. P. C, is said to have been committed by the Petitioner at Kharsawan which is beyond British territory. The question therefore is whether the Petitioner who has not been prosecuted for theft, but for having been found in Kharsawan in possession of stolen articles, can be tried by the British Courts.

An explanation has been submitted by the learned Deputy Commissioner in which he refers to a certain Government notification in one of the Gazettes of the new province of Bihar and Orissa by which it is declared that a certain portion of Panposh was made subject to the jurisdiction of British Courts. It has been contended that the theft having taken place within the Post-office buildings which are situated within British territory, the offence under sec. 411 should be considered to be an offence which can be tried in British territory although the Petitioner was found retaining the property in question at Kharsawan which is beyond British territory. In support of this view, illustration (b) of sec. 180, Cr. P. C., has been relied upon. It is contended that under that section the accused can be tried in a British Court for having been found in possession of the stolen articles at Kharsawan which is beyond British territory. But we are of opinion that we cannot extend the operation of the Criminal Procedure Code beyond British territory. Kharsawan is certainly beyond British territory, and British Courts have got no jurisdiction to try the Petitioner for an offence under sec. 411 committed there with regard to the stolen properties in question.

In connection with this, the learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer has drawn our attention to a Bombay case* which was a case of dacoity committed in the dominions of the Gaekwar. Some people were found in possession of some properties, the subject of that dacoity at Bombay. The question was whether these men could be tried for dacoity at Bombay. It was held that the dacoity having been committed in the dominions of Gaekwar, these men could not be tried by British Court for committing dacoity, but they could be tried under sec. 411, I. P. C., by any Court at Bombay for having been found in possession there of the stolen property. The present case is quite different. It is an offence under sec. 411, I. P. C, committed beyond British territory. In the Bombay case the offence under sec. 411 was committed within British territory and thereupon it was held in the Bombay case that the accused could be tried in any of the Bombay Courts.

We therefore quash the proceedings and make the Rule absolute.

The Petitioner will now be discharged from his bail.

Rule made absolute.

---

* Reg v. Lakhya Govind, I. L. R. 1 Bom 50 (1875).

(CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.)

REV. No. 715 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J. TEUNON, J. 1914, 16, June.	ACHAMBIT MONDAL, Complainant, Petitioner, v. MOHATAB SINGH and others, Accused, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 247—Order of acquittal on account of Complainant's absence, passed on a date not fixed for hearing of case, effect of.

A case was called on by mistake on a date not fixed for hearing and the Magistrate recorded an order of acquittal under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., on account of the absence of the Complainant. On the date fixed for hearing the mistake was discovered and the Magistrate ignored the order previously passed by him under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., and went on with the case which ended in a conviction:

Held—That an order passed on a date which was not fixed for the hearing of the case and on which date the Complainant was necessarily absent is no order at all, and the trying Magistrate had jurisdiction to ignore it and go on with the case and come to the finding which he did.

H. C. PROCEEDINGS, No. 1793 (2) followed.

SURESH CHANDRA v. BANKU (1) distinguished.

This was a Rule granted on the 1st of May 1914, against an order passed on appeal by J. E Scott, Esq., Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur, dated the 31st of March 1914, acquitting, the accused who were convicted under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo one month's rigorous imprisonment each and to pay a fine of Rs. 20 by J. E. F. Pereira, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madhipura, on the 9th of March 1914.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babu Dwijendra Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Babu Monmotho Nath Mukerjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Petitioner in this case obtained a Rule from this Court calling upon the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur and also on the Opposite Party to show cause why the order of the Magistrate dated the 10th January 1914 and the order of the Sessions Judge dated the 31st March 1914 should not be set aside and such other order made as to this Court may seem fit on the ground that the order of the Magistrate dated the 10th January 1914 was so irregular as to amount to no trial at all.

The facts of the case are these: on the 12th December 1913 a complaint was made by the Petitioner against a certain number of persons. The date for the hearing as fixed by the Magistrate was the 16th January 1914, but it so happened that through some mistake or oversight on the part of the Magistrate's peskhar the case was called on for hearing on the 10th of January, i.e., six days before the date actually fixed for hearing. Of course on that date the Complainant was absent. The Magistrate thereupon passed an order acquitting the accused under sec. 247, Cr. P. C. On the 16th January, the case was again called on and then the mistake that was made on the 10th January, was discovered for the first time. The trying Magistrate ignored the order of acquittal passed on the 10th January and went on

(1) 2 C. L. J. 622 (1905).
(2) 2 Weir's Rep. 307 (1875).

ACHAMBIT MONDAL v. MOHATAB SINGH.

with the case. The case was taken up from time to time from the 16th January to the 9th March, witnesses were examined, arguments on both sides heard, and on the 9th of March 1914 the Magistrate convicted the accused and sentenced them each to one month's rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each. Thereupon the accused preferred an appeal to the Sessions Court. The learned Sessions Judge on the 31st March passed the following order: "Learned Sub-Divisional Officer by his order of acquittal dated the 10th January 1914 debarred himself from trying the accused. The reported case in Suresh Chandra v. Banku (1) is exactly parallel. The whole of the trial was therefore illegal, as no superior Court was moved to revive the case. I set aside the conviction and sentence and order that the accused be acquitted. The fine, if paid, will be refunded to Appellant."

On the above facts the first question that arises is whether the order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Divisional Officer professedly under sec. 247, Cr. P. C., on the 10th January 1914 was a legal order or a mere nullity. If it was a mere nullity, then the trying Magistrate could ignore that order, and ignoring that order could go on with the case which was fixed originally for the 16th and which was also called on for hearing on the 16th when the parties were present. As a matter of fact the trying Magistrate ignoring that order went on with the case, recorded evidence, heard the arguments and then convicted the accused on the 9th March. If it was a nullity, then the order of the learned Sessions Judge dated the 31st March 1914 cannot stand, because the learned Sessions Judge seems to be of opinion that so long as the order of acquittal passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 10th January is not set aside, it is a bar against the re-opening of the case by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate.

There is a case H. C. Proceedings, No. 1793 (2), the facts of which are similar to the facts of the present case. The reported case was fixed for hearing on the 17th August, on which date both the parties failed to appear. The Magistrate being at the time on circuit postponed the case on his own motion for the 18th, 19th and 20th August without any intimation being given to the parties. The parties having failed to appear on either of these days, the Magistrate on the 20th August dismissed the complaint for default on the part of the Complainant. On the 9th December following, the District Magistrate directed the Magistrate who dismissed the complaint to restore the case to the file and dispose of it in due course. The matter went up to the Madras High Court. It appeared to that High Court that the proceedings of the trying Magistrate were so substantially irregular as to amount to no trial at all, and it was held that in this view the dismissal of the complaint could not be held to operate as an acquittal. This is a clear authority on the point that an order passed on a date which was not fixed for the hearing and on which date the Complainant was necessarily absent is no order at all. If it is a nullity, the trying Magistrate had jurisdiction to go on with the case and to come to the finding which he did. The Sessions Judge relies upon the case of Suresh Chandra v. Banku (1). The facts of that case are

(1) 2 C. L. J. 622 (1905).

(2) 2 Weir's Rep. 869 (1879).

(1) 2 C. L. J. 622 (1905).

ACHAMBIT MONDAL v. MOHATAB SINGH.

quite different from the facts of the present case. In this reported case, the Complainant was absent on the date fixed for hearing and the Magistrate acquitted the accused under sec. 247, Cr. P. C. He strictly followed the law. In such a case the order cannot be treated as a nullity. This being our view, we are of opinion that the order of the learned Sessions Judge dated the 31st March 1914 should be set aside and we set it aside accordingly and direct that the Appeal be re-heard on the merits.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

GOVT. APP. NO. 2 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1914,
8, June.

THE DEPUTY SUPERINTENDENT AND REMEMBRANCER OF LEGAL AFFAIRS, BENGAL, Appellant,
v.
SITAL CHANDRA PAL and ors., Respondents.

Provident Insurance Societies Act (V of 1912), sec. 2, sub-sec. (8), secs. 6, 21—Registration if necessary of company with its share-capital divided into shares.

A company under the name and style of the New King Insurance Co., Ld., was started for the purpose of carrying on business as a provident insurance society. Two of the directors of the company were prosecuted for having failed to apply for registration under sec. 6 of the Provident Insurance Societies Act of 1912 and thereby having committed an offence under sec. 21 of the Act. The Chief Presidency Magistrate acquitted the accused on the ground that the company was one which had its share-capital divided into shares and the provisions of the Act did not apply to such a company:

Held (on appeal by the Local Government)—That the Provident Insurance Societies Act was intended to prevent a company from embarking in the business of life insurance unless and until it had been registered under the Act and sec. 2, sub-sec. (8) clearly lays down that whether the society already in existence is a corporate company before or whether its share-capital is divided into shares or not, registration under the Act is necessary before business can be carried on under the conditions laid down in the Act.

ORIENTAL GOVERNMENT SECURITY LIFE INSURANCE CO., LTD. v. ORIENTAL ASSURANCE CO., LTD. (1).

This was an Appeal preferred on the 20th March 1914 against an order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 20th September 1913, acquitting the Respondents of an offence punishable under sec. 21 of the provident insurance Societies Act (V of 1912).

A certain company called the New King Insurance Co., Ld., was started in Calcutta in 1913 for the purpose of carrying on business as a provident insurance society.

Two of the directors of the Company Sital Chandra and Surendra Nath were prosecuted for having failed to apply for registration under sec. 6 of Act V of 1912, and thereby having committed an offence under sec. 21 of the Act.

The two directors as also one B. P. Ghosh, secretary of the Company, and one Purna Chandra Ghosh, agent, were charged and prosecuted at the same time under sec. 7 of the Act for having received premiums without having the company registered and thereby having committed an offence punishable under sec. 21 of the Act.

(1) I. L. R. 40 Cal. 570 (1913).

The Chief Presidency Magistrate on the 20th September 1913 after hearing the case for the prosecution passed the following order :—

"The prosecution admits that the Defendant Company is a company which has its share-capital divided into shares. According to the finding in Oriental Govt. Security Life Assurance Co. v. Oriental Assurance Co. (1), the provisions of the Provident Insurance Societies Act of 1912 do not apply to such a company. Accused who are charged under that Act are therefore acquitted."

Against this order of acquittal the Local Government preferred this Appeal.

Mr. B. C. Mitter, Standing Counsel, for the Crown, Appellant.

Mr. N. C. Sen and Babu Hem Chandra Sen for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal preferred by the Government against an order passed by the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, on the 20th September 1913, acquitting the Respondents Sital Chandra Pal, Surendra Nath Chowdhury, B. P. Ghosh and Purna Chandra Ghosh of an offence punishable under sec. 21 of the Provident Insurance Societies Act, V of 1912. That section provides that any provident insurance society which makes default in complying with any of the requirements of this Act and every director, manager or secretary or other officer or agent of the society who is knowingly a party to the default shall be punished with fine which may extend to five hundred rupees, etc.

The learned Presidency Magistrate, on an apparent misreading of the judgment of Mr. Justice Fletcher in the case of Oriental Government Security Life Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Oriental Assurance Co., Ltd. (1), thought that the Company in question called the New King Insurance Company, Ld., was not amenable to Act V of 1912, inasmuch as it was a company which had share-capital divided into shares. But this is obviously untenable upon the construction of the plain wording of the Act in sec 2, sub-cl. (8), where it is stated that a provident insurance society means any person or body of persons whether corporate or uncorporate which receives premiums or contributions for insuring money, etc. That clearly lays down that whether the society already in existence is a corporate company before or whether its share-capital is divided into shares or not, registration under the Provident Insurance Societies Act is necessary before business can be carried on under the conditions laid down in that Act. There is nothing in Mr. Justice Fletcher's judgment to the contrary. It appears that the legal advisers of the company were misled firstly by a remark which Fletcher, J., made in the course of the argument, and secondly by a passage in his judgment at p. 578. The remark was that the Defendant Company cannot be a provident insurance society, as a provident society is not incorporated under the Companies Act, but registered or inscribed under the Provident Insurance Societies Act. That is against the view taken by the Chief Presidency Magistrate; for what Fletcher, J., says is that a company incorporated under the Companies Act cannot be a provident insurance society by reason of its registration under the Companies Act, nor that any society may not be both a company and a provident insurance society: and again in the passage in his judgment at p. 578 what he says is that the company he was dealing with considered that by issuing policies not exceeding 500 rupees they can bring themselves under the heading of a provident insurance company and were entitled to carry on business untrammelled by the provisions of the law. This is not so, because under the Provident Insurance Societies Act registration has to be made subject to certain conditions which are set out in the Act and which have to be approved of by the Registrar, and these provisions do not apply to a company which has a share-capital divided into shares. In saying this he does not say that a company which wishes to carry on the business of a provident insurance company need not be registered under the Act, but he says that the conditions which are set out in the Act obviously do not apply to a company which has already complied with those conditions in its published prospectus under another Act, and what he is referring to is the form of the policy and he holds that so far from having complied with law they have simply tried to avoid the provisions of another Act, namely, the Indian Life Insurance Act of 1912 which were intended to prevent a company from embarking in the business of life insurance, unless and until they had the amount of cash that was necessary for them to deposit with the Governor-General in Council in order to meet their obligations. So in this case the Act V of 1912 which is before us was intended to prevent the company from embarking in the business of life insurance unless and until it had been registered under the Act. There seems to have been a misunderstanding and the learned Standing Counsel who appears for the Government does not press for anything more than a nominal penalty. But a mistake of law cannot take the Defendants out of the word "knowingly" in the section.

(1) I. L. R. 40 Cal. 570 (1913).

(1) I. L. R. 40 Cal. 570 (1913).

The order of acquittal must therefore be set aside and in lieu thereof the Respondents Nos. 1 to 3 will each be fined five rupees. The Respondent No. 4 Purna Chandra Ghosh against whom proceedings do not seem to have been pressed in the Court below will be exempted from this order.

We understand that the Society has already applied for registration, but that the Government has not yet made rules necessary to carry out the purposes of the Act, and in the circumstances we are of opinion that this conviction should make no difference whatever to the result of any such application.

Appeal allowed.

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, AUGUST 17, 1914. [No. 40.

Contents

NOTES.

Obituary.

We regret very much to record the untimely death of Mr. Dhannu Lal Agarwalla who was a very promising member amongst solicitors practising in the Calcutta High Court. He was the first amongst his community to take to the profession of law and in a comparatively short time made his mark in the profession. He was a man of culture and his excellent qualities made him not only popular amongst the members of the legal profession but also amongst the general public.

Suggested Amendment of sec. 114, I. P. C.

We have great pleasure in publishing in this issue a very valuable discussion of the abetment sections of the Indian Penal Code by the Hon'ble Sir H. L. Stephen in the course of which he reviews the legitimate scope of secs. 34 and 114 of the Indian Penal Code. Having regard to the great importance of these provisions and the difficulty in interpreting them, a full and elaborate discussion thereof cannot but be of great assistance to the Judiciary and the Legislature. The points raised in this valuable correspondence are also of historical and academic interest and as such will prove useful to students of law no less than to members of the legal profession. We invite the attention of our readers specially to his Lordship's observations on sec. 114, I. P. C., which in his Lordship's opinion should be repealed and re-enacted on the lines suggested. This section always presents considerable difficulty in its practical application and it requires a trained mind to understand the elements necessary to bring an offender within its four corners. The suggestion would, however, require very careful and mature consideration having regard to the fact that the section has stood the test of judicial scrutiny for half a century.

Prize Court at Calcutta.

We understand that a Prize Court will be constituted in the Admiralty Jurisdiction of the High Court at Fort William in the Presidency of Bengal. The Hon'ble the Chief Justice will preside over the Court. This Court will be competent to take cognizance of all captures, seizures and reprisals of all ships, vessels and goods which have been seized within, or after seizure brought within, the jurisdiction of the Court since the outbreak of war. The power of the Court extends to the condemnation of all such ships, vessels and goods of the enemy States or enemy subjects. But this jurisdiction will have to be exercised "judicially" and in accordance with the "law of nations" and the "statutes, orders of His Majesty in Council, rules and regulations" relating thereto. The Parliamentary Statute of 1864 gives an appeal to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in respect of adjudication by all His Majesty's Prize Courts in the Empire. Any British subject or the subject of a neutral State will have a right of appeal to the Privy Council, if he is aggrieved by any order of the Prize Court.

Trading with resident enemy subjects.

The Government of India ought to notify to the public whether the resident German and Austrian subjects have been given permission to reside. In the absence of any information in this connection, business-men in Calcutta are at a fix as to their right to deal with the alien enemy subjects. The Proclamations issued do not prohibit trading intercourse with resident Germans or Austrians but only commercial intercourse with the German Empire generally as also in respect of goods consigned to them or in their possession which may have been received from the enemy country. We pointed out in our last issue that German goods already paid for by British subjects will be considered as British goods but not so German and Austrian goods in the possession of alien enemy subjects. But the Proclamations are certainly no bar to the sale of indigenous or British goods to resident enemy subjects for their use and consumption in this country. Further when the resident enemy subjects have not been expressly ordered to leave the country, the implication of law is that all the incidents of licensed residence including the license to trade will attach to them. But sec. 83 of the Code of Civil Procedure contemplates the grant of express permission to reside, and if such permission is given, resident Germans and Austrians will not only be at liberty to engage in internal trade but even to sue in the British Indian Courts, and that introduces an element of uncertainty as to their liberty to engage even in internal trade. Trade can hardly be carried on without contracts and contracts with alien enemy subjects would be void. Trading with enemy subjects without express permission given to them to reside would thus be always risky. We have already said that obligations already entered into between British subjects and German and Austrian subjects prior to the declaration of war are not avoided altogether but only the right of suit during the war is suspended. But this is no bar to the British subjects claiming debts payable or obligations to be discharged by alien enemy subjects. Suits may be instituted against them for realization of debts or performance of their obligations.

Alien subjects if may be sued.

In our last issue we said that a great deal of complication may arise in the present state of war in respect of suits in our Courts against the alien enemy subjects. But in so saying we did not mean to imply that an alien enemy subject may not be sued at present in the Courts in British India. Although an alien enemy subject may not sue in our Courts without the sanction of the Sovereign, yet it must be noted that there is no bar to suits already instituted by them in our Courts proceeding during the pendency of the war. Only if processes have to be issued or any communications are to be held with the enemy country during the war, this cannot be done and the suits will have to be stayed. Next, if the alien enemy recovers a decree, the decretal amount may not be given to the alien enemy without reference to Government. There is a difference of opinion amongst text-writers as to the power of the Government to annex choses in action. But be that as it may, we have after careful consideration of the question of the right of a British subject to sue a resident alien enemy subject come to the conclusion that there is no legal bar to their being sued in this country. In fact, having regard to the provisions of the Limitation Act, it would certainly be the wiser course for British subjects who may have any debts owing from or claims preferable against any enemy subject to file suits against them. If owing to any complications such suits may not proceed, yet the bar of limitation will be saved by the filing of the plaints.

Limitation if should be suspended in respect of cause of action relating to enemy subjects.

All the same we would again urge upon the legislature in this country to make provision for the suspension of limitation in respect of suits by or against alien enemies during the pendency of war. As regards suits by alien enemies, it may be said, that we need not concern ourselves as to the bar of limitation running against them during the continuance of war which has been brought about by their own Sovereign. But we must not forget that in the ordinary course of commercial transactions there may be assignees for consideration of their claims as also endorsees of their bills, etc., amongst British subjects. If such assignees or endorsees have acquired title prior to the declaration of war we do not see any reason why the State should not protect them from the bar of limitation running against them. It is a very doubtful question whether even bonâ fide assignees or endorsees may be permitted to sue during the war. But on the conclusion of peace their rights would certainly revive. Although according to equity and justice the suspension of right of suit would necessarily imply a suspension of the law of limitation as well, yet for the protection of the rights of British subjects we consider it to be only reasonable to put in a saving clause in the Limitation Act to obviate all future controversy concerning the question.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

DEAR SIR,

In delivering a recent judgment I had to consider the application of sec. 34, I. P. C., to the facts before me and in so doing I came across some points of historical and academic interest which may perhaps be of interest to members of the profession.

The case made by the prosecution which had to be put before the Jury may, for present purposes, be presented in the familiar style of an illustration thus: "A and B set out to murder C. Both fire pistols at him. A hits him and kills him. B misses him." Does B's act come under sec. 34? That section runs—"when a criminal act is done by several persons in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if the act were done by him alone." I held that as the act in question was the killing of C and as that was represented as having been done by A alone the section did not apply to the case. I am not now concerned to consider the merits of this decision from a legal point of view, but I believe that it is contrary to the view of the section generally held by the profession hitherto and it is certainly opposed to the statement of its meaning contained in Mr. Mayne's note thereon in his well-known work. The note is as follows: "when several persons unite with a common purpose to effect any criminal object, all who assist in the accomplishment of that object are equally guilty, though some may be at a distance from the spot where the crime is being committed, and ignorant of what is actually being done." For reasons that I need not repeat I think that this is wrong; but I believe that I have discovered the source of the error, and if I am right it is a curious example of the difficulty that attends the application of English law to India, even in the form of a most carefully prepared Code.

What I believe has happened is that the old English law as to parties to the commission of an offence has proved too strong for the purifying effect of the Penal Code; and that its complexity has proved so attractive to the most learned of our commentators, and I may add to our highest judicial officers, that they have read a perfectly simple enactment in a highly artificial way in order to retain at least a flavour of it.

I will therefore state as shortly as may be what I understand the English law to be, and then consider how the Indian Legislature adapted it to India.

Taking Russell on Crimes, ch. V, and Stephen's Digest, ch. IV, as my authority, the English law put very shortly is as follows:—

A principal in the first degree is the man who commits the crime with his own hands. A principal in the second degree is one who is present aiding and abetting; and (here comes in Mr. Mayne's explanation of sec. 34) he may be present though he is not really there, but only thereabouts watching for intruders or standing ready to assist.

An accessory before the fact is a man who procures, etc, or abets another to commit or in committing a crime, but is not there or thereabouts when it is committed.

An accessory after the fact is a man who helps the criminal to escape; he completes the group, but otherwise it is unnecessary to consider him for present purposes.

I omit any consideration of the non-application of these rules to misdemeanours or treason; but a glance at the cases in Russell (and their number might be indefinitely increased) will show how little our predecessors were open to the reproach of neglecting any technical points that possibly would be available for the defence of prisoners.

Such was the English law before 1861. But in that year the inconvenience of those clumsy distinctions that had slowly grown up since the time of Hale—it is curious for many inconveniences the English criminal law owes to his age, if not to him—was clearly recognised, and advantage was taken of the framing of the Consolidation Acts of that year to correct it. The correction contained in the Accessories and Abettors Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 241, is characteristic of English legislation in such matters as it abolishes the distinction and leaves the difference. It consists of an enactment to the effect that "accessories before the fact, principals in the second degree and principals in the first degree are each considered as having committed" the crime, and may be tried as if they had committed it. (Stephen, Art. 45.)

How did the Indian Legislature deal with this position? The Penal Code was after much consideration finally passed on the 6th October 1860. The English Accessories and Abettors Act, was, also after prolonged investigations, passed in the following August. The two are no doubt closely connected, though I am not able at the moment to trace the connection. In 1846, however, we find the Commissioners who were preparing the Penal Code studying the labours of a commission then performing similar work in England, and evolving in paragraph (8) of their report a rudimentary edition of our sec. 34. That paragraph clearly shows that they saw that the distinction between degrees of Principals must be abolished, and in the following paragraphs they consider various difficulties, which no doubt led them, or rather their successors, to their very short but sufficient method of dealing with Abettors. Ultimately in paragraph 662 to their postscript they are naturally pleased to find that the English Commissioners in dealing with Principals and the punishment of Accessories, propose to follow the same course that has recommended itself to them. These considerations lead me to suppose that the framers of the Penal Code, as we have it, meant to do what I think they in fact did, namely, to distinguish between a man who does a thing—the credit of the simplicity of the phrase is theirs—and the man who abets him, making the latter however punishable as though he were the former, and Ch. V of the Code is the result.

What then, it will be asked, is the use of sec. 34? The answer is to be found in sec. 3 of the Code of 1837, Macaulay's Criminal Code, and the Illustrations thereto. The section is practically the same as our sec. 34, though it is more obscurely expressed. The Illustrations are shortly (1) A digs a pit intending to cause some one's death. B covers it with turf with the same intention. Z falls in and is killed. Both A and B have committed culpable homicide. (2) A and B are gaolers having charge of Z ultimately. They both omit to furnish Z with food, intending to cause his death. Z dies of hunger. Both A and B have committed culpable homicide. The language of the section has been changed, and the Illustrations have been dropped; but I believe the law is as Macaulay planned it. That is, the man who does a thing is principal, and one who puts him on or helps him to do it is an abettor whether he is present or not; and there are no other parties.

But there remains another little puzzle, and that is sec. 114. I need not set out its terms. But what I suspect is that the Commissioners could not help preparing a little resting place for the ghost they were laying. What they had in their minds was that a Principal in the second degree really differed from an Abettor, and must be provided for; they therefore intended to say that whereas an abettor was to be punished as if he had done the thing (the phrase will bear repetition); if he was present he was to be deemed to have done it, which, after all, was and is English Law. Practically I cannot see that this makes any difference, as the punishment for the thing is all that need be considered.

If therefore the section said what I think it was intended to say, I should think it superfluous. But it in fact says some thing else, and when the abetting consists in attempting to do what another man did, which is a most effective method of aiding, the section does not apply, because I think it must be impossible to attempt to do a thing if you are not there. The result is that it will often apply, as it did in my case, to charges which are of no importance in comparison to the abetting. The distinction between secs 109 and 114 really depends on the difference between being punished as if you had done a thing, and being deemed to have done it, which seems to me merely inconvenient.

I should therefore be glad to see sec. 114 repealed. But at the same time the principle laid down in Mr. Mayne's note seems to me quite a sound one and I should like to see sec. 114 replaced by an enactment that where several persons take part in the execution of a common criminal purpose, each is to be deemed to have committed every offence committed by any one of them in execution of the purpose. This is the English law according to Stephen's Digest, Art. 30, and we are of course familiar with the principle in sec. 149. The ground of such an enactment may be covered by secs. 107, 109, in fact I think it usually would be. But some such enactment would make the matter perfectly plain.

I remain,
Your obedient servant,
H. L. STEPHEN.

Review.

THE LAW OF CONSIDERATION AND OF COMPROMISE IN BRITISH INDIA. By Jnanendra Nath Chaudhuri, B. L., Pleader. Rai M. C. Sarkar Bahadur & Sons, 75-1-1, Harrison Road, Calcutta. 1914.

This little book is apparently the result of a close study of the English and Indian Law on the subject—or rather subjects—for the law of consideration has no more intimate connection with the law of compromise than with any other branch of the law of contract. Each of these topics is analysed, the difference between the English law of consideration and that law as enacted in the Contract Act is accurately pointed out, the peculiarities of the Indian procedure concerning compromises are set out and the case-law closely examined and digested. The author's researches will interest not merely legal practitioners, but also students of law. The spirit of enquiry and study by which they appear to be animated deserve cordial encouragement. The author has, not rarely, allowed himself to travel outside the range of his subject-matter, specially in dealing with the law of consideration. On the whole, however, he has succeeded in producing a compact little volume of essays, which is sure to prove useful to students and practitioners.

Notes of Cases.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before STEPHEN AND MULLICK, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1329 OF 1911. RAMDAHIN SINGH AND ANOTHER, Defendants, Appellants, v. JADU NANDAN SINGH AND OTHERS, Plaintiffs, Respondents. 31st July 1914

Right to discharge water—Right ancillary to property—Easement.

The Plaintiffs owned some land on the south of that of the Defendants on a higher level and the water falling on the land of the Plaintiffs naturally flowed on to the land of the Defendants. The Defendants erected a bund on their land, so as to obstruct the water accumulated on the Plaintiffs' land from flowing towards the north through the Defendants' land. The Plaintiffs alleged that they were entitled to have the water on their land discharged through the Defendants' land; but they did not claim it as an easement. They claimed it as a right ancillary to their property which they had not parted with.

Held, that the suit was maintainable though the Plaintiffs did not claim the right to discharge their water and did not in fact discharge their water on to the Defendants' land by any definite channel.

That the Defendants should make some arrangements by which the water coming on to their land from the Plaintiffs' land might pass over their land in such a way as not to remain on the Plaintiffs' land.

Mr. C. R. Das and Babu Surendra Nath Ghosal for the Appellants.

Babus Ram Charan Mazumdar and Raghu Nath Singh for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Decree modified.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER, CENTRAL PROVINCES.]

LORD MOULTON. LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. 1914, Heard, 23 and 24, April. Judgment, 24, April.	THE PERFECT POTTERY COMPANY, LIMITED, Appellants, v. MRS. IDA L. ROSE, Respondent.

Contract with Company, terms of, in correspondence and Company's minutes, conflict between—Right of heir to enforce terms of sale.

R by letter offered to sell to the Appellant Company a patent for Rs. 10,000 paid in cash and Rs. 20,000 in paid up shares of the Company. The letter contained a provision that the Company would be entitled to retain and cancel those shares in the event of R, who was to serve as the Company's manager, by reason of death, resignation, etc., failing to complete 4 years' service. The Company in their minutes recorded resolutions which did not embody this condition and in express terms spoke of the transaction as a sale of the patent for Rs. 30,000:

Held—That the only contract between R and the Company was that contained in the minute and that if this minute incorporated the terms of the letter, it did so in so far only as the latter was not inconsistent with the express terms of the minute.

That on R's death within 4 years, R's widow was entitled to have fully paid up shares to the amount of Rs. 20,000 allotted to her.

The facts of the case sufficiently appear from the following judgment of the Judicial Commissioners (Mr. H. J. Stanyon and Mr. J. A. C. Skinner).

"The Plaintiff-Respondent is the widow and executrix of the late Mr. Rose, who was in the service of the Defendant Company, the Perfect Pottery Company, Limited, of Jubbulpore, as manager. He had previously been in the service of Messrs. Burn and Company, and in 1904, there were negotiations between him and the founders of the Perfect Pottery Company hereinafter called "the Perfect Pottery Company" or "the Company" which resulted in his leaving Messrs. Burn & Company, with a view to transferring his services and a patent he had acquired for a special kind of tile called the "Perfect tile" to the Perfect Pottery Company. The terms on which he would come to them were set out by him in a letter of the 31st December 1904 (Ex. D-1). He actually entered their service on the 1st February 1905. The Perfect Pottery Company was registered as a Company some time in 1905 and on 15th October 1905 (admittedly after its registration) the terms of Mr. Rose's employment were embodied in a resolution of the Company confirmed at their next meeting on the 2nd November 1905. On the 24th June 1908, whilst still in the service of the Perfect Pottery Company, Mr. Rose died. Part of the agreement between him and the Company was admittedly that the Company should purchase his patent for Rs. 30,000, of which Rs. 10,000 were to be paid in cash and Rs. 20,000 in shares of the Company which were not to be at his disposal until he had completed four years' service with the Company. And the difference which has led to this litigation is as to whether the 200 shares of Rs. 100 each became Mrs. Rose's property subject to a lien on them by the Perfect Pottery Company for his services for 4 years or whether they were only to become his property on the completion of 4 year service; and as he failed to complete that term have not passed to him. An alternative plea open to the Perfect Pottery Company was, that having vested in Mr. Rose, the shares had in accordance with the terms of a contract between the parties been divested by his death. But it would obviously be for the Perfect Pottery Company to establish that there was such a contract, and their learned Counsel before us has admitted his inability to do so, and rested their case on the shares never having become Mr. Rose's property.

"The Plaintiff sues for the dividends that have accrued due since Mr. Rose's death, for a declaration that she is entitled to the shares and for the delivery of scrip and the lower Court has given her a decree to this effect.

"The material parts of Mr. Rose's letter of the 31st December, 1904, are the following :—

"'Gentlemen,

"'I beg to offer the patent 'Perfect Tile,' of which I am the patentee, as well as my services, to your Company on the following terms, conditions and considerations :—

"'(1) Your Company shall have the exclusive use in India of my said patent for the whole of the remaining period of the same.

"'(2) I will serve your Company as manager and engineer for 10 years on the following scale of pay and extra allowances payable monthly.' (Here follow details of pay and allowances, which need not be re-produced.)

"'(3) As soon as the Company start its Pottery Works, Rs. 10,000 (ten thousand) will be payable to me in cash and further Company's shares of Rs. 20,000 (twenty thousand) in value shall also be allotted me, of which I will be entitled to get all the dividends for five years and thereafter on my completing four years' services the said shares shall be given over to me to be disposed of just as I please. The directors of the Company will hold the said shares for four years as trustees for me personally, and on my death, resignation or disability to serve for that whole period may cancel the issue of the said shares by reducing the capital of the Company proportionately.

"'(4) The Company may dismiss me by handing over the said shares to me during the first five years and always by giving me six months' notice or six months' pay besides the said shares if the dismissal takes place during the first five years.

"'(5) Whatever sum of money becomes payable to Burn and Company according to my indenture with them, the same shall be paid by your Company and not by me.'

"The Appellant's learned Counsel urged on us that the Court below had not attached sufficient weight to his letter, and we accept his contention to this extent, viz, that the learned Judge was mistaken in regarding the Company's resolution of the 15th October 1905 as the sole record of the agreement with Mr. Rose and as excluding other evidence. In the absence of a formal written agreement between the parties, that resolution is in our opinion only an admission by the Company from which, along with the other acts and statements of the parties, the terms of the contract between them are to be deduced, and among such acts and statements we take into consideration the letter of the 31st December 1904, as an admission by Mr. Rose. But it is not contended by the Appellant's learned counsel that this letter is the sole record of the contract between the parties, nor could it be, as when it was written, the Company had not come into existence. And if it were, the case it would support is not that the shares never vested in Mr. Rose, but that they vested in him, were held by the Company in trust for him and were divested by his death, before he had completed four years' service, a case which the learned Counsel has admitted he cannot maintain.

THE PERFECT POTTERY COMPANY LIMITED v. MRS. IDA L. ROSE.

"The material parts of the resolution of the 15th October 1905 are as follows :—

"'The agreement entered into with Mr. A. Rose, Manager of the Perfect Pottery Company, Limited, was dealt with and passed.

"'(a) Mr. Rose will draw his pay on the following scale, with allowances :—

(Details follow.)

"'(b) Mr. Rose invented the 'Perfect' tiles. The patent has been purchased from him for Rs. 30,000. Of this amount Rs. 10,000 to be paid to him in cash and the balance Rs. 20,000 in shares of the Company. The shares will become his property on the 5th year. During his four years he will get all the dividends.

"'(c) Besides the Rs. 30,000 the sum of Rs. 3,345 have been paid to Messrs. Burn and Company, according to Mr. Rose's indenture with them.'

"The statement that the shares will become Mr. Rose's property 'On the 5th year' supports the Appellant's contention, but on the other hand the patent is stated to 'have been purchased from him' and the Rs. 3,345 to have been paid to Messrs. Burn and Company, 'besides the Rs. 30,000' for the patent. And there is no condition of forfeiture by death within four years.

"That Mr. Rose attended and voted at meetings of the Company as a share-holder is shown by the proceedings. It has not been suggested that he held any other shares than those allotted to him in payment for his patent and Art. 48 of the Articles of Association prescribes that 'no share holder shall be entitled to vote or be present at any General Meeting whilst any money due from him to the Company in respect of any of his shares remained unpaid.' The patent remained in Mr. Rose's name with the Government, but the payments required to keep it up had admittedly been made by the Company. The Appellant's learned Counsel suggests that there was merely an agreement to sell the patent which Mr. Rose's death has avoided and that the Plaintiff is at liberty to take it back. But we are unable to accept this contention If it was correct, the Plaintiff would not only lose the shares, but would also be liable to lose the Rs. 10,000 received by Mr. Rose in cash in part-payment for it. The ultimate test is in our opinion whether if the Plaintiff had wished to abandon the shares and take back the patent against the wish of the Company she could have done so and it seems to us clear that she could not have, that the patent had been sold to the Company by a transaction binding on Mr. Rose and his representatives and equally binding on the Company, that part of the price of the patent was admittedly paid, so the property in it had passed to the Company under sec. 78 of the Contract Act; that the 200 shares were allotted to Mr. Rose in part-payment of the price, that the Company to secure his services retained a lien on them for four years, but that in the absence of any valid contract causing his death within the four years to work forfeiture of his rights, his representative was entitled to possession of them on the expiry of that period. And we d not find anything in sec 28 of the Indian Companies Act that in our opinion affects the Plaintiff's claim to the shares, and accept the interpretation of that section suggested by the Respondent's learned Counsel, viz., that it is intended to meet cases between a Company that is being wound up and its creditors. The appeal therefore fails. But inasmuch as Mr. Rose gave the Defendant company some excuse for contesting the case in the interests of the share-holders by the condition as to forfeiture by death in his letter of the 31st December 1904, and both parties are to blame for the omission to record the terms finally agreed on in a formal written agreement, we direct that each party bear his own costs in both Courts."

Hence this appeal.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. G. R. Lowndes for the Appellants submitted that upon the evidence it was established that the shares claimed by the Respondent were not to become the property of her husband unless and until he had completed at least four years' service. Further, no contract to issue the said shares without payment in cash having been filed with the Registrar under sec. 28 of the Indian Companies Act the Respondent was not entitled to claim the shares without payment in full. Their Lordships delivered judgment dismissing the appeal without hearing.

Mr. E. F. Spence and Mr. Sholto O'Gilve for the Respondent.

As to costs Mr. Spence submitted that the lower Court had improperly refused to allow costs of the suit to the Plaintiff although she had been successful. There was no cross appeal as to costs to His Majesty in Council, but that was because the solicitors for the Appellants had agreed that the question of costs should be heard and decided by their Lordships without the cross-appeal.

Sir R. Finlay left the matter in their Lordships' discretion.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PARKER OF WADDINGTON.—In this case their Lordships are of opinion that the only contract between Mr. Rose and the Company was that contained in the minute of the 15th October 1905. The question which their Lordships have to decide is how far this minute incorporates the terms of the document which has been referred to as D-1? It is to be observed that so far as it contains any express terms, those terms differ from those contained in D 1. The most, therefore, that can be argued, is that D-1 is incorporated, except so far as it is inconsistent with the express terms of the minute.

Now one of the express terms is, that there is a sale of the patent for Rs. 30,000, to be paid partly in cash and partly in paid-up shares, and in their Lordships' opinion, the clause contained in D-1, which enables the company to retain and cancel these shares in certain events is inconsistent with there being such a sale.

For these reasons their Lordships think that the decision of the Court below was correct. In their opinion the Plaintiff is entitled, in the events which have happened, to have shares to the amount of Rs. 20,000 allotted as fully paid.

With regard to the suggestion which has been put forward that shares have already been allotted which are not fully paid, their Lordships need not express any opinion.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to dismiss this appeal with costs.

THE PERFECT POTTERY COMPANY LIMITED v. MRS. IDA L. ROSE.

Their Lordships think that there was no sufficient reason for depriving the Appellant of her costs in the two Courts below. Therefore, the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner will be varied to the extent of giving her these costs.

Solicitors: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Bull & Bull for the Respondent.

B. D. Appeal dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 242 OF 1912.

FLETCHER, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1914, Heard, 12, June. Judgment, 25, June.

MOHINI MOHAN MISSER and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants,

v.

SURENDRA NARAIN SINGH and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Suit for damages for wrongfully obtaining an injunction, if lies, when injunction temporary and when permanent—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 95—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 42—Limitation—Suit for damages for procuring an erroneous decision if lies—Pleadings—Want of reasonable and probable cause, allegation of, what sufficient.

No suit lies for damages against a Defendant for maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause obtaining a perpetual injunction which has been subsequently dissolved on appeal.

A temporary injunction granted in such a suit is ipso facto dissolved by the Court's decree granting a perpetual injunction.

In a suit for damages in respect of the temporary injunction limitation would therefore run from the date when the temporary injunction was dissolved by the decree granting perpetual injunction.

Per FLETCHER, J.—Nothing in the Limitation Act can give a party a right of suit, unless such right exists independent of the Limitation Act.

NAND KUMAR SHAHA v. GOUR SUNKUR (5) is questionable authority in so far as it decides that a Plaintiff can maintain a suit for damages against a Defendant for maliciously and without probable cause obtaining an interlocutory injunction.

An allegation by the Plaintiff that the Defendants were actuated by malice and that their suit for perpetual injunction ultimately proved unsuccessful when the decree of the High Court in their favour was set aside by His Majesty in Council was not a sufficient allegation of want of reasonable and probable cause.

Want of probable cause is not to be inferred because of mere evidence of malice.

TURNER v. AMBLER (9) referred to.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—Sec. 95, C. P. C., seems to contemplate the possibility of a suit being brought to recover compensation in respect of a temporary injunction applied for on insufficient grounds or in a suit instituted without reasonable or probable cause.

It is at least doubtful whether such a suit is maintainable in the absence of an undertaking to pay compensation.

A party is not liable in damages for procuring an erroneous decision.

DHURMO NARAIN v. SREEMUTTY DOSSEE (10) referred to.

This was an Appeal against the decree of Babu Ram Lall Das, Subordinate Judge of Purnea, dated the 18th of April 1912.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

(5) 13 W. R. 305 (1870).
(9) 10 Q. B. 252 (1847).
(10) 18 W. R. 440 (1872).

MOHINI MOHAN MISSER v. SURENDRA NARAIN SINGH.

Mr. S. P. Sinha and Babu Jogendra Nath Mukherjee for the Appellants.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar, Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitra and Babu Rishendra Nath Sircar for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an Appeal by the Plaintiffs against the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Purnea, dated the 18th March 1912. The suit was instituted to recover from the Defendants Rs. 1,91,932-8 6, as damages for malicious prosecution of a Civil suit brought against the Plaintiffs. On the 1st of December 1896, the executor of the father of the Defendant No. 1 instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Purnea against the present Plaintiffs for the purpose of obtaining an injunction restraining the present Plaintiffs from erecting an indigo factory on the land let for agricultural purposes, and on the same date an application was made ex parte to the Subordinate Judge for an interlocutory injunction restraining the Defendants till the trial of the suit from proceeding with the erection of the buildings. The learned Subordinate Judge on that application granted the interlocutory injunction prayed for. An appeal was preferred against that order to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal.

That suit came on for hearing before the Subordinate Judge on the 30th of September 1899. The learned Judge decreed the suit and granted a perpetual injunction restraining the erection of an indigo factory on the land. The present Plaintiffs appealed against that decree to the District Judge who on the 16th of August 1900 reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. The present Defendants who were then the Plaintiffs in that suit, the original Plaintiff having previously died, preferred an appeal to this Court against the decision of the District Judge. On the 1st of June a Division Bench of this Court (Banerjee and Pargiter, JJ.) reversed the decision of the District Judge and restored the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge. The present Plaintiffs then appealed to His Majesty in Council and on the 1st of June 1907, the decree passed by this Court was set aside and the judgment of the District Judge restored.

The proceedings in this Court are reported in I. L. R. 31 Cal. 174 (1) and before the Judicial Committee in I. L. R. 34 Cal. 718 (2).

The proceedings having terminated in favour of the present Plaintiffs they have brought this present suit to recover damages for malicious prosecution of the suit for an injunction. The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed this suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation. The first question for our decision is, is such an action as the present maintainable? The rule in England is very clear that a suit such as the present cannot be maintained. As was observed by Bowen, L. J., in the case of the Quartz Hill, etc., Mining Co. v. Eyre (3): "In the present day and according to our present law the bringing of an ordinary action however maliciously and however great the want of reasonable and probable cause will not support a subsequent action for malicious prosecution." This general rule is no

(1) Surendra Narain Singh v. Hari Mohan Misser: s. c. 9 C. W. N. 87 (1903).

(2) Hari Mohan v. Surendra Narain: s. c 11 C. W. N. 794 (1907).

(3) 11 Q. B. D. 674, 690 (1883).

MOHINI MOHAN MISSER v. SURENDRA NARAIN SINGH.

doubt subject to certain exceptions in cases where the proceedings involve "either scandal to reputation or the possible loss of liberty to the person." But the exceptions would not include a suit such as the present. This general rule, I think, must apply to India except in so far as the same has been modified by statute. Sec. 95 of the Code of Civil Prosedure, 1908, provides "(1) where in any suit in which an arrest or attachment has been effected or a temporary injunction granted under the last preceding section, (a) it appears to the Court that such arrest, attachment or injunction was applied for on insufficient grounds, or (b) the suit of the Plaintiff fails and it appears to the Court that there was no reasonable or probable ground for instituting the same, the Defendant may apply to the Court and the Court may upon such application award against the Plaintiff by its order such amount not exceeding Rs. 1,000 as it deems a reasonable compensation to the Defendant for the expense or injury caused to him." The section also enacts that "an order determining any such application shall bar any suit for compensation in respect of such arrest, attachment or injunction." This section in effect takes the place of the undertaking in damages which is usually required in England from a Plaintiff as a condition of a grant of an interlocutory injunction in a pending suit in his favour, except that under sec. 95 the damages are limited to Rs. 1,000. The history of such undertaking is given by Jessel M. R. in the case of Smith v. Day (4).

I now come to the case that has been principally relied upon by the Plaintiffs in this appeal, namely, the case of Nand Kumar Shaha v. Gour Sunkur (5). That case was a reference by a Small Cause Court Judge. The questions referred for the opinion of this Court were, first, whether a fresh suit for compensation on account of damages incurred in consequence of obtaining improperly an injunction under sec. 92 of Act VIII of 1859 can be entertained when the question had been once brought forward for decision before an Appellate Court, but rejected on a distinct ground and, secondly, if the suit can be admitted on the ground of its not being decided on its merits by the Appellate Court, is the cause of action to be considered as having accrued from the 18th of August 1868, the date of the decision of the Munsif or from the 23rd of November 1869 when the cross-appeal by the Plaintiff was dismissed? The learned Judges (L. S. Jackson & Glover, JJ.) in answering the questions referred to them remarked that sec. 96 of Act VIII of 1859 (which for the present purpose is the same as sec. 95 of the present Code) would not debar the Small Cause Court from entertaining the suit. They do not however express any opinion on the question whether the cause of action set up by the Plaintiff was or was not a good cause of action although no doubt their judgment implies that the cause of action was sufficient. No authority is cited in the course of the judgment and the counsel who argued the case before us were unable to cite to us any other authority either in England or in India in which a Plaintiff has recovered damages against a Defendant who had obtained maliciously and without probable cause an interlocutory injunction. I must confess that the case of Nand Kumar Shaha v. Gour Sunkur (5) appears to be a questionable authority in so far as it decides that a Plaintiff

(4) 21 Ch. D. 421 (1882).

(5) 13 W. R. 305 (1870).

MOHINI MOHAN MISSER v. SURENDRA NARAIN SINGH.

can maintain a suit for damages against a Defendant for maliciously and without probable cause obtaining an interlocutory injunction. Nand Kumar Shaha's case (5) was decided by this Court on the 30th of March 1870. In the Limitation Act of 1871 first appears Article 86 fixing a period of limitation in which a suit must be brought to recover compensation for damages caused by an injunction wrongfully obtained, the article in the present Act of 1908 being Article 42. The reason for the insertion of Article 86 in the Act of 1871 was obviously the decision in Nand Kumar Shaha's case (5). But of course nothing in the Limitation Act can give a party a right of suit unless such a right exists independent of the Limitation Act [Hurrinath v. Mothoor Mohun (6)]. Another case that has been relied upon is the case of Chunder Cant Mookerjee v. Ram Coomar Coondo (7). But all that case decided was that a suit will lie for bringing a suit in the name of a third party maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause whereby the party against whom the action is brought sustains damage. This had already been decided by the Court of Common Pleas in the case of Cotterell v. Jones (8).

No case has however been cited before or authority shown to us to suggest that if a party maliciously and without probable cause brings a suit for a perpetual injunction and succeeds at the trial, but the judgment is reversed on appeal, he is liable in damages for the injury caused by the injunction. Besides, the decision of the Court of first instance granting the injunction would indicate that the suit was instituted under such circumstances as would induce a prudent man to act. The want of probable cause is not to be inferred because of mere evidence of malice [Turner v. Ambler (9)].

The result therefore is that there is no case in the books of a suit for damages against a Defendant for maliciously and without reasonable or probable cause obtaining a perpetual injunction which was subsequently dissolved on appeal. The only case in which a suit of a similar nature was maintained with reference to an interlocutory injunction is Nand Kumar Shaha's case (5), the authority of which I think is questionable. But assuming that case to be a binding authority for that proposition the interlocutory injunction in the present case ceased and came to an end when the Subordinate Judge at the trial on the 30th of September 1899 granted a perpetual injunction. The present suit was not instituted until the 13th of May 1910. Under Article 42 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, time begins to run from the date when the injunction ceases. Any right of suit that the Plaintiffs might have with reference to the obtaining of the interlocutory injunction is therefore barred by limitation. It is further to be noticed that nowhere in the plaint in this suit is it stated that the suit for an injunction was instituted or prosecuted without reasonable or probable cause. It would appear however that the Plaintiff's allegations in support of want of reasonable and probable cause are that the Defendants were actuated by malice and that the suit for an injunction ultimately proved unsuccessful, when the decree of this Court was set aside by His Majesty in Council.

(5) 13 W. R. 305 (1870).
(6) L. R. 20 I. A. 183 (1893).
(7) 22 W. R. 138 (1874).
(8) 11 C. B. 713 (1851).

(5) 13 W. R. 305 (1870).
(9) 10 Q. B. 252 (1847).

MOHINI MOHAN MISSER v. SURENDRA NARAIN SINGH.

Such an allegation however is not a sufficient allegation of want of reasonable or probable cause. The fact that the Subordinate Judge granted the injunction and a similar view was taken by a Division Bench of this Court, although their opinion ultimately proved mistaken, shows that it could not be said that there was a want of reasonable or probable cause in instituting and prosecuting the suit (see the judgment of Couch, C. J, in Chunder Cant Mookerjee v. Ram Coomar Coondoo (7).

In the result I agree with the conclusion arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge though for different reasons. The present appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree that if relief is sought by the plaint on the ground that the previous suit, which was a suit for a perpetual injunction, was instituted maliciously and without reasonable and probable cause, that is not a good cause of action. Para. 15 of the plaint, however, points rather to the issue of the interlocutory injunction as the cause of action on which the Plaintiffs rely. The interlocutory injunction is treated as though it subsisted up to the date of the order of His Majesty in Council. I agree that the interlocutory injunction was ipso facto dissolved by the decree of the first Court granting a perpetual injunction and that assuming that damages may be claimed by suit for "wrongfully" obtaining such an injunction, the present suit as a suit for damages is barred by limitation under Art. 42 of the Schedule of the Limitation Act. As to the word "wrongfully," sec. 95 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 seems to contemplate the possibility of a suit being brought to recover compensation in respect of a temporary injunction applied for on insufficient grounds or in a suit instituted without reasonable and probable cause. It is at the least doubtful whether such a suit is maintainable in the absence of an undertaking to pay compensation [Dhurmo Narain v. Sreemutty Dossee (10)]. But if it be maintainable, it would no doubt be governed in regard to limitation by Art. 42. The conduct imputed to the Defendant in such a suit would be in its nature tortious or wrongful. It is idle to say that the suit could not have been instituted until the determination of the appeal to the Privy Council. The words of Art. 42 are clear. Time runs from the date when the injunction ceases."

In point of substance the damages which the Plaintiffs say they have suffered were due principally to the permanent injunction granted by the Court of first instance and the High Court. In view of the result of the appeal to the Privy Council, those decisions must no doubt be regarded as erroneous, but as the learned Subordinate Judge points out, a party is not liable in damages for procuring an erroneous decision. A successful Appellant is entitled under sub-sec. (1) of sec. 144 of the Code to such restitution "as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied" but for the decree which has been varied or reversed. Sub sec. (2) lays down that no separate suit shall be instituted for the purpose of obtaining any restitution or other relief which could be obtained by application under sub sec. (1). I do not know whether the Plaintiffs could have obtained any relief under these provisions I am disposed to think not. The removal of the permanent injunction restored the status quo ante so far as it could be restored. But, however that may be, at any rate the Plaintiffs cannot obtain by suit any relief which they could have obtained under sec. 144 by application. They cannot in this suit obtain any relief by way of restitution.

(7) 22 W. R. 188, 146 (1874).

(10) 18 W. R. 440 (1872).

The result is that the plaint, whatever construction be put upon it, discloses no cause of action except possibly a cause of action to which the bar of limitation applies.

On the facts, so far as they appear, it would be very difficult to say that the previous suit was instituted without reasonable and probable cause or that the temporary injunction was applied for on improper or insufficient grounds. But as I understand we do not decide the appeal with reference to that consideration.

I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1220 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
Heard, 11 and 12, March.
1914,
Judgment, 15, May.

LAKHAN JENA and others, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
ARJUN NAIK, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Dandidari right, if a monopoly or a legal right to be recognised by Courts of Justice—Such right if personal or if can be transferred—Transfer if must be by registered instrument—Estoppel, application of rule of, to employees and contracting parties—Assignee of right having enjoyed profits if can deny assignor's title.

At a public auction held at the instance of Government the Plaintiff as the highest bidder purchased the road-side lands on the bank of a river together with the dandidari right for one year. It appeared from the lease granted to him by Government that he became entitled to occupy the lands for one year and to exercise the calling of a broker in the market held thereon during that period. The Defendants took an assignment from the Plaintiff of the dandidari right and they commenced at once to exercise the calling of a broker in the market-place by virtue of the Government license which was made over to them, but they withheld payment of the money they had agreed to pay. The Plaintiff sued for recovery of the consideration with damages for unlawful detention of his money:

Held—That the term dandidar literally means a measurer and is applied to signify a broker who negotiates the sale of paddy and other produce in a market-place and receives as remuneration for his service a commission from the seller and the buyer who may choose to employ him

That the contention of the Defendants that the alleged dandidari right tended to create a monopoly and should not be recognised as a legal right by any Court of Justice was untenable. The principle that every arrangement which places a restriction upon a man's right to exercise his trade or calling tends to create a monopoly and is void as against public policy has no application to the present case. There is nothing illegal or contrary to public policy in Government allowing a market to be held on its land and taking measures to restrict the admission of brokers.

That the dandidari right was not a right personal to the grantor from Government and could be transferred. The very fact that the right was granted by Government to the highest bidder affords some indication that the personal element does not enter into consideration when the grant is made.

LAKHAN JENA v. ARJUN NAIK.

That the dandidari right was not transferable only by a registered instrument.

That the Defendants were at least licensees under the Plaintiff and as they had exercised their calling without interruption or interference they at any rate were not entitled to contend that the Plaintiff had no title or that they themselves had acquired none from him.

The rule of estoppel which binds landlords and tenants, mortgagors and mortgagees; bailors and bailees applies to employees and contracting parties generally who cannot accept the benefits of the contract and yet, when called upon to perform their duties under it, repudiate it as made without right or as otherwise wanting in force, provided the contract is not actually in violation of law or wholly void. The assignee or the licensee of any right accepted and acted under is accordingly estopped to deny the authority from which the right proceeds.

This was an Appeal from a decision of Babu Narendra Krishna Datta, Subordinate Judge, Cuttack, dated the 9th of February 1911, confirming that of Babu Nirmal Chandra Mitter, Munsif, Puri, dated the 30th of April 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Provash Chandra Mitter and Susil Madhab Mullick for the Appellants.

Babus Bepin Behari Ghosh and Bankim Chunder Mukerjee for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Defendants in a suit for recovery of money due on a contract. The circumstances under which the Courts below have concurrently sustained the claim of the Plaintiff may be briefly recited. In 1909, at a public auction, held at the instance of Government, the Plaintiff purchased for a sum of Rs. 445 the road-side lands on the bank of the river Bhargavi, situated on the ninth mile of the Jagannath Road, together with what is called the dandidari right for the year 1909-1910. The term dandidar literally means a measurer, and is applied to signify a broker who negotiates the sale of paddy and other produce in a market-place and receives as remuneration for his service a commission from the seller and the buyer who may choose to employ him. The Plaintiff, as the highest bidder, was accepted as purchaser of the lands and of the dandidari right for the period mentioned ; and it is clear from the lease granted to him by Government on the 6th May 1909, that he became entitled to occupy the lands for one year and to exercise the calling of a broker in the market held thereon during that period. The case for the Plaintiff is that on the 25th April 1909, the Defendants took an assignment from him of the dandidari right for a consideration of Rs. 622 8, that they commenced at once to exercise the calling of a broker in the market-place by virtue of the Government license which was made over to them, and that although they have profited by the transaction, they have withheld payment of the money they had agreed to pay. The Plaintiff consequently commenced this action on the 19th July 1909 for recovery of the consideration with damages for unlawful detention of his money. The defence was a denial of the alleged transaction in every particular. The Court of first instance found in favour of the Plaintiff on the merits, and decreed the suit for the amount claimed as consideration money. Upon appeal, the Subordinate Judge has confirmed this decree. He has taken the same view of the facts as the primary Court and has also overruled the contention of the Defendants that the right could be validly transferred to them only by a registered instrument, as, in his opinion, the transaction was not a sale but a sub-lease. On the present appeal, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on three gounds, namely, first, that the Plaintiff has no title, as the alleged dandidari right tends to create a monopoly and should not be recognised as a legal right by any Court of Justice; secondly, that the dandidari right, if recognised in law, is a right personal to the grantee from Government, and cannot be transferred; and, thirdly, that if the dandidari right be deemed transferable, a valid transfer can be effected only by a registered instrument. This position has been controverted by the Respondent as wholly untenable, and, it has further been urged on his behalf that it is not open to the Defendants to impeach the title of the Plaintiff.

LAKHAN JENA v. ARJUN NAIK.

In support of the first point, reference has heen made to the cases of Sheikh Kalu v. Ram Saran Bhagat (1) and Somu Pillai v. Municipal Council, Mayavaram (2), and it has been urged that every arrangement which places a restriction upon a man's right to exercise his trade or calling tends to create a monopoly and is void as against public policy. This principle has clearly no application to the case before us. The Government allows a market to be held on its land, and takes measures to restrict the admission of brokers. We cannot see that there is anything illegal or contrary to public policy in this action. The principle recognised by the House of Lords in Rossi v. Edinburgh Corporation (3), namely, that it is the common right of all His Majesty's subjects to open their shops and to sell what they please, which can be restrained only by the Legislature, is of no assistance to the Appellants. The broker who receives a license, authorising him to exercise his calling in the market, cannot force himself upon any seller or purchaser; he is at liberty to enter the market and to exercise his calling, if anybody should employ him. We are not prepared to hold that this is in any way open to objection.

In support of the second point, reference has been made to Hill v. Tupper (4) to show that the right to exercise the calling of a broker is a personal right, not assignable in law. The case mentioned does not lend any support to this contention: it merely rules that where a Canal Company has granted to a person the sole and exclusive right of putting pleasure boats for hire on their canal, the grantee does not acquire such an interest as would enable him to maintain an action in his own name against a person who has disturbed his right. This principle is clearly of no assistance to the Appellants. On the other hand, the very fact that the right is granted by Government to the highest bidder affords some indication that the personal element does not enter into consideration when the grant is made. Further, there is evidence to show that the right is frequently transferred and the transferee is allowed to exercise the right under the license in the same manner as the transferor.

(1) 9 C. L. J. 216: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 388 (299) (1909).
(2) I. L. R. 28 Mad. 520 (1905)

(3) [1905] App. Cas. 21, 26.
(4) 2 H. & C. 121; 133 R. R. 605 (1863).

LAKHAN JENA v. ARJUN NAIK.

In the present case, the Courts below have found that the Appellants as transferees have exercised the right without interruption or hindrance by the officers of the Government. There is consequently no force in the second contention

In support of the third point, it has been urged that the right which the Plaintiff purported to transfer to the Defendants was intangible and could have been transferred only by a registered instrument. There is no force in this contention, because the Defendants are at least licensees under the Plaintiff, and as they have exercised their calling without interruption or interference, they at any rate are not entitled to contend that the Plaintiff has no title or that they themselves have acquired none from him. This leads us to the important ground taken on behalf of the Respondent in support of the decree of the Subordinate Judge.

It is well-settled that the rule of estoppel which binds landlords and tenants, mortgagors and mortgagees, bailors and bailees, applies to employees and contracting parties generally, who cannot accept the benefits of the contract, and yet when called upon to perform their duties under it, repudiate it as made without right or as otherwise wanting in force, provided the contract is not actually in violation of law or wholly void. The assignee or the licensee of any right accepted and acted under is accordingly estopped to deny the authority from which the right proceeds. This is well illustrated by cases where right under a patent has been transferred and it has been held that the assignee or licensee of the patent apparently valid and in force, who has acted under it and received profits from the sale of the patented article, is estopped to deny the validity of the patent in an action by the patentee to recover royalties or to obtain an account. Reference may be made, amongst others, to the cases of Lawes v. Purser (5), Noton v. Brookes (6), Crossley v. Dixon (7), and Kinsman v. Parkes (8). In the case last mentioned, the Defendants, under the agreement from the patentee, manufactured and sold the patented article, actually received profits therefrom, and when called upon to account, questioned the validity of the patent. The Court overruled the defence, and held that they could no more be allowed to deny the title of their grantor or licensor and retain the profits to their own use, than an agent who has collected a debt for his principal could insist on his keeping the money upon an allegation that the debt was not justly due; even if the patent was assumed to be invalid, that did not render the sales of the machine illegal, so as to taint with illegality the obligation of the Defendants to account. Similarly in Sharp v. Taylor (9), where a vessel engaged in an illegal trade carried freight which came into the hands of one of the part owners, and on a bill filed by the other part-owner for an account, the Defendant relied on the illegality of the trade, the defence was overruled as not available. It is worthy of note that this rule of estoppel was applied in Noton v. Brookes (6), even though it was argued that the invalidity of the patent would make the agreement sought to be enforced a contract for the grant of a monopoly and consequently void. In the case before us, it has been found that the Defendants, as assignees or licensees from the Plain-

(5) 6 E. & B. 930; 106 R. R. 868 (1856).
(6) 7 H. & N. 499; 126 R. R. 540 (1861).
(7) 10 H. L. C. 293; 138 R. R. 160 (1863).
(8) 18 Howard 289.
(9) 2 Phillip, 801; 78 R. R. 298 (1849).

tiff, have exercised their calling and have made profits which would otherwise have accrued to the Plaintiff himself in due course, and yet when called upon to pay the consideration they had promised, they urge as a defence that the Plaintiff has acquired no valid title from Government. This defence can only be characterised as disingenuous and is clearly not available to the Defendants.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this Appeal dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 325 OF 1913

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1914, Heard, 7 and 8, January. Judgment, 8, January.	FULKUMARI BIBEE, Appellant, v. BUDH SINGH DHUDHURIA and anr., Respondents.

*Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), sec. 17—Infant son of pre-deceased outcasted son residing with mother in the family of mother's sister—Mother, appointing her sister guardian by Will—Grandfather nominating a nephew as guardian, but latter unwilling to admit him in family circle—Infant's preference for aunt—Court's discretion in appointing guardian—Welfare of minor, chief consideration—Home influence, value of—*Purdanashin lady if unfit to be guardian of infant of 15 years.

I, who had been outcasted, died in April 1899 leaving an infant son who in 1914 was about 15 years old, a widow who died in 1913 and his father B who was appointed guardian of the person and property of the infant, in July 1899. B being unable owing to caste difficulties to keep the infant in his custody acquiesced in the appointment in December 1905 of the infant's mother as guardian of his person, he himself continuing to be the guardian of the infant's property. The infant and his mother took up residence with the latter's sister F, and before her death she made a Will clearly expressing therein her wish that her sister F should after her death be the infant's guardian. On her death B applied for the appointment of a nephew of his as the guardian of the person of the infant, and F also made a similar application. The uncle and not the aunt was appointed by the District Court. On appeal, the High Court ascertained on enquiry from B as well as his nominee that neither of them was willing to take the infant into his family circle, and their idea was to place him in charge of a tutor. The infant himself on being examined by the High Court expressed his preference for the aunt. It was found by the District Judge that the education of the infant in her aunt's house had been satisfactory:

Held—That it was desirable for the welfare of the minor that the aunt and not the uncle should be appointed guardian of the infant's person, and that her being a purdanashin lady did not make her unfit to be so appointed as it was undesirable that the infant should at his age be removed from the influences of home life. But it was ordered and the aunt gave assurance that the grandfather and the uncle should have free access to the infant.

The primary point for consideration in such a case is what in the circumstances of the case is for the welfare of the infant.

In appointing a guardian the Court will pay great attention to the wishes of the father or mother of the infant unless such a course would be disadvantageous to the infant and regard is always paid to the wishes of the minor if he be of years of discretion.

FULKUMARI BIBEE v. BUDH SINGH DHUDHURIA.

This was an Appeal from an order of E. Panton, Esq., District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 5th July 1913.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Mr. Sinha, Babus Hemendra Nath Sen, Ram Chandra Majumdar, Biraj Mohan Majumdar and Surendra Kumar Bose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal is directed against an order for the appointment of a guardian of the person of an infant by name Ranjit Singh, one of the grandsons of Rai Budh Singh Dhudhuria of Azimgunj. The rival claimants for the office of guardian are the first cousin of the father of the infant, Raja Bijoy Singh Dhudhuria, who has been proposed for appointment by the grandfather, and Fulkumari Bibee, the sister of the mother of the infant, who was nominated for appointment as guardian by the mother in a Will executed by her on the 7th June 1912. The District Judge has given preference to the uncle and has appointed him guardian of the person of the infant. Against that order this appeal has been preferred by the aunt, and the uncle as also the grandfather have been joined as parties Respondents.

To appreciate the circumstances under which the question of the appointment of a guardian of the person of this infant has come before the Court, it is necessary to recite briefly the history of the family. Inder Chand Dhudhuria, the father of the infant, and one of the sons of Rai Budh Singh Dhudhuria, went to England in 1889. On his return to this country, caste difficulties arose, and the ultimate result was that he was outcasted. The members of the community, however, subsequently relented and agreed to limit the excommunication to Inder Chand himself and to all children that might be born after his visit to England. The infant now before the Court was born about the year 1898. The result of the excommunication of Inder Chand was that he had to live with his wife and children and separate from his father. This state of things continued up to the 9th April 1899, when Inder Chand died. Shortly after his death his father was appointed guardian of the person and property of the infant on the 8th July 1899. It is clear, however, from the materials on the record that the grandfather was not able to keep the infant in his own custody, as the pressure of caste difficulties was insurmountable. Consequently, on the 18th December 1905, with the acquiescence, if not the actual assent, of the grandfather, Indra Kumari, the mother of the infant, was appointed guardian of his person. The grandfather, however, continued to be the guardian of the property of the infant and it is not disputed that up to the present moment he is such guardian. Indra Kumari died on the 1st June 1913. A year before her death, she had executed a Will, on the 7th June 1912, which was registered on that very day. No probate has yet been obtained of this Will, but its genuineness has not been questioned in the present proceedings and it has been received in evidence by consent of all the parties and accepted in proof of the wishes of the mother in respect of the appointment of a guardian of her infant soon after her death. On this subject, the Will is perfectly clear in its terms. The mother expressed a decided preference for her sister as the fittest person to be appointed guardian of the person of her infant son. She stated this explicitly, and by this instrument she nominated her sister Fulkumari Bibee as her successor in the guardianship of the person of her minor son Ranjit Singh. Immediately, upon her death, the matter was inevitably brought into Court, and an application was made by Fulkumari Bibee for appointment as guardian of the person of the infant. But she had been anticipated, and the grandfather had already expressed a desire that his nephew Rajah Bejoy Singh Dhudhuria should be appointed guardian. It is worthy of note, however, that Rajah Bejoy Singh himself has never made an application in this behalf. The attitude he has consistently taken throughout the proceedings, both here and in the Court below, is that he is not unwilling to accept the office of guardian. He is ready to be burdened with its responsibility more out of a feeling that he should meet the wishes of his uncle, than from a sense of attachment towards his nephew. The District Judge, as already stated, has decided in favour of the uncle as against the aunt. He has attached no weight to the wishes of the mother in this respect. He has also held substantially that the wishes of the minor who is now about 15 years old should not have any weight in the decision of this matter. The question for consideration before the Court, consequently, is whether the uncle or the aunt should be appointed guardian of the person of the minor.

FULKUMARI BIBEE v. BUDH SINGH DHUDHURIA.

The principle upon which the question should be decided is laid down in sec. 17 of the Guardians and Wards Act. Sub-sec. (1) of that section provides that in appointing the guardian of a minor the Court shall be guided by what, consistently with the law to which the minor is subject, appears in the circumstances to be for the welfare of the minor. Sub sec (2) provides that in considering what will be for the welfare of the minor, the Court shall have regard to the age, sex and religion of the minor, the character and capacity of the proposed guardian and his nearness of kin to the minor, the wishes if any of a deceased parent and any existing or previous relations of the proposed guardian with the minor or his property. Sub sec. (3) provides that if the minor is old enough to form an intelligent preference, the Court may consider that preference. The primary point for consideration consequently is, what in the circumstances of this case is for the welfare of the minor. As observed by Mr Justice Davar in the case of Re Gulbai and Lilbai (1) in making orders appointing guardians for the persons of minors, the most paramount consideration for the Judge ought to be what order, under the circumstances of the case, would be best for securing the welfare and happiness of the minor. With whom will they be happy? Who is most likely to contribute to their well-being and look after their health and comfort? Who is likely to bring up and educate the minors in the manner in which they would have been brought up by the parents, if they had been alive? In fact, the main question for the Court to consider in the case of the unfortunate minors, who have lost their natural guardians, is whom, amongst the relations, or for the matter of that, friends of the minors, can you select, who will supply, as nearly as possible, the place of their lost parent or parents? The interest, well-being and happiness of the minors ought to be the main and paramount consideration for the Court in selecting the guardian of the person of a minor. The same principle has been laid down by the Allahabad High Court in the case of Bindo v. Shamlal (2). Indeed the question of true welfare of the minor is of such paramount consideration that the recognised rights of guardianship under the law to which the minor is subject must, if necessary, be assigned a relatively subordinate position: Totaram v. Ram Charan (3), Mathu Virapa v. Lingammate (4), or, as has sometimes been said, propinquity must yield to fitness: Akima v. Azeem (5), Sohna v. Khalak Singh (6). Besides it is clear from the decision in Kristo Kissore v. Kedar Moyee (7), the uncle, merely because he is a paternal uncle, is not as a matter of right entitled to supersede the aunt on the sole ground that she is the maternal aunt. The fundamental point to be considered is, what is for the welfare of the particular minor, and that leads us at once to the question, what are the circumstances of the present case?

(1) I. L. R. 32 Bom. 50 (1907).

FULKUMARI BIBEE v. BUDH SINGH DHUDHURIA.

It is beyond dispute that ever since the return of Inder Chand to this country and his excommunication from society, he lived separate from his father with his wife and son (the infant now before the Court). After the death of Inder Chand, the grandfather found himself unable, it may be owing to the insurmountable pressure of social difficulties, to take back his widowed daughter-in-law and his infant grandson into his family circle. His nephew, Rajah Bejoy Singh, whom he now proposes for appointment as guardian of the person of his infant grandson, has never taken the remotest interest in the minor. The result was that Indra Kumari was driven to seek the society of her sister; and, although a suggestion was faintly made in this Court at one stage that Indra Kumari lived serparate, not merely from her father-in-law but also from her sister, it was indisputably proved from an affidavit which had been filed on the 25th August 1911 by Rai Budh Singh himself, that Indra Kumari and her infant son had resided for years with Fulkumari. After Indra Kumari had been appointed guardian, she found it difficult to maintain her child and an application was made by her on the 19th June 1911, to the District Judge for an order upon her father-in-law, who was the guardian of the property of the infant, for payment of expenses incurred in connection with the maintenance of the child. This application was opposed by the grandfather and in an affidavit filed on the 25th August 1911 Rai Budh Singh pledged his oath that the then Petitioner (his daughter-in-law) was living with her minor son in the house of Babu Norpat Singh, the husband of her sister, as members of the same family and that she had no separate establishment, nor was there any necessity for it. This is in agreement with other statements found on the record and was confirmed by the infant who was examined in this Court. The position, therefore, has been that for many years past and certainly during the last 10 years the infant has been treated as an outcaste by the family of his father; his grandfather and his uncle have both disowned him, and he has been brought up in the family of the sister of his mother. That sister of his mother is now willing to take

(2) I. L. R. 29 All. 210 (1906).
(3) 7 All. L. J. 1149 (1910).
(4) 2 Mad. W. N. 56.
(5) 9 W. R. 334 (1868).
(6) I. L. R. 13 All. 78 (1889).
(7) 2 C. L. R. 583 (1878).

FULKUMARI BIBEE v. BUDH SINGH DHUDHURIA.

charge of him. The application is resisted by the grandfather, who is himself unable to take charge of the boy and puts forward his nephew as a desirable candidate for the office of guardian. We put it to the learned Vakil for the grandfather whether he was willing to look after his infant grandson himself and to take him back into his family circle. The answer was a decided negative. We put it to the learned Vakil for the uncle who has been proposed for appointment as guardian, whether the uncle was prepared to take his nephew into his family circle. The answer was an equally emphatic negative, and it was added that if the uncle was appointed guardian, the infant would be kept in a house at Berhampore in charge of a tutor. The effect of this statement was realized a little later, and it was then suggested on behalf of the grandfather that if the uncle was appointed guardian of the person of the infant, the infant might be kept in a house at Azimgunj. It is manifest, however, that neither the grandfather nor the uncle is willing to take the infant into his family circle. Here it may be added that the uncle who has been proposed for appointment as guardian is a separated uncle, and it is not disputed that the grandfather and the uncle are not members of the same joint-family. In view of all these facts, it is clearly not for the welfare of the infant that the uncle should be appointed guardian of his person.

Apart from these circumstances, however, there are two other factors for consideration. As already stated, the mother has nominated her sister for appointment as guardian, and the selection was obviously in the best interest of the minor. Her wishes in this respect should not be summarily disregarded, for though it may be conceded that the wishes of a deceased parent are by no means conclusive, considerable weight must be attached to the preference indicated by the mother: Hall v Stoter (8), Re Kaye (9). As was observed in Ex parte Mountfort (10), in appointing a guardian the Court will pay great attention to the wishes of the father or the mother of the infant, and the Court will do so unless as stated in Hartley v. Smith (11) and Re Wood (12), such a course would be disadvantageous to the infant. It has not been established in this case that the appointment of the aunt as guardian of the person of the infant would be to his disadvantage ; on the other hand, the circumstances stated all point to the conclusion that it would be to his advantage

There is a further circumstance to be considered, namely, the wishes of the minor himself, to which regard is always paid, if he be of years of discretion [Ex parte Edwards (13), Ex parte Birchell (14), Pollord v. Rouse (15)] The minor frankly stated in this Court that for the last ten years he has been brought up in the family of his aunt, that he has found in her family circle a comfortable and affectionate home, that his uncle has never taken the remotest interest in him, and, that consequently he does not feel attracted towards him in the least degree. To summarise, the welfare of the infant, tested from the point of view of the mode of life it has been his lot to live during

(8) 1 Y. & C. Ex 556 (1835).
(9) L. R. 1 Ch. App 387 (1866).
(10) 15 Ves 447 (1809).
(11) 9 Jurist N. S. 97 (1863).
(12) 16 W. R. (Eng.) 164 (1867),
(13) 3 Atk. 519 (1747).
(14) 3 Atk. 813 (1754).
(15) I. L. R. 33 Mad. 288, 293 (1910).

FULKUMARI BIBEE v. BUDH SINGH DHUDHURIA.

the last ten years, the emphatically expressed wishes of his mother and his own decided preference justify the appointment of the maternal aunt in preference to the paternal uncle and the reasons which weigh in favour of such appointment become conclusive, when we remember that the uncle, is practically a stranger to the infant, is by no means keen to undertake the responsibilities of guardianship and is, in any event, unable to take his nephew into his family circle and to exercise personal supervision over him.

It has been contended, however, that as the boy is now 15 years old, it is not desirable that he should have a purdahnashin lady as guardian of his person. We are unable to accept this contention as sound. It is, in our opinion, undesirable that at this stage the boy should be taken away from the healthy influences of home life. In so far as the education of the boy is concerned, the District Judge recorded an opinion on the 22nd May 1912 that so far as he was able to judge, his education had been satisfactory and that there was no necessity for change in the arrangements. There is no conceivable reason why under the guardianship of his aunt the infant should not be properly educated, if suitable direction is given by the District Judge for the appointment of a tutor. We are further of opinion that it would be desirable to compel the guardian of the property of the infant to spend more money for his education than has been done in the past and it is obvious that as he continues to make progress in his studies, tutors better qualified and more experienced than those who have acted in the past, will be required to look after him.

It has finally been suggested that the effect of the appointment of the aunt as guardian of the person of the infant might be to accentuate the estrangement between him and the members of his father's family, and that the ultimate result might be not quite beneficial so far as the worldly prospects of the infant are concerned. In fact, it has been broadly hinted that the estrangement might be of such a character as to make it impossible for the grandfather to leave more property to his infant grandson. We trust that the effect of the order which we propose to make will not be what is anticipated by the learned Vakil for the grandfather, and that the grandfather will accept, without feelings of resentment towards the infant, the order about to be made to secure the welfare of his grandson. There is no conceivable reason, however, why, although the aunt is appointed guardian of the infant, the grandfather and the uncle should not have free access to the child, and on behalf of the Appellant an assurance has been given in this Court that such access will be freely allowed. Should, however, any practical difficulty or inconvenience arise in this respect, the District Judge will give suitable directions.

We may add that we are not unmindful that in the matter of appointment of a suitable guardian, a Court of Appeal is always reluctant to interfere with the discretion of the Court of first instance, except for strong reasons [Re Kaye (9)]. In the present case, however, upon an examination of all the circumstances, we are constrained to take the view that the order made by the lower Court is not for the true welfare of the minor. We fully appreciate that the grandfather may regard it as a loss of family prestige that the Appellant, a lady of a different family, should be appointed guardian of the person of even that infant grandson of his, whom he has been constrained by stress of circumstances to treat as an outcaste. But we cannot take into account the feelings of the grandfather to the detriment of the infant.

(10) L. R. 1 Ch. App. 387, 389 (1866).

FULKUMARI BIBEE v. BUDH SINGH DHUDHURIA.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the District Judge set aside, and the Appellant appointed guardian of the person of the infant Ranjit Singh. The costs of the Appellant both here and in the Court below will come out of the estate of the infant; the costs of the Respondents will be borne by themselves.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3056 OF 1912.

JENKINS, C. J. WOODROFFE, J.	KAILASH CHANDRA PODDAR,
1914.	Defendant, Appellant,
Heard,	v.
9 & 10, March.	GOPAL CHANDRA PODDAR,
Judgment, 10, March.	Plaintiff, Respondent.

Compromise decree challenged on the ground of absence of consent—Application for review dismissed—Fresh suit, if lies

Where a party to a suit applied for review of a decree passed upon a compromise on the ground that he had not consented to the compromise, and failed.

Held—That a suit to set aside the decree on the same ground was not maintainable.

RAM GOPAL v. PRASANNA KUMAR (1) followed.

GULAB KOER v. BADSHAH BAHADUR (2) distinguished, the relief sought in that case having been based on fraud.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 18th September 1912, against a decree of Babu Debendra Mohan Sen, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Faridpur, dated the 23rd July 1912, reversing a decree of Babu Sashi Jiban Sen, Munsif at Bhanga, dated the 8th May 1911.

The facts of the case were as follows :—

Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, the two brothers, brought a suit against the Defendants for recovery of khas possession of certain lands.

That suit was compromised on a petition of the Plaintiffs and the Defendants, and a consent-decree was made by the Munsif in favour of the Defendants by which they were entitled to get settlement of some lands of the Plaintiffs at a certain rent Some days after that Plaintiff No. 1 made an application for review on the ground that he had not consented to the compromise, but that his pleader without his authority and against his instructions had signed the compromise petition. The Munsif, however, rejected the application for review holding that the pleader had authority to sign the compromise petition and the Plaintiff No. 1 had consented to the compromise. Thereupon the Plaintiffs instituted this suit for setting aside the consent-decree on the ground that the compromise and the consent-decree were fraudulent. The Defendants pleaded that the suit was not maintainable and was barred by res judicata by virtue of the decision in the review proceeding.

The Munsif on the authority of Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (2)

(1) 2 C. L. J. 508 : s. c. 10 C. W. N. 527 (1905).

(2) 10 C. L. J. 420 : s. c. 13 C. W. N 1197 (1909).

KAILASH CHANDRA PODDAR v. GOPAL CHANDRA PODDAR.

held that the decision in the review proceeding did not operate as res judicata; so he decreed the suit in favour of Plaintiff No. 1, holding that he had not consented to the compromise, but as against Plaintiff No. 2 who had consented to the compromise he dismissed the suit with the result that the Defendants were declared entitled to get a settlement of an undivided half of the Plaintiffs' lands. The Plaintiffs appealed and the Defendants filed cross objections. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the cross-objections, but decreed the appeals, holding that the Defendants could not get a settlement of the undivided half of the Plaintiffs' land. The result was that the Plaintiffs' suit was fully decreed.

The Defendants appealed to the High Court.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee for the Appellants contended that the decision in the review proceeding was res judicata on the question whether Plaintiff No. 1 had consented to the compromise petition: Ram Gopal v. Prasanna Kumar (1). The case of Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (2), assuming it to have been correctly decided, was distinguishable. The Court there held that sec. 13, C. P. C. of 1882, does not apply to a review proceeding, but it only applies to a suit. But what is a review proceeding? It is but a re-hearing of the whole suit. Besides, on general principles when a question has been decided by a competent Court, whether in a proceeding or in a suit, the same question should not be allowed to be re-agitated between the same parties. What would have been the result if the review had succeeded?

[Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee was stopped.]

Babu Brojo Lal Chakravarty for the Respondent being called upon submitted that the proper procedure for setting aside a consent-decree on the ground of fraud was a suit and not a review. In a review all the questions that properly arise for setting aside the consent-decree, could not be enquired into and decided. Hence it has been held in the case of Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (2), that the finding in the review could not operate as res judicata. When the review is rejected, the aggrieved party has no remedy; therefore the decision in the review should not operate as res judicata. Sec. 13, C. P. C. of 1882, does not apply to such a proceeding; if a decision in a review proceeding is held to operate as res judicata, it would be extending the purview of sec 13. The case of Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (2) is not distinguishable. There might be a question whether the review lay at all.

[JENKINS, C. J.—But you applied for review?]

But the other side did not object; moreover the Defendants did not appeal from the decision of the Munsif.

[Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee.—We filed cross-objections in which the question of res judicata was distinctly raised.]

Decisions in all actions do not operate as res judicata, for instance, decision in a suit under sec. 9 of the Specific Relief Act does not operate as res judicata in a title suit.

The compromise was not valid, because

(1) 2 C. L. J. 508: s. c. 10 C. W. N. 527 (1905).

(2) 10 C. L. J. 420: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 1197 (1909).

KAILASH CHANDRA PODDAR v. GOPAL CHANDRA PODDAR.

it included lands other than those in suit. The case of Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (2) is the later decision and it gives fully the reasons why a decision in a review proceeding should not operate as res judicata. Reads the judgment in Gulab Koer's case (2).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

JENKINS, C. J.—The present Plaintiff sued the Defendants, and a compromise was alleged to have been effected. A decree was passed in accordance with that compromise, and it is not suggested that there was any failure to observe the provisions of Order XXIII. The present Plaintiff No. 1 subsequently came to Court not by way of appeal from an order made under order XXIII, but for a review of the decree, and his application was based upon the allegation that he had not consented. He adopted the proper procedure in so applying. The result of his application, however, was unfavourable to him, and it was dismissed. Subsequently this suit was brought, and the Applicant for review as well as his co Plaintiff in the former suit are the Plaintiffs in this suit. There is the same allegation of no consent, and it is further suggested that there was fraud. Fraud has been negatived, so that the only ground of relief is the absence of consent. In these circumstances, it appears to me that this suit should have been dismissed; for, I think the only question on which a decision has been given in the suit in favour of the Plaintiffs was one which was decided adversely in the former litigation.

This view is in accordance with the decision in Ram Gopal v. Prasanna Kumar (1), which we treat as a decision entitled to respect, and we therefore follow that decision notwithstanding what has been said in Gulab Koer v. Badshah Bahadur (2). We may point out that in this last named case the relief sought was based on fraud and so it has no application to the present case.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed, and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal allowed.

(2) 10 C. L. J. 420 : s. c. 13 C. W. N. 1197 (1909).

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 869 OF 1912.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1914, 4, February.

BAIDYA NATH ROY and another, Defendants, Appellants, v. NANDA LAL GUHA SARKAR, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Regulation XI of 1825, sec. 4, sub-secs. (1) and (5)—Lakhiraj land, accretions to—Lakhirajdar if entitled to hold same rent-free—Suit to recover possession from superior tenure-holder and raiyat who took settlement from latter—Mesne profits.

The holder of a rent-free holding is entitled to possession of all lands forming accretions thereto, but he is not entitled to hold the same rent-free.

MEA JAN v. AKRAM (1), GOURHARI v. BHOLANATH (2), GOLAM ALI v. KALI KRISHNA THAKUR (3), CHOORAMONEE DEY v. HOWRAH MILL COMPANY (4), RAMMONEE

(1) 2 C. L. J. 508 : s. c. 10 C. W. N. 527 (1905).
(2) 10 C. L. J. 420 : s. c. 13 C. W. N. 1197 (1909).

(1) 8 C. L. J. 541 (1907).
(2) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 233 (1894).
(3) I. L. R. 7 Cal. 479 (1881).
(4) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 696 (1885).

BAIDYA NATH ROY v. NANDA LAL GUHA SARKAR.

v. OOMESH CHUNDER (5) AND RAMGUTTY NAG v. BURODA CHURN (6) referred to.

Where such a person sued to recover the accreted land from the holder of the superior interest and from a raiyat who in good faith had taken settlement of the land from the latter :

Held—That the Plaintiff was not entitled to eject the raiyat.

The principle of BENODE LAL PAKRASHI v. KALU PRAMANIK (7) applies equally to firm and alluvial lands.

As against the superior holder, the Plaintiff who, it was found, had never paid him any rent or offered to do so was not given a decree for mesne profits, the former's claim for rent being set off against the latter's claim of mesne profits.

This was an Appeal from a decision of Babu Atul Chandra Batabyal, Subordinate Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 21st December 1911, reversing that of Babu Gopal Chandra Biswas, Munsif, Basirhat, dated the 8th April 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment

Babu Shama Charan Roy for the Appellants.

Babus Baidya Nath Dutta, Siva Prasanna Bhattacharjee and Hit Lal Guha for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Defendants in a suit for declaration of title to immoveable property and for recovery of possession thereof with mesne profits. The case for the Plaintiff, is that the land in dispute forms an accretion to a homestead which belonged to his maternal uncle Raghu Nath Dutt who died in 1885 and that since the death of his maternal aunt in 1898, he has become entitled to hold possession thereof. He further asserts that the homestead was rent free mahatran land and that he is consequently entitled to hold the accretion as a rent-free tenure. The first Defendant is the putnidar of the village and the second Defendant is a raiyat under him. Their case is that the land does not form an accretion to the homestead of Raghu Nath Dutt and that the Plaintiff has no title thereto. The second Defendant further pleads that he had been in occupation for many years as a tenant under the first Defendant. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit. Upon appeal the Subordinate Judge has reversed that decision On the present appeal by both the Defendants, the decree of the Subordinate Judge has been assailed substantially on three grounds, namely, first, that the Plaintiff is not entitled to hold the land as rent-free mahatran ; secondly, that if the Plaintiff has any title to the land, he can hold it only on payment of rent to the putnidar and thirdly, that the second Defendant is a raiyat with right of occupancy and is not liable to be ejected In our opinion, the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is erroneous and must be set aside.

In so far as the first, question, namely, that of the title of the Plaintiff, is concerned, the Subordinate Judge has found that the disputed land forms an accretion to the homestead of his maternal uncle Raghu Nath Dutt, which constituted a rent free mahatran tenure. It is not open to the Defendants to challenge these findings in second appeal. But the question remains, whether the Plaintiff is entitled

(5) [1858] Beng. S. D. A. 1836.
(6) 1 W. R. 124 (1864).
(7) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 708 (1893).

BAIDYA NATH ROY v. NANDA LAL GUHA SARKAR.

to hold the accretion rent-free on the ground that the parent tenure is held rent-free by him. In our opinion, there is no foundation for the claim of the Plaintiff. Sub sec. (1) of sec. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 provides that when land may be gained by gradual accretion, whether from the recess of a river or of the sea, "it shall be considered an increment to the tenure of the person to whose land or estate it is thus annexed, whether such land or estate be held immediately from Government by Zamindar or other superior landholder or as a subordinate tenure by any description of under-tenant whatever, provided that the increment of land thus obtained shall not entitle the person in possession of the estate or tenure to which the land may be annexed to a right of property or permanent interest therein beyond that possessed by him in the estate or tenure to which the land may be annexed and shall not, in any case, be understood to exempt the holder of it from the payment to Government of any assessment for the public revenue to which it may be liable under the provisions of Regulation II of 1819 or of any other Regulation in force. There was a second proviso to the clause, to the following effect, which was repealed by sec. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885. "Nor if annexed to a subordinate tenure held under a superior landholder shall the under-tenant, whether a khud-kast raiyat holding a maurasi istimrari tenure at a fixed rate of rent per bigha or any other description of under-tenant liable by his engagements or by established usage to an increase of rent for the land annexed to his tenure by alluvion, be considered exempt from the payment of any increase of rent to which he may be jointly liable." On behalf of the Plaintiff it has been argued that as cl. (1) of sec. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 stands after the omission of the second proviso, the Plaintiff is not bound to pay any rent in respect of the accreted land and is entitled to hold the same rent-free in the same manner as the parent tenure. This contention is clearly fallacious. The second proviso was omitted because provision was made in sec. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the ascertainment of additional rent payable for additional land in the occupation of the tenant. It is true that the terms of sec. 52 are not directly applicable to the case before us. But we are entitled, indeed bound to act under cl. (5) of sec. 4 of the Regulation. That clause provides that in all other cases, namely, in all cases of claims and disputes respecting land gained by alluvion, or by dereliction of a river or sea, which are not specially provided for by the rules contained in the Regulation, the Courts of Justice in deciding upon such claims and disputes shall be guided by the best evidence they may be able to obtain of established local usage, if there be any applicable to the case, or if not, by general principles of equity and justice." "In the case before us, no evidence has been given of any established local usage applicable to the matter. We have thus to determine the rights and obligations of the parties on general principles of equity and justice. The question consequently reduces to this: Does the circumstance that the Plaintiff holds the parent tenure rent-free entitle him to hold the accreted land rent-free? In our opinion, the question should be answered in the negative. It is plain from the proviso to the first clause of sec. 4 that in case of accretion, the proprietor himself who holds direct under the Government becomes liable to assessment of additional revenue; and the view cannot possibly be maintained on any intelligible principle of equity and justice that the proprietor should be liable to pay additional revenue to Government, but that a subordinate holder under him should be entitled to hold the land without payment of rent to him. If this view were not maintained, the result might be that where a proprietor had made a rent-free grant of a small portion of land included within his estate, the rent-free holder might become entitled by accretion to hold a large quantity of land rent-free, while the proprietor might become liable to the Government to pay additional revenue therefor No rational principle has even been faintly suggested on which a result like this can be defended. It has been argued, however, that the contention of the Plaintiff is supported by a number of judicial decisions and our attention has been drawn to the case of Mea Jan v. Akram (1) in which Mr. Justice Geidt held that the person to whose land the accretion is formed is entitled to hold the land on the same terms as those on which the parent tenure is held. This proposition was formulated in a case in which the question in controversy was, whether a non-occupancy raiyat was entitled to claim possession of the land which had accreted to his holding, and it was ruled that he was entitled to hold the accreted land as a non occupancy raiyat. The question which arises before us, namely, whether a rent-free holder is entitled to hold the accreted land rent-free, was not in controversy in the case before Mr. Justice Geidt. The same observations apply to the case of Gouthari v. Bholanath (2), where it was ruled that a raiyat who had a right of occupancy was entitled to the benefit of sec. 4, cl. (1) of Reg. XI of 1825. An examination of the judgment of this Court in the cases of Golam Ali v. Kali Krishna Thakur (3) and Chooramonee Dey v. Howrah Mill Company (4) shows that the view we take is not opposed to the principle which underlies these decisions. In fact, in the decision last mentioned, Mr. Justice Mitter held that the rent payable in respect of accreted land might not always be on the same footing as rent payable in respect of the original holding and he pointed out that if in fixing the rent of the original holding a lower standard than the full letting value was adopted in consideration of any bonus paid, it would be unjust to the landlord to fix the rent of the accretion at the rate of rent fixed in respect of the original tenure. This observation applies obviously with much greater force to a case like the present, where we are unaware of the reason why rent was not assessed in respect of the land comprised in the original holding. In our opinion, it is plain that although the Plaintiff is entitled to possession of the accreted land, he is not entitled to hold the same rent-free. He is only entitled to a declaration that he holds the accreted land as a tenant under the first Defendant and is liable to pay rent in respect thereof, the amount to be assessed in a suit properly framed for the purpose. The view we take is in accord with that adopted in the cases of Rammonee v. Oomesh Chunder (5) and Ramgutty Nag v Buroda Churn (6).

BAIDYA NATH ROY v. NANDA LAL GUHA SARKAR.

In so far as the second point is con-

(1) 8 C. L. J. 541 (1907).
(2) I. L. R. 21 Cal 233 (1894)
(3) I. L. R. 7 Cal. 479 (1881).
(4) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 696 (1885).
(5) [1858] Beng. S. D. A. 1886.
(6) 1 W. R. 124 (1864).

BAIDYA NATH ROY v. NANDA LAL GUHA SARKAR.

cerned, it has been argued that as the Plaintiff is not entitled to hold the land rent-free, and as he has not only never paid rent to the first Defendant, but has never even offered to do so, he should not be allowed a decree for mesne profits. In our opinion, this contention is just and should prevail. The claim for mesne profits may well be set off against the legitimate claim of the first Defendant to rent. This will govern the rights of the parties up to the date of this judgment. If hereafter the first Defendant interfere with the possession of the Plaintiff, he will be liable for mesne profits.

In so far as the third point is concerned, it has been argued that the second Defendant is not liable to be ejected. This contention is manifestly sound. The Plaintiff has contended that the second Defendant did not specifically state in his written statement that he held as a raiyat under the first Defendant in good faith. Some weight may be attached to this circumstance, but the facts make it plain that the second Defendant is a bonâ fide raiyat under the first Defendant. The Subordinate Judge has found that the chur formed about the year 1887. Since then, the widow of the original holder Raghu Nath Dutt never took possession of the land. The first Defendant settled the land with tenants and allowed the second Defendant to take possession as a raiyat. The title of the Plaintiff accrued on the 2nd April 1898 on the death of his maternal aunt and the present suit was not commenced till the 2nd April 1910, that is, on the very last day of the period of limitation prescribed by the statute. The position consequently is that the second Defendant has been allowed to remain in occupation of the land for many years and there is really no room for the idle suggestion that he is not a bonâ fide raiyat under the first Defendant. There is also no reason why the rule laid down in the case of Benode Lal Paktashi v. Kalu Pramanik (7) should not be applied to the case of alluvial land. As Mr. Justice Banerjee pointed out in Peary Mohan Mondal v. Radhika Hazra (8) the principle which underlies that decision is that a tenant who enters upon the land and holds under a de facto proprietor bonâ fide is entitled to be treated as a raiyat, although the de facto proprietor subsequently turns out to be not the real owner. That doctrine is applicable quite as much to firm land as to alluvial accretions. We are clearly of opinion that all the grounds taken by the Appellants must prevail.

The result is that this appeal is allowed in part and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside. The Plaintiff will have a decree declaring his right to hold the disputed land as a tenant under the first Defendant upon payment of such rent as may hereafter be assessed in an appropriate proceeding. He will also have possession of the land by receipt of rent from the second Defendant as raiyat under him. As the suit thus stands dismissed against the second Defendant, the Plaintiff will pay his costs both in the Court of first instance and the Court of appeal below. As between the Plaintiff and the first Defendant, each party will bear his own costs in both the Courts below. The Appellants are entitled to their costs in this Court from the Plaintiff-Respondent.

Appeal allowed.

(7) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 708 (1893).
(8) 5 C. L. J. 9 at 14 (1904).

(CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.)

REV. No. 466 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1914,
23, April.

MADHO CHOWDHURY, Complainant, Petitioner,
v.
TURAB MIAN and ors., Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 247—Complaint by servant on behalf of master—Acquittal under sec. 247 on death of such Complainant—Complaint of same offence by another servant—Previous acquittal if bar to Magistrate's taking cognizance of second complaint—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 426—Maiming an animal.

A servant on behalf of his master filed a complaint that an elephant belonging to his master had been maimed by the accused. The Magistrate receiving the complaint issued process under sec. 426, I. P. C. On the date fixed for the disposal of the case, finding that the Complainant was dead, the Magistrate acquitted the accused under sec. 247, Cr. P. C. Thereupon another servant (the Petitioner) complained to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of the same offence of maiming his master's elephant, but the Sub-Divisional Magistrate dismissed the complaint under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., on the ground that the previous acquittal was a bar to his taking cognizance of it:

Held—That the previous acquittal was wholly without jurisdiction and was no bar to the Magistrate's taking cognizance of the second complaint.

This was a Rule granted on the 23rd of March 1914 against the order of the Sub-Divisional Officer of Beguserai, dated the 12th of February 1914, dismissing under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., the complaint brought by the Petitioner against the accused.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Abani Bhusan Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Babu Harihar Proshad Singh (for Dr. Sarat Chandra Bysak) for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Monghyr and also upon the Opposite Party to show cause why the order of acquittal under sec. 247 and the order of dismissal of the complaint of the Petitioner Madho Chowdhury under sec 203 should not be set aside and the case proceeded with

It appears that an elephant of the zemindar got loose into a chilly field belonging to one Turab Mian. The accused are then said to have attacked the elephant with spears and lathis and maimed the animal. Apparently, the learned Magistrate, who heard the complaint did no think that the animal had been maimed, but he issued process under sec. 426 When the day came for disposal, the servant of the zemindar, who had made the complaint, was dead, and the Magistrate adopted the rather extraordinary course, although he knew that the servant was dead, of acquitting the accused under sec. 247, Cr P. C In the meantime, another servant of the zemindar, the present Petitioner, had complained to the Sub Divisional Officer of the same offence of maiming his master's elephant The Sub Divisional Officer dismissed this case under sec. 203, Cr. P. C., on the ground that the previous acquittal was a bar to his taking cognizance of it.

We must point out in the first place that the previous acquittal can be no bar, because it was wholly without jurisdiction, and if it is a bar, it is now going to be removed.

We make the Rule absolute.

MADHO CHOWDHURY v. TURAB MIAN.

We set aside the order of acquittal under sec. 247 and the order of dismissal under sec. 203, and direct that there should be a further enquiry, and in making that enquiry, it should be ascertained before process is issued what the nature of the injury to the elephant is, for it will largely depend upon that, whether the jurisdiction falls under sec. 426, 427 or 429 and that would affect the course of the proceedings at the trial.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NOS. 490 & 491 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.
1914,
23, April.

ADHAR CHANDRA DEY, Petitioner,
v.
SUBODH CHANDRA GHOSH, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 345—Compromise effected out of Court by parties, pending hearing of rule issued by High Court, if can be given effect to under sec. 345, Cr. P. C.

The Petitioner was the complainant in a case and the accused in the counter-case. The Petitioner's complaint was dismissed by the Magistrate and in the other case he was convicted under sec. 352, I. P. C. He moved the High Court and obtained a Rule in each case, in one for a further enquiry into his complaint and in the other for a reduction of the sentence passed on him. Pending the hearing of the Rules both cases were compromised by the parties out of Court:

Held—That at the hearing of the Rules the parties had no locus standi to ask the Court to treat the compromise as one coming under sec. 345, Cr. P. C.

This was a Rule granted on the 27th of March 1914, against the order of the 4th Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, dated the 13th of March 1914, convicting Petitioner under sec. 352, I. P. C., and sentencing him to a fine of Rs 50.

The Petitioner was the complainant in a case and the accused in the counter-case. The Petitioner's complaint was dismissed by the Magistrate and in the other case he was convicted under sec. 352, I. P. C. He moved the High Court and obtained a rule in both cases, in one for a further enquiry into his complaint and in the other for a reduction of the sentence passed on him Pending the hearing of the rules, both cases were compromised by the parties out of Court.

Mr. P. N. Dutt, Babus Dijendra Kumar Ghosh and Haripada Chatterji for the Petitioner.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerji and Mritunjoy Chatterji for the Opposite Party.

Mr. F. N. Dutt.—Both cases have been compromised and in the case in which there was a conviction there would be an acquittal under sec. 345.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—Can you compromise the case here?]

Your Lordships have all the powers of an Appellate Court and the section says that compromise can be made pending an appeal.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—In one case we held that it was doubtful whether this can be done.]

Babu Manmatha Nath Mukerji.—Your Lordships dissented from a Punjab case [Nidhan Singh v. The King Emperor (1)], but your Lordships allowed the matter to be compromised.

The best thing would be to send the cases to the Magistrate and we can file our application there.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—But the Magistrate has already convicted the accused. The Rule is on the ground of sentence. On such a rule you can't claim an acquittal saying that you have compromised the matter.]

(1) 5 P. L. R. 252 (1904).

Mr. Dutt.—I am not asking for an acquittal on the Rule. But I am asking your Lordships to give effect to the compromise.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—It will be on record that you have compromised. In the Rule for reduction of sentence the sentence will be reduced as much as possible and the Rule against the order dismissing the complaint will be discharged.]

If the compromise is not given effect to, the case for further enquiry will have to be proceeded with.

[HOLMWOOD, J.—You have stated that there is a compromise and we hold you to it. The rule for further enquiry will be discharged.]

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

Two Rules come before us on behalf of Adhar Chandra Dey, one to show cause why the sentence passed upon him should not be reduced and the other on behalf of the same man in the capacity of complainant to show cause why the order of dismissal of his case should not be set aside and a further enquiry ordered. Upon the parties coming before us and stating that they have compromised the matter out of Court, we can give effect to this compromise, as far as we can, by reducing the sentence to a mere nominal fine of one rupee and directing that no further enquiry be made into the counter-charge. The parties certainly have no locus standi to ask us sitting here neither as a Court of Original Jurisdiction nor as a Court of Appeal to treat the compromise which they have made of their own free will as one coming under sec. 345, Cr. P. C. No stigma can possibly attach to the Petitioner on account of this petty fine for an equally petty assault.

The Rule 490 is made absolute in the terms we have indicated, and the Rule 491 is discharged.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 599 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914,
Heard,
21, May.
Judgment,
25, May.

SHERATI SHEIKH, Petitioner,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 494—Prosecution against one of two accused withdrawn—Such accused, if competent witness—Confession and prior statements of such accused if should be produced for cross-examination and contradiction.

The Petitioner along with one M was placed on his trial under sec. 411, I. P. C., but the prosecution against M was withdrawn, under sec 494, Cr. P. C., although no formal order of discharge was recorded. M was thereupon examined as a witness for the prosecution. It appeared that M had made a confession to a Magistrate and this confession was subsequently verified by the same or another Magistrate to whom M made further statements. The confession and these further statements were not placed on the record and copies of these were refused to the Petitioner:

Held—That notwithstanding the omission to record a formal order of discharge M ceased to be on trial with the Petitioner as soon as the prosecution against him was withdrawn, and that being so he became a competent witness; but for the purpose of cross-examination and, if necessary for contradiction, the prior statements of the witness should have been made accessible to the accused.

SHERATI SHEIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

This was a Rule granted on the 8th of April 1914 against an order of Mr. M. K. Barmon, Deputy Magistrate of Tangail, dated the 26th of January 1914, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 411, I. P. C, and sentencing him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months and to pay a fine of Rs. 40, which order was, on appeal, affirmed by C. H. Moseley, Esq., Additional Sessions Judge of Mymensingh, on the 9th of March 1914.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Monmotha Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

No one for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

In this case one Sherati Sheikh was convicted on the 26th January 1914 under sec. 411 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three months and to a fine of Rs. 40.

It appears that in the first instance the Petitioner and one Mojum Khan were placed on their trial together and that on the 6th November, with the consent of the Court, the Public Prosecutor withdrew from the prosecution of Mojum Khan under sec. 494 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

Mojum Khan was thereupon examined as a witness, and it is largely upon this evidence of an accomplice, that the Petitioner has been convicted.

It appears also that prior to the trial Mojum Khan had made a confession [illegible] Magistrate and that his confession was subsequently verified by the same or another Magistrate to whom presumably therefore the confessing prisoner made further statements. The confession and these further statements have not been placed on the record, and on this ground copies were refused to the Petitioner.

On his behalf it is then contended before us, first, that no formal order of discharge having been recorded in the case of Mojum Khan, his evidence was inadmissible; and, secondly, that the Petitioner has been prejudiced by the failure of the prosecution to produce the confession and further statements of the said witness.

The first contention is based on the case of Banu Singh v. King-Emperor (1), but in the present case it is clear that notwithstanding the inadvertent omission to record a formal order of discharge the accomplice ceased to be on trial with the present Petitioner as soon as the prosecution against him was withdrawn and that being so he became a competent witness. The matters urged against the value of his testimony do not render it inadmissible.

There can however be no question that for the purposes of cross-examination and if necessary contradiction, the prior statements of the witness should have been made accessible to the accused, and we are at a loss to understand why the Public Prosecutor should have withheld them and why the trying Magistrate failed to compel their production.

We therefore set aside the conviction of and sentence imposed upon the Petitioner and direct that he be re-tried, the re-trial to take place before some other competent Magistrate at Tangail if available, if not at the District head-quarters.

Rule made absolute.

(1) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 1353 (1906).

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 808 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914,
18, June.

KANCHAN MULLIK, and ors., Petitioners,
v.
KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Appeal in criminal cases—Duty of Appellate Court.

Where it appeared from the judgment of the Sessions Judge in appeal that he practically called upon the Appellants before him to establish to his satisfaction that the first Court had come to a wrong finding :

Held—That this was not the standpoint from which an appeal in a criminal case was to be approached. In an appeal from a conviction and sentence it is for the Appellate Court as for the first Court to be satisfied affirmatively that the prosecution case is substantially true and that the guilt of the Appellants has been established beyond all reasonable doubt.

This was a Rule granted on the 18th of May 1914, against an order of Babu U. C. Ray Choudhury, Deputy Magistrate of Khulna, dated the 13th of Ma ch 1914, which was on appeal modified by H. A. Stree', Esq, Sessions Judge of Khulna, on the 25th of March 1914.

The Judgment of the Sessions Judge was as follows :—

"The Civil Court proceedings which led to the occurrence, out of which this appeal arises, have been sufficiently set forth in the judgment. It is alleged that on the 1st January last the peon was prevented by an armed unlawful assembly, of which accused were members, from attaching the judgment-debtor's crops. Later on that day and again on the next day the accused themselves reaped and removed the crops.

"The accused say that the peon actually reaped the crops and has brought this false case in collusion with the Defendant.

"The prosecution have examined 9 witnesses and defence 2 (out of 5 in all) to prove the rival occurrences. The lower Court with the witnesses before it has believed the former, and unless reasonable ground is given me for differing, I must accept that finding of fact. The following criticisms of the prosecution evidence are offered :—

"(1) The witnesses are decree-holder's tenants and P. W. 5 has been convicted in a similar affair.

"(2) The witnesses except No. 2 and the peon prove only the obstruction and not the subsequent reaping of the paddy that day.

"(3) The police have not been called to corroborate the peon's statement that he asked them for help.

"(4) Admittedly over 20 persons were present on the side of decree-holder and accused about 12 in number as alleged could not have driven them away.

"(5) Harmuz accused is not named in peon's report of January 2nd. He is only 13/14 years old and could not have been there.

"(6) On 23rd December last the brother of judgment-debtor and his brother in-law filed a claim before the Munsif and had nothing to gain by this action ; they did not complain after the peon reaped the paddy, because they thought it would be taken to Court.

"None of these contentions leads me to discredit the prosecution story. Decree-holder is the local landholder and local witnesses must be his tenants. The convictions under sec. 144 can rest on the two witnesses corroborated by the reports of the peon at the time. He seems to be speaking the truth and his visit to the police is not contradicted. P. W. 2's ignorance of the fact is not a contradiction. If the accused were armed, as it appears, the peon would naturally come away and the decree-holder's party would be powerless without him. Harmuz is mentioned in the report of the 1st, in respect of which occurrence he has been sentenced. Though a boy, he is judgment-debtor's son. The peon would have been more likely to name J. W. (?), if he wished to insert wrong names. I agree with the Magistrate's reasons for rejecting the evidence of alibi given by the 'private tutor' who has not passed the Entrance Examination. But I do not suppose that he took any active part in the occurrence and a fine of Rs. 100 is clearly excessive. The filing of the claim case shews only that the judgment-debtor's relations were not likely to allow the paddy to be cut pending decision, and supports the case against them.

KANCHAN MULLIK v. KING-EMPEROR.

"It is to be noted that the allegation that the peon cut the paddy was never suggested in cross-examination, nor made by the accused when examined on 5th February. It first appears in an affidavit on the 7th before the Civil Court and is clearly an after-thought.

I find, therefore, that accused with others obstructed the peon on the 1st January last and formed an unlawful assembly with the common object charged. The substantive sentences passed on Ferasot and Kanchan are not excessive; but the addition of Rs. 100 fine in the case of each Appellant (Rs. 300 in all) is I think unnecessary having regard to the fact that there was no fight. I remit the sentences of fine passed against Ferasot and Kanchan and reduce the fine in the case of Harmuz to Rs. 25 under each section (Rs. 50 in all). In default he will suffer one month's simple imprisonment under each section. The convictions of all Appellants under secs. 144 and 186 and sentencess passed, with above modifications, are confirm d and the Appeal dismissed.

"Appellants will surrender to their bail."

Maulvi S. K. Fazlul Huq for the Petitioners.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this case the Petitioners were convicted under secs. 186 and 144, I. P. C., and sentenced—Petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 to three months' rigorous imprisonment and to pay a fine of Rs. 50 under each section and Petitioner No. 2 Harmuz Ali who is said to be a boy of 13 or 14 years of age to pay a fine of Rs. 25 under each section. The sentences of imprisonment on the Petitioners Nos. 1 and 3 were to run concurrently. They obtained a Rule from this Court calling upon the District Magistrate of Khulna to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside and such other or further order made as to this Court might seem fit and proper on the ground that at the hearing of the appeal by the learned Sessions Judge the learned Sessions Judge approached the consideration of the case from a wrong standpoint. On turning to his judgment we find that he opens his judgment as follows—"The prosecution has examined 9 witnesses and the defence 2 (out of 5 in all) to prove the rival occurrences. The lower Court with the witnesses before it has believed the former, and unless reasonable ground is given me for differing, I must accept that finding of fact." That is to say, he has practically called upon the Appellants before him to establish to his satisfaction that the first Court has come to a wrong

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, AUGUST 24, 1914. [No. 41.

Contents.

NOTES.

Enemy subjects and trading license.

We understand that the Government of Bengal has issued a press Communique intimating to the public, what we already announced in these columns, that the effect of the declaration of war was to annul all contracts and to dissolve all partnerships between British and enemy subjects (Austrian and German). But the Government is apparently disposed to allow the firms so dissolved to be reconstituted and commence business under the management of British subjects. As regards the other question raised by us regarding the grant of privilege to the resident enemy subjects to trade in their individual capacity, we are told that permission can only be given under His Majesty's authority and that each application for such license will be considered on its own merits. This makes it clear that the fact of residence of the enemy subjects in India does not necessarily carry with it the privilege of engaging even in internal trade on their part. The Government is surely justified in taking the general situation and individual cases into consideration and to limit or restrict privileges to enemy subjects as considerations of public safety may require. The net result of the Communique is that British subjects may enter into transactions with enemy subjects for the supply of the necessaries of life, but they may not engage in any general trading transaction with those who have not been given any trading license.

Calcutta Prize Court and enemy vessels.

The proceedings in the Calcutta High Court in the matter of Prizes have resulted in orders transferring the custody of enemy vessels to British authorities and their detention in such custody during the pendency of war. The executive have a right to impress such vessels into service and to put them to such use as they may desire. We said in these columns that bonâ fide enemy merchant-vessels which had entered Calcutta port before the declaration of war were not liable to confiscation. The Government has acted wisely in not pressing for an order for the confiscation of such vessels. Although what we have stated before is the general principle of the law on the subject, yet we are of opinion that if Germany has detained English vessels in German ports under similar circumstances, our Prize Court here would be justified in passing orders of detention or even confiscation by way of reprisal. The case of Fox and others is an authority for such orders by way of a retaliatory measure. But evidently Germany has not yet intimated to Great Britain what she is going to do with the ships lying in German ports and under such circumstances the only proper order for the Court would be to sanction their detention. As to their being impressed into public service, that is also within the legitimate rights of a belligerent Power. But if the vessel is lost or damaged, when under such service, it will be open to the ship-owner to claim compensation or damages at the conclusion of peace.

Indian Troops and European War.

It is likely that Indian troops will be employed to fight the German and Austrian troops in the continent of Europe. International jurists have long debated about the propriety of employing Asiatic or African troops against a European power. But this controversy has been considerably narrowed down since the Russo-Japanese war. The only limitation that is now seriously urged is in respect of employment of undisciplined savages not under any regular command against civilized troops who have to observe the laws of civilized warfare. During the sack of Pekin it was admitted on all hands that the Indian troops showed far greater respect for the life, property and honour of the men and women of the Chinese people than any other troops of the allies. While the conduct of Indian troops was above reproach that of the Germans was the worst of all. The employment of Asiatic troops under regular officers against European troops can no longer be seriously objected to since the employment of Turcos by the French in the Franco-German war in 1870, and the employment of Algerian troops by the same power in the present war.

Red Cross and its privileges in war.

We also accord our most hearty welcome to the proposal of raising an Ambulance Corps in Bengal for service in Europe. A few words explaining the legal status of red-cross men in modern warfare will not be here out of place. The red cross of the ambulance badge is not a religious badge but was adopted by way of compliment to Geneva where the first conference for the succour of the sick and wounded was held. A red cross on a white flag or a similar badge on the cap or arm will protect one from being fired at by the enemy. The ambulence camp, field and other hospitals over which a red cross flies are similarly protected. Red-cross people cannot be taken prisoners of war. Only the enemy may impress them for ambulance work but must pay them on the same scale as they pay their own men for similar service and at the conclusion of the war must send them back to their own Government or home at the captor's own expense. But in spite of all these privileges the work that they have to perform requires no less courage and power of endurance than that of a soldier. To sum up, the position of a red-cross man is not merely that of a non-combatant but in the eye of the International law he is a neutral.

Purchase of German War-ships by Turkey.

The alleged sale of the German war-vessels Goeben and Breslau to Turkey raises a very interesting issue in International law. There is prohibition, no doubt, against a neutral State selling any war-vessels or warlike stores to any belligerents during hostilities, but there is no precedent, so far as we are aware, of a neutral State purchasing such articles from a belligerent. If Turkey would change the names of the two vessels, hoist her own flag, man them with her own crew and intern the German crew and preserve neutrality with the Entente powers cannot very well take any exception to Turkey acquiring these vessels by purchase from Germany. Turkey may further plead in justification that her two war-vessels which were in the English dockyards and were to have been delivered to her shortly, having been appropriated by England recently owing to exigencies of war, which England was clearly within her rights to do, Turkey could not let go this opportunity of acquiring two other war-vessels in their place. Turkey may plead that she requires these two war-vessels for maintaining her balance of power amongst her neighbouring neutral States.

But whether the purchase of the war-vessels is a bona fide purchase will be tested by the subsequent conduct of Turkey and the part that may be played by these vessels in the present war. If it be but a colourable purchase, we need hardly say that there could be no justification for Turkey giving an asylum to these belligerent vessels in her neutral waters. By the Hague Convention of 1907 belligerent war-ships are forbidden to make use of neutral ports, roadsteads, or territorial waters for replenishing or increasing their supplies of war materials or armaments or supplementing their crew. They may only add to their supplies up to the peace standard and ordinarily, when no repairs are required to make them seaworthy, they are required to leave within 24 hours. They may obtain just enough supply of fuel or provision for the crew, if these have run short, to take them to the nearest home port and they are not to be given any second supply of coal within the next three months of such supply. It may no doubt be said that Russia and France violated these principles during the Russo-Japanese war. In 1904 part of the Russian fleet went round the Cape and part of it went through the Suez Canal. Although the Russian fleet had floating coal depôts with them, yet it is well-known that the war-ships also coaled within neutral territorial waters. Further, the fleet made a long stay both at Madagascar and French Cochin China. But in answer to this it may be said that this was done prior to the Hague Convention of 1907.

Further, it must be said in favour of France that during the actual conflict between Russia and Japan, the right of asylum in respect of Russian war-vessels was strictly and rigorously enforced by her against Russia. The cruiser Diana in August 1904, after an engagement off Port Arthur, took shelter in a damaged condition in the French Port Saigon. Thereupon the French Government had the Diana disarmed and her crew interned. The same was also done with regard to the Russian war-vessels Csarewitch and Askold on their entering Kiochow. The Russian destroyer Roshitelni which at the same time escaped from Port Arthur took shelter in the Chinese harbour of Chifu. Two Japanese gun-boats captured her in Chinese neutral waters and Japan justified the capture on the ground that she had not been disarmed by China and that when a neutral Power did not fulfil her obligations as a neutral power the belligerent prejudiced thereby is justified in putting the offending warship or any portion of the enemy's military or naval force or war equipments out of harm's way. Such acts, in this view, would not amount to breach of neutrality. But the more approved course for the belligerent is to put pressure on the offending neutral State for the fulfilment of her obligations in this respect by approved measures of reprisal, short of war, such as blockade and the like.

War-ships and asylum in neutral waters.

We shall show now that the rules adopted at the Hague Convention in 1907 are not mere abstract formulæ but are based on approved practice of all the world powers. The rule of 24 hours' stay and limitations as to obtaining supply of coal, provision and repairs are well illustrated by the following instances which occurred during the Russo-Japanese war. The Russian cruiser Terek went into the port of Batavia in June 1905, being greatly in need of coal and provisions. The Dutch Government adhering to the practice gave permission to the Russian vessel to obtain as much supply of coal and provision as was necessary to proceed to some Russian port but warned her against the transgression of the 24 hours' limit of time. Terek after coaling for 24 hours found that the supply of coal would not be sufficient to carry her to any Russian port and applied to the Dutch Government for an extension of time for further supply of coal. This was refused and the cruiser was disarmed and detained by the Dutch Government at Batavia till the termination of war. The Chinese Government similarly on the representation of Japan after the outbreak of hostilities in February 1904 ordered the Russian war-ship Mandjur to leave Shanghai within 24 hours. As the Russian vessel tarried, she was eventually disarmed, the vital parts of her machinery being taken out and breach blocks of her guns removed and her crew sent back to Russia under a pledge not to engage in hostilities against Japan during the war. The United States Government acted similarly with regard to the Russian auxiliary cruiser Lena which came into San Francisco harbour in September 1904 after an engagement with Japanese fleet with her boiler and engine damaged. As such repairs would enable her to engage in an action, it was refused and she was disarmed and her crew put under parole in the United States till the termination of war. The Russian war-ships Askold and Grozovoi which in August 1904 sought refuge at Shanghai was similarly treated by the Chinese Government after an appeal by Japan to the European powers and issue of an ultimatum to China. The disarmament of Diana by the Franch has already been noticed. Lastly even Germany, who in the present war is arbitrarily violating the ordinary canons of International law and obligations in respect of neutral estates, in August 1904 when the Russian war-ships Czarevitch and Novik with several smaller vessels took shelter in Kiochow, ordered the Novik, which was seaworthy, to leave within 24 hours, and the other vessels which were unseaworthy were disarmed and their crew interned till the end of the war.

Correspondence.

To the Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

In an undefended mortgage suit for the recovery of about Rs. 4,000 the Plaintiff's attorney demanded and the mortgagor had to pay over Rs. 2,400 to the said solicitor on account of his costs only—costs amounting to more than sixty per cent. of the value of the claim—although the proceedings had throughout been without any contest or opposition. Of this about Rs. 400 represented the taxed costs of the suit and Rs. 2,000, the costs subsequent to the decree. In the Court of a Subordinate Judge the costs of execution of a similar mortgage-decree would not exceed Rs. 100. In the Original Side, if the bill of the solicitor was a legitimate one, it is twenty times as much; for costs subsequent to the decree realized by the solicitor in the case mentioned amounted as stated to no less than Rs. 2,000.

The situation is simply distressing in more respects than one. Under the rules of the Original Side, the judgment-debtor is absolutely helpless, and is placed completely under the mercy of the solicitor of his adversary. He is bound to pay without any question whatever amount the Plaintiff's solicitor may be pleased to demand from him as costs.

The unfortunate judgment-debtor in this particular case tendered through his attorney the whole of the amount due to the Plaintiff on account of principal and interest and tendered also Rs. 1400, as costs and offered to pay the balance of costs, if any, on the bill being taxed. The money was refused and additional costs of Rs. 300 were claimed and realized, because there was a delay of two or three days. Evidently, therefore, the judgment-debtor has no right to claim any enquiry, before payment, as to the fairness or otherwise of the costs claimed from him. Even the right to get a copy of the bill he is required to pay to the last farthing evidently does not exist. For the solicitor in this case even refused to furnish a copy of the bill though requested by the solicitor of the Defendant to do so.

Can helplessness of litigants go any further? The root of the evil lies in the unique and extraordinary privilege which entitles a solicitor to charge separate fees for every separate bit of work that he might choose to do on behalf of his client and record in his day-book. Unlike other lawyers remuneration of solicitors is not payable in a lump for all work done in connection with any suit or proceeding. The main grievance of the poorer litigants of the Original Side is the method and the scale of remuneration of solicitors and the absence of the ad valorem scale of payment with a maximum fixed such as is prevalent everywhere in every Court in the Province including the Appellate Side of the High Court.

If vakils and District Court pleaders can manage undefended mortgage-suits in the Mofussil with a fee of 2½ per cent. only, why force litigants to pay over 50 per cent. for identically the same work to the solicitors in the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court?

Introduce the system of ad valorem payment of costs with a maximum and the agitation for a City Court so far from being supported would be strongly opposed by a considerable section of the intelligent public.

Yours faithfully,
A VICTIM.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[ON APPEAL FROM THE CENTRAL PROVINCES.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.
LORD MOULTON.
LORD SUMNER.
SIR JOSHUA WILLIAMS
SIR CHARLES FITZPATRICK.
1914,
21st July.

TAKHAT SINGH,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR.

Special leave to appeal in a Criminal case cannot be granted where the ground of appeal raises the question of credibility of evidence alone.

This was an application for special leave to appeal. The Petitioner was tried with seven other persons for offences under secs. 302 and 307 of the Indian Penal Code before the Sessions Judge at Jubbulpore and two Assessors. The Sessions Judge disagreeing with both the Assessors acquitted two persons, namely Gulab and Sukke and convicted the rest including the Petitioner. The Petitioner was sentenced to death on the charge of murder, and to transportation for life upon the second charge. On appeal the Judicial Commissioners, by their judgment dated the 30th March 1914, affirmed the order of conviction and sentence against the Petitioner and others excepting one Raghubir Prasad. As to this accused there was a difference of opinion and the case was therefore referred to a third Judge with the result that Raghubir Prasad was acquitted. The case for the prosecution rested almost entirely on the testimony of a witness Bhau Singh who identified the accused. The story told by this witness was not accepted by one of the Assessors, and the other Assessor did not accept it in so far as it implicated the Petitioner and Raghubir Prasad and Gulab. The Sessions Judge did not accept it in so far as it implicated Gulab and Sukke, and the Judicial Commissioners did not accept it in so far as it related to Raghubir, Prasad, Gulab and Sukke.

After filing the petition for special leave, the sentence of death against the Petitioner was commuted into that of transportation for life.

Sir Robert Finlay, K. C. (with him Mr. A. M. Dunne) for the Petitioner appeared in support of the petition for special leave. He submitted that the conviction was based on the very unsatisfactory evidence of Bhau Singh, whose testimony was not believed by the Courts below in relation to three persons. There was no difference between the case for the prosecution against Raghubir Prasad and the Petitioner, and he submitted that there was no reason why, upon the evidence of the same witness, the Petitioner should be convicted when Raghubir Prasad was acquitted.

Their Lordships rejected the petition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR remarked that the argument on behalf of the Petitioner turned upon a pure question of fact and the credibility of evidence, and that it did not come within the rule in Dillet's case.

Messrs T. L. Wilson & Co., for the Petitioner.

B. D. Leave refund.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WOODROFFE and COXE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2826 OF 1912. SADHU CHARAN DUTTA, Defendant No. 1, Appellant v. HARA NATH DUTTA AND OTHERS, Respondents. 11th August 1914.

Appeal—Preliminary decree—Final decree, no appeal preferred against.

The appeal was against a preliminary decree for partition. Before the filing of the second appeal, a final decree wes passed and there had been no appeal filed against the final decree.

Held, that as the preliminary decree which was passed had been affirmed by the final decree and the final decree was itself not made the subject of appeal, no appeal lay.

Khirodamoyi Dasi v. Adhar Chandra Ghose (18 C. L. J. 321) followed.

Ram Nath Singh v. Basanta Narain Singh (17 C. W. N 868) distinguished.

Babus Gunada Charan Sen and Surendra Nath Das Gupta for the Appellant.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Bepin Chandra Bose for the Respondents.

A. T. M. Appeal dismissed.

KANCHAN MULLIK v. KING-EMPEROR.

finding. This is not the standpoint from which an appeal in a criminal case is to be approached. In an appeal from a conviction and sentence it is for the Appellate Court, as for the first Court, to be satisfied affirmatively that the prosecution case is substantially true and that the guilt of the Appellants has been established beyond all reasonable doubt. We are therefore of opinion that the order of the Appellate Court must be set aside and we accordingly set it aside and direct that the appeal be re-heard. At the re-hearing of the appeal it will be for the consideration of the Sessions Judge whether the cumulative sentences in the case of Harmuz Ali ought or ought not to be affirmed. In these terms we make the Rule absolute.

Rule made absolute.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD MOULTON.
LORD SUMNER.
LORD PARMOOR.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1914,
Heard, 24, February & 2, 3 & 4, March.
Judgment,
16, July.

RAJA SRINATH ROY and ors., Appellants,
v.
DINABANDHU SEN, since deceased, and others, Respondents.

Jalkar-rights—Tidal navigable river, grant of exclusive fishery in—Shifting of river from its bed—Grantee's right if confined to water on soil of river at date of grant—Right to "follow the river"—English law of waters, deviation from, if justified by special circumstances of Lower Bengal—English common law when to be adopted—Right to the soil, if affected—Fishery, right of, in overflooded jheel whose—River's encroachment, if must be gradual to permit extension of fishery rights—Government grant of exclusive fishery—Proof, when original grant not forthcoming, by secondary evidence and evidence of user—Foreign law, extension to India, to be permitted under what safeguards—Rule of law affecting property rights established by Courts in Bengal, if should be upset in the absence of proof that rule unjust or flagrantly inexpedient.

The Indian Courts have in many respects followed the English law of waters. But they have never gone to the point of holding that the exclusive right of fishing in tidal navigable waters granted by Government to private owners is so indissolubly bound up with its ownership of the soil subjacent to those waters that no matter how the waters may subsequently change their course, while still remaining part of the same river system within the up-stream and down-stream limits of the grant, the enjoyment of the right so granted cannot extend beyond the limits of the Government's ownership of the soil lying perpendicularly underneath them.

It must now be taken as decided in Bengal that the grantee in such a case can follow the shifting river for the enjoyment of the exclusive right of fishery so long as the waters form part of the river system within the up-stream and down-stream limits of his grant—the right being made to depend on the identity of the river in which it is enjoyed and not being confined to such waters of the river only as are superimposed on the very land once owned by the grantor of the right.

Even enclosed jheels belonging to riparian owners on becoming covered by the shifting river become subject to the grantee's jalkar right.

Held—That this deviation from the English law is justified by the special circumstances of Lower Bengal.

In proposing to apply the juristic rules of a distant time or country to the conditions of a particular place at the present day regard must be had to the physical, social and historical conditions to which that rule is to be adapted.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

The Judicial Committee would in any case be slow to disturb decisions by which rules have been established for Bengal governing extensive and important rights such as rights of jalkar, and unless they could be shown to be manifestly unjust or flagrantly inexpedient they would not supersede them.

The rule which in the United Kingdom connects the subject's right to an exclusive fishery in tidal navigable waters with the limits of the Crown's ownership of the subjacent soil is itself the result of conditions partly historical and partly geographical which have no counterpart in Lower Bengal.

English tenures and Bengal Zamindari rights unduly assimilated at one time, have never fully corresponded to one another. Above all, the difference, indeed the contrast, of physical conditions is capital. In England the bed of a stream is for the most part unchanging during generations and alters, if it alters at all, gradually and by slow processes. In the deltaic area of Lower Bengal change is almost normal in the river systems and changes occur rarely by slow degrees, and often with an almost cataclysmal suddenness.

Jalkar rights in navigable waters in Lower Bengal settled with a grantee under a Revenue Settlement by the Government are derived from the Crown—the freehold of the bed of navigable rivers being deemed to be in the Crown.

Indian decisions on jalkar have followed English analogy closely in holding that when the bed of a river thus forms part of the public domain the public at large is primâ facie entitled to fish, and also that a sudden invasion of a private owner's land by the waters of a navigable river does not divest the property in the soil, though the flooded landowner must, if the water in the new course be in fact navigable (that is capable of being traversed by a boat at all seasons), submit to have his land traversed by the public in the course of navigation and cannot in right of his ownership erect works on his flooded soil to the obstruction of the navigation.

The right of the owner of the fishery to "follow the river" ought not to be limited to cases where the river's encroachments are gradual as in the case of alluvial accretions to land, the analogy not being in pari materia.

The evidence of a Government grant of an exclusive fishery in navigable waters ought to be conclusive and clear.

In the case of grants of more than a century old, as the original grants are in practice but rarely forthcoming, resort must be had to secondary evidence of them or to the inference of a legal origin to be drawn from long user.

HORI DAS MAL v. MAHOMED JAKI (1) approved.

This was an Appeal from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, dated the 11th March 1908, on an appeal from a judgment and decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Faridpur, dated the 30th June 1905.

The main question for determination in this appeal was as to whether the Plaintiffs-Appellants were entitled to a decree for possession of a jalkar or fishery in one of the channels of the Ganges or Padma River in the district of Faridpur.

(1) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 434 (1885).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

The facts relating to this litigation are shortly as follows :—

The Appellants are the proprietors in possession of a Zamindari known as Pargana char Mukundia standing in the name of a former proprietor Ram Kristo Roy, formerly Tauzi No. 110 of the Dacca Collectorate and now No. 4900 of the Faridpur Collectorate.

Amongst the items constituting this estate was included a jalkar mahal or fishery described as the River Balabanta Bil Baor.

On the 9th Aghran 1279 (23rd November 1872), a predecessor-in-interest of the Appellants granted a patni lease of the said jalkar to Grish Chandra Guha and Bepin Chandra Guha.

In 1882 the Appellants purchased the two-thirds share of the said Grish Chandra Guha in the said patni lease of the said jalkar at an auction sale in execution of a decree obtained by the former against the latter and have been in possession thereof since their said purchase.

The pro formâ Defendants-Respondents, are the owners of the remaining shares in the said patni lease.

This jalkar had been in the ownership and possession of the Appellants and their predecessors-in-title from time immemorial and it was settled as a distinct mahal as part of their said estate char Mukundia at the time of the Permanent Settlement and had been held and enjoyed as such since that time.

The Balabanta River was at the said date a local name for the main stream of the Ganges or Padma River. It was admitted at the trial on behalf of the Respondent No. 1, and it was the fact that the Balabanta was a tidal navigable river, the name itself denoting a strong running stream and the words Bil Baor denoting marshes and lakes.

The boundaries of the jalkar as given in the Chauhaddibandi paper for the year 1202 (1795) were not now traceable, as the names therein referred to have long since disappeared.

The jalkar was an extensive and valuable one, and from the year 1797 there were repeated attempts by the proprietors, ijaradars and tenants of Pargana Bikrampur, which was situate lower down the river and on the opposite bank to char Mukundia, to encroach on the rights of fishery settled with and possessed by the owners of the latter estate. Such attempts led to affrays and litigation in which the extent of the jalkar rights of the Zamindars of char Mukundia under their settlement was raised and determined.

The Bikrampur contention was that the main stream of the river opposite Pargana Bikrampur belonged to the jalkar of that estate and did not fall within the jalkar of char Mukundia, the down-stream limit of which they alleged was at char Nawabganj higher up the river.

The char Mukundia contention was that their jalkar rights extended along Pargana Bikrampur to a point further down the main stream, i.e., to char Shahabdin on the left bank and to Harina on the right bank in Pargana Jalalpur, localities far beyond the limits of Pargana char Mukundia.

In 1797 a suit was instituted by the Talukdars of the said jalkar in the river Balabanta; they being tenants of the char Mukundia estate against tenants of the Bikrampur estate for the recovery of possession of the above disputed portion of their said jalkar claiming that its downstream limit was char Shahabdin and Harina as above stated.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

On the 17th February 1797, a decree was made in their favour and possession of the said jalkar was ordered and given to the Plaintiffs therein, the down-stream limit being definitely fixed and marked as above stated.

In 1816 the then Zamindars of char Mukundia instituted a suit against the Zamindar of Bikrampur for possession of the said jalkar mahal. The section of the main stream of the river in dispute was the same as before and the question turned again on the position of the down-stream limit of the jalkar of the Balabanta River.

The suit was decreed on the 11th September 1816, on the basis of the limit fixed in the previous suit, it being found and held that possession had been granted to and held by the Plaintiffs in the said suit up to the limit aforesaid.

In 1843 the Zamindar of Bikrampur filed a suit against the then Zamindar of char Mukundia to set aside the decisions in the previous suit and to recover possession of the jalkar in the said section of the river.

On the 28th June 1843, the said suit was dismissed with costs ; it was found and held inter alia that possession of the said disputed jalkar by the then Defendant and his predecessors Zamindars of char Mukundia from before 1797 had been proved and that the suit and claim were barred by limitation.

No suggestion was ever made that the River Balabanta was not a part of the main stream of the Ganges or Padma.

On the 27th February 1859, the Collector of Faridpur under Regulation II of 1819 directed an assessment for the Government Revenue purposes of the jalkar of the River Padma from Haziganj, the up-stream, to Harina, the down-stream limit.

On the 23rd March 1860, the then proprietor of char Mukundia filed a petition of objection to the said assessment on the ground that the said jalkar of the River Balabanta, commonly called Padmabati, had been in existence from before the time of the Decennial Settlement and had been already assessed.

On the 11th January 1861, by a rubokari of the Collector of Faridpur the assessment claimed was rejected on the ground that the said jalkar had been included as a mahal in the Zamindari char Mukundia from before the Decennial Settlement, that the Balabanta and the Padma are the same river, and that no fresh assessment could be made.

On the 30th April 1861, the order of the Collector was affirmed on appeal by the Commissioner of the Division.

The said jalkar, bounded as aforesaid, had been throughout leased by the Zamindars of char Mukundia to tenants and ijaradars and then to patnidars, and had been possessed and held by them. The River Balabanta had always been known and described as another name for that section of the Ganges or Padma.

The river has since the Decennial Settlement changed its bed and its channels at many periods. Its course has necessarily altered from time to time in consequence of the river dividing itself and forcing its way through new channels.

Many years ago the main river branched off into a very considerable stream in that locality, which joined it again a little lower down. It was known as the Bhubaneswar, but the name was also used and came to be known as denoting the main stream of the Ganges or Padma.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

In 1894 the ijaradars of the Appellants' jalkar instituted two suits against certain tenants of the Respondent No. 1, one of the parties being the father of the present Defendant No. 10, in the present suit, for damages for wrongful interference with their possession of a channel or stream flowing out of the main river within the limits of their fishery rights and forming a part of their jalkar. The said stream flowed between the char lands of, amongst others, the Appellants and the Respondent No. 1.

The suits were defended, in fact on behalf of and in the interests of the said Respondent, and amongst other defences raised, it was contended that the said disputed stream was not within the Appellants' jalkar inasmuch as it did not form a part of the main stream of the River Padma.

On the 17th May 1895 the suit was decreed in favour of the Plaintiffs, it being held that the stream was within the area of the Appellants' said jalkar, and that the River Balabanta was the Padma.

On the 20th November 1896, and 28th April 1897, the said judgment was affirmed on appeal and on review.

It was held that the area in which the jalkar was claimed was a part of the Padma proved to be the same as the Balabanta; that there was ample proof of the Plaintiffs' possession of the jalkar up to the time of the trespass; that a jalkar in the Padma must necessarily be a shifting thing incapable of being confined within permanent boundaries; that the Padma does not form part of and has not been thaked with any estate, and that a jalkar in it is not a landed interest determined by the boundaries of the estate, and is a separate right enjoyable wherever the bed of the tidal and navigable Padma is.

In 1304 (1897) a further portion of the said stream opened out also within the area and limits of the Appellants' jalkar rights which flowed from the main river into the Bhubaneswar and so again joined the Ganges or Padma a little lower down.

The Appellants exercised and claimed to exercise their jalkar rights therein. The Respondent No. 1 through his tenant and others interfered with and prevented them from so doing, and claimed that the Appellants' jalkar rights did not extend to a certain section of the said stream inasmuch as he the Respondent No. 1 was the riparian owner of the land on each side.

On the 18th September 1903, the Appellants instituted the present suit in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Faridpur against the Respondent No. 1 and his tenants joining as pro formâ Defendants their said co-sharer patnidars of the said jalkar.

The Appellants prayed inter alia for a declaration of their rights, for a decree for possession of the said disputed portion of their said jalkar, as specified in their plaint, for an injunction, mesne profits, and costs.

On the 27th January 1904, the Respondent No. 1 filed his written statement in defence.

Amongst other contentions he denied the Appellants' rights in the jalkar of the River Balabanta as claimed; he denied that Government had settled the said jalkar with the Appellants' predecessors or that the River Balabanta was the same as the Ganges, Padma, or Bhubaneswar or that the Appellants or the said patnidars had ever possessed the said jalkar and he alleged that the disputed jalkar did not appertain to the Appellants' jalkar but to the said Respondents' estate No. 5307

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

and he prayed that the suit should be dismissed with costs.

On the 5th February 1904, issues were framed for trial.

The only material issues for the purposes of this report are the 9th, 11th and 12th.

9th.—Whether the Plaintiffs have ever obtained a special grant over the jalkar in suit.

11th.—Was there any such navigable river as Balabanta as alleged by the Plaintiffs? Does the disputed jalkar appertain to Balabanta River and Bil Baor and are the Plaintiffs entitled to it, though it may now be on land outside their Zamindari?

12th.—Have the Plaintiffs any right over the jalkar in suit? Have they acquired any right to it by adverse possession? Have they acquired any prescriptive right over it? Are these rights inconsistent?

It was admitted by the Respondent No. 1 that the Appellants are the proprietors of Zamindari char Mukundia.

On the 16th and 25th May 1904, orders were made appointing a Commissioner to make a local investigation.

On the 15th September 1904 and 24th February 1905, he made his reports.

The trial of the case lasted from the 25th April to the 24th May 1905, and much evidence, oral and documentary, was adduced on both sides.

The Respondent No. 1 alone appeared and defended the suit.

On the 30th June 1905, the Additional Subordinate Judge delivered judgment and made a decree in favour of the Appellants with costs.

He held that the Appellants had established their title to the said jalkar in the River Balabanta, which was the same [illegible] he Ganges or Padma and had proved [illegible] inuous possession thereof from before the time of the Permanent Settlement; that the disputed jalkar was in fact partly within and partly without the limits of the land of the Appellants' Zamindari; that their jalkar rights constituted a separate mahal; that the disputed stream was within the limits and formed a part of their said jalkar and that the Appellants had been in possession thereof until dispossessed by the Defendant No. 1 and his tenants.

The Respondent No. 1 on the 17th August 1905 appealed to the High Court at Calcutta against the said judgment and decree.

On the 11th March 1908, the High Court delivered judgment, set aside the decree of the lower Court, dismissed the Appellants' suit, and decreed the appeal with costs.

It held that the disputed jalkar was in a stream flowing over land of the Defendant No. 1; that it was a branch of the Padma, and not of the Balabanta or Bhubaneswar River; that it came into existence only eight years previously, and that therefore no prescriptive rights therein could arise; that no express grant to it had been proved, and that therefore the Plaintiffs had established no title thereto; that it was outside the land of the Plaintiffs' Zamindari; that the Thak proceedings of 1859 negatived the existence of any jalkar rights of the Plaintiff outside the limits of his Zamindari; that the decree of the 11th September 1816 expressly excluded the Ganges or Padma River from its declaration as to the Plaintiffs' rights of jalkar in the Balabanta River; that the proceedings and decrees in evidence were not binding upon the Defendant No. 1 and his tenants and that the Plaintiffs' suit failed and must be dismissed.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

The High Court (Harington & Holmwood, JJ.) in the course of its judgment observed as follows :—

"In this state of facts it appears from the Defendants' evidence, which is strongly corroborated by the amin's map and also receives support from some admissions in cross-examination of the Plaintiffs' witnesses, that in 1897 a stream known as the Shaitan khal broke through some marshy land in the Government char Nawabganj, and cutting through the Plaintiffs' and the present Defendants' chars, joined the old bed of the Bhubaneswar, a little above the down-stream limit of the Plaintiffs' jalkar, as alleged in the judgment of 1843.

The question that arises in this case is - Can the Plaintiff claim a jalkar right to the fishery in this stream as part of his jalkar Balabanta Bil Baor?

The stream in dispute had its origin from the main stream of the Padma above the up-stream limits of the Plaintiffs' jalkar, and this seems to distinguish the case from those where a river in which the zamindar has a franchise or incorporeal right of fishery, changes its course and is diverted to a bed outside his zamindari.

In the case of Prosunno Coomar Sircar v. Ram Coomar Parooey (2) it was laid down that a private right of fishery in a tidal navigable river must, if it exists at all, be derived from the Crown and established by very clear evidence, as the presumption is against any such private right.

In the Full Bench case [Hori Das Mal v. Mahomed Jaki (1)] it is laid down that the Crown has power to grant the exclusive right of fishery in tidal navigable rivers to private individuals. Such a right, however, must ordinarily be proved either by proof of a direct grant from the Crown or by prescription.

Now, in this case there is absolutely no direct evidence of any grant of a jalkar in a tidal navigable river. The descriptions of the jalkar in the Hastbud papers, the quinquennial papers and the Thak Survey Register of 1862 go very much the other way.

The proceedings of 1816 seem to show that the navigable river Padma was excluded from the jalkar, and it is not till 1843 that we get a distinct claim to the jalkar mahals of the river Padma, etc., though even in these proceedings there is no claim to fish in a tidal navigable river. On the contrary, the judgment recites that the river has washed away the boundaries of the jalkar mahal, which seems inconsistent with the river being included in the jalkar.

It is true that the Plaintiffs and their predecessors appear to have established a right by prescription against certain proprietors, north and east of the present Defendants, but they have established no such prescription against the Defendants inasmuch as they admit that they were dispossessed some four years after the stream broke into the Defendants' land from the north-west. That stream was a branch of the Padma and not of the Balabanta or Bhubaneswar river, and it broke out of the Padma above the Plaintiffs' jalkar.

It seems to us that whatever declarations the Plaintiffs may have obtained in the Courts, and whatever kabuliyats may have been given to them by fishermen in respect of other streams flowing through other zamindaris, the present Defendants cannot be bound by any such declarations in the absence of an express grant and of prescriptive user in a stream which had only been in existence 8 years before suit, during 4 years of which period the Plaintiffs had apparently lost possession. The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below appears to have absolutey disregarded the entry of the boundaries on the Thak map Register of 1862, and to have relied on the rough sketch map filed by the Plaintiff, instead of the carefully prepared but cumbrous map of the Commissioner. We have, however, carefully analysed this map in every point, and we find that it does not support the case as made on the Plaintiffs' map.

And this divergence is of very great importance inasmuch as the Plaintiff alleges that the whole of Defendants' char was diluviated by the main stream, and that it is the formation of a char in front of the Plaintiffs' and Defendants' estate, that has formed the new channel, which is, therefore, part and parcel of the main stream. The amin's map entirely negatives this, and shows that the stream in dispute is a tortuous stream whose very name goes to corroborate the evidence that it broke in suddenly from the Padma on the north, and does not re-join the Padma at all, but falls into the old bed of the Bhubaneswar, which in its turn joins the Padma many miles lower down and far beyond the down-stream limits of the Plaintiffs'

(1) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 434 (1885).
(2) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 53 (1878).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

alleged jalkar. In dealing with the documents he assumes that the Balabanta jalkar is an ascertained grant to fish in a tidal and navigable river, and thus begs the whole question. He refers to the leases and evidence of possession of this jalkar by the Plaintiffs, and from this finds prescription against the present Defendants, and an omission on their part to seriously contest that the Plaintiffs had such a jalkar. That the Plaintiffs had a jalkar outside Defendants' land, the Defendants are not concerned to deny; the whole question is—Was that jalkar a grant of an incorporeal right from Government over a network of tidal navigable rivers, or was it a right pertaining to their pargana char Mukundia only. He says the jalkar has been found by the Commissioner to be partly on the land of the Defendants. What jalkar? He does not seem to distinguish between two jalkar rights of a totally distinct character, viz., the jalkar by special grant over the network of tidal rivers, and the territorial jalkars appertaining to the respective estates of the parties. Finally, he bases his decision as to the jalkar appertaining to the Plaintiffs' jalkar by accepting completely the Plaintiffs' erroneous map and their incredible evidence thereon. Nothing was said to us as to the curious statement in the Subordinate Judge's judgment that the Commissioner found that the jalkar in respect of which the Plaintiffs' ijaradars sued the father of the Defendant No. 10 and Defendant No. 1's naib was identical with the jalkar in suit. We have been through the whole of the Commissioner's report and connected papers, examined the evidence of Sridhar Chakravarti, the naib in question, given on several different occasions, and we cannot find one word about any such case, nor is there any documentary evidence of it on the record. Had there been such a case, it would have been most important evidence. We can only imagine that it was not referred to at the Bar, because no trace of it appears on the record.

In connection with the amin's report it is an important circumstance that the jalkar on the Dacca bank of the river Padma appears from his map to belong to the Nawab of Dacca, and he complains in his report that the officers of the Nawab protested against his taking evidence from the Plaintiffs' side, which might affect their master's rights. This indicates that other proprietors of the lands abutting on the river Padma do not admit the existence of the very extensive rights claimed by the Plaintiffs.

We cannot, on the meagre and unsatisfactory evidence before us, presume an improbable grant of rights of such an extensive nature. Having regard to all these facts and circumstances it appears to us that the case must be decided on the principles laid down by Brett, J., in the case of Mathura Nath v. Shib Chander (35). Where the jalkar has been asserted as one held in connection with a zamindari, the only possible meaning of this expression, according to the Judges who decided that case, is that it was one dependent on the zamindari and included within it. The fact that the revenue of the fishery was separately set out in the settlement of the estate, made by Government with the predecessor-in-title of the Plaintiffs, would be no indication that the jalkar was separate and independent from the estate. The mere separate specification of the amount of revenue calculated on the basis of the profits realised from fisheries with the estate, is no proof that there was a separate grant of a fishery independent of the estate; nor is it reasonable to suppose that a person having independent rights to a fishery, irrespective of his estate, would consent to have his separate estate in that fishery, and the revenue due in respect of it amalgamated with his rights and the revenue of his landed estate, which was what was done both in the release proceedings of 1861 and the Thak proceedings of 1862 The only evidence which goes beyond these matters are the judgment of 1843 against the Bikrampur zamindars, and the assertions of Mr. Wise and his sub-lessees and successors of such a right against other zamindars in the neighbourhood.

The assertions of Mr. Wise are no evidence against the Defendants.

The decision in the case in 1843 does not bind the Defendants who were not parties to the suit, and do not claim through any persons who were parties, for the stream now in dispute has only recently made its appearance in the Defendants' zamindari. As against the Defendants, therefore, this is no question of limitation or prescription.

The Respondents, to succeed against the Appellants, must prove a distinct grant of a fishery extending beyond the limits of their pargana. There is no direct evidence of any such grant. The entry in the Thak map of 1862 negatives the contention that the boundaries of the fishery extended beyond the limits of Joar Bistupur, which, in its turn, is within the territorial limits of pargana char Mukundia. We, therefore, find that the Plaintiff has failed to establish his case of a jalkar such as that claimed by him in the Defendants' zamindari, and we allow the appeal, and setting aside the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, order that the Plaintiffs' suit be dismissed with costs in both Courts."

(35) 12 C. W. N. 884 (1907).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Appellants submitted that the Appellants had established their title to the jalkar in the Balabant or Ganges or Padma river, and in the newly formed navigable channel of the river over the Respondents' land. The jalkar was settled with the Appellants as a distinct mahal at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and they have held and enjoyed the exclusive right of several fishery therein for over 100 years. No grant or other documents from the Government were now forthcoming but from long user legal origin ought to be presumed in favour of a grant of the fishery to the Appellants.

The boundaries of the fishery although originally fixed could not now be traced, but the Appellants' documentary evidence fully established that the jalkar extended beyond the zamindari of the Appellants. (Counsel referred to the robokari of the Court of Collector of Faridpur, dated 11th January 1861, and several proceedings in litigation.) The various names of the Ganges were only local names of one and the same river. The High Court was wrong in holding that the newly formed channel was not part of the Balabant or Bhubaneswar river. The main objection of the Respondent was that the Appellants could not exercise the right of fishery over the Respondent's land. But it was settled law in India that a fishery could be exercised upon the land of another. The right in a tidal and navigable river vested in the Government, and the Appellants being grantees from the Government were entitled to the right of fishery in the river and all its channels, so long as they retained their navigable character. Ever since 1807 it had been held that if a tidal and navigable river changed its bed, the owner of jalkar rights in the old channel was entitled to enjoy them in the new one. The fact that the land of the new channel did not belong to the Government at the time, or belonged to some other riparian owners, did not affect the right of fishery.

Reference was made to the following authorities: Ishurchund Rai v. Ramchund Mokhurja (3), Gopeenath Roy v. Ramchunder Tuřkalunkar (4), Lukhee Dassee v. Khatima Beebee (5), Nubkishen Roy v. Uchchootanund Gosain (6), Ramanath Thakoor v. Eshan Chunder Bonnerjee (7), Gureeb Hossein Chowdhree v. Lamb (8), Krishnendro Roy Chowdhry v. Maharanee Surno Moyee (12), Tarini Churn Sinha v. Watson & Co. (13), Jogendra Narayan Roy v. Crawford (15), Bhaba Prasad v. Jagadindra Nath Rai (16), Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Hossein (21).

Mr. G. R. Lowndes (with him Sir Robert Finlay, K. C.) for the Respondents submitted that the Appellants had failed.

(3) 1 S. D. A. Rep. 221; 1 Morley's Digest p. 561 (1807).
(4) 1 Mac. Sel. Rep. 228 ; 2 Sev. Rep. 467n (1808).
(5) 2 S. D. A. Rep. 51 (1813).
(6) 2 Sev. 465n (1856).
(7) 2 Sev. 463 (1863).
(8) S. D. A. Vol. XX (1859), pp. 1857, 1861.
(12) 21 Suth. W. R. 27 (1873).
(13) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 963 (1890).
(15) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 1141 (1905).
(16) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 15 (1905).
(21) 12 B. L. R. 210, 216 (P. C.) (1873).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

to establish the right of fishery in the waters in suit. There was no satisfactory evidence to show that the Appellants had any rights of fishery outside their own zamindari. The doctrine of lost grant has not been applied to the Mofussil in India. See Introduction of Morley's Digest, p. 11, where it is said that the common law of England did not apply to India, and the presumption of last grant is a common law principle : Gardner v. Hodgson's Brewery Co. (36). The grant of the Appellants was in the Bhubaneswar and not in the Padma. In any case, even on the principle of lost grant, the Appellants had no right to follow the river over the Respondent's land. The origin of the right of fishery proceeds from the fact that the Crown was the owner of the beds of all tidal and navigable rivers. The presumption is that the grant of several fishery carries with it the ownership of the bed of the river. Here the land belonged to the Respondent. There could be no right of fishery where the grantor was not the owner of the subjacent soil : Hindson v. Ashby (37), Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XIV, pp. 574, 579. The new channel was not formed by gradual accretion, but by sudden irruption. In the case of sudden irruption, it was settled law in England that the several fishery in the old channel would not continue in the new channel. Mayor of Carlisle v. Graham (17), Foster v. Wright (19), Hindson v. Ashby (37), In re Hull & Selby Railway Co. (20), Mercer v. Denne (34), Malcomson v. O'Dea (38), Gann v. Free Fishers (39). It was true that the common law of England as such did not apply to India, but it was submitted that there was no essential difference between England and India in the matter of fishery. The principle had been extended to British Columbia, and a number of English decisions, had been applied to India as well. English principles in matters relating to alluvion and diluvion had been applied to India. In the case of non-tidal rivers also English principles have been applied to India. [See Baban Mayacha v. Nagu Sharvucha (40).] There was no reason why the English principles of fishery ought not to be extended to India. The distinction between sudden irruption and gradual erosion was recognised in India and it was reasonable to apply the principles of English law. Maharanee Sibessury Dabee v. Lukhy Dabee (9), Tarini Churn Sinha v. Watson & Co. (13). In the cases cited for the Appellant some related to fishery in ponds and in the others the English principles were recognised. There was nothing to shew that there was any law or custom relating to fishery in India previous to British occupation. Reg. II of 1825 dealt with the private owner of fishery. The Respondents were the owners of the bed of the new channel, and they remained owners even after the land had been covered with water. Mussamat Imam Bandi & Wajid Ali Khan v. Hurgovind Ghose (41) and Felix Lopez v. Muddun Mohun Thakoor (42). Further, there were certain ponds over

(17) L. R. 4 Exch. 361 (1869).
(19) 4 C. P. D. 438, 448 (1878).
(20) 5 M. and W. 327, 329, 332 (1839).
(34) [1904] 2 Ch. 534.
(36) [1903] A. C. 229.
(37) L. R. [1896] 2 Ch. 1, 12.
(9) 1 Suth. W. R. 88 (1864).
(13) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 963 (1890).
(38) 10 H. of L. Cas. 593, 618 (1863).
(39) 11 H. of L. Cas. 192, 217 (1865).
(40) I. L. R. 2 Bom. p. 19 (1876).
(41) 4 Moo. I. A. 403 (1848).
(42) 13 Moo. I. A. 467 (1870).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

the Respondents' lands in which they had the right of fishery: But since the formation of the new channel, the ponds were merged in it, and it was unjust to deprive the Respondents of their right of fishery therein. The Respondent could not be said to trespass against the Plaintiffs by fishing over the waters in their own lands in places where they used to fish before.

Mr. DeGruyther in reply:—The common law of England has absolutely no application to Bengal, which is essentially different from England. When a navigable river flows over a man's land, the owner's rights remain in abeyance although the owner has the right of being relieved from the payment of Government revenue. The enjoyment of fishery was a profit à prendre—an incorporeal right—apart altogether from the land, and the Crown was entitled to grant it to the Appellants.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SUMNER.—In this action the Plaintiffs claimed, as proprietors of a several fishery in certain tidal navigable waters in Eastern Bengal, a decree, for possession of an exclusive fishery in a portion of a river-channel, of which the principal Defendants own both the bed and the banks. They succeeded before the Additional Subordinate Judge of Faridpur and failed on appeal to the High Court at Calcutta. Hence this appeal to their Lordships' Board.

There is a section of the river system of the Lower Ganges, between Dacca on the left bank and Faridpur on the right, where the great stream divides and for many miles runs in two channels roughly parallel with one another. The general course is to the south-east. The northern of the two channels is much the larger, but the southern, the smaller of the two, is itself wide. Both channels are tidal and navigable.

The streams in the Gangetic delta are capricious and powerful. In the course of ages the land itself has been deposited by the river, which always carries a prodigious quantity of mud in suspension. The river comes down in flood with resistless force, and throughout its various branches is constantly eroding its banks and building them up again. It crawls or races through a shifting network of streams. Sometimes its course changes by imperceptible degrees; sometimes a broad channel will shift or a new one open in a single night. Slowly or fast it raises islands of a substantial height standing above high water level and many square miles in extent. Lands so thrown up are called "chars," and it is by char-lands formed at some unknown though probably not remote date that the northern and southern channels in question are at present divided.

In the year 1897 a channel was broken through the Defendants' char-land in question. Though relatively small, even this stream was of considerable size; it is navigable for small craft, and is certainly within the ebb and flow of the tide. This new branch probably followed a line of depressions already existing, one end of which was actually an arm running up from the northern river.

The Plaintiffs claim the exclusive fishery in this new navigable channel as falling within the up-stream and down-stream limits of their several fishery, and allege that the Defendants are trespassers when they fish in it. The Defendants justify their claim to fish in a portion of this channel as part of the rights of owners of the subjacent soil and of persons claiming under them.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

That the Plaintiffs are entitled to some fishery right in the river waters generally, not far distant from the site in question, never was much disputed, and was admitted by the Respondents before their Lordships' Board, but they dispute its origin and its extent. They say that this branch is of origin so recent that no title by prescription or adverse possession arises as against themselves; that they are not affected by evidence of prescription against third parties; that even a several fishery, duly created in the main stream by the Government of India in right of the Crown, would not extend to this new branch, still less would rights acquired in the main stream by prescription against other riparian proprietors be exercisable in it; that the evidence neither establishes such bounds for the alleged exclusive fishery up-stream and down-stream as would bring this branch between them, nor shows that in fact any jalkar right was ever created by Government at all. In substance the Trial Judge found for an actual Government creation of the Plaintiffs' right, as well as for the boundaries claimed by them. The High Court concluded against the Plaintiffs on the question of the extent of their jalkar rights without determining their origin.

The evidence of the origin of the Plaintiffs' rights, is documentary, and does not depend on the credibility of witnesses. char Mukundia is the name of the Plaintiffs' pargana. They produced among many other documents (i) an Ekjai Hastbud in respect of it for the year 1790, which showed that it then included a mahal jalkar; (ii) a hakikat chauhaddibandi of the lands and jamas of that pargana for the year 1795, which showed that the name of the jalkar mahal was River Balabanta and Bil Baor with specified boundaries, of which the Kole Churi of Alipur alone can now be traced by name, (iii) dowl kabuliyats of 1793 and 1799, specifying the amount of the dowl-jama of the jalkar, and (iv) an Issumnavisi Mauzawari of 1821 mentioning the jalkar in the River Balabanta as a mauza of pargana char Mukundia. They put in (v) a robokari of the Court of the Collector of Faridpur dated 11th January 1861, by which the Government recognised that this jalkar had been included as a mahal in the zamindari pergana char Mukundia (formerly Tauzi No. 180 in the Dacca Collectorate, and now No. 4000 in that of Faridpur), since before the Decennial Settlement. It named the up-stream and down-stream limits, and stated that the Balabanta river, in which it was enjoyed, was the same as that known in 1861 as the Padma, that is the larger and more northerly of the two branches of the Ganges above described. The more southerly has been known for some fifty years as the Bhubaneswar.

Some evidence, not very distinct, was given at the trial, apparently for the purpose of showing that no grant from the Government was any larger to be found among the papers belonging to the Plaintiffs' zamindari, but no point seems to have been made then or since that the proper searches had not been made. Although, on the other hand, when Government has created a separate estate of jalkar at the period in question, it is usual to find some entry of it in the Decennial Settlement papers, no evidence was forthcoming to show that jalkar grants made prior to the Decennial Settlement or that settlements with zamindars made at the time of it must necessarily have taken the form of pattas or some other muniments which should now be in the zamindar's possession, or be recorded in the Government archives still in existence. In practice such original grants are but rarely forthcoming now, and resort must be had to secondary evidence of them, or to the inference of a legal origin to be drawn from long user [Garth, C. J., in Hori Das Mal v. Mahomed Jaki (1)]. The Trial Judge was satisfied that the Plaintiffs had proved a Government grant or settlement about the end of the eighteenth century. He was overruled by the High Court, not on the ground that no such grant was proved, but that it was not shown to have been a grant of a several fishery of wide extent. The High Court thought that in reality it was only appurtenant to the Plaintiffs' actual pargana and was limited by its riverine bounds.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

Their Lordships accept the rule laid down in the case of Hori Das Mal v. Mahomed Jaki (1) [following the English rule in Fitzwalter's case (2)] that the evidence of a Government grant of an exclusive fishery in navigable waters ought to be conclusive and clear, but they are of opinion that, in so far as such evidence can now be expected to be forthcoming as to particular grants more than a century old, the evidence in the present case was sufficient to show that the competent authority—the Government of India in right of the Crown—did actually grant to the Plaintiffs' predecessors-in-title, or ettle with them so as in effect to grant a jalkar right of several fishery in certain of the waters of the portion of the Ganges system in question.

The next point is one of metes and bounds. This depended partly on the above-named documents, partly on the records of certain litigation with the neighbouring zamindars of pargana Bikrampur and persons holding under them in 1816 and 1843, put in as part of the history of the fishery and of the claims made to it, partly on the testimony of living patnidars, ijaradars, fishermen, and so on, and the local investigations of an amin deputed by order of the Court. The amin's reports and maps were accepted in both Courts, and by both parties on the present appeal. The Plaintiffs' case depended on fixing by means of the above materials, supplemented by a series of maps from 1760 onwards, four points roughly forming a parallelogram, within which their alleged jalkar rights lay, the western or up-stream boundary and the eastern or down-stream boundary in each case extending from points north of the northern or larger channel, the Padma, to points south of the southern or smaller channel, the Bhubaneswar, and the locus in quo of the dispute falling between them. The Defendants contended, that in so far as any certain points were proved at all, the materials relied upon only showed that the fishery did not extend into any part of the Padmā, but was limited by the right or southern bank of the main stream and thus excluded it. They pointed out that the Faridpur Collectorate was bounded by the right bank of the Padma, the whole breadth of the main stream being in the Collectorate of Dacca, and they argued that the robokari of 1861, which was the strength of the Plaintiffs' case proved at most a recognition of a fishery right, which stopped short of those waters in which it was now essential to the Plaintiffs to make good their claim.

(1) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 434 (1885).
(2) 3 Keble 242 (1686).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

A sufficient answer is made by the Plaintiffs. They obtain early evidence of the actual position of the points forming their boundaries north of the main stream from proceedings in suits decided in their favour between themselves or their predecessors-in-title and the owners of the Bikrampur zamindari, who claimed some jalkar rights in the main Padma also, and by means of such proceedings in 1797, 1816 and 1843, by means of other similar proceedings in litigation with some of the present Defendants in 1894, 1896 and 1897, and also by a long succession of ijara kabuliyats and pattas, which they put in evidence, they prove de facto possession, as under their jalkar rights, of the whole fishery in both streams betwe n their upper and their lower limits. It is an intricate task to trace the various spots mentioned from map to map, because of the periodic diluviation of trees and houses, though these are the least transient of the landmarks available. Matters are also complicated by variations in the names of the rivers, Bhubaneswar, Krishnapur, Narina, Padma and Balabanta or Balbanta. The result, however, is sufficiently clear. Further, the decision recorded in the robokari of 1861 was appealed to the Commissioner of the Division at Dacca, who at that date exercised appellate jurisdiction in such matters over the Collectorate of Faridpur, and he affirmed the decision below. As this decision proceeded on the footing that the jalkar claimed extended over the waters of the Padma, and was a valid jalkar included in the Permanent Settlement, it may be reasonably inferred that the Commissioner of Dacca took note that the parties entitled to the jalkar claimed rights within his Collectorate, and finding nothing in the Dacca records to the contrary, affirmed the decision below for Dacca as well as for Faridpur.

The Trial Judge, following a long and considerable body of decisions in Bengal, held that, if the Plaintiffs' rights in this stream or streams out of which the new branch opened were once established, they would extend to the waters of the new branch as soon as it was formed, a principle which is conveniently called "the right to follow the river." It does not appear that this current of authority was challenged or doubted either before the Trial Judge or the High Court; certainly its authority was binding upon both. The Defendants' case simply was that in fact neither the Plaintiffs nor their predecessors-in-title could be shown ever to have enjoyed or to have been entitled to any jalkar right except that lying within the boundaries of their zamindari and appertaining thereto. The High Court appears to have arived at a conclusion in favour of the Defendants' argument mainly in consequence of the view taken of the true meaning of the judgment of 1816, and of the significance of the Thakbast map of 1862, and a marginal note upon it. It is not necessary to examine the language of the judgment of 1816 in detail, but their Lordships are unable to hold that it excluded the main or northern stream from the Plaintiffs' fishery, either expressly or by implication. The language is obscure, but, as their Lordships read it the Plaintiffs' construction of it was right. The Thak map was pressed beyond its legitimate effect. It was concerned only with that portion of the "fishery which fell within pargana Bikrampur, and was inconclusive."

The question of the effect of deltaic changes in a river's course upon the exclusive right of fishing in it appears in Indian decisions as long ago as the beginning of the last century. It was laid down in 1807 that if a river changes its bed the owner of jalkar rights in the old channel continues to enjoy them in the new one [Ishurchund Rai v. Ramchund Mokhurja (3)]. The converse case occurred in the following year. A land-owner sued the owner of jalkar rights in a tidal river for taking possession of a jheel formed on his land by the overflow of the river. The channel of the river had not altered, the jheel formed no part of it, and was only connected with it at the river's highest stage. Accordingly, it was held that the owner of the fishery, having no right over the Plaintiffs' land, had no right to the fishery in waters thus formed upon his land. [Gopeenath Roy v. Ramchunder Turkalunkar (4)]. This assumed some right of following the river and placed a particular limit upon it. It will be observed so far that whatever may have been the basis for the right of jalkar in the river, the right of fishing in the jheels was treated as belonging to the owner of the subjacent soil, a right which was shortly after, in 1813, held to be severable from the ownership of the soil, so that the bare grant by the landowner of the right of fishing in jheel did not in itself convey any property in the soil [Lukhee Dassee v. Khatim Beebee (5)]. Why the owner of jalkar right in the river has or may have an enjoyment of that right co-extensive with the waters of the river which permanently form part of it, though they have changed their course, is not stated. Not improbably it rested on local custom, for the Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Regulation (No. XI of 1825) is careful in a cognate matter to keep local custom alive. At any rate the principle was well established as early as 1808 that a right of fishery follows the river whatever course it may take, for the ground on which in Gopeenath's case (4) the High Court allowed the appeal from the Court below, which had acted on this principle, is simply that in point of fact the jheel in question, though formed by the river's overflow, was no longer so connected with it as to form part of the river. This was long considered to have been the effect of these decisions. Mr. Sevester's note upon them in Vol. 2, p. 467, of his Reports is, "A general right of fishery in a river, when not otherwise defined, is restricted to the channel of the river and water considered to form part of it, not extending to adjacent lakes or other pieces of water occasionally supplied by overflowings of the river but not actually connected with the channel of it." The rule was so applied in 1856 [Nubkisken Roy v. Uchchootanund Gosain (6)]; and in 1863 [Ramanath Thakoor v. Eshan Chunder Bonnerjee (7)] In the former it was held that the right of jalkar in the river was confined to the river and streams flowing into or from it, exclusive of jheels not connected with the channel but extending to water-courses which though not immediately within the great channel of the river adjoin or flow into it or are supplied therefrom; "their right consists of the flowing stream and the adjuncts flowing from or into it." In the latter the limitation of the river's adjuncts flowing from or into it was held not to extend to

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

(3) 1 S. D. A. Rep. 221, 1 Morley's Digest, p. 561 (1807).

(4) 1 Mac. Sel. Rep. 228; 2 Sev. Rep 467n (1808).

(5) 2 S. D. A. Rep. 51 (1813).

(4) 1 Mac. Sel. Rep. 228; 2 Sev. Rep. 467n (1808).

(6) 2 Sev. 465n (1856).

(7) 2 Sev. 463 (1863).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

adjacent sheets of water with which the river communicates only when in flood. "We think," says the Court, "the grant of jalkar must be construed as primâ facie confined to the rivers and sheets of water communicating therewith to which the Plaintiff might get access without trespassing on the land." It is true that these two decisions do not specifically deal with the case of the changed channel of a deltaic stream, but they do clearly lay down rules for defining the area of the waters in which the jalkar right is to be enjoyed, which carry it beyond the limits of actual navigability though confining it to waters which are adjuncts of the navigable stream. They make the right depend on the identity of the river in which it is enjoyed and do not confine it to such waters of that river as are superimposed on the very land once owned by the grantor of the right. The current of decision was not unruffled by doubts. The Court observes in 1859 in Gureeb Hossein Chowdhree v. Lamb (8): "the part of the country through which the Megna flows is intersected with innumerable creeks into which the tide from the main river flows. The right of fishing in these tidal creeks belongs of right to the owner of the property into which they flow," but this case is explained by the fact that the part of the river in question was almost if not quite an arm of the sea. An opinion was indicated in 1864, though not absolutely necessary to the decision, in Maharanee Sibessury Dabee v. Lukky Dabee (9) that the extension of rights of fishery, in consequence of an expansion of the river in which they were enjoyed, ought to depend, as questions of alluvion would, upon the rapidity of the expansion. If sudden, it would work no change in the ownership of the submerged soil, and so cause no extension of the jalkar right; it would do both if it took place by gradual and imperceptible advances. The Court here inclined to connect the right of fishing indissolubly with the right to the soil subjacent to the waters in which the fishery right was enjoyed. In 1866 came the somewhat contradictory decisions. The Court in Nobinchunder Roy Chowdry v. Radha Pearee Debia (10) scouted as "preposterous" a claim to follow the diverted waters in which the Plaintiff had the fishery, but this was without discussion of the authorities, and the claim was alleged not against the owner of the soil over which the diverted waters flowed, but against the owner of the fishery in the waters of another river into which the Plaintiff's river had burst and discharged itself. In the second case, Gobind Chunder Shaha v. Khoja Abdool Gunnie (11), the Plaintiff and Defendant, joint owners of land of a fishery, had made a partition of the land but not of the fishery, and the Plaintiff sought to oust the Defendant from fishing over the land, which now belonged exclusively to him but had been overflowed by a change in the course of the waters. Sir Barnes Peacock in dismissing the suit observes: "still the fishery existed in that part of the river out of which the fish was taken, although by a change in the course of the river it ran over the portion of the land which was allotted to the Plaintiff under the butwara partition." Again, in 1873 [Krishnemiro Roy Chowdhry v. Maharanee Surno Moyee (12)] the Court somewhat reluctantly followed the rule, which it

(8) S. D. A. Vol. XX (1859), pp. 1857, 1861.
(9) 1 Suth. W. R. 86 (1864).

(10) 6 Suth. W. R. 17 (1866).
(11) 6 Suth. W. R. 41 (1866).
(12) 21 Suth. W. R. 27 (1873).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

deemed to be settled, that the owner of the fishery where the river's channel has changed has "a right to follow the current," that he "may not only follow the river to any channel which it may from time to time cut for itself, but may continue to enjoy together with the open channel all closing or closed channels abandoned by the river right up to the time when the channel became finally closed at both ends." Upon the facts of that case it is the latter part of this proposition that it directly involved in the decision. The whole question was learnedly reviewed by Mr. Lal Mohun Doss in 1891 in his Tagore Lectures on the Law of Riparian Rights, who (pages 372, et seq.) while admitting a settled current of authority in India to the contrary, urges the very arguments and conclusions of the now Respondents and relies on the same authorities. Nevertheless, after this discussion had brought the question again before the Courts and the profession, the High Court in a critical decision affirmed the long-standing rule. This was in 1890 in the case of Tarini Churn Sinha v. Watson & Co. (13). The questions were directly raised: "Can a right of jalkar in a public navigable river exist apart from the right to the bed of the river, or must it necessarily follow that right?" "Do the Defendants lose their vested right by a change in the river's course, though the river still is navigable and subject to public right?" This case raised the very question which has been in debate before their Lordships, for the change in the river's course was a sudden one taking place in the course of a single year and not by imperceptible or slow encroachment. The answer given by the Court was in favour of the owner of the right of fishing in the river. It purported to follow a converse decision in Grey v. Anund Mohun Moitra (14), and decided that "so long as the river retains its navigable character, it is subject to the rights of the public, and the fishery remains in the person who was grantee from the Government." In Grey's case (14) a change of channel had left an old bed either dry or containing only pools disconnected with the river and it was held that what the river had abandoned albeit part dry land and part jheels, became private property. Thenceforth it belonged to the riparian owners who could claim settlement of it from Government, and the reason given is that "the right of the Defendant" (the owner of the fishery), "being granted out of and part of the Government's right to the river, no longer exists when the Government's right is itself gone." Thus it will be observed that in Tarini's case (13) the Court conceived itself to be reducing the subject to symmetry by deciding that while on the one hand the owner of the fishery rights in the river lost them where there was permanent recession of the river, he increased them where there was permanent advance of the river. In the latter case the Court disregarded the conception of Government right to the river as being an incident of Government right to the subjacent soil, and treated the Government right and the right of its grantee in respect of the fishery as subsisting in the river wherever that river might flow, and not as subsisting in flowing water only where and so long as it flowed over soil vested in the Government. This view has since been treated as established. That the jalkar right in the river extends over a piece of water formed

(13) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 963 (1890).

(13) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 963 (1890).
(14) W. R. [1864] 108.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

originally by the river, but so far dried up as to be disconnected from it, except in the rains, during and just after floods, was decided in 1905 in Jogendra Narayan Roy v. Crawford (15). The ground of the decision is that such water is still part of the river system, and when that is so in fact the right of fishing persists in respect of it. This is the case of retrocession. So too in the case of Bhaba Prasad v. Jagadindra Nath Rai (16) in the same year the principle is thus expressed: "the jalkar rights were settled with the Plaintiffs' predecessor many years ago. The Plaintiffs by virtue of the settlement conferred "upon them are entitled to exercise the right of fishery in the said river wherever it flows within the limits prescribed in the settlement itself." Both these cases purport to follow Tarini's case (13), which was a case of an advance of the river into a newly formed channel, and the rest of a long line of settled authorities. It must now be taken as decided in Bengal that the Government's grantee can follow the shifting river for the enjoyment of his exclusive fishery so long as the waters form part of the river system within the up-stream and down-stream limits of his grant, whether the Government owns the soil subjacent to such waters as being the long-established bed, or whether the soil is still in a riparian proprietor as being the site of the river's recent encroachment.

Their Lordships were strongly and ably pressed to disregard, or at least to qualify, these decisions. The points made were (a) that in principle the right to grant a several fishery in tidal navigable waters is so essentially connected with the right to the soil and the bed of the channel, that no fishery right can exist where the grantor of the several fishery never has owned the subjacent soil; (b) that in any case the acquisition of fresh waters can go no further and can proceed no otherwise than the acquisition of fresh soil by alluvion, and therefore that an expansion of waters within which a jalkar right exists can only carry with it an extension of the jalkar right if it has taken place by imperceptible encroachments upon the land, and not by sudden irruption; and (c) that it would be grossly unjust to hold that the natural misfortune which swamps a landowner's soil by a river's encroachment should be accompanied by a legal ouster from such enjoyment as the natural disaster has left him. In extension of the last point it was argued that the disputed site in fact covered the sites of former enclosed jheels which belonged to and had been enjoyed by the Defendants, and that no trespass could be committed as against the Plaintiffs in any view by fishing where the Defendants had formerly been accustomed and entitled to fish in waters overlying their own land. This question of fact, which seems not to have been passed upon by the Courts below, was not sufficiently made out, but even if it were, it appears to be covered by the general argument.

For these contentions reliance was placed on the Mayor of Carlisle v. Graham (17), where Kelly, C. B., says: "We are called upon to decide the question which now arises for the first time: Is the several fishery of a subject in a tidal river, the waters of which permanently recede from a portion of its course and flow into and through another course, where the soil and the land on both sides of the new

(13) I. L. R. 17 Cal 963 (1890).
(15) I. L. R 32 Cal. 1141 (1905).
(16) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 15 (1905).

(17) L. R. 4 Exch. 361, at pp. 367-368 (1869)

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

channel thus formed belong to another subject, transferred from the old to the new channel, and so a several fishery created in and throughout such new channel, or in some, and if any, in what part of it? In the case of Murphy v. Ryan (18), O'Hagan, J, in delivering the judgment, of the Court, says, 'but whilst the right of fishing in fresh-water rivers in which the soil belongs to the riparian owner is thus exclusive, the right of fishing in the sea, its arms and estuaries, and in its tidal waters, wherever it ebbs and flows, is held by the common law to be publici juris and so to belong to all the subjects of the Crown, the soil of the sea and its arms and estuaries and tidal waters being vested in the Sovereign as a trustee for the public. The exclusive right of fishing in the one case, and the public right of fishing in the other, depend upon the existence of a proprietorship in the soil of the private river by the private owner and by the Sovereign in a public river respectively.' And this is the true principle of the law touching a several fishery in a tidal river. If therefore the right of the Crown to grant a several fishery in a tidal river to a subject is derived from the ownership of the soil, which is in the Crown by the common law, a several fishery cannot be acquired even in a tidal river if the soil belong not to the Crown but to a subject. And all the authorities, ancient and modern, are uniform to the effect that if by the irruption of the waters of a tidal river a new channel is formed in the land of a subject, although the right of the Crown and of the public may come into existence, and be exercised in what has thus become a portion of a tidal river or of an arm of the sea, the right to the soil remains in the owner, so that if at any time thereafter the waters shall recede and the river again change its course, leaving the new channel dry, the soil becomes again the exclusive property of the owner, free from all right whatsoever in the Crown or in the public."

With this case has to be considered also Foster v. Wright (19). There the proprietor of a right of fishing in the Lune, at that part neither tidal nor navigable, was held entitled to "follow his river" when the river had so far shifted its course as to flow over another's land, and the person, to whom the land which came to form its new bed had previously belonged, was held to be a trespasser when he fished in its new channel. The change of bed had been gradual, perceptible and measurable over considerable periods of time, but from week to week imperceptible. It was held that the imperceptible changes had had the effect of producing an accretion to the land of the owner of the fishery, and that "the river had never lost its identity nor its bed, its legal owner." (p. 446): "he has day by day, week by week become the owner of that which has gradually and imperceptibly become its present bed, and the title so gradually and imperceptibly acquired cannot be defeated by proof that a portion of the bed now capable of identification was formerly land belonging to the Defendant or his predecessors-in-title." The Mayor of Carlisle v. Graham (17) was distinguished on the ground that in that case the river-bed was a new bed, not formed by the gradual shifting of the old one but totally new, the old bed remaining recognisable in its old site but deserted. The Eden became a river with two beds: the Lune was at all times a (18) 2 Ir. Rep. C. L. 143 at p. 149 (1868).

(17) L. R. 4 Exch. 361, at pp. 367-368 (1869).

(19) 4 C. P. D. 438 (1878).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

river with only one though an ambulatory one. As counsel in Foster v. Wright (19) boldly argued for the right to "follow the river" in its Indian sense saying (p. 440), "even a sudden and violent change in its course would not have taken away" the Plaintiff's right, and as the adoption of that à fortiori view would have made all consideration of gradual accretion immaterial, the decision must be regarded as one which negatives the contention of the Respondents in the present case. As with the river Lune, so the part of the river Eden which was in question in the Mayor of Carlisle v. Graham (17) is one which does not appear to be subject to frequent change. How the law might be if conditions similar to those of Bengal could occur in England is another matter. The above cases would have been more directly in point had the river in question been one which often and swiftly changes its course, as for instance the tidal Severn, of which Hale writes (Hargrave's Law Tracts, p. 16), "that river which is a wild unruly river, and many times shifts its channel, especially in that flat between Shinberge and Aure is the common boundary between the manors on either side, viz., the filum aquae or middle of the stream, and this is the custom of the manors contiguous to that river from Gloucester down to Aure." There is in this part of the Severn an ancient several fishery, enjoyed by the Lords of Berkeley under Charters of Henry I, Richard I, and John, which must be much more analogous to the jalkar in the present case than cases in the rivers Eden or Lune. A somewhat similar instance in Scotland is mentioned by Lord Abinger in In re Hull and Selby Railway Company (20), but the question of the right to follow the river does not appear to have arisen for decision in these cases.

It was admitted that the common law of England as such does not apply in the Mofussil of Bengal, but the argument was that principles established under and for English conditions afford a sound guide to the rules which should be enforced in India. Their Lordships have given these arguments careful consideration, though they would in any case be slow to disturb decisions by which rules have been established for Bengal governing extensive and important rights such as rights of jalkar, and unless they could be shown to be manifestly unjust or flagrantly inexpedient, their Lordships would not supersede them. The Indian Courts have in many respects followed the English law of waters. Sometimes their rules are the same; sometimes only similar. Jalkar may exist not only as a right attaching to riparian ownership but also "as an incorporeal hereditament, a right to be exercised in the tenement of another [Forbes v. Meer Mahomed Hossein (21)], as a profit à prendre in alieno solo [Lukhee Dassee v. Khatima Beebee (5)]. In navigable waters such rights are granted by the Government of India or, what is equivalent to a grant, settled with the grantee under the Revenue Settlement by the Government, and are thus derived from the Crown [Prosunno Coomar Sircar v. Ram Coomar Parooey (22)]. The freehold of the bed of navigable waters was deemed to be in the East India Company as representing the Crown and now is

(17) L. R. 4 Exch. 361, at pp. 367-368 (1869).
(19) 4 C. P. D. 438 (1878).

(5) 2 S. D. A. Rep. 51 (1818).
(20) 5 M. & W. 327 (1839).
(21) 12 B. L. R. at p. 216 (1873).
(22) I. L. R. 4 Cal. 53 (1878).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

vested in the Government of India in right of the Crown [Doe. dem. Seeb Kristo v. E. I. Co. (23); Nogender Chunder Ghose v. Mahomed Esof (24)]. Where the bed thus forms part of the public domain, the public at large is primâ facie entitled to fish. Thus the English analogy has been closely followed. Again, the sudden invasion of a private owner's land by the waters of a navigable river does not divest the property in the soil. If the change in the course of the navigable river results in the water in the new course being in fact navigable [that is, capable of being traversed by a boat at all seasons, Chundar Jaleah v. Ram Churn Mookerjee (25); Mohiny Mohun Dass v. Khaja Assanoollah (26)], the flooded landowner must submit to have his land traversed by the vessels of the public in the course of navigation and cannot in right of his ownership erect works on his flooded soil to the obstruction of the navigation. None the less he remains the owner, and should the waters permanently retire, his full rights as owner revive unless lapse of time or circumstances, or both, suffice to prove an abandonment of his rights of ownership for his part.

Still, there is one step which the Indian law has never taken, far as it has gone in the adoption of English rules. Often as the opportunity for so doing has arisen, it has never been held that the capacity of the Government of India to grant to or settle with a private owner the exclusive right of fishing in tidal navigable waters is so indissolubly bound up with its ownership of the soil subjacent to those waters that no matter how those waters may subsequently change their course, while still remaining part of the same river system within the up-stream and down-stream limits of the grant, the enjoyment of the right so granted cannot extend beyond the limits of the Government's ownership of the soil lying perpendicularly underneath them, as it may vest from time to time. It is one thing to presume the soil of the bed of a tidal navigable river to be vested in the Crown and to hold that the Government of India in right of the Crown can grant the fishery in the superincumbent waters in severalty, and quite another to hold that the several fishery when once thus created is for ever enjoyable only in waters that continue to flow precisely over ground which was in the Crown at the date of the grant. "Whether the actual proprietary right in the soil of British India," says Garth, C. J., in the case of Hori Das Mal v. Mahomed Jaki (1), already cited, "is vested in the Crown or not (a point upon which there seems some diversity of opinion) I take it to be clear that the Crown has the power of making settlements and grants for the purposes of revenue of all unsettled and unappropriated lands, and I can see no good reason why they should not have the same power of making settlements of jalkar rights and of lands covered by water as of land not covered by water. In either case the settlement is made for the purpose of revenue and for the benefit of the public." Again, the rights of the Crown are thus stated in The Collector of Maldah v. Syed Sudurooddeen (27):—"The right to resume land is one based on the right

(23) 6 Moo I A. 267 : 10 Moo. P. C. O. 140 (1856).

(24) 10 B. L. R. 406; 18 Suth. W. R. 113 (1872).

(25) 15 Suth. W. R. 212 (1871).

(26) 17 Suth. W. R. 73 (1872).

(1) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 434 (1885).

(27) 1 Suth. W. R. 116 (1864).

of the Government to a portion of the produce of every bigha of the soil as revenue, whereas the claim to possession of the jalkars of rivers not forming portions of settled estates is founded upon a supposed right in Government as trustees of the waterways of the country to possess and to assign the exclusive possession of them to any individual it chooses on the payment of revenue for them in the shape of a fishery rent." [Hurreehur Mookerjea v. Chundeechurn Dutt (28), Collector of Rungpore v. Ramjadub Sein (29). See, too, Radha Mohun Mundal v. Neel Madhub Mundul (30) and Satcowri Ghosh Mondal v. Secretary of State for India (31) where the cases are collected and discussed.]

In truth the rule which in the United Kingdom thus connects the subject's right to an exclusive fishery in tidal navigable waters with the limits of the Crown's ownership of the subjacent soil is itself the result of conditions partly historical and partly geographical which have no counterpart in Lower Bengal. In Bracton's time this rule would seem to have been unknown; at any rate he ignores it, and treats the right of fishing in rivers, as did the Roman Law, as a right publici juris. Whether in his time this was at common law orthodox or heterodox, or whether he supplemented the defects of our insular system by a reversion to that of Rome, need not now be considered. What is clear is that during the many years between his time and Hale's, the generality of the right of river-fishing, if it ever had been the doctrine of the common law, was such no longer. According to Hale (De jure maris, p. 1, Chap. 4; Hargrave's Law Tracts, p. 11), "the right of fishing in the sea and the creeks and arms thereof is originally lodged in the Crown as the right of depasturing is originally lodged in the owner of the wastes 'whereof he is lord, or as the right of fishing belongs to him, that is the owner of a private or inland river. . . '. The King is the owner of this great waste,' and as a consequent of his propriety hath the primary right of fishing in the sea or creeks or arms thereof." Be it observed that this doctrine may be called essentially insular, and that the proofs of it which Hale adduces are purely English, namely, Close Rolls, Parliament Rolls, and Rolls of the King's Bench mainly in Plantagenet times, and that he places on Bracton's Roman doctrine an interpretation, confining it to rivers which are arms of the sea, which is itself a dissent from that doctrine. The question how far a rule established in this country can be usefully applied in another, whose circumstances, historical, geographical, and social, are widely different, is well illustrated by the case of navigability, as understood in the law of the different States of the United States of America. Navigability affects both rights in the waters of a river, whether of passing or repassing or of fishing, and the rights of riparian owners, whether as entitled to make structures on their soil which affect the river's flow, or as suffering in respect of their soil quasi-servitudes of towing, anchoring, or landing in favour of the common people. The Courts of the different States, minded alike to follow the common law where they could, found themselves in the latter part of the eighteenth and the early part of the nineteenth centuries constrained by physical (28) 17 S. D. A. Rep. 641 (sic).

(29) 2 Sev. 378 (1863)
(30) 24 W. R. 200 (1875).
(31) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 252 (1894).

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

and geographical conditions to treat it differently. In Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Hampshire, and Vermont, where the rivers approximated in size and type to the rivers of this country, the English common law rule was followed, that tidality decided the point at which the ownership of the bed and the right to fish should be public on the one side and private on the other. Other States, though possibly for other reasons since they possessed rivers very different in character from those of England, namely, Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, and Indiana followed the same rule. But in Pennsylvania, North Carolina, Iowa, Missouri, Tennessee, and Alabama, this rule was disregarded, and the test adopted was that of navigability in fact, the Courts thus approximating to the practice of Western Europe (see Kent's Commentaries, iii, 525). The reasoning has been put pointedly in Pennsylvania. Chief Justice Tilghman says in 1810, in Carson v. Blazer (32), "the common law principle concerning rivers" (viz., that rivers, where the tide does not ebb and flow, belong to the owners of adjoining lands on either side), "even if extended to America, would not apply to such a river as the Susquehanna, which is a mile wide and runs several hundred miles through a rich country, and which is navigable and is actually navigated by large boats. If such a river had existed in England, no such law would ever have been applied to it." (See too, Shrunk v. Schuylkill Navigation Co. 1826, 14, Sergeant v. Rawle, at p. 78. Thirty years later in Zimmerman v. Union Canal Co. (33), President Porter observes, the rules of the common law of England in regard to the rivers and the rights of riparian owners do not extend to this commonwealth, for the plain reason that rules applicable to such streams as they have in England above the flow of the tide, scarcely one of which approximate to the size of the Swatara, would be inapplicable to such streams as the Susquehanna, the Allegheny, the Monongahela," and sundry other "rivers of Damascus." A similar deviation, equally grounded in good sense, from the strict pattern of the English law of waters lies at the bottom of the current of Indian cases previously referred to, and forms its justification.

(32) 2 Binney, at p. 477 (1810).
(33) 1 Watts and Sergeant, 351.

In proposing to apply the juristic rules of a distant time or country to the conditions of a particular place at the present day, regard must be had to the physical, social and historical conditions to which that rule is to be adapted. In England the rights of the Crown and other rights derived from them have long been established by authority, even though their historical origin is imperfectly known or conjectural. The result may be that the law is quite certain and yet is based on considerations of history and precedent which are quite the reverse. In Bengal a special history, a special theory of rights, tenures and obligations condition the rules applicable to such an incorporeal hereditament as that now in question. In England we go back before Magna Charta for the commencement of several fisheries in tidal navigable waters and know little of their actual origin. In Bengal it is sufficient to say that at the time of the Decennial or the Permanent Settlement, or since, such rights, though possibly descending from remote antiquity, were settled with the Government of India, whose special position, originating on 12th August 1765, when the East India Company became Receiver-General in perpetuity of the revenues of Bengal, Orissa and Bihar, is historically well-known. English tenures and Bengal zamindari rights, unduly assimilated at one time, have never fully corresponded to one another. Above all the difference, indeed the contrast of physical conditions is capital. In England the bed of a stream is for the most part unchanging during generations, and alters, if it alters at all, gradually and by slow processes. In the deltaic area of Lower Bengal change is almost normal in the river systems, and changes occur rarely by slow degrees, and often with an almost cataclysmal suddenness. If English cases were applied to Bengal, so that the area of enjoyment of a several fishery in tidal navigable waters should be limited to the area within which the Crown, the assumed grantor of the fishery, had owned the subjacent soil at the time of its grant, who could say from time to time what the bounds of that enjoyment are, and where the ownership of the soil is to be delimited? The course of the waters has been in flux for ages: at what date is this ownership to be taken? As Lord Abinger says of the rule of gradual accretion of soil in In re Hull and Selby Railway (20) the theoretic basis of which has been variously stated from the time of Blackstone to the present day (see the different theories collected by Farwell, L. J, in Mercer v. Denne(34), "the principle is founded on the necessity which exists for some such rule of law for the permanent protection and adjustment of property." Take which date you will, the ever-shifting river does not run now where it ran then, and if the ownership of the soil remains as it was, it is sheer guess-work to say in which part of the present waters the grantee of jalkar rights shall enjoy his several fishery under his grantor's title, and in which parts he must abstain, since the waters flow over the soil of private owners? Any given section of the river system is in all probability a shifting and irregular patchwork of water flowing over soil which belonged to the Sovereign at the selected date and of water flowing over soil then belonging to other owners and since encroached upon, with the background of a probability that before the date in question, and yet within historic times, no water may have run there at all. By what analogy can rules applicable to the Eden and the Lune be profitably applied to such physical conditions?

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

It was urged that the established rule with regard to alluvion should be applied to rights of jalkar; that since the right to accretions and the liability to derelictions of soil attached only to gradual accretions or to erosions taking place by imperceptible degrees, so too the right of the owner of the fishery to "follow the river" ought to be limited to cases where the river's encroachments were gradual, and ought not to be extended to an irruption as sudden, and accomplished as rapidly, as was the formation of the channel in question in the Defendant's lands. It is to be observed that here too Indian law, doubtless guided by local physical conditions, has adopted a rule varying somewhat from the rule established in this country. Where under English conditions the rule applies to "imperceptible" alterations, Reg. XI of 1825, Arts. 1 and 4, speak of "gradual accession." The analogy of the English rule can hardly be prayed in aid when Indian legislation has thus an established and different rule on the same subject. Further, as the Indian rule is established now beyond question, it may perhaps be said without offence, of the Indian as of the English rule, that it represents rather a compromise of convenience than an ideal of justice, for that which is a man's own does not become another's any more agreeably to ideal justice by being filched from him gradually instead of being swallowed whole. In any case the analogy is not in pari materiâ. Property in the soil is one thing; enjoyment of a profit à prendre in flowing water may in some respects be another. True, the profit à prendre is to be enjoyed in alieno solo; such is its nature. True too that at the time of the grant, the grantor has no power to create this incorporeal hereditament where his ownership of the soil does not extend; but when the power to grant arises from Sovereignty, and has never been decided to be limited to the bounds of the grantor's proprietorship as it may continue to exist from time to time, the mere fact that the jalkar right is classified in the language of the English law of real property as a profit à prendre in alieno solo does not prevent its proprietor from being entitled to follow the river in its natural change. The fish follow the river and the fisherman follows the fish; this may be right or wrong, but the question is not settled by asking under what circumstances of natural physical change the proprietor of an acre of dry land which has vanished from sight can claim to have still vested in him an equal area of river-bed on the same site, or another acre of dry land transferred by the river and attached by accretions to another proprietor's land.

(20) 5 M. and W. 327 (1839).

(34) [1905] 2 Ch. 534 at p. 568.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

Lastly, it is said to be unjust that a landowner should not only lose the use of his land when the river overflows it, but also the right to fish over his own acres and in his own waters, in order that another may unmeritoriously fish in his place. There is some begging of the question here; the waters are not his waters, nor is the change confined to the flooding of his fields. It is the river that has made his land its own; the waters are the tidal navigable waters of the great stream. In physical fact the landowner enjoys his land by the precarious grace of the river, whose identity is so persistent, and whose character is so predominating, as almost to amount to personality; and is it fundamentally unjust that in law too he should lose what he has lost in fact, and be precluded from taking in substitution for his lost land an incorporeal right which has been granted not to him but to another? The Sovereign power lawfully invests its grantee with jalkar rights in part of the river; is it unjust that when that river shifts its course, changing in locality but not in function, the owner of those rights should still enjoy them in that self-same river, instead of being despoiled of them by the course of nature, which he could neither foresee nor control? There must be some rule and there must be some hardship. To say the least there is no such proof that one rule is better than the other as would even approach the conclusion that the rule established should now be set aside.

Their Lordships are of opinion that no reason sufficiently cogent has been found to warrant them in disregarding the settled Indian authorities, and being further of opinion that the Plaintiffs established their claim at the trial, they will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed with costs here and below, and that the judgment appealed from should be set aside and the judgment of the Trial Judge restored.

RAJA SRINATH ROY v. DINABANDHU SEN.

Solicitors: Messrs. Watkins and Hunter for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. Theodore Bell & Co. for the Respondents.

B. D. Appeal allowed with costs.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

No. 95 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J. TEUNON, J. 1914, 22, May.

KING-EMPEROR v JOGENDRA NATH GHOSH, Accused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 360, sub-sec. (1), sec. 476—Handing over record of deposition to witness for being read by him if sufficient compliance with law—Such deposition if admissible and assignment of perjury if can be made thereon—Examination of witnesses in enquiry under sec. 476, Cr. P. C.—Duty of Magistrate to make a record of statements.

An order under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., was made against the Petitioner directing his prosecution under sec. 193, I. P. C, with reference to a deposition given by him as a witness at a criminal trial. It appeared that after the deposition had been recorded, the record was handed over to the Petitioner who proceeded to read it over himself. The Magistrate held a preliminary enquiry under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., before making the order for prosecution, and examined witnesses in the course of that enquiry, but made no record of their statements:

Held—That the provisions of sec. 360, sub-sec. (1), Cr. P. C., were not sufficiently complied with inasmuch as that sub-section requires that the evidence should be read over in the presence, that is, in the hearing of the accused, in order that the accused should have an opportunity of correcting any mistake in it.

That the deposition was inadmissible and the order for prosecution must be set aside.

That the Code of Criminal Procedure does not contain any provision with regard to the manner in which the evidence in an enquiry under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., should be recorded; but for future reference the Magistrate should have made a summary of the statements of the witnesses examined.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., dated the 22nd of April 1914, by R L. Ross, Esq., Sessions Judge of Darbhanga, recommending that the order of the District Magistrate of Darbhanga, dated the 30th of March 1914, directing the prosecution of the accused under sec. 193, I. P. C., may be revised for the reasons set forth in his letter of reference.

The facts will appear from the Letter of Reference which was as follows.

"On the 19th September last, one Monohar Poddar lodged a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Madhubani accusing certain persons of having trespassed in his shop and assaulted him and committed mischief and taken away some papers. The accused were charged under secs. 147 and 379, I. P. C., and were convicted and fined by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 23rd December 1913. Their appeal was dismissed by the District Magistrate on 20th February 1914. In that case, Banku Singh, one of the accused, set up the plea of alibi and evidence in support of this plea was given by the Petitioner Jogendra, a Sub-Assistant Surgeon in Darbhanga. His evidence was briefly that Banku was under his treatment from 13th to 25th September 1913 for remittent fever, and that during the time of his illness Banku Singh was staying at Kathalbari where he had to attend him every day. He granted a certificate to this effect. The certificate and certain prescriptions for medicines given on 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 22nd and 25th September by the Petitioner were also proved by him. Both the Original and Appellate Courts disbelieved this witness, and the District Magistrate by an order passed under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., dated 30th March 1914, directed his prosecution under sec. 193, I. P. C.

KING-EMPEROR v. JOGENDRA NATH GHOSH.

One of the grounds taken in the application for revision is that "there is no reasonable chance of a conviction of the Petitioner for perjury, specially in view of the fact that the provisions of sec. 360, sub-sec. (1), were not complied with." The deposition of the Petitioner before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate does not show on its face that it was read over to the witness in the presence of the accused or his pleader as required by sec. 360 (1). In answer the District Magistrate has forwarded a note submitted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in which he says:— 'On perusal of the records it appears that through an oversight of my peshkar the accused did not sign his deposition.' There is no statement that the deposition was read over to the Petitioner and it must therefore be taken as a matter of fact that sec. 360 (1) was not complied with. It follows therefore that the only evidence on which the Petitioner could be convicted under sec. 193, namely, the written record of his evidence, is inadmissible and that the prosecution must necessarily fail: Mohendra Nath v. Emperor (1).

"Another ground affecting the merits of the case is that the truth of the prosecution case in the aforesaid criminal trial is not inconsistent with the evidence of this Petitioner. There is nothing in the deposition of Jogendra to show at what time of day he attended Banku Singh on 17th August 1913, the day of occurrence. The place of occurrence is village Kachher which appears from the District Map to be at a distance of one mile from Tansari Railway Station. Time-table shows that a train leaves Darbhanga at 11-30 A.M. and arrives at Tansari at 1-29 P.M. The time of occurrence is stated to have been half a prahar before sunset. It is therefore possible that the Petitioner's evidence and prosecution evidence may both have been true. Consequently the prosecution evidence alone, as given at the original trial, will not be sufficient for the conviction of the Petitioner and it does not appear that any other evidence is available."

Babus Atulya Charan Bose and Mon Mohan Bose for the Accused.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is a Reference made by the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga under sec. 438, Cr. P. C. It appears that the prosecution of the Petitioner before him has been directed under sec. 193, I. P. C., with reference to a deposition given by that witness in a case against one Banku Singh. The Sessions Judge has recommended that the order directing the Petitioner's prosecution should be set aside on the ground that in respect of that deposition, the provision of sec. 360, sub-sec. 1, Cr. P. C., has not been complied with. The explanation submitted by the trying Magistrate, this officer and the District Magistrate show that what happened was that after the deposition had been recorded, the record was handed over to the Petitioner. He then proceeded to read it over himself. We are of opinion that that is not sufficient compliance with the provisions of sec. 360, sub-sec (1), Cr. P. C., inasmuch as that sub-section requires that the evidence should be read over in the presence, that is in the hearing, of the accused in order that the accused should have an opportunity of correcting any mistake in it. On the authority therefore of the case [Mohendra Nath v. Emperor (1)] cited by the learned Sessions Judge and also on the authority of the case of Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (2), we must hold that this deposition is inadmissible in evidence. The order for the prosecution of the Petitioner must be set aside.

(1) 12 C. W. N. 845 (1908).

KING-EMPEROR v. JOGENDRA NATH GHOSH.

We would further point out to the District Magistrate that in this case in his order for prosecution, or in any proceeding referred to therein, he has failed to set out the statements alleged to be false.

We further find from his explanation that though he made a preliminary enquiry under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., and presumably examined witnesses in the course of that enquiry, he has made no record of their statements. We do not find in the Criminal Procedure Code any provision with regard to the manner in which the evidence in such enquiry should be recorded. But we are of opinion that for future reference a summary of the statements should have been made.

The Petitioner is discharged from his bail.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 493 of 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.

1914,
14, May.

SHAIKH BAGU, Complainant, Petitioner,
v.
RAIKA SINGH, Accused, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 258, 439—Order of acquittal set aside by High Court in revision on merits, on the application of the Complainant.

Where the trying Magistrate in his judgment by which he acquitted the accused while laying great stress on all consideration that might affect the credibility of the witnesses for the prosecution omitted to consider what might be advanced in their favour and also failed to appreciate the corroborative value of an important witness for the prosecution, the High Court, on the application of the Complainant, set aside the order of acquittal on the merits and directed a re-trial by a new Magistrate.

This was a Rule granted on the 27th of March 1914 against an order of M. S. Harque, Esq., Deputy Magistrate of Singhbhum, dated the 6th of March 1914, acquitting the accused (Opposite Party) under sec. 258, Cr. P. C.

The facts are shortly these :—

The accused was a constable of the local thána. The prosecution story was that the accused along with Tour Jamadar and others went to Garikhana to bring some carts for the transit of the Lieutenant-Governor's luggages from Chaibassa when he assaulted one Sheikh Tajoo without any reason with a bamboo rod, causing a fracture in his left knee-joint.

Prosecution examined 8 witnesses and defence 5 witnesses. The Magistrate disbelieved the evidence for the prosecution and was of opinion that the defence version of the case was more probable. In this view he acquitted the accused.

Mr. P. K. Majumdar and Babu Hari Bhusan Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this case it appears that the Peti-

(1) 12 C. W. N. 845 (1908)
(2) I. L. R. 36 Cal. 955 (1909).

SHAIKH BAGU v. RAIKA SINGH.

tioner complained against a police constable, one Raika Singh, his complaint being to the effect that while the constable was employed in impressing carts, for certain purposes, he voluntarily caused grievous hurt to one Sheikh Tajoo. The constable was placed on his trial before a Deputy Magistrate of Chaibassa and after a trial extending over a month and-a-half he was acquitted under sec. 258, Cr. P. C. The Petitioner thereupon obtained this Rule from this Court calling upon the Deputy Commissioner of Chaibassa and upon the accused to show cause why this order of acquittal complained of should not be set aside, practically on the merits.

We have read and considered the judgment of the trying Magistrate and we are forced to the conclusion that he has failed to deal with the case before him with judicial care and impartiality. While laying great stress on all considerations that might affect the credibility of the several prosecution witnesses, it would seem that he has omitted to take into consideration what might be advanced in their favour. In particular we find that he has failed to appreciate or even to correctly cite in his judgment the evidence given by a Deputy Magistrate named Babu Bhaba Deb Sarkar. This witness says that as he was passing by, he saw the accused constable running away followed by a number of men who were shouting, some apparently "maro shalake" some apparently "mar dia." Amongst the men pursuing the constable was the Petitioner Sheikh Bagu. The Deputy Magistrate proceeds to say that he stopped the Petitioner and questioned him and that the Petitioner thereupon informed him that the constable had broken the leg or knee of some one of his relatives. The trying Magistrate has wholly omitted from his judgment this portion of the evidence. He has, therefore, failed apparently to consider the corroborative value of that evidence. What value in fact should be given to that evidence is not for us now to say, and we desire to say nothing that may prejudice the accused in the re-trial that we are now about to direct.

For the reasons we have given, we set aside the order of acquittal passed on the 6th March 1914 and direct that the accused Raika Singh be re tried. Having regard to all the facts of this case we are further of opinion that the re-trial should take place at the headquarters of another District. We direct accordingly that the case be now re-tried at the headquarters of the District of Manbhum by some competent Magistrate to be appointed by the District Magistrate of that District.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 83 OF 1914.

HOLMWOOD, J.	REAJADDIN MOLLA & ors.,
SHARFUDDIN, J.	Accused, Petitioners,
1914,	v.
13, February.	KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 143, 447—Unlawful assembly and criminal trespass—Bonâ fide belief in the existence of right to land and assertion of such right.

In consequence of a dispute between two landlords, the disputed property was attached under sec. 146, Cr. P. C., in a proceeding under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., and a Receiver appointed, but the Magistrate appointing the Receiver omitted to give any direction as regards the management of the property. There was a dispute between the tenants on both sides as regards the grazing rights over the property, but it appeared, that the Zamindar of the Petitioners gave them the grazing rights over the land and they objected to a tenant of the rival Zamindar ploughing up a portion of the land over which they alleged they had grazing rights, under colour of a lease from the Receiver. The Petitioners were convicted under secs. 143, 447, I. P. C.

REAJADDIN MOLLA v. KING-EMPEROR.

Held—That the Petitioners could not be convicted of criminal trespass when they were asserting a right which had never been declared against them, which they bonâ fide believed they had, and for the same reason they could not be said to have formed an unlawful assembly, because they went and protested against the land being ploughed up.

This was a Rule granted against the order of Mr. B. P. Chakrabartty, Deputy Magistrate of Comilla, dated the 19th day of November 1913, convicting the Petitioners under secs. 143 and 447, I. P. C., and sentencing each of them to pay a fine of Rs. 10 only, in default each to undergo rigorous imprisonment for ten days, an application for the revision of which order was rejected by F. W. Ward, Esq , Sessions Judge of Tippera, on 10th December 1913.

The material facts will appear from the Judgment.

Mr. Norton and Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerjee and Jatindramohan Ghose for the Petitioners.

Mr. Orr. for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule arises out of an unfortunate dispute between two landlords in consequence of which, in a proceeding under sec. 145, an order attaching the property has been passed under sec. 146, Cr. P. C., and a Receiver appointed. Unfortunately it appears that the Magistrate who appointed the Receiver has omitted to give any direction as to how the property should be managed and still more unfortunately the tenants on both sides appear to be at loggerheads as regards the grazing rights over the property, but one thing appears to be admitted that the Zamindar of the present accused gave them the grazing rights over this land, and that they objected to one Amjad Ali who was a leading tenant of the rival Zamindar ploughing up a portion of the land over which they allege they have grazing rights, under colour of a lease from the Receiver.

It appears to us that the Receiver should not have granted the lease to Amjad Ali entitling him to cultivate the whole of this land without making proper provision for the grazing rights. The trying Magistrate assumes that he did make such provision, but it is clear from the judgment that he had been given no authority to make such provision and that he had not as a matter of fact determined what the grazing rights were, to what extent they required the land and to what amount of land. Amjad Ali might be entitled for cultivating purposes. The result is, as is too frequently the case in this country, that the peasants left to themselves and finding their grazing rights interfered with fell out, but fortunately owing to the presence of the police on the spot no harm was done. But we think that it is not right that these cultivators should be convicted of criminal trespass when they were asserting a right which had never been declared against them which they bonâ fide believed they had, and for the same reason we think that they cannot be said to have formed an unlawful assembly, because they went and protested against the land being ploughed up. The Receiver should now receive proper instructions from the Magistrate with regard to the management of the property attached, and when such instructions have been given, this Court, as has always been held, would not interfere with such an order of management; and if the orders are duly promulgated and the raiyats know what their rights are under the Receiver and then by show of force do anything contrary to the Reciever's authority, there would be ground for proceeding against them. But at present we think that there is no such ground and that it would be extremely unfortunate to allow this conviction to stand.

REAJADDIN MOLLA v. KING-EMPEROR.

The conviction and sentence are therefore set aside and the fine if paid will be refunded. The rule is made absolute.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 1950 OF 1913.

HOLMWOOD, J.
SHARFUDDIN, J.

1914,
9, January.

MAHOMED HOSSEIN, Accused, Petitioner,

THANDA MEAH, Complainant, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 342, 263—Warrant case, Magistrate bound to examine accused in—Effect of sec. 262—Case started by prosecution under sec. 457, I. P. C.—Conviction under sec. 456, I. P. C., if proper—Notice to accused of charge—Prejudice.

The Petitioner was summoned under sec. 352, I. P. C., but subsequently the prosecution made a case of house-breaking by night with intent to commit theft (sec. 457, I. P. C.). In the course of the trial before the Magistrate to whom the case was made over for disposal it appeared from the cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution that there was familiarity between the Petitioner and a woman in the Complainant's house. The trial was in the summary way and the trying Magistrate without examining the Petitioner under sec. 342, Cr. P. C., convicted him under sec. 456, I. P. C.:

Held—That sec. 263, Cr. P. C., does not give the Magistrate discretion whether he will examine the accused or not. This is governed by sec. 342, Cr. P. C. It gives the accused the right to refuse to say anything if he chooses. But there must be examination in all warrant cases. Therefore the words "if any" in cl. (g) of sec. 263 do not apply to warrant cases.

That when the Magistrate found that the charge of house-breaking with a view to commit theft broke down and it appeard that there was another object, it was his bounden duty to have given the accused notice of that by drawing up a charge clearly stating what it was that he was accused of doing.

This was a Rule against the order of Mr. N. Ray, Deputy Magistrate of Chittagong, dated the 25th November 1913, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 456, I. P. C, and sentencing him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months, an application for the revision of which order was rejected by J. C. Twidell, Esq, Sessions Judge of Chittagong on the 28th November 1913.

The facts will appear from the petition on which the Rule was issued, the material portion of which is set out below:—

"That the case was first placed before Mr. J. J. Barneveille, Joint Magistrate of Chittagong, who after some adjournments issued summons against your Petitioner under sec. 352, I. P. C., and then sent the case before Babu M. B. Dattam, Deputy Magistrate, for disposal; that in the Court of this Magistrate the prosecution having sought to make out a case under sec. 457, I. P. C., the learned Deputy Magistrate by his order, dated the 27th of October 1913, submi ted the case to the Joint Magistrate for orders.

MAHOMED HOSSEIN v. THANDA MEAH.

"That thereafter on the 3rd of November 1913 the learned District Magistrate of Chittagong without withdrawing the case to his own file transferred the same from the Court of the Joint Magistrate to the Court of Babu N. Ray, another Deputy Magistrate.

"That consequently your Petitioner was placed on his trial in the Court of Babu N. Ray, Deputy Magistrate of Chittagong, who proceeded to try your Petitioner in the summary way; that the learned Deputy Magistrate by his judgment, dated the 25th of November 1913, convicted your Petitioner under sec 456, I. P. C., and sentenced your Petitioner to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months.

"That the learned Deputy Magistrate did not specify the offence for which your Petitioner was tried; that your Petitioner was not examined by the learned Deputy Magistrate and so could not explain the facts appearing against him; that your Petitioner was all along under the impression that he was being tried for an offence under sec. 457, I. P. C."

Mr. Gregory and Babu Khitish Chandra Sen for the Petitioner.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We are of opinion that this Rule must be made absolute upon the ground on which it was issued. The learned Magistrate in his explanation has shown either ignorance or neglect of the law as clearly laid down in sec. 342. Sec. 263 does not give him discretion whether he will examine the accused or not. This is governed by sec. 342. It gives the accused the right to refuse to say anything if he chooses. But there must be examination in all warrant cases. Therefore the words "if any" do not apply to warrant cases. Then again the charge was with intent to commit theft as alleged by the prosecution in their evidence, and in their evidence they did not aver that there was any other reason for the house-breaking. It was the defence which tried to elicit from the prosecution witnesses that there was some familiarity between the accused and a woman in the Complainant's house. It is therefore on the defence that the conviction rests and not on the prosecution.

There can be no doubt that when the learned Magistrate found that the charge of theft or the charge of house-breaking with a view to commit theft broke down and it appeared that there was another object, it was his bounden duty to have given the accused notice of that by drawing up a charge clearly stating what it was that he was accused of doing.

The trial appears to us to have been vitiated by these errors and the conviction and sentence are therefore set aside. We do not order a re-trial, because the accused has already been 21 days in jail and we consider that is sufficient to meet the ends of justice in this case. The Petitioner will be discharged from his bail unless he is required to answer to any other charge.

Rule made absolute.

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY. AUGUST 31, 1914. [No. 42.

Contents.

NOTES.

Damaged German War ships in Turkish waters

The fact that the German war-ships Goeben and Breslau were damaged by belligerent war-ships before they entered Turkish waters did not entitle them to make any prolonged stay in neutral waters. The only variation that the fact of their being damaged may make on the general rules we have already stated is that the damaged ships could ask for sufficient time to make them seaworthy with a view to proceed to their nearest home port. In making repairs they can in no way increase her fighting efficiency. Under the circumstances the more discreet course for them as also for the neutral Power is to disarm them and intern the crew as was done by the United States in 1904 in the case of the Russian cruiser Lena which took shelter in San Fransisco in a damaged condition after an engagement with the Japanese fleet.

Can an alien enemy Corporation sue in time of war?

We have stated in our previous issues that an alien enemy subject cannot sue without the license of the Crown. But questions may arise whether an alien enemy Corporation can sue at the time of war. There can be no question that an alien Corporation or Company incorporated in an enemy country cannot. But supposing a Company of alien enemies is registered under the Companies' Act in this country, it may be asked, is it entitled to sue? The answer to the question will depend upon the particular facts of each case. We propose here to deal only with the general principles of law which would govern such cases. The first question that has to be considered in such cases is the trade domicile of such Companies. Here we may state that there is a broad line of distinction between the continental view of International Law as expounded by the more modern French jurists and Courts and the American and English jurists and Law Courts. The modern French school and their followers regard such questions from the point of view of nationality while the American and English school follow the doctrine of trade domicile. The French Courts, however, draw a distinction between resident and non-resident aliens and also between the State and individuals. According to this view resident aliens do not necessarily acquire the enemy character of the belligerent State. Although the American jurists follow the English doctrine that the enemy subjects are "divided by the line of war" and are debarred from having any trading or commercial intercourse, yet American Courts have decided that a resident enemy subject by the facts of his being allowed to reside must be presumed to have the privileges of citizenship and as such may have local trade intercourse and also the right to sue in the local Courts. Having regard to the fact that America has a cosmopolitan population, we can well appreciate why the American Courts have accepted the doctrine of residence and trade domicile as entitling an enemy subject to sue. But in the view of English Law the same cannot be said to be the case.

According to English Law all trade intercourse between enemy subjects "divided by the line of war" is prohibited; it is the Crown alone which can grant a trade license or right of suit. Let us now apply this English doctrine to alien Companies registered in this country. It may be said that when a Company is registered in this country it has a trade domicile in this country. Further, that a company so registered is a "juristic person" in the eye of the law and that in its corporate capacity it is quite distinct from the members composing it who may be all aliens, and by reason of its domicile it is entitled to sue. Theoretically and also as an abstract proposition of law this may appear to be all right. But a Court of law will in every such case have to look beyond this and take into consideration the concrete facts, as they may be in each case. The mere fact of registration under the Companies' Act in this country cannot give the Court a jurisdiction, if the "principal place of business" and "chief control of the business" is in the enemy country. This has to be ascertained by entering into the facts of each case. According to the English view of public International Law the residence or trade domicile of the Corporation has to be fixed by reference to its "principal place of business" and not by the fact of its doing business in another country even under a registered name.

Next, a Company is no doubt a "juristic person," but one has got to see who are the real persons in authority behind it and for whose benefit the business is being done. If it is a registered Company, it is surely the directors who have the control, management, capacity for contract, etc., behind this "juristic person." The latter is but a name for purposes of suing or being sued as also for designating the Concern in all its transactions for the sake of convenience. The directors have been described by the House of Lords to be the "managing partners" of the Company. They are under the provisions of the Company Law entitled to bind the share-holders by all their acts which are not ultra vires. In this respect they may be said to wield larger authority than even managing partners of a firm. So far as the outside world is concerned, the directors are the de facto Company. It naturally follows that if the directorate of a Company is composed of enemy subjects, they would no more be entitled to sue or transact business than the managing partners of a partnership business composed of alien enemies and British subjects. In fact on the outbreak of war alien enemy directors of Companies registered in this country according to the doctrines of English Law would become functus officio.

A mixed directorate of a Company even with a British or Indian domicile is therefore incapable of making any contract or of instituting any suit or transacting any business of the Company without the license of the Crown. It is not necessary for such directors to retire or resign because on the declaration of war they ipso facto become functus officio as in the case of partnerships which in the same way become dissolved. The share-holders must then proceed to elect directors in their places, and such of the share-holders as may be alien enemy subjects cannot exercise any right of share-holeders at such election or any other business of the Company. A Court has to scrutinize all these facts before it can allow any suit by a Company of alien enemies, even when registered within jurisdiction, to proceed. The English Law makes no presumption as to right of an alien enemy subject to sue, contract or transact any business from the fact of residence or even trade domicile of a person bearing primâ facie an enemy character. The presumption is always the other way and the onus is always on such persons to show that they do not have the enemy character. The Royal Proclamations recently issued and Notifications of Local Governments following thereunder are based on the above principle. They say that trade license can only be granted by the Crown having regard to the merits of each case. Right of suit can similarly be granted by the Crown alone having regard to the special facts, and sec. 83 of the Code of Civil Procedure confers this authority on the Governor-General in Council. A Court of of law may certainly enquire whether a Corporation has an enemy character or not and if by reference to its head office, its place and personnel of chief control, its directorate and its beneficiaries, it is satisfied that the Corporation in spite of its trade domicile possesses an enemy character, it is the Crown alone who can grant a license to sue.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Custom—Pre-emption.

BHATT v. PANDYA, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 183.

In litigation between Hindus where one party alleges the adoption of a whole branch of the Mahomedan Law such as that of pre-emption and the other party repudiates the application of the foreign law, it lies very heavily on the party alleging to prove that that law has been adopted as a usage and could be proved to have been so adopted by proof of ancient and invariable custom.

A custom must be proved by evidence in the first instance and once it is proved the Courts are entitled to recognise its existence. A custom cannot be proved by the admission of the parties or their counsel before the Court.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887).

HARI BALU v. GANPATRAO, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 190.

A suit was filed as a Small Cause Court suit before a Judge exercising both Small Cause Court and regular jurisdictions. The Judge finding that the suit involved determination of questions of title to immoveable property, transferred it to the regular file and ultimately passed a decree deciding the question of title.

Held—That it was not a decree falling within the terms of sec. 27 of the Small Cause Courts Act and was therefore not final but was appealable.

Court of Wards Act (Bom. Act I of 1905).

HARI GOVIND v. NARSINGRAO, I. L. R 38 Bom. 194.

Sec. 32 of the Bombay Court of Wards Act does not apply to suits pending at the time of the assumption of superintendence of the estate by the Court of Wards.

Stamp Act (II of 1899).

STAMP REFERENCE BY THE BOARD OF REVENUE, I. L. R. 36 All. 137.

The words "final order" in sec. 2, cl. (15) and Art. 45, cl. (c) of Sch. I of the Stamp Act, refer to the final order of the lowest Court of original jurisdiction empowered to give an order for effecting a partition at the time it is passed.

Mortgage—Prior encumbrancer.

RAGHUNATH KUNWAR, I. L. R. 36 All. 123.

On the basis of a prior mortgage a suit was brought and a decree obtained and the property put up to sale. To this suit the second mortgagee was not made a party. The second mortgagee brought a suit for sale.

Held—That the prior encumbrancer ought not to be called upon for an account of the profits received by him subsequent to the sale.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877).

RAM MANORATH v. DILROJI KUNWARI, I. L. R. 36 All. 126.

On the death of one of the members of a joint Hindu family, his widow's name was by compromise registered in respect of the property standing in his name on an application for partition having been made by co-sharer; the widow also applied for partition of the share which stood in her name. The Plaintiff brought a suit for declaration that the widow was not entitled to partition.

Held—That the suit was not barred by the provisions of sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

Transfer of Property Act, sec. 84—Mortgage—Offer of payment.

CHITAN DAS v. GOVIND SARAN, I. L. R. 36 All. 139.

The offer by letter of payment of the mortgage money is not a good tender within the meaning of sec. 84 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is necessary that the money should be actually produced unless it can be shown that the person entitled to receive the money had waived this condition.

Notes of Cases.

ENGLISH LAW COURTS.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM OUDH.]

LORD DUNEDIN.	MAHABIR BAKHSH SINGH,
LORD MOULTON.	Petitioner,
SIR JOSHUA WILLIAMS.	v.
1914,	THAKUR SHEORAJ SINGH
30th July.	and another.

The Judicial Committee will not interfere in a matter which was entirely within the judicial discretion of the Court below.

This was an Application for special leave to appeal. The Appellant instituted the suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sultanpur, to recover possession of certain Talukdari property which belonged to Thakurain Dariyao Kunwar. Her name was entered in List 3 prepared under sec. 8 of Act I of 1869. The Appellant claimed that he was the eldest son in the senior branch of the lady's husband, and that as such, he was entitled to inherit her estate. He based his claim on a pedigree which he filed along with the plaint. The Defendants denied the claim, repudiating the correctness of the pedigree filed by the Plaintiff. The Subordinate Judge, as well as the Judicial Commissioners, found that the pedigree was not proved, and accordingly dismissed the suit. The Plaintiff then filed an application in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh for review of judgment, on the ground that he had discovered a pedigree of the Plaintiff's family, prepared under certain orders of the Government, which went to support his claim. He urged that he was not aware of the existence of the said pedigree, and could not produce it earlier. The Judicial Commissioners, by an Order dated the 3rd December 1912, rejected the application for review. They held that the Plaintiff had failed to establish by convincing proof that the new pedigree could not have been discovered by him, had he exercised due care and diligence in the preparation of his case. The Plaintiff thereupon applied to the Court below for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, against the Order dated the 3rd December 1912 which was refused. Hence the present application for special leave to appeal against the Order dated the 3rd December 1912, as well as against the judgment and decree made in the suit.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C. (with him Bhugwandin Dubé) for the Petitioners submitted that the Appellant could not produce the newly-discovered pedigree at the trial, as its existence was not within his knowledge, in spite of his having exercised due care and diligence.

Reference was made to Or. 47 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908.

LORD DUNEDIN.—Their Lordships are of opinion that the whole matter was really a matter of judicial discretion as to whether it was shewn to the tribunal interested, whether due diligence had been exercised or not. We cannot grant leave to appeal, because if it were before us, I do not think we could interfere with what the Court below had done.

Their Lordships rejected the petition.

Solicitor: Mr. Edward Dalgado for the Petitioner.

B. D. Leave granted.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before D. CHATTERJEE and WALMSLEY, JJ. RULE NO. 175 OF 1914. AHAMMADULLA CHOUDHURY, Petitioner, v. HAKARUSAHU AND ANOTHER, Opposite Party, 22nd July 1914.

Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 170—Occupancy-holding, purchaser of, if may set aside sale by deposit—Locus standi.

This was a Rule against the order of the Munsif of Katihar passed in Rent Ex. case No. 1691 of 1913 and dated the 3rd November 1913 allowing the application of the Opposite Party under sec. 170, B. T. Act, to deposit the decretal amount in the said Rent Ex. case and dismissing the said case as fully satisfied. The Opposite Party had purchased the holding in question by a registered kobala dated 1st Magh 1315 B. S and since then he had been in possession thereof.

Babu Kalikinkar Chackerburty submitted that the purchaser of an occupancy-holding does not acquire an interest voidable on the sale against and in the absence of any consent of the landlord. Relied on the F. B. case in 18 C. W. N. 990 and 16 C. W. N. 421 and the unreported case (Civil Rule No. 223 of 1914, dated the 19th June 1914) decided by Holmwood and Chapman, JJ.

Babu Jogendra Nath Mukerjee (with Babu Karunamay Ghose) relied on the Full Bench case in 18 C. W. N. 990 and the case in 17 C. W. N. 163 and submitted that the purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy-holding gets some interest by his purchase in the holding voidable at the sale.

Their Lordships held, following 16 C. L. J. 548, that the Applicant had locus standi and discharged the Rule with costs.

Rule discharged.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before JENKINS, C. J., AND N. R. CHATTERJEA, J. CIVIL RULE No. 500 OF 1914. MATHUR HAZRA, Defendant, Petitioner, v. PABAN HAZRA, Plaintiff, Opposite party. 13th June 1914.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), Sch. II, cl. 8—"Judge of the Court of Small Causes"—"Expressly invested," meaning of—Government Notification investing all Munsifs of a certain place with powers in general terms, if sufficient—Powers if to be invested in the name of particular Judge.

Plaintiff, Opposite Party, brought this suit for rent against the Defendant Petitioner on the allegation that the Defendant held the lands under the Plaintiff at an annual rental of Rs. 6 and that the Defendant was in possession of the same by building houses and by cultivating the lands. The Defendant admitted being a tenant of the Plaintiff and stated that the Petitioner was a settled raiyat and held about 3½ bighas of agricultural land under the Plaintiff at an annual rental of Rs. 7. The Defendant objected to the case being tried in the Small Cause Court as it was a case under the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned Munsif who tried the suit was invested with Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 100 and he overruled the objection of the Defendant and tried it as a Small Cause Court suit and held that the Defendant held the homestead in suit under the Plaintiff at an annual rent of Rs. 6 and that the suit was not a suit for rent under the Bengal Tenancy Act; and he decreed the suit in part for Rs. 15 as rent.

The Defendant then moved the High Court under sec. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Babu Dwijendra Nath Mookerjee for the Petitioner.—The suit, as stated in the plaint, was for rent for homestead lands and tank. Therefore the Munsif had no jurisdiction to try it as a Small Cause Court suit as he was not expressly empowered under cl. (8) of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act: I. L. R. 15 Cal. 174.

Babu Harendra Kumar Sarbadhicary for the Opposite Party:—There is a Notification No. 1778-J. D., dated the 29th June 1904, by which, "all Munsifs of Alipur and Sealdah are empowered to try under Small Cause Court procedure suits for rent for homestead lands up to Rs. 50 in value" 7 C. L. J. 407.

Babu Dwijendra Nath Mookerjee in reply.—"The Judge of the Court of Small Causes" does not include one invested with Small Cause Court powers only. It is doubtful if the language of the Notification would cover the cases of Munsif and Subordinate Judge who may be given Small Cause Court powers after the date of this Notification. Moreover, the Act requires that the powers must be given by the particular name of the person invested with such powers. See s. 15, (1) and cl. (8) of the Second Schedule of the Small Cause Courts Act. This point was not allowed to be argued in the case cited by the other side as was not a point in the reference (see I. L. R. 35 Cal. 677 where this case is also reported). There is an unreported case decided by their Lordship (Mookerjee and Beachcroft, JJ.) on 4-6-14 (Civil Rule No. 251 of 1914), where the identical point was taken by and decided in favour of the Petitioners. That was also a case from Sealdah (24 Parganas).

Held, that although the Notification in question was not happily worded and was rather vague still it had been in vogue for a long time and people had understood it in a particular sense and therefore the order complained of was not interfered with.

H. C. S. Rule discharged.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[Appeal from Bengal.]

Lord Moulton.
Lord Parker of Waddington.
Sir John Edge.
Mr. Ameer Ali.

1914,
Heard, 30, 31, March and 3, 7, 28 & 29, April.
Judgment, 22, July.

Ekradeswar Singh, Appellant,
v.
Musammat Janeshwari Bahuasin, Respondent.

*Hindu Law—Mithila sub-school of Mitakshara Law—Durbhanga Raj—*Babuana and sohag *grants to junior members and their wives, incidents of—Succession, rule of—*Kulachar or family custom—Females and daughter's sons, exclusion of—Grant if partible—Exclusion, custom of, if applies to partitioned share of grant—"Putra-pautradi," whether words of limitation or general inheritance—Established custom, isolated departure from, effect of—Widow's right to maintenance—Dispossession by widow—Mesne profits disallowed in absence of proof of offer of maintenance—Maintenance made a charge on property decreed—Costs—Custom, statements of deceased persons as to existence of, if admissible, when made after controversy arisen—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 32.

By kulachar or family custom, the right of succession to the guddi and to the properties of the Durbhanga Raj Reasat descends according to the rule of primogeniture. The younger sons of the Maharaja who are styled "Babus" are by kulachar entitled each by way of a babuana grant to a portion of the Raj Reasat for the maintenance of himself and his male descendants in the male line, and the wife of a younger son of a Maharaja gets, by way of sohag grant, the usufruct of a portion of the Raj Reasat for the maintenance of herself and her male descendants in the male line. In each case the property granted continues to form part of the Raj Reasat from which it is never separated (being entered in the Government Revenue Register under the name of the Maharaja for the time being as proprietor) and reverts to the Maharaja for the time being on the failure of male descendants in the male line of the grantee.

Babuana and sohag grants differ essentially in their nature from absolute grants and are subject to the kulachar under which they are authorised and in accordance with which they are made.

The custom governing the succession to and the inheritance of sohag property is the same as the custom governing the succession to and the inheritance of babuana property.

In each case females, widows and daughters and the descendants of daughters are by the custom applying to such grants excluded from the succession.

The right under the Mitakshara of coparceners in Hindu ancestral property to have the joint property partitioned is now unquestionable unless the property is held under grant or is subject to a custom which expressly or impliedly prohibited any partition of the property which would have the effect of defeating the object of the grant or custom.

Babuana and sohag lands descend in the family of Durbhanga, not to one male heir only, but to all the existing male heirs in the male line of the grantee as coparceners.

Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (2) not followed and explained.

A separation between members of a joint Hindu family followed by a partition between them of the ancestral property which would not put an end to their coparcenary rights in the property is unknown to the law.

The custom excluding the widow, the daughter or the daughter's sons from the

(2) L. R. 36 I. A. 176: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 1013 (1909).

EKRADESWAR SINGH v. MUSAMMAT JANESHWARI BAHUASIN.

succession of babuana or sohag grants would apply (as a matter of law) even after the coparceners in joint enjoyment thereof have separated in food, worship and estate.

Where two brothers holding babuana and sohag property effected a partition thereof, and then one of them died childless leaving a widow :

Held—That, although there was little evidence to show that the rule as to exclusion of females, etc., applied even where there has been a partition, the surviving brother was entitled to recover from the widow of the deceased the latter's separated share, as well as immoveable properties acquired from the income and profits of that share which formed accretions to the subject-matter of the grant, subject however to the payment to the widow of a money-maintenance, the amount of which the Judicial Committee fixed and charged upon the share recovered.

Mesne profits were disallowed in consideration of the fact that no substantial offer of adequate maintenance was made to the widow.

Moveable property and accumulations claimed by the Plaintiff were also disallowed.

A well established custom in the family cannot be defeated by the fact that in one case the custom was not enforced.

In certain sanads which testified to grants by way of babuana, the expression auras-putra-pautradi was used to indicate the course of descent :

Held—That as such grants could not be made under the ordinary Hindu Law, but were authorised only by the custom which excluded females from succession, the words auras-putra-pautradi should be regarded as words of limitation consistent with the custom, and not as words of general inheritance.

RAM LAL MOOKERJEE v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL (1) distinguished.

Evidence, oral or documentary, as to statements of a deceased person as to the custom in a family is not admissible, if it appears that such statements were made after a controversy as to the custom had arisen.

This was an appeal from a judgment, dated the 2nd August 1909, of the Calcutta High Court (Sharfuddin and Richardson, JJ.).

The Appellant's case was that babuana and sohag properties granted or given by the Maharaja of Durbhanga devolved, according to a family custom which excluded the widow and other female members from succession. The Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur allowed the claim, but the High Court dismissed it. Sharfuddin, J., concluded his judgment in these words :—

"In the case of Sivananja v. Muttu Ramalinga (3), it was held 'that what the law requires before an alleged custom can receive the recognition of the Court, and so acquire legal force, is satisfactory proof of usage, so long and invariably acted upon in practice, as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular family, class, or district of the country; and the course of practice upon which the custom rests, must not be left in doubt, but be proved to certainty.' This decision of the Madras High Court was affirmed on appeal, and the Judicial Committee observed [Ramalakshmi Ammal v. Sivanantha Perumal (4)] : 'Their Lordships were fully sensible of the importance and justice of giving

(1) L. R. 8 I. A. 46 (1881).
(3) 3 Mad. H. C. 75, 77 (1866)
(4) 14 M. I. A. 570, 585 (1872).

EKRADESWAR SINGH v. MUSAMMAT JANESHWARI BAHUASIN.

effect to long established usages existing in particular districts and families in India, but it is of the essence of its special usages modifying the ordinary law of succession, that they should be ancient and invariable ; and it is further essential that they should be established to be so by clear and unambiguous evidence. It is only by means of such evidence, that the Courts can be assured of their existence, and that they possess the conditions of antiquity and certainty on which alone their legal title to recognition depends.' In the light of the above authorities it is clear that in order to prove a custom to exclude a widow of a separated brother, the evidence should be clear and unambiguous ; instead of that, what we find is that not a single instance has been successfully established that a widow of a separated brother has been excluded from succeeding her deceased husband's estate.

"The onus being on the Plaintiff we do not think it necessary to discuss the oral evidence on behalf of the Defendant at any length. They prove that there is no kulachar with regard to the babuana properties which would exclude a widow of a separated brother from inheriting the estate of her husband.

"In the above circumstances we are of opinion that the Plaintiff has totally failed in discharging the onus that was on him, and we therefore think that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge is not correct. We therefore set aside the judgment and decree of the lower Court and dismiss the Plaintiff's suit with costs by decreeing the present appeal."

Hence this appeal.

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Appellants submitted that the kulachar or family custom was fully established by the evidence. The Durbhanga Raj was admittedly an ancient and impartible one, and descends according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. The male members received babuana grants, and the females were sometimes given what was called sohag properties on marriage or other occasions. The babuana and sohag properties descended according to the same family custom. It was, that on the extinction of male heirs of the grantee, the property, together with all accretions thereto made out of the income thereof, reverted to the Raj. The properties would not pass to the widow or any other female heir of the male grantee according to the Hindu Law, but to the nearest agnate amongst the male descendants only. As to the nature of babuana grants, reference was made to Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Moheshur Singh (5), and Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (2), and Laliteswar Singh v. Bhabeswar Singh (6). From the very nature of the grants the properties could not descend according to Hindu Law, because thereby it would pass out of the family. During the 300 years of the existence of the Raj there was not a single instance proved where the widow succeeded her husband. The only exception pleaded by the Defendant was that of Ghanlata, but that was not an exception, here right was always disputed by the agnates and she was allowed to remain in possession of the small estate for her maintenance only. By executing an agreement, dated 30th July 1890, she admitted that she had no right to inherit her husband's property by reason of the family custom. The general custom—excluding females of the male members of the Durbhanga Raj—was proved, and there was no exception to it. The babuana and sohag properties were carved out of the Raj and remained the property of the Raj except under certain conditions relating to their enjoyment. The partition of the babuana properties between the Appellant and his late brother did not affect the family custom. There could be no real partition as understood in the Mitakshara: Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (2). The family custom which applied when the male members were joint would continue to apply even after the so-called partition. The properties remained in the hands of the grantees and their male descendants as ancestral properties, and not self-acquired properties, and Netreshwar Singh's will devising the said properties was of no effect.

(2) L. R. 36 I. A. 176 : S. C. 13 C. W. N. 1013 (1909).

(5) 6 Moo. I. A. 164 (1855).

(6) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 823 (1908).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent submitted that the Appellant had failed to prove any family custom in derogation of the ordinary Hindu Law of Inheritance. The nature of the babuana grant was that it was made in full satisfaction of all rights of maintenance. It was a heritable and alienable estate governed by Hindu Law. The babuana property was partible: Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Moheshur Singh (5). It was not of the nature of ancestral property. It was of the nature of self acquired property and would pass according to the ordinary law (Mayne's Hindu Law, paras. 270, 275, 540). The babuana properties were not impartible. There was no allegation of impartibility. There was no custom regulating the succession, but only a custom of reverter to the Raj in the event of failure of the male line. Here there has been a partition under the Hindu Law. Reference was made to the following cases:—Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (2), Dharma Das Kundu v. Amulyadhan Kundu (7), Lal Sheo Pertab Bahadur Singh v. Allahabad Bank Limited (8). It is settled that the property can be sold. There is no sanad or grant in respect of the property in dispute, and therefore the words of limitation cannot be exactly ascertained. The words putra-pautradi do not necessarily exclude females: Ram Lal Mookerjee v. Secretary of State for India in Council (1). The case of Ghanlata succeeding as heir was fully established. The statement of the Maharaja of Durbhanga was not admissible. The statements were made after the controversy had started: Sec. 32, Evidence Act, 1872; A. B. Miller, Official Assignee of the estate of Ram Kishen Das v. Babu Madho Das (9). The onus of proving the family custom by clear and unambiguous evidence lay on the Plaintiff, and he had failed to discharge it. In any view of the evidence the Appellant was not entitled to Mauza Umzar or any lands outside pargana Nisankhpur Kusha, or the lands purchased, or the moveable property claimed by him.

Sir Erle Richards replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—The suit in which

(1) L. R. 8 I. A. 46 (1881).
(2) L. R. 36 I. A. 176: S. C. 13 C. W. N. 1013 (1909).
(5) 6 Moo. I. A. 164 (1855).
(7) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 1126 (1906).
(8) L. R. 30 I. A. 209 (1903).
(9) I. L. R. 19 All. 76, 92 (1896).

this Appeal to His Majesty in Council has arisen was brought on the 20th December 1906, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, by Babu Ekradeshwar Singh, who is the Appellant here, against Musammat Janeshwari Bahuasin, who is the widow of the Plaintiff's younger brother Babu Janeshwar Sing. The Plaintiff and his brother were sons of Netreshwar Singh, who was a younger son of Maharaja Rudar Singh of Durbhanga.

The Plaintiff claimed a declaration that he was entitled to the properties in suit which were owned by and in the possession of his deceased brother, a decree for possession of those properties, for mesne profits, and other reliefs. The property claimed consisted of the share which the Plaintiff's brother had obtained on a partition between them of immoveable property which had been granted by a babuana grant to their father, of immoveable property which had been granted by a sohag grant to their mother, of immoveable property alleged to be accretions to the babuana property, and of accumulations. The Plaintiff's claim was based on an alleged custom in the family of the Durbhanga Raj by which widows and other females were excluded from all rights to the possession of lands held under babuana grants or sohag grants. It was alleged by the Plaintiff that the properties which had been purchased by his father and by his brother had been purchased with profits which had been derived from the babuana property and were to be treated as accretions to that property. The Defendant, who was in possession, denied the existence of any such custom and by her written statement put the Plaintiff to proof of his title to possession.

The Durbhanga Raj is an ancient and impartible Raj, and by the kulachar, or family custom, the right of succession to the guddi and to the properties of the Raj Reasat descends according to the rule of lineal primogeniture. The younger sons of a Maharaja of Durbhanga are styled "Babus," and by the kulachar each younger son is entitled by way of a babuana grant to a portion of the Raj Reasat for the maintenance of himself and his male descendants in the male line, and the wife of a younger son of a Maharaja of Durbhanga gets, by way of a sohag grant, the usufruct of a portion of the Raj Reasat for the maintenance of herself and her male descendants in the male line. In each case the property, village or villages granted, continues to form part of the Raj Reasat, from which it is never separated; it is entered in the Government Revenue Registers under the name of the Maharaja for the time being of Durbhanga as the proprietor, and the property so granted reverts to the Maharaja for the time being of Durbhanga on the failure of male descendants in the male line of the grantee. Babuana grants and sohag grants differ essentially in their nature from absolute grants, and are subject to the kulachar under which they are authorised and in accordance with which they are made. The family of the Durbhanga Raj are Hindus, and except in so far as customs of the family and its branches exist and apply, the members of the family are governed by the Mithila School of Hindu Law, which, so far as it applies to this case, may be taken as following the Mitakshara of the Benares School.

Maharaja Rudar Singh of Durbhanga, by a babuana grant granted to his son Babu Netreshwar Singh, by way of maintenance as babuana, the dehat milkiat appertaining to pargana Nisankhpur Kusha, together with dasturat malikana. That grant has not been put in evidence in this suit, but the fact that the grant was made is proved by a sanad, dated 7th Phagun Badi 1257, which was granted by Maharaja Rudar Singh to his eldest son Maheshwar Singh. That sanad was registered in the Registry of Muzaffarpur on the 13th February 1850. The sanad shows that babuana grants had also been made by Maharaja Rudar Singh to two others of his younger sons, and contains the following directions :—

"The said Maharaj-kumar Babus shall continue in possession of the said parganas, and the Government revenue, which shall be due on account thereof, will be paid by them to you, and you will pay the same to the Government along with the Government revenue of the Raj. The said Babus shall live in a style befitting the position of Babus, and you shall treat them according to your sense of propriety as a Raja, and in a manner befitting their position as Babus."

On the death of Maharaja Rudar Singh, his eldest son Maheshwar Singh succeeded to the guddi and the Raj Reasat, and became Maharaja of Durbhanga. Maharaja Maheshwar Singh by a sanad, dated 6th Aghan Sudi 1259 Fasli (A. D. 1852), granted to Bahuasin Sohagin Mauza Madhapur as a sohag gift. As translated in this record, the sanad contains the following clause :—"You and your sons and grandsons, etc., shall cultivate or get cultivated the mauza aforesaid, and enjoy the usufruct thereof yourself." Bahuasin Sohagin was the wife of Babu Netreshwar Singh and the mother of the Plaintiff, and of his late brother. She is referred to in the record as Musammat Netrobati Bahuasin.

The Plaintiff's mother died in 1879. His father died in 1883, when the Plaintiff and his brother were minors. Until the separation of the brothers and a partition between them, the effect of which will later be considered, the Plaintiff and his brother were coparceners in the babuana property, which, according to Hindu Law, was, in their joint possession, ancestral property, subject, however, to such family custom as applied to it. Similarly, the sohag property was ancestral property in which, at the time of the separation and partition, the Plaintiff and his brother were coparceners. The Plaintiff came of age in 1888, and was put in possession of the babuana property and the sohag property as manager for the family consisting of himself and his brother. The younger brother came of age in 1896. Soon after the younger brother came of age, disputes arose between the brothers, they separated and each brought a suit against the other to obtain partition of the property in which they were coparceners. Decrees for partition were made, and in 1900 the property was partitioned between the brothers.

The younger brother died without issue on the 18th April 1906, leaving surviving him his wife, who is the Defendant to this suit. On her husband's death she took possession of the property which he held at the time of his death. Her right to the possession of that property is disputed in this suit on the ground that by a family custom she as a widow, although entitled to money-maintenance, was excluded from any right to the possession of that property.

The kulachar or family custom under which the Plaintiff claimed is thus described by him in his plaint :—

"1 That the family, to which the Plaintiff and the Defendant's husband belong, has held from time immemorial the properties known as Raj

Reasat of Durbhanga, and constituting an impartible Raj, and is governed by the kulachar or family custom in the matter of succession and inheritance as hereinafter mentioned.

"2. That by such kulachar and family custom, females, either widows or daughters and heirs in the female line, are altogether excluded from succession.

"3. That so far as the said Raj Reasat is concerned, the same descends according to the rule of lineal primogeniture on the eldest son of the last holder, the other sons obtaining portions of the Raj for maintenance and support by way of babuana grants.

"4. That in the event of the last holder of the said Raj dying without male issue, natural or adopted, his younger brother, or, in the absence of brother, his nearest agnate, according to the rule of lineal primogeniture, succeeds to the said Raj to the exclusion of widows and other females.

"5. That the incidents of the said babuana properties are, that the name of the Maharaja Bahadur of Durbhanga for the time being stands recorded in the Government Register as the proprietor of the mauzas comprised in the said properties, and it remains a part and parcel of the said Raj, and the Babus holding the said properties pay the Government revenue and other public demands payable in respect of the said mauzas to the said Maharaja who pays the same to Government; and that the said Babus and their male heirs in the male line remain in possession and enjoyment of the said mauzas; and that on the extinction of the heirs, male, of the grantees in the male line, the said mauzas together with all acquisitions, moveable and immoveable, made from the income thereof, revert to the said Raj.

"6. That by virtue of the kulachar aforesaid and the incidents of the said babuana grants, on the death of any male descendant in the male line of any Babu or younger scion of the said Raj family to whom a babuana grant as aforesaid has been made, without male issue, natural or adopted, his nearest agnate among the other male descendants in the male line of the said grantee succeeds to his share in the said babuana grant together with all accretions thereto as aforesaid.

"7. That in accordance with the customs of the family of Raj Durbhanga usufructs of some village or villages out of the Raj properties are granted to females of the family on the occasion of their marriages or other ceremonies. The rule of succession and other incidents connected therewith are the same as that of babuana; the villages granted to them descend to males of their body in unbroken male line; and on the extinction of male issue the said village or villages revert to the Raj."

The Plaintiff put forward the following as an explanation of the separation and partition between him and his brother :—

"16. That after the husband of the Defendant attained majority, and in consequence of disagreement between him and the Plaintiff, they separated and divided amongst themselves the major portion of the aforesaid properties and sohag property merely for the sake of convenience and undisturbed enjoyment of usufruct without prejudice to their coparcenary rights as junior members of the Raj Durbhanga family; but they being of junior branch of the Durbhanga Raj family, their status as coparceners in the Durbhanga Raj family did not come to an end, nor did such partition in any way affect or alter the nature and incident of their tenure of the said grant.

"17. That the husband of the Defendant died on the 18th April 1906 without any issue, and leaving Plaintiff his full brother, and the Defendant his widow.

"18. That according to the kulachar or family custom referred to above obtaining in the Durbhanga Raj family, including the junior branches thereof, the Defendant has no right or title to the estate left by her husband; and the Plaintiff, as the surviving male heir in the family of the grantee Maharaj-kumar Babu Netreshwar Singh and also as a coparcener in the Durbhanga Raj family, is entitled to succeed to and to the possession of the estate left by the husband of the Defendant, representing his share of the said grant and accretions thereto; and that the Defendant is only entitled to suitable maintenance out of the same; and that she is not entitled to succeed to and possess the said estates, properties and effects as is falsely pretended by her."

It may be observed that a separation between members of a joint Hindu family followed by a partition between them of the ancestral property which would not put an end to their coparcenary rights in the property is unknown to the law. As the Plaintiff was a party to the suits in which the decrees under which the partition was effected were made he is not in a position to deny as against his brother's widow that partition did in fact take place. He may, however, have intended by his plaint to represent that the partition between him and his brother had not the ordinary legal effect of a partition between coparceners, and that the custom of the Durbhanga Raj family which would exclude widows from the succession when the members of a branch remained joint would equally apply to exclude the widow of a separated member of a branch.

EKRADESWAR SINGH v. MUSAMMAT JANESHWARI BAHUASIN.

The Subordinate Judge found, as the fact was, that there had been complete separation between the brothers in food, worship and estate, and consequently that at the time of the death of the younger brother in 1906 the Plaintiff had no coparcenary interest in any of the property in suit. The correctness of that finding has not been questioned in this appeal. The Subordinate Judge also found that there is a valid custom in the junior branches of the family of the Durbhanga Raj, including the family to which the parties to the suit belong, that widows do not inherit babuana properties, and that the succession and inheritance in the case of sohag grants are governed by the custom which governs the succession and inheritance in the case of babuana grants, and he held that notwithstanding that there had been complete separation between the brothers, the custom applied. He gave the Plaintiff a decree for possession of some of the immoveable properties which the Plaintiff claimed, for certain moveable property and for mesne profits. From that decree the Defendant, the Respondent here, appealed to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. The learned Judges before whom the appeal came found that although the subjects of babuana and sohag grants would on the failure of male heirs in the male line of the grantee revert to the Maharaja of Durbhanga for the time being, the Plaintiff had failed to prove any custom by which the widow of a childless and separated Babu was not entitled during the continuance of babuana or sohag grant to hold for a Hindu widow's interest the property which her separated husband had held under a babuana or sohag grant, and, consequently, applying the rules of the ordinary Hindu Law, those learned Judges decided that the Plaintiff had failed to prove as against the Defendant that he was entitled to the possession of any of the property in suit, and by their decree set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and dismissed the suit. From that decree this appeal to His Majesty in Council has been brought.

Some statements deposed to by witnesses who were called, and some of the documents which were put in were not admissible as evidence in this suit. It seems to have been overlooked at one period of the suit that evidence, oral or documentary, as to statements of a deceased person as to the custom in a family is not admissible if it appears that such statements were made after a controversy as to the custom had arisen. There is, however, abundant evidence to prove what was the custom in this family of the Durbhanga Raj which applied to babuana grants and sohag grants and to accretions to babuana immoveable property.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge arrived at a correct conclusion on the evidence that the custom governing the succession to and the inheritance of sohag property is the sam as the custom governing the succession to and the inheritance of babuana property. In the High Court Mr. Justice Richardson held that sohag property is similar in its nature and incidents to babuana property, and is governed by similar considerations, and Mr. Justice Sharfuddin did not dissent from that view. Their Lordships find that, except that a babuana grant is made to a male while a sohag grant is made to a female, there is no difference so far as the right to succession to the property is concerned between a babuana grant and its incidents and a sohag grant and its incidents. In the one case the grant is made for the benefit of the grantee and his male descendants in the male line, in the other case the grant is for the benefit of the grantee and her male descendants in the male line; in each case, females, widows and daughters and the descendants of daughters are by the custom applying to such grants excluded from the succession, and on the failure of such male descendants in the male line the property granted reverts to the Maharaja of Durbhanga for the time being. The general evidence as to custom, upon which their Lordships have found that widows are excluded from the succession to babuana and sohag properties, includes and is strongly supported by instances in this family of Durbhanga of widows, who would otherwise have been entitled to a Hindu widow's interest, having been excluded from, or not having claimed, possession on the death of their husbands.

EKRADESWAR SINGH v. MUSAMMAT JANESHWARI BAHUASIN.

In some of the babuana sanads which are in evidence in this suit the words which have been regarded in the Court below as words of limitation are in the vernacular auras-putra-pautradik. As to those sanads Mr. Justice Sharfuddin in his judgment in this case said :—

"From the copies of sanads (Exs. 20 A, 20 B 20 C, 20 D and 20 E) it is clear that female children and daughters' sons were excluded from the inheritance of the babuana properties. The expressions used in the sanads are auras-putra-pautradik, which means sons born of the loins. I take it to mean that so long as there is one descendant of this description, the properties granted are not to revert to the Raj."

That construction is consistent with the evidence as to those babuana grants to which their Lordships attach importance, and their Lordships are unable to regard them as words of general inheritance which would include female as well as male heirs. In this connection the attention of their Lordships has been drawn to the judgment of this Board in Ram Lal Mookerjee v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (1) in which it was held that in Bengal in a gift to a man the vernacular words putra-pautradi-krame would be read as words of general inheritance, and would include female as well as male heirs, where by law the estate would descend to such heirs. Babuana grants could not be made under the ordinary Hindu Law, but they are authorised by the custom which excludes females from the succession. Their Lordships must regard the words auras-putra-pautradik as used in these sanads as words of limitation consistent with the custom, and not as words of general inheritance.

Their Lordships having found that under the custom which applies to the branches of this family widows are excluded from all right to succeed to babuana property or to sohag property, it is necessary to consider whether that custom, which has been proved to apply where the members of the branch remain joint, can, without evidence that it has been applied where the members of a branch have separated in food, worship and estate, be held to exclude the widow of a childless and separated member from a Hindu widow's interest in the babuana and sohag properties which had been held by her husband as his separate property. In this case it is clear that until the brothers separated, the babuana and sohag properties were held by them, subject to the terms of the grants and the custom, as joint ancestral property in which their rights were those of coparceners.

(1) L. R. 8 I. A. 46 (1881).

The right under the Mitakshara of coparceners in Hindu ancestral property to have the joint property partitioned is now unquestionable unless the property is held under a grant, or is subject to a custom, which expressly or impliedly prohibited any partition of the property which would have the effect of defeating the object of the grant or the custom. It has been contended that there can be no partition of babuana or of sohag property in this family of Durbhanga, and that to allow that babuana and sohag property could be partitioned would be to frustrate the very object with which babuana grants and sohag grants have been made and the very object with which the custom in the family of the Durbhanga Raj authorised the making of such grants by the Maharaja for the time being of Durbhanga, that object being to provide by a grant of lands suitable maintenance, having regard to the position of the family, for the grantee, and his or her male descendants in the male line, and to relieve the Maharaja of Durbhanga from the possibility of having from time to time to provide for such descendants maintenance by gifts of money.

In support of the contention that there can be no partition of babuana property, reference has been made to the judgment of this Board in Durgadut Singh v. Rameshwar Singh (2). That case related to a babuana grant in this family of Durbhanga. Their Lordships in that case stated that those who for the time being are entitled to be maintained out of babuana property "cannot have it divided amongst them by proceedings in the nature of partition." The statement referred to, although doubtless correct, cannot be regarded as an authority binding in this appeal, as it was made upon a concession as to facts which were not proved, and which certainly would not be proved by the evidence in this suit. The concession which was made by counsel in that case was that lands which had been granted to Kirkat Singh by a babuana grant descended to the eldest male heir of the grantee to be held, or managed, by the person to whom they descended for the maintenance of the family. The evidence in this suit proves that babuana and sohag lands descend in the family of Durbhanga, not to one male heir only, but to all the existing male heirs in the male line of the grantee as coparceners.

Apart from the general evidence that females are excluded from the succession to babuana and sohag properties, there is little evidence, and that apparently merely evidence of opinion, that the rule as to the exclusion of females from a succession applies where there has been a partition. It is probable that there have been few instances in this family of Durbhanga of a separation in food, worship and estate in which this question as to the right of a female to succeed to babuana or sohag property could have arisen. It is doubtful that with the exception of the present case and the case of Musammat Ghanlata, who was the widow of Babu Ghansham Singh, there has been any case in which a separated and sonless member of a branch of the Durbhanga family had a wife who survived him.

(2) L. R. 36 I. A 176: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 1013 (1909).

Musammat Ghanlata's case occurred in a branch which descended from Maharaja Madho Singh, from whom the present Maharaja of Durbhanga descended through Maharaja Rudar Singh who made the babuana grant in this case. Ramput Singh, who was a younger son of Maharaja Madho Singh had a babuana grant; he had six sons, one of whom was Dharamput. Dharamput had by his wife Dharamlata a son Ghansham Singh, who had by his wife Musammat Ghanlata two daughters but no son. Ghansham's daughters married and had male issue. Ghansham Singh separated from his uncles and cousins and obtained possession of his father's sixth share of the babuana property of that branch. On Ghansham Singh's death his widow Musammat Ghanlata entered into possession of his one-sixth share of the babuana property as hers by right of inheritance and in the presence and with the knowledge of the agnates of her deceased husband she was registered as the proprietor of that one-sixth share, and held possession of it for 16 years until she died. A few days before she died, Musammat Ghanlata executed an ekrarnama in which she stated that by custom she had no title to the share, and alleged that she had been permitted to hold possession of it merely by way of maintenance. It is obvious that she executed the ekrarnama as a compromise to secure, if possible, 400 bighas of the lands for her grandsons, who were sons of her daughters. No explanation satisfactory to their Lordships of the reason why Musammat Ghanlata was allowed to take and to hold possession of her late husband's one-sixth share, and why the custom was not enforced in her case, has been forthcoming. It is possible that, owing to the novelty of the position, the parties who were concerned were in some doubt as to their rights under the custom. However that may have been, their Lordships are of opinion that a well-established custom in the family cannot be defeated by the fact that in one case the custom was not enforced. The subsequent history of Ghansham's one-sixth share, so far as it is known to their Lordships, is inexplicable.

Their Lordships hold that the custom in this family of the Durbhanga Raj by which females are excluded from the succession to babuana property and to sohag property applies in this case notwithstanding the separation and the partition which was effected by the Plaintiff and his late brother, and consequently that on the death of his brother the Plaintiff became entitled to the possession and enjoyment of the babuana property and of the sohag property which his brother held at the time of his death. Their Lordships agree with the Subordinate Judge, for the reasons stated by him, that the immoveable properties which were acquired from the income and profits of the babuana properties are to be considered as accretions to the babuana properties, and they hold that the Plaintiff became, on his brother's death, entitled to the possession and enjoyment of those immoveable properties. Their Lordships are not satisfied that the Plaintiff proved a title to the possession of any of the moveable property or accumulations which he claimed. The Defendant was and is entitled to money-maintenance, and as no substantial offer of adequate maintenance was made, their Lordships consider that the claim for mesne profits should be disallowed.

EKRADESWAR SINGH v. MUSAMMAT JANESHWARI BAHUASIN.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court should be set aside ; that the Appellant should have a decree for the possession of the immoveable properties in suit excepting Nos. 15, 19 and 21 of Schedule 3, and No. 10 of Schedule 4 (A), and that in other respects the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be varied by dismissing the suit ; that it be declared that the Respondent is entitled to be paid monthly during her life, unless the property reverts in the meanwhile to the Maharaja of Durbhanga for the time being, future maintenance at the rate of Rs. 15,000 per annum, such maintenance to be a charge upon the immoveable properties which the Appellant will recover by the order in this appeal ; and that no costs be allowed to either side in the High Court or in the Court of the Subordinate Judge.

Their Lordships consider that if the Appellant and his brother had not effected a partition, this litigation might have been avoided. No costs of this appeal will be allowed to either side.

Solicitors : Messrs. W. W. Box & Co. for the Appellant.

Solicitors : Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. for the Respondent.

B. D. Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.

APPEAL NO. 11 OF 1914.

JENKINS, C. J.
WOODROFFE, J.
1914,
1, May.

LACHMI CHAND JHAWAR, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
HEMENDRA PROSAD GHOSH, Defendant, Respondent.

Negotiable instrument—Promissory note, silent about interest, oral agreement as to, if provable—Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), sec. 80—Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec. 92 (2).

Where there was no mention of interest in a promissory note and it was sought by the Plaintiff to prove that by a contemporaneous oral agreement it was settled between the Plaintiff and the Defendant that interest would run at the rate of 5 per cent. per mensem :

Held—That under sec. 92 (2) of the Indian Evidence Act, the Plaintiff was not entitled to prove any such oral agreement as to the rate of interest.

Where the Defendant admitted in his written statement that he hod verbally agreed to pay interest on the promissory note at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, sec. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881) was no bar to the interest being decreed at that rate.

The facts of the case will appear sufficiently from the judgment of Chitty, J.

The material contention between the parties will appear from their pleadings given below. The Plaintiff stated in his plaint :—

"1. That by a Hundi bearing date the 14th day of April 1912 and executed at Calcutta, the Defendant for valuable consideration promised to pay to the Plaintiff the sum of Rs. 1,100 sixty days after the date thereof.

LACHMI CHAND JHAWAR v. HEMENDRA PROSAD GHOSH.

"2. That the rate of discount agreed to between the parties at the time the said Hundi was drawn was 5 per cent. per month and it was agreed between the Defendant and the Plaintiff that if the Defendant should fail to pay the amount due on the said Hundi as the same became due, he should pay interest on the amouut remaining unpaid at the aforesaid rate of 5 per cent. per month."

The Defendant in his written statement stated in reply:—

"The Defendant admits the statement contained in para. 1 of the plaint.

"With reference to para. 2 of the plaint the Defendant denies that he agreed to any discount or to pay interest on the amount of the Hundi at the rate of 5 per cent. per month as untruly alleged by the Plaintiff and he states that he agreed to pay interest on the amount remaining unpaid at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum from the due date of the said Hundi."

The judgment of Chitty, J., was as follows:—

CHITTY, J.—This is a suit upon a negotiable instrument. Though written on a Hundi Stamp and purporting to be accepted, the document is in form a promissory note for Rs. 1,100 payable sixty days after date. The promissory note is admitted by the Defendant. The only question is as to interest. The promissory note is silent as to interest, but the Plaintiff pleads that the rate of discount agreed between the parties at the time the said Hundi was drawn was 5 per cent. per mensem, and it was agreed between the Plaintiff and the Defendant that if the Defendant should fail to pay the amount due on the said Hundi as the same became due, he should pay interest on the amount so remaining due at the aforesaid rate of 5 per cent. per mensem. The Defendant denies that he agreed to pay at the rate of 6 per cent. (it should be 5 per cent.) per mensem, but admits an agreement to pay at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. The only point for my determination is whether the Plaintiff can be allowed to give evidence of the agreement which he alleges. I am of opinion that he cannot. It is true that in the case of Sowdamonee Debya v. A. Spalding (1), evidence of a subsequent agreement appears to have been allowed. That was a reference from the Small Cause and the point does not appear to been argued. The case of Ghanshiam Lalji v. Ram Narain (2) has no application as the collateral agreement there was in writing, and the question was whether such an agreement was enforceable, by reason of the provisions of sec. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. In my opinion, evidence of the agreement now sought to be proved is excluded by the provisions of sec. 92 of the Evidence Act. It is, as pleaded, a contemporaneous oral agreement which would have the effect of materially adding to the terms of the written contract. It cannot, I think, be allowed under proviso 2 to the section. It is true that the promissory note is silent as to interest, but that would be the case in most documents into which an additional stipulation is to be introduced. This too is a formal document, and it cannot be presumed that the parties intended to agree upon anything that was not inserted in it. It would, in my opinion, be very dangerous to allow evidence of such agreements, as the creditor

(1) 12 C. L. R. 163 (1882).
(2) I. L. R. 29 All. 33 (1906).

LACHMI CHAND JHAWAR v. HEMENDRA PROSAD GHOSH.

would be thus enabled to adapt the rate of interest to the requirements of the case, and, when the debtor had once failed to pay, to enhance his claim accordingly.

The Defendant admits the claim for interest at 12 per cent. per annum and this I think he must pay. There will be a decree for the Plaintiff for Rs. 1,100 and interest on that amount at 12 per cent. per annum from the due date of the promissory note till to-day, and costs on scale No. 2 and interest on judgment at 6 per cent. per annum.

Against this decree the Plaintiff preferred this appeal.

Mr. D. N. Basu for the Plaintiff-Appellant.—The question is whether or not oral evidence is admissible under secs. 99 and 92 of the Evidence Act, to prove the rate of interest. They do not apply. They apply to a document which embodies the terms of a contract. Here admittedly all the terms of the contract were not reduced into writing. Oral evidence is admissible, because it deals with a collateral (separate) oral agreement (provisoes 2 and 5 of sec. 92). It is not necessary that the whole agreement should be in writing, etc. [Jumnadas v. Srinath Roy (3), Harris v. Rickett (4), Cutts v. Brown (5)], and Woodroffe, p. 472. The intention of the parties who did not intend that the writing should contain the whole agreement between them may appear from direct evidence or by the informality of the document: Behary Lal v. Kamini Soondaree (6), Ruthua Mudaliyar v. Arumuga Mudaliyar (7), at pp. 198 and 199. Here there is direct evidence. A Hundi is not such a formal document as to exclude oral evidence of interest and it is not usual to include interest in Hundi. It is a separate agreement and is admissible under sec. 92, prov. 2: Sowdamonee Debya v. A. Spalding (1), Umesh Chunder v. Mohini Mohun (8). If the parties agreed to a high rate of interest, it is to be allowed: Satish Chunder v. Hem Chunder (9), Ghanshiam Lalji v. Ram Narain (2). Sec. 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act does not apply. It does not affect the contractual relation of the parties. If there is an express contract to pay interest, it would not override that contract: Ghanshiam Lalji v. Ram Narain (2).

Mr. R. N. Mitter for the Defendant-Respondent.—Sec. 92 of the Evidence Act precludes all oral evidence to contradict, vary, add to, or subtract from the written instrument except in cases provided for in the proviso to sec. 92. Besides, parole evidence is generally inadmissible whether it consists of (1) direct oral testimony, etc., (2) their admissions, declarations of intent, etc., (3) their statements against interest, etc. See Phipson on Evidence. Here of course there is an admission in the written statement to the effect that it was agreed that interest would be paid at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. Even then, on the principle itself, oral evidence should not be allowed, because even our admission would not bring it out of the operation of sec. 92 of the Evidence Act, which precludes such evidence. Proviso 2 to sec. 92 has no application. When the document is silent, under sec. 80, Negotiable Instru-

(3) I. L. R. 17 Cal. 176n (1886).
(4) 28 L. J. Ex. 197 (1859).
(5) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 328 (337) (1880).
(6) 14 W. R. 319, 320 (1870).
(7) 7 M. H. C. R. 189 at pp. 198-199 (1872).

(1) 12 C. L. R. 163 (1882).
(2) I. L. R. 29 All. 33 at p. 36 (1906).
(8) 9 C. L. R. 301 (1881).
(9) I. L. R. 29 Cal. 823, at pp. 825, 826 (1902).

LACHMI CHAND JHAWAR v. HEMENDRA PROSAD GHOSH.

ments Act, interest at the rate of 6 per cent. only is chargeable whereas it is alleged that he was to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per month, i.e., 60 per cent. per annum.

It was not a separate contract, but part of one and the same contract. If parties had really intended that interest at 60 per cent. would be paid, the natural thing is, that creditor would have insisted on the agreement being in writing. Silence, as in this case, amounts to an obligation to pay statutory rate of interest and here we are agreeable to pay the ordinary bazar rate of interest. A collateral oral agreement to annex a term different from customary term (e.g., in this case ordinary rate of interest, i.e., at 12 per cent. per annum) has been held inadmissible. See Fawkes v. Lamb (10), per Blakburn, J. Here the document was a formal document and no parole evidence is admissible. Ghanshiam Lalji v. Ram Narain (2) is clearly distinguishable, as there was a collateral written agreement and custom was pleaded: Sowdamonee Debya v. A. Spalding (1). It was an ex parte matter and the point was not seriously argued at all; also there it was a subsequent oral agreement, here on the pleadings the agreement was contemporaneous. See Basanti Bibi v. Sheo Mangal Parshad (11), where it was held that no agreement of parties not embodied in a negotiable instrument can override provisions of sec. 80 of Negotiable Instruments Act.

Here of course, Court had jurisdiction to make a decree with interest at 12 per cent on the admission in the written statement, and so it did. Cases where oral evidence has been held to be inadmissible: Campbell v. Hodgson (12), Foster v. Jolly (13), Abrey v. Crux (14), New London Credit Syndicate v. Neale (15). See also Fatima Bibi v. Hanmantha Row (16).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

JENKINS, C. J.—In my opinion the judgment of Mr. Justice Chitty should be affirmed. The only difficulty in this case is occasioned by the second paragraph in the Defendant's written statement, for that gives some colour to the suggestion that sec. 92 of the Evidence Act is not applicable. But for that paragraph I think the Plaintiff's claim would be barred by sec. 92 of the Evidence Act; and, even conceding that the second paragraph of the written statement entitles the Plaintiff to say that the whole agreement is not contained in the document, still the Judge has given effect to that admission and allowed the Plaintiff interest during the period for which he claims, at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. That appears to me to meet the justice of the case, and I would therefore dismiss the appeal with costs.

WOODROFFE, J.—I agree. I think that the evidence offered by the Plaintiff was excluded by the provisions of sec. 92 of the Evidence Act. The Plaintiff, however, can take advantage of the admission made by the Defendant in the written statement and he has been given the benefit of that by the decree under appeal. I agree, therefore, in the order passed.

Messrs. B. N. Basu & Co., Solicitors, for the Appellant.

(1) 12 C. L. R. 163 (1882).
(2) I. L. R. 29 All. 33 (P. C.) (1906).
(10) 31 L. J. Q. B. 98 (1862).
(11) 6 A. L. J. 283 (1909).
(12) [1819] 1 Gow. 74.
(13) [1835] 1 C. M. & R. 703.
(14) [1869] L. R. 5 C. P. 37.
(15) [1898] 2 Q. B. 487.
(16) 17 M. L. J. 296 (1907).

LACHMI CHAND JHAWAR v. HEMENDRA PROSAD GHOSH.

Babu J. K. Sarkar, Solicitor, for the Respondent.

A. K. G. Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 202 OF 1913.

COXE, J.
RAY, J.
1913,
22, July.

ABDUL KARIM ABU AHMED KHAN, Defendant, Appellant,
v.
ABDUS SOBHAN CHOUDRY and ors., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 92—Suit to remove matwali of mosque—Compromise by which Plaintiff agrees to withdraw suit for consideration, whether lawful—Compromise if may be recorded before question whether endowment public or private decided.

In a suit instituted under sec. 92, C. P. C., on the allegation that the Defendant (the matwali of two mosques) had misappropriated certain property dedicated for their up-keep and praying inter alia that the Defendant might be removed from the matwaliship and a new matwali appointed and a scheme for the proper discharge of the trust framed, the parties entered into a compromise, whereby the Plaintiffs agreed to withdraw from the suit in consideration of certain advantages to be received by them, but the Court refused to record the compromise and pass a decree on its basis. On appeal,

Held—That the question whether the agreement of compromise was a lawful one depended on the further question whether the endowment in suit was a public endowment or not, and until that question was decided, it could not be said to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the suit had been adjusted by lawful agreement.

GYANANANDA v. KRISTO CHANDRA (1) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 28th of April 1913 against an order of M. Smither, Esq., District Judge of Zilla Dacca, dated the 15th February 1913.

The order under appeal was passed in a suit brought by four Plaintiffs with the consent of the Advocate-General for the removal of the principal Defendant (No. 1) from a matwaliship and for other reliefs. The suit was instituted on 25th January 1910. The Defendant on the basis of certain transactions, dated 17th March 1912, stated that the dispute had been adjusted by an agreement embodied in a document marked A which was produced, and prayed that the suit should be disposed of under Or. 23, r. 3, by being dismissed in accordance with the agreement.

The Plaintiffs denied that there was any compromise. Two of the Plaintiffs, they alleged, were no parties to the transaction alleged and that there was a proposal of compromise which had fallen through and they expressed their determination to proceed with the suit.

By the order appealed against the Court below dismissed the Defendant's application and ordered the suit to proceed.

The Defendant No. 1 appealed.

Dr. Rash Behary Ghose, Babus Jogesh Chandra Ray and Akhil Bandhu Guha for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Chakravarti, Babus Jnanendra Nath Sarkar and Nares Chandra Sen-Gupta for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Appeal arises out of a suit brought under sec. 92, C. P. C. The Plaintiffs

(1) 8 C. W. N. 404 (1901).

ABDUL KARIM ABU AHMED KHAN v. ABDUS SOBHAN CHOUDRY.

alleged that the Defendant had misappropriated certain property dedicated for the upkeep of two mosques and made several allegations of misconduct against him. They prayed that the Defendant might be removed from the matwaliship and a new matwali might be appointed, that a scheme might be framed for the proper discharge of the trust and for various other reliefs. The suit has been pending for a considerable time and several different proceedings have been prosecuted in it.

The present appeal is against the decision of the District Judge refusing to order a certain agreement to be recorded under Or. 23, r. 3, and to pass a decree in accordance therewith. The ground on which the learned District Judge has refused to record this compromise is that this suit under sec. 92 cannot be lawfully compromised in this way, and the compromise arrived at is not a lawful agreement within the terms of Or. 23, r. 3.

The Defendant appeals, and it is argued on his behalf that it is not shown that this is a public endowment at all, and that if it is not a public endowment, the suit can certainly be compromised; secondly, it is argued that even if it is a public endowment, the Plaintiff can withdraw from the prosecution of the suit and the compromise does not amount to more than such a withdrawal.

It appears to me quite clear that if this be a public endowment, the suit cannot be compromised by this petition. The case of Gyanananda v. Kristo Chandra (1) is in my opinion an authority for this view, and it appears to me to be in accordance with common sense. There is no reason whatever why the worshippers at this mosque, if it be a public mosque, and those who are interested in its management should be prejudiced, as undoubtedly they would be prejudiced by the stifling of this suit. And it is not in my opinion correct to say that the compromise itself is merely the withdrawal of the suit. The first Plaintiff agreed, according to the memorandum of agreement that has been placed before us, that the suit should be withdrawn for ample consideration. Paragraph 5 of the memorandum relates to the withdrawal of the suit and the first two of the paragraphs show that the first Plaintiff was to receive a considerable advantage for this withdrawal. It was not therefore a mere withdrawal from the prosecution of the suit with which the Court of course could not interfere. It was an application formally to record a bargain under Or. 23, r. 3, the terms of which bargain could subsequently be used in evidence by the parties. I think, therefore, that if this be a public endowment, the order of the Judge below is perfectly right.

On the other point it has been argued that this question whether or not this is a public endowment was finally decided between the parties by decision of the District Judge so long ago as April 1910. That decision was passed in dealing with an application for the appointment of a Receiver and the Judge held that the deed operated to create a public endowment and that the suit was primâ facie maintainable. He however rejected the application to appoint the Receiver, so that it would hardly seem that this decision was necessary for the disposal of that application. It has however been argued that ever since then the parties have acted on the view that this matter has been settled. I think for the purpose of the pending proceedings that this view is correct. The parties have ever since that decision apparently gone on the assumption that for the purpose of proceeding with this suit, the endowment must be regarded as a public endowment until the ultimate decision when the issue on this question will be finally determined. This is strongly indicated by the fact that in judgment under appeal there is no reference at all to any controversy on this point, and this Court on the 8th February 1912 in dealing with another interlocutory proceeding also seemed to have proceeded on the assumption that while this suit is pending, it must be regarded as one dealing with a public endowment. The Defendant cannot be prejudiced by this view being taken, for if hereafter it should be found, when the suit is formally tried, that this is not a public endowment, the suit will necessarily fail and he will in no way be injured but rather benefited by the fact that this compromise has not been allowed. On the other hand if this compromise is allowed, the persons interested in the mosque will be very considerably prejudiced, if the suit is disposed of on this compromise and the question whether or not it is a public mosque is not finally determined. The terms of Or. 23, r. 3 are that where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement, the Court shall order the agreement to be recorded and pass a decree. The question whether this is or is not a lawful agreement depends on the further question whether this is or is not a public endowment, and so long as it remains subject to controversy whether this is a public endowment or not, it cannot in my opinion be said to be proved to the satisfaction of the Court, that the suit has been adjusted by a lawful agreement.

(1) 8 C. W. N. 404 (1901).

I think, therefore, that in the circumstances the decision of the Judge below is right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The hearing fee is assessed at five gold mohurs.

The record will be sent down at once.

RAY, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE NO. 1085 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 11 and 12, December. 1914, Judgment, 1, June.	ARJUN DASS, Petitioner, v. GUNENDRA NATH BASU-MALLICK, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 47—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec. 18, Art. 166—Execution started against deceased judgment-debtor—Sale if may be set aside—Purchaser of occupancy-holding if may apply—Limitation—Fraud—Abuse of processes of Court—Onus—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 153, if bars second appeal in application to set aside sale—Practice—Revision-application treated as appeal.

Where proceedings to execute a decree for rent obtained against an occupancy-raiyat having been started more than a year after the judgment-debtor's death, writ of attachment and proclamation of sale were issued in his name and returns were filed that processes had been duly served and thereafter at the sale at which no bidders attended, the property was purchased by the decree-holder who on 8th April 1912 got delivery of possession through Court, and within one month thereof the Petitioner who had previously purchased the holding from the tenant applied to have the sale set aside :

ARJUN DASS v. GUNENDRA NATH BASU-MALLICK.

Held—That the execution-proceedings were liable to be set aside on the ground of grave irregularity.

Quære.—Whether the irregularity was such as rendered the sale absolutely void or voidable only.

Held—That the application came within sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and was not time-barred, sec. 18 of the Limitation Act being applicable in the circumstances of the case.

LIVINIA ASHTON v. MADHABMONI DASI (1) referred to.

MALKARJUN v. NARAHARI (2), STOWELL v. AJUDHIA NATH (6), SHEO PRASAD v. HIRA LAL (7) distinguished.

That it was for the decree-holder to show that the Petitioner had on any date earlier than 8th April 1912 knowedge of the sale.

That the Petitioner from whom rent was received though he might not have been formally registered as a tenant had locus standi to apply under sec. 47 to set aside the sale, although he had failed to prove that the holding was transferable by custom.

PROSUNNO KUMAR v. BAMA CHURN (20) distinguished.

That a second appeal lay in the case although the claim in the suit for rent was under Rs. 100.

The explanation added to sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the Amending Act of 1907 has not completely nullified the Full Bench decision in KALI MANDAL v. RAM SARBESWAR (22).

(1) 11 C. L. J. 489 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 560 (1910).
(2) L. R. 27 I. A. 216 : s. c. I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).
(6) I. L. R. 6 All. 255 (1884).
(7) I. L. R. 12 All. 440 (1889).
(20) 13 C. W. N. 652 (1909).
(22) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 957 : s. c. 9 C. W. N. 721 (1905).

In this case no question of limitation or Court-fees arising, the Petitioner's application for revision was treated as a memorandum of appeal.

This was a Rule against an order of A. J. Chotzner, Esq., District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 22nd of April 1913 confirming that of Babu Khagendra Nath Dutta, Munsif, Barasat, dated the 23rd of December 1912.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Petitioner.

Dr. Dwarkanath Mitter and Babu Tarakeswar Pal Choudhury for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order of the District Judge, who, in concurrence with the Court of first instance, has refused an application for reversal of an execution-sale. The facts, as they appear on the face of the record, may be briefly recited. One Gunendra Nath Basu-Mallik brought a suit for recovery of arrears of rent against Sitanath Banerjee, the recorded tenant of an occupancy-holding which comprised 17 bighas of land and is said to have been worth at least Rs. 300. The decree was made ex parte on the 4th July 1909 for a sum of about Rs. 63 together with costs about Rs. 9. On the 27th May 1911 the Petitioner Arjun Dass, who had previously purchased the holding from Sitanath Banerjee, made a deposit of Rs. 67 in satisfaction of the judgment-debt. By some oversight, the amount deposited did not cover the whole of the costs decreed. On the 25th October 1911, the decree-holder applied for execution of his decree against Sitanath Banerjee for recovery of the balance still due, which amounted to a sum of about Rs. 5. Sitanath Banerjee had, however, died on the 17th May 1910. Execution was yet taken out against the dead man. On the 2nd November 1911, the Court ordered execution to proceed against the judgment-debtor on record and notice under r. 22 of Or. 21 of the Code was directed to issue upon him, as more than one year had elapsed from the date of the decree. A return was filed that the notice had been duly served on Sitanath Banerjee on the 28th November 1911. Subsequently writ of attachment and sale proclamation were issued with the name of Sitanath Banerjee thereon. Returns were filed in usual course that the processes had been served in accordance with law. On the 12th January 1912 the holding was put up to auction; there was no bidder present, and the decree-holder purchased the property for Rs. 50. On the 8th April 1912, the Court delivered possession to the decree-holder in his capacity as auction-purchaser. On the 7th May 1912, the Petitioner applied to the Execution Court for reversal of the sale. He alleged that he had purchased the holding several years before the sale, that he was in possession by payment of rent to the landlord, and that the decree-holder had managed to buy the property for a very small price at a sale held in the course of proceedings taken against a dead man. The Court of first instance refused to set aside the sale, and that order has been on appeal confirmed by the District Judge. In our opinion, the proceedings initiated and carried on against the dead judgment-debtor were infructuous, and the Courts below have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in them, namely, to annul a sale held in the course of such a proceeding.

Or. XX, r. 22, provides that where an application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree or against the legal representatives of a party to the decree, the Court executing the decree shall issue a notice to the person against whom execution is applied for, requiring him to show cause, on a date to be fixed, why the decree should not be executed against him. In the case before us, more than one year had elapsed from the date of the decree and the judgment-debtor had died in the interval. There was consequently a two fold reason for the issue of the notices contemplated by r. 22, but such notice could be issued only upon the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor against whom alone execution could proceed under sub sec. 1 of sec. 50. The decree holder, however, initiated the proceeding and carried it on throughout against the dead man as if he were still alive. The Court was not only not apprised that the proceedings were taken against a dead man, but untrue returns were repeatedly filed to show that the processes had been duly served. It is difficult to conceive a graver abuse of the process of the Court, and the question inevitably arises, is a sale deliberately brought about under such circumstances to be treated as valid and operative? In the case of Livinia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1) this Court was called upon to consider the effect of a sale held without notice to the judgment-debtor, under sec. 248 of the Code of 1882. In that case, the judgment-debtor was alive, but although more than a year had elapsed since the date of the decree, no notice

(1) 11 C. L. J. 489 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 560 (1910).

ARJUN DASS v. GUNENDRA NATH BASU-MALLICK.

under sec. 248 was served upon her. This Court held on the authority of the decision of the Judicial Committee in Malkarjun v. Narahari (2) that although the sale could not be treated as a nullity and ignored by the party whose property had been sold as if it had never taken place, yet it was voidable, as the omission to issue the prescribed notice was a serious irregularity. It was pointed out that the omission to serve the notice was not a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale within the meaning of sec. 311 of the Code of 1882, but was a good ground for reversal of the sale upon an application under sec. 254, which could be made under Art. 178 of the second schedule to the Limitation Act of 1877, within three years from the date of sale. It was also explained that the object of a notice under sec. 248 is not merely to give the judgment-debtor opportunity to show cause why the decree should not be executed, because, for instance, it is time-barred or has been adjusted, but also to give him an opportunity to satisfy it before execution is issued. The principles thus enunciated in Livinia Ashton v. Madhabmoni Dasi (1) have been adopted and applied in the cases of Lakshmicharan v. Srischandra (3), Kumed Bewa v. Prosunna Kumar Roy (4) and Shamsundar v. Jhumat Shah (5). Tested in the light of these principles, the sale in the case before us cannot possibly be sustained. There was no notice under Or. XXI, r. 22, upon the legal representatives of the judgment-debtor; the Court could not issue

(1) 11 C. L. J 489 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 560 (1910).

(2) L. R. 27 I. A. 216 : s. c. I. L. R. 25 Bom. 337 (1900).

(3) 13 C. L. J. 162 (1910).

(4) I. L. R. 40 Cal. 45 (1912).

(5) 11 Ind. Cases 893 (1911).

such notice, though it was incumbent upon the Court to do so, because the decree-holder never intimated to the Court that the judgment-debtor was dead. A sale held under these circumstances must be set aside on the ground of grave irregularity in the proceedings. But the present case is really much stronger than the one before this Court in Livinia Ashton v. Madhabmoni (1). Here the execution-proceeding was initiated and carried on throughout against a dead man. The cases of Stowell v. Ajudhia Nath (6) and Sheo Prasad v. Hira Lal (7) are of no assistance to the decree-holder-auction-purchaser. In those cases, the execution-proceeding had been commenced against the judgment-debtor and his property had been attached during his life-time; the sale took place after his death without notice to his legal representatives. It was ruled that the property, when sold, was as the result of the attachment, validly in the custody of the Court, and that consequently the sale was not a nullity, but could be set aside on the ground of material irregularity in the publication of the sale proclamation. The case before us is of an essentially different description; it is not the case of a man who after due notice of the execution-proceeding defaults to pay the judgment-debt and as a result has his property brought to sale, it is the case of a man who is dead, and whose property is sold because he fails to respond to the notice issued by the Court on him at the instance of the judgment-creditor [see Debi Baksh v. Habib Shah (8).]

(1) 11 C. L. J. 489 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 560 (1910).

(6) I. L. R. 6 All. 255 (1884).

(7) I. L. R. 12 All. 440 (1889).

(8) I. L. R. 35 All. 331 (1913).

ARJUN DASS v. GUNENDRA NATH BASU-MALLICK.

The question of the legality of an execution-sale held in course of proceedings initiated and carried on against a dead judgment-debtor has been repeatedly considered in cases of the highest authority. In Chick v. Smith (9) it was ruled that in the case of death of the judgment-debtor, even a few hours before execution issued, the execution was invalid [see also the notes to Jefferson v. Morton (10); substantially to the same effect are the decisions in Rameswari v. Durgadass (11), Imamunnessa v. Liakat (12), Gopal v. Gunamani (13)]. No doubt, there has been some divergence of Judicial opinion upon the point, whether the sale should be treated as void or voidable, but the Courts are unanimous that if the sale is directly impeached, it cannot be sustained. The question has been repeatedly examined in the Courts of the United States and the authorities almost unanimously hold that if execution issues after the death of the judgment-debtor, the sale is void, only a small minority hold that it is voidable (Freeman on Executions, sec. 35; Freeman on Void Judicial Sales, sec. 24; Klebar on Void Judicial and Execution Sales, sec. 280; Rover on Judicial Sales, sec. 827) The point has been elaborately investigated by the Supreme Court of the United States on more than one occasion [Erwin v. Dundas (14); Taylor v. Doe (15); Ransom v. Williams (16); Mitchell v. Moxent (17)], and it has been uniformly ruled that an execution commenced after the death of the judgment-debtor named therein is void and that the purchaser at a judicial sale held in such a void proceeding is not protected; but it is otherwise, where an execution is regularly issued and is levied on the land of the judgment-debtor during his life-time; in the latter case the sale is regarded as a completion of the previous execution by which the property had been expropriated in accordance with law. The matter may be put briefly in the words of the judgment in Brown v. Parker (18): "Judicial proceedings cannot be carried on in the name of a dead man; there is as much necessity for a Plaintiff as for a Defendant; the proceedings in either case are as much arrested by the death of one as of the other." We hold accordingly that the sale held on the 12th January 1912 must be set aside on the basis of the application, dated the 7th May 1912, treated as one made under sec. 47 of the Code. No question of limitation arises, notwithstanding the comprehensive language of Art. 166 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act of 1908 which is wider in its terms than the Article it replaces, namely, Art. 166 of the Limitation Act of 1877. The case is plainly one for the application of sec. 18; no notices had ever been issued upon any person interested in the property sought to be sold; false returns were, on the other hand, filed to the effect that the processes had been duly served on the judgment-debtor who had, as a matter of fact, died more than a year before the proceedings were commenced against him; besides this, the decree-holder-auction-purchaser did not take delivery till after more than a month had expired from the date of the sale and the Petitioner came into Court within one month from the date of such

(9) 8 Dowling 337 (1840).
(10) 2 Saunders Rep. 6 at p. 12.
(11) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 103 (1880)
(12) I. L. R. 3 All. 424 (1881).
(13) I. L. R. 20 Cal. 370 (1892).
(14) [1846] 4 Howard 58.
(15) [1851] 13 Howard 287
(16) [1864] 2 Wallace 317.
(17) [1866] 4 Wallace 237.
(18) 15 Ill. 307.

ARJUN DASS v. GUNENDRA NATH BASU-MALLICK.

delivery. There is nothing to show that the Petitioner had any previous knowledge of the sale, and as their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed in Rahimbhoy v. Turner (19), the burden would lie upon the decree-holder to show that the Petitioner had, on any date earlier than the 8th April 1912, knowledge of the sale held in the course of proceedings of which no notice had been given to any living man. We also observe that the objection was taken in the Court below that the Petitioner had no locus standi, as he had failed to prove that the holding was transferable by custom. It was proved, however, that rent was received from the Petitioner after his purchase, though his name was apparently not formally registered as tenant. We are of opinion that the Petitioner was competent to make the application and that the decision in Prosunno Kumar v. Bama Churn (20) does not govern this case.

We may finally add that although the application must be deemed to have been made under sec. 47 of the Code of 1908, a second appeal may at first sight seem barred under sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, as the claim in the suit for rent was under Rs. 100 [Shyama Charan v. Debendra Nath (21)]; but a second appeal does apparently lie in this case on the authority of the decision of the Full Bench in Kali Mandal v. Ram Sarbeswar (22), the effect of which, as explained in Benimadhab v. Bisseswar (23), has not been completely nullified by the explanation added to sec. 153. The view that a second appeal lies to this Court in the present case, does not, however, create any difficulty in the way of the Petitioner, because the petition on which this Rule was granted may be treated as a memorandum of appeal, as no question of limitation or court-fees arises.

(19) L. R. 20 I. A. 1: s. c. I. L. R. 17 Bom. 341 (1892).
(20) 13 C. W. N. 652 (1909).
(21) I. L. R. 27 Cal. 484 (1900).
(22) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 957: s. c. 9 C. W. N. 721 (1905).
(23) 16 C. L. J. 542: s. c 17 C. W. N. 84 (1911).

The result is that the orders of the Courts below are discharged, the application to set aside the sale is granted, and the sale is cancelled. The Petitioner will be restored to possession in execution of the order of this Court. The Petitioner will also receive his costs in all the Courts. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at five gold mohurs.

Appeal allowed.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 404 OF 1913.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1913,
8, May.

ANUKUL CHANDRA ROY, Petitioner,
v.
KAMARALI SARDAR, Opposite Party.

Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859), sec. 2, order under—Right of appeal from the order—Proper orders to be made under sec. 2.

No appeal lies to the Sessions Court from the order of the Magistrate under sec. 2 of Act XIII of 1859.

The Magistrate, while making an order under sec. 2 of Act XIII of 1859, cannot make an order of imprisonment in default, but such an order could be made after there has been non-compliance with the order of re-payment or carrying out the contract.

The facts of the case are briefly these :—

The Opposite Party took an advance of Rs. 8,000 and odd for the purpose of getting performed by coolies a certain earth-work for the master of the Complainant. He procured some coolies and part-performed the work, after which he left the work unfinished, whereupon the Petitioner made an application to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Kushtea under the Workman's Breach of Contract Act (XIII of 1859).

The Sub-Divisional Officer made over the case to an Honorary Magistrate of 1st class power for trial and the latter found the Opposite Party guilty and ordered him to refund portion of the advance-money or to finish the work and in default ordered that he should be imprisoned for three months. The Opposite Party appealed to the Sessions Judge of Nadia, who held that the Honorary Magistrate not being a Magistrate of "full powers" had no jurisdiction and that Act XIII of 1859 did not apply, as the Opposite Party was not a workman or labourer, but a Contractor, and accordingly set aside the order of the Honorary Magistrate. The Petitioner then moved the High Court, and obtained the rule on the ground that no appeal lay to the Sessions Judge; but their Lordships (Coxe and N. R. Chatterjea, JJ.), while issuing the rule on behalf of the Petitioner, coupled it with another rule, viz., to show cause why the order of the Honorary Magistrate should not be set aside on the ground that the Act XIII of 1859 did not apply to the accused.

Babu Brojendra Nath Chatterjee for the Petitioner.—No appeal lay to the Sessions Judge, the right of appeal does not exist as a matter of course, it is a creature of Statute. Neither the Criminal Procedure Code nor any other Statute provides for appeal in such a case. As no appeal lay to the Sessions Judge, his judgment could not be looked at. His judgment being out of the way, the judgment of the Magistrate must stand good, and it as also the evidence on the record show that the Opposite Party was a workman. But the trying Magistrate made one mistake, namely, he awarded imprisonment in default at this stage, whereas this should have been done after the Opposite Party had failed to comply with the order of the Magistrate as to the refund of the money or completing the work.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This was a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Nadia as well as the Opposite Party to show cause why the decision of the learned Sessions Judge should not be set aside on the ground that it was passed without jurisdiction and why the order of the Honorary Magistrate should not be set aside on the ground that Act XIII of 1859 does not apply to the accused.

The accussd in this case has been ordered under sec. 2 of Act XIII of 1859 to perform a certain contract that he entered into as a workman. All that we have got to see in connection with this case is whether the accused is a workman or not. The evidence is clear that he is a workman. In fact the contract was given to him on the basis of his being a workman and he engaged to do the work himself and to get it done by others, and in consideration of his agreeing to do this he received from the Petitioner's master large sums of money aggregating to over Rs. 8,000. A certain portion of the work has been done and Rs. 2,078 is yet due for which work has to be rendered. The accused has refused to do any more work and hence the order passed by the Honorary Magistrate in this case. Against that order the accused appealed to the Judge who has set aside the order of the Honorary Magistrate on the ground that the Act does not apply to the accused along with some other grounds. We see that in this case no appeal lay to the Judge. The order passed by the Magistrate does not come under the provisions of sec. 408 to make it appealable to the Judge. We therefore set aside the order of the learned Judge purporting to have been passed in appeal. That order being vacated, the order of the Honorary Magistrate will remain.

But we notice that the learned Magistrate has erred in directing the accused to suffer imprisonment for three months. That order could be passed under sec. 2 after there is a non-compliance with the order of re-payment or carrying out the contract.

We therefore make the rule absolute in respect of the first part of the Rule and discharge the Rule in respect of the second portion.

Rule made absolute in part.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

Rev. No. 727 of 1914.

Sharfuddin, J.
Teunon, J.
1914,
4, June.

Gaya Ray,
Petitioner,
v.
The Emperor,
Opposite Party.

Act IV (B. C.) of 1866, sec. 13B, cl. (c)—Police officer being in possession of money when on duty—Contravention of order of Commissioner of Police—Order contravened, necessity of proof of—Plea of guilty, qualified.

The Petitioner was placed on his trial under sec. 13B, cl. (c) of Act IV of 1866 (B. C.) for being while on duty in possession of annas four, contrary to an order of the Commissioner of Police. After the examination of one witness, the Petitioner pleaded guilty to having the money in his possession. He, however, stated before the Magistrate that at the time in question he was not on duty, but engaged in the private business of a Police officer and also that he had been on duty the previous night. The Magistrate convicted the accused on this plea of guilty. The order the contravention of which was the subject-matter of the prosecution was not proved:

Held—That a copy of the Government order or an extract therefrom or a reference thereto should have been placed on the record.

That the Petitioner's plea of guilty was to be looked upon merely as an admission of the fact that he had at the time in question the sum found upon his person.

The High Court set aside the conviction and sentence and directed a re-trial by a new Magistrate.

This was a Rule granted on the 4th May 1914 against an order of Mr. Keays, Second Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta, dated the 1st May 1914, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 13B (c), Act IV, 1866 (B. C.), and sentencing him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 14 days.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Babu Tarakeshwar Pal Chowdhury for the Petitioner.

The Judgment of the Court was as follows:—

In this case, the Petitioner, a Police constable, was convicted under sec. 13 B, cl. (c), of Act IV of 1866, and sentenced to 14 days' rigorous imprisonment. The charge against him was that while on duty in Kyd Street he was in possession of a sum of annas four contrary to an order passed by the Commissioner of Police which was his duty as such Police officer to obey. He was placed on his trial and one witness was examined. Thereupon, it appears, the accused pleaded guilty to having as a matter of fact the money in his possession. He was thereupon convicted and thereafter obtained the present Rule from this Court calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why the conviction of and the sentence imposed upon him should not be set aside on the ground, first, that the order said to have been contravened was not proved, and secondly, that it was not proved that the constable at the time in question was on duty. In his explanation the Presidency Magistrate says, "the rule, the contravention of which was the subject-matter of the complaint, is contained in Government Order No. 746-P., dated 12th February 1910, and as such requires no formal proof." That may be so. But it was advisable that a copy of the Government Order or an extract therefrom or a reference thereto should have been placed on the record. It is then stated that the witness examined, viz., the Sub-Inspector, deposed that the accused was on duty at the time in question. The duty has not been specified. The accused now states that at the time in question he was in fact not engaged on Police duty but was engaged in the private business of a certain Police officer. It would seem from the affidavit filed in support of the application for the present rule which has not been contradicted that before the trying Magistrate he made this statement and also the statement that he had been on duty the previous night. It would thus appear that his plea of guilty is to be looked upon merely as an admission of the fact that he had at the time in question the sum of annas four upon his person.

GAYA RAY v. THE EMPEROR.

In these circumstances, we make the Rule absolute, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the Petitioner be re-tried and that in the re-trial his defence be considered and adjudicated upon. We further direct that the re-trial do take place at the Central Police Court before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, or a Magistrate to be nominated by him.

Rule made absolute.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.

REV. No. 681 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914,
Heard, 4, June.
Judgment, 5, June.

HAR NARAN SARDAR and ors., Petitioners,
v.
THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Conviction of rioting with common object of assault—Acquittal by Appellate Court on charge of rioting and conviction of assault if proper—Necessity of finding against individual accused on charge of assault.

The Petitioners were charged under sec. 147, I. P. C., the common object of the alleged unlawful assembly as stated in the charge being to assault the Police. No charge under sec. 353 or sec. 323 was framed. The Magistrate convicted the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C. The Sessions Judge in appeal acquitted the Petitioners of the offence of rioting and convicted them under sec. 353, I. P. C., in respect of the assault committed upon the several Police officers. The Sessions Judge did not find which Police officer was assaulted by which Petitioner :

HAR NARAN SARDAR v. THE EMPEROR.

Held—That the Sessions Judge was wrong in convicting the Petitioners of an offence under sec. 353, I. P. C., the Petitioners not having been called upon to answer any such charge.

That in the view taken by the Sessions Judge of the case, a finding as to which Police officer was assaulted by which Petitioner was essential.

This was a Rule granted on the 27th April 1914 against the order of the Joint Magistrate of Alipur, dated the 11th March 1914, convicting all the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C, and sentencing them to various terms of imprisonment (some two months' and others six weeks'), which order was on appeal modified by the Additional Sessions Judge of 24-Parganas on 14th April 1914 by altering the conviction to one under sec. 353, I. P. C., and reducing sentences from 2 months to one month in the case of some and from 6 weeks to 3 weeks in the case of the remainder.

The material facts are set out in the judgment.

Mr. Norton, Babus Jogendra Nath Mukerjee and Dharma Das Banerjee for the Petitioner.

Babu Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this case it appears that on the 9th of December last, the day of the Mahurrum there was a collision between two Mahurrum processions or between those processions or one or other of them and the Police officers on duty at the time and place in question. Of the Mahurrum parties one was composed of the employees of the Budge-Budge Jute Mill and one, spoken of as the Katki Dal, of the employees of an oil depôt. In the occurrence it would seem that four of the Police officers and three members of the Katki Dal were injured.

The nine Petitioners before us and some others were therefore placed on their trial before the Joint Magistrate of Alipur. Having heard the witnesses for the prosecution, the Joint Magistrate framed against the accused a charge of rioting, and in the charge so framed, it was stated that the common object of the unlawful assembly, which has culminated in the riot, was to assault the Police. No charges were framed under sec. 353 or sec. 323 of the Code. Why this was not done does not appear from the record. It may be that the Joint Magistrate thought it unnecessary to ascertain which of the accused before him, if any, were responsible for specific injuries. In the result the Joint Magistrate convicted the nine Petitioners (and one other accused with whom we are not now concerned) and sentenced them under sec. 147 of the Code to various terms of imprisonment.

On appeal, the Additional Sessions Judge of Alipur came to the conclusion that the attack made by the mill employees was made not upon the Police, but upon the members of the Katki Dal, and that the injuries suffered by some of the officers were sustained in their endeavour to separate the two Mahurrum parties.

Finding, therefore, that the Petitioners were not actuated by any common design to assault "the Police," that the injuries caused represented the independent acts of individuals and that in respect of any such injury only the person inflicting it could be made responsible, the Sessions Judge held that the charges framed by the Joint Magistrate, failed and therefore acquitted the Petitioners of the offence of rioting.

HAR NARAN SARDAR v. THE EMPEROR.

When from the evidence on the record the Sessions Judge deduced, as he appears to have deduced, that the common object of the Petitioners and their companions was to assault the members of the Katki Dal, and when he also found that in the attack thus made upon that party some of its members were injured, whether upon these findings if the Sessions Judge had been able further to hold that by the error or omission in the statement of the common object as set out in the charge, the Petitioners had been in no way prejudiced or misled, the Sessions Judge should or should not have affirmed the convictions is a matter we need not now discuss.

Having acquitted the Petitioners of the offence of rioting the Sessions Judge next proceeded to convict the Petitioners each of an offence under sec. 353 of the Code in respect of the assault committed upon the several Police officers. Here the Sessions Judge has fallen into manifest error. The Petitioners had not been called upon to answer to any such charge and it cannot be said that they have not been prejudiced, for the judgment of the Joint Magistrate appears to show that in his opinion in the case of some, if not all of the Petitioners, the evidence going to show that they had individually inflicted specific injuries, though sufficient to establish general activity in the riot, was not sufficient to prove the commission of the definite act alleged.

Moreover, in convicting the Petitioners of an assault or assaults upon the Police, the Sessions Judge has not found which Police officer was assaulted by which Petitioner though in the view taken by him of the case such a finding was essential.

We therefore set aside the conviction of and the sentences imposed upon the Petitioners under sec. 353 of the Code. But having regard to the finding arrived at by both Courts, and having heard learned Counsel for the Petitioners on this point as on other points, we think that in this case our proper course is to set aside also the acquittal of the Petitioners under sec. 147, and to direct that they be re-tried on charges properly framed under secs. 147, 353, 323 and any other appropriate section of the Penal Code. We order accordingly.

Conviction set aside :
Re-trial ordered.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 433 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914.
8, May.

GENU MANJHI and others, Petitioners,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 236, 237—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 147, 323—Sec. 237, Cr. P. C., when applies—Conviction of rioting without any charge under sec. 323, I. P. C.—Conviction under sec. 323, I. P. C., by Appellate Court after setting aside conviction of rioting, legality of.

The Petitioners were convicted by the Magistrate, under sec. 147, I. P. C. On appeal the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence under sec. 147, I. P. C., and convicted the Petitioners under sec. 323, I. P. C. No charge had been framed against the Petitioners under sec. 323, I. P. C.:

Held—That sec. 237 has to be read with sec. 236. If the facts of the case do not fall under sec. 236, sec. 237 has got no application. There was no charge framed against the Petitioners for an offence of causing hurt and they had therefore no opportunity to defend themselves on this charge and the conviction and sentence must be set aside.

GENU MANJHI v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

This was a Rule granted on the 17th March 1914, against an order dated the 15th January 1914 of Mr. E. G. Drake-Brockman, Sessions Judge of Bhagalpur, convicting each of the accused under sec. 323, I. P. C., and sentencing each to pay a fine of Rs. 50, on appeal from an order of Babu Sarada Prosad Sarkar, Deputy Magistrate of Banka, dated the 2nd January 1914, convicting the Petitioners under sec. 147, I. P. C., and sentencing them to rigorous imprisonment for four months and directing under sec. 106, Cr. P. C., each of them to furnish his own recognisance in the sum of Rs. 100 together with two sureties for Rs. 200 each for keeping peace for one year.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Atul Chandra Dutt for Babu Sailendra Nath Palit for the Petitioners.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Bhagalpur to show cause why the conviction of and the sentence passed on the Petitioners under sec. 323, I. P. C., should not be set aside on the ground that there was no charge framed against them of any offence under that section or why such other order should not be made as to this Court may seem fit and proper.

It appears that the Petitioners were originally charged under sec. 147, I. P. C., and convicted and sentenced under that section to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four months. On appeal, the Appellate Court held that there was no case under sec. 147, I. P. C., and that there was a case against the accused under sec. 323, I. P. C., for having caused hurt. The learned Sessions Judge, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence under sec. 147, I. P. C., convicted the Petitioners of the offence of committing hurt and inflicted a fine of Rs. 50 on each. They moved this Court and obtained the present rule. The Magistrate in his explanation says that most likely the Petitioners relied on sec. 238 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but their case really falls under sec. 237 of the Code. Sec. 237 has to be read with sec. 236. If the facts of the case do not fall under sec. 236, sec. 237 has got no application. There is no doubt that the offence committed, as found by the lower Appellate Court, was an offence of causing hurt. But the accused were not prepared to give any defence against the charge of hurt. There was no charge framed against them for an offence of causing hurt. They had therefore no opportunity to defend themselves on this charge.

In making this Rule absolute, we may refer to the case of Yakub Ali v. Lethu Thakur (1), which is on all fours with the present case. The Rule is therefore made absolute. The fine, if paid, must be refunded.

Rule made absolute.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

REF. No. 133 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.

1914,
16, July.

SUBANS SINGH, Complainant,
v.
MOHABIR PROSHAD SINGH and others, Accused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 250—Compensation, order for payment of, by Complainant—Opportunity to show cause.

(1) I. L. R. 29 Cal. 288 (1902).

SUBANS SINGH v. MOHABIR PROSHAD SINGH.

The Magistrate after acquitting the accused made the following order—" Accused acquitted, Complainant to pay compensation to each of the accused under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., and show cause why he should not pay. Complainant is absent. His brother verbally shows cause which is insufficient; order made absolute."

Held—That the Complainant was in fact given no opportunity of showing cause and the order should be set aside.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C., dated the 6th June 1914, from F. Roe, Esq., Sessions Judge of Patna, recommending that the order of A. R. Toplis, Esq., Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barh, dated the 25th April 1914, directing the Petitioner to pay Rs. 50 to each of the Opposite Party under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., be set aside and the case remanded to the Sub-Divisional Officer of Barh for an opportunity to be given to the Petitioner to show cause against the order made for the reasons set forth in the Letter of Reference.

The facts will appear from the Letter of Reference, the material portion of which is set out below :—

"The Petitioner instituted a criminal proceeding under sec. 379 or 147 against a number of raiyats, 24 in all, upon an allegation that they had looted crops from a khalihan in the possession of Petitioner. After a full trial the Sub-Divisional Officer of Barh acquitted and discharged all accused and came to a definite finding of fact that the case was intentionally and deliberately false. He therefore ordered the Petitioner to show cause why he should not pay Rs. 50 as compensation to each of the accused.

"The judgment was written out of Court and was delivered in open Court on the day succeeding the arguments in the case. The order-sheet of the date on which the judgment was delivered runs as follows :—

* * * *

(Quoted in High Court's judgment.)

"It is clear that no real opportunity has been given to the Petitioner to show cause against this order. It is therefore bad and should be set aside.

"I venture to recommend that the case be remanded to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate for an opportunity to be given to Petitioner to show cause against the order. I venture to think that at the present stage it is premature to consider whether the case having been found deliberately false can be said to be frivolous or vexatious or whether upon the merits the case should have been declared false and order for compensation made or whether the lower Court exercised a wise discretion in giving so large a sum as compensation."

Mr. Bogram and Babu Baidyanath Narain Sinha for the Complainant.

Babus Monmatha Nath Mukherjee and Siva Nandan Ray for the Accused.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference made by the Sessions Judge of Patna recommending that an order under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barh should be set aside on the ground that the Complainant was not given an opportunity of showing cause against the said order.

It appears that the Complainant instituted a case against 24 accused. The case was tried before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barh and resulted in the acquittal of the accused. Thereupon the Magistrate made the following order as appears from the order-sheet: "Judgment delivered. Accused acquitted.

SUBANS SINGH v. MOHABIR PROSHAD SINGH.

Enter false, secs. 147 and 379, I. P. C. Complainant to pay Rs. 50 compensation to each of the accused under sec. 250, Cr. P. C., and show cause why he should not pay. Subans Singh is absent. His brother verbally shows cause which is insufficient. Order made absolute." On this we think that the Complainant was in fact given no opportunity of showing cause, and we therefore set aside the order as recommended by the Sessions Judge of Patna.

We do not consider it necessary, as prayed for by the other side, to send the case back in order that the Complainant may be now given an opportunity to show cause.

Order set aside.

[CRIMINAL REFERENCE.]

REF. NO. 19 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J.
TEUNON, J.
1914,
21, July.

THE EMPEROR
v.
DALU SARDAR, Accused.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), secs. 300, 325—Murder—Grievous hurt—Hanging a human body believing the person to be dead and thereby causing death, if murder—Intention to kill.

The accused assaulted his wife and gave her kicks, blows and slaps. The kicks were given below the navel. The woman fell down and became unconscious. In order to create an appearance that the woman had committed suicide, the accused took up the unconscious body of his wife, thinking it to be a dead body and hung it by a rope. The post-mortem examination showed that death was due to hanging.

Held—That the accused could not have intended to kill his wife, if he thought that she was already dead, and he could not be convicted of murder. The offence that the accused committed was an offence under sec. 325, I. P. C., for having given her kicks blows and slaps before she fell down.

This was a Reference by J. Cornes, Esq., Sessions Judge of Rajshahi, dated the 17th of June 1914, disagreeing with the verdict of the majority of the jury who found the accused not guilty of the charge framed against him under sec. 302, I. P. C.

The accused was on trial on a charge of murder. The verdict of the majority of the jury (4) was in favour of his acquittal: one thought that he should be convicted.

The accused was charged with having committed murder of his wife Sandeshi.

The prosecution case was as follows:—

The accused Dalu was assaulting his wife Sandeshi outside his house and pushed her inside and Sandeshi cried from there that she was being killed. This was seen by Tota Bibi, a prosecution witness, who cried aloud, and Neki and Musa, two other prosecution witnesses, came. Musa forced his way in, but was driven out by Dalu. Neki called Naibulla, another prosecution witness, who came and drove Dalu out. Two other persons, Mirjan and Rishi, came and found Sandeshi insensible and tried to revive her without effect. Dalu drove them out and closed the door.

Information was given to Headman Sarafat, who sent for the Panchayat. Sarafat found Dalu going from his house and Dalu admitted killing his wife to him. Dalu ran to his house and bolted himself in. Sarafat followed and through the door saw Sandeshi hanging from a beam. Accused was got out and arrested.

The Sub-Inspector came and cut the body down and sent it for post-mortem examination. Accused was sent up and made a qualified confession.

THE EMPEROR v. DALU SARDAR.

Two witnesses spoke to actually seeing Dalu throttling Sandeshi. The evidence of Sarafat and the Sub-Inspector also pointed to death either by strangulation or hanging. The Assistant Surgeon after post-mortem gave as his deliberate opinion that death was due to hanging and gave his reasons therefor, though he admitted also that it might be due to strangulation if the streaks on the body were of blood and not of saliva.

Babu Bibhusan Dutt for the Accused.

Mr. D. N. Sarkar for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a reference made by the Sessions Judge of Rajshahi under sec. 307, Cr. P. C. The accused was tried by jury on a charge under sec. 302, I. P. C., of the murder of his own wife on the 29th of April 1914. Out of the 5 jurors, four were of opinion that the accused was not guilty and one of them was of opinion that the accused was guilty. The learned Sessions Judge, not finding himself in a position to accept the verdict of the majority of the jury and thinking that for the ends of justice the matter should be referred to this Court, has done so under sec. 307, Cr. P. C.

The facts of the case are these : On the date of the occurrence the accused was seen assaulting his wife outside his house and pushing her inside the house. The neighbour witnesses say that they actually heard the woman crying from inside the house that she was being killed. When the people arrived, they wanted to rescue the woman and at last the husband was separated from the wife. They found the wife in an unconscious state. They tried to give her water, but the woman could not drink. The people thought that she was dead. Then it appears that the accused again went inside the house, turned out one or two persons who were inside the house and shut the door. Before this the woman was lying on the ground, but after the accused re-entered the house, people discovered that this woman was hanging by the neck by a piece of string tied to the roof of the house. On this the accused was sent up for trial.

It appears that soon after the occurrence the accused admitted to one Sharafat, a witness for the prosecution, that he had killed his wife, because she was carrying on an intrigue with one Madari. It also appears that the accused made a statement before a Judicial officer some days later. Therein also he made a similar statement.

The question now is what offence he has committed.

But before we come to answer that question, it is necessary to ascertain from the medical evidence the probable cause of the death of this woman. The medical evidence shows that she most probably died of hanging. There can be no doubt that her body was suspended by a rope by the husband, the present accused. The question is whether he at the time intended to kill her. The people thought her dead when she was slapped and kicked in the region of abdomen and, no doubt, the accused also thought that she was dead. When for the second time he entered into the house, most likely in order to create an appearance that the woman had committed suicide he took up the unconscious body of his wife, thinking it to be a dead body, and hung it up by a rope. Therefore he could not have intended to kill her, if he thought

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 7, 1914. [No. 43.

Contents.

NOTES.

REPORTS (See Index).

High Court Notices.

ORIGINAL SIDE.

The High Court, Original Side, will be closed for the Annual Vacation (including Mahalaya, Durga, Lakshmi and Kali Pujas, Bhratriditia, Ed-duz-zoha and Jagadhatri Puja) on and from Friday, the 4th September, to Saturday, the 14th November, 1914, both days inclusive, and also on Monday, the 16th November, 1914, on account of Kartik Puja, and will resume its sittings on Tuesday, the 17th November, 1914.

The offices of the Court, Original Side, will be closed for general business for the Annual Vacation on and from Saturday, the 19th September, to Wednesday, the 11th November, 1914, both days inclusive.

One Judge will remain in town for urgent business and arrangements will be made for the attendance of such superior and subordinate officers as may be required for the disposal of urgent business.

By order,

HIGH COURT, O. S.; The 26th August 1914. MAURICE REMFRY, Offg. Registrar.

The under-mentioned principal officers will be on duty :—

The Master will hear urgent Chamber applications on the following specified days in September, viz. —Friday the 4th, Monday the 7th, Wednesday the 9th, Friday the 11th, Monday the 14th, and Wednesday the 16th, after which application for special appointments for the hearing of urgent Chamber applications should be made as will be notified hereafter.

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Fletcher will hear applications of a specially urgent nature, other than Chamber applications, on Tuesday the 8th September and Monday the 15th September, and thereafter will sit only by appointment, applications for which should be made in writing to the officers on duty :—

From 4th to 8th September—
Mr. S. C. MITTER (Bar-at-Law),
8, Harish Chunder Mookerjee Road, Bhowanipur.

From 9th to 13th September—
Mr S. N. ROY (Bar-at-Law),
44, Hari Ghose Street, Calcutta.

From 14th to 18th September—
Mr. C. C. DASS,
13, Duff Street, Calcutta.

From 19th September to the end of vacation —
Mr. G. RYPER,
105, Park Street, Calcutta.

By order,

HIGH COURT, O. S; The 31st August 1914. MAURICE REMFRY, Offg. Registrar.

APPELLATE SIDE.

It is hereby notified that the High Court, Appellate Side, will be closed for the Annual Vacation from Friday, the 4th September, to Saturday, the 14th November, 1914, both days inclusive.

Notice as to the days on which the Vacation Judges will sit for the hearing of motions and cases in which vakils are engaged and as to the distribution of business, will be given from time to time.

The Vacation Judges will not sit during the following Court and Gazetted (Executive) holidays, viz :—

Gazetted holiday on account of Mahalaya.	Saturday, the 19th September, 1914.
Gazetted holiday on account of Durga and Lakshmi Pujas.	Wednesday, the 23rd September to Sunday, the 4th October, 1914.
Gazetted holiday on account of Kali Puja.	Sunday and Monday, the 18th and 19th October, 1914.
Court holiday on account of Bhratriditia.	Wednesday, the 21st October, 1914.
Gazetted holiday on account of Jagadhatri Puja.	Tuesday and Wednesday, the 27th & 28th October, 1914.
Court holiday on account of Ed-uz-zoha.	Friday & Saturday, the 30th and 31st October, 1914.

The office of the Appellate Side will be closed for the Vacation from Saturday, the 19th September to Wednesday, the 21st October 1914, both days inclusive.

Such Translators, Examiners, Copyists and Assistants of the Record Department as may be required, will attend throughout the Vacation, except on the Court's sanctioned holidays and the Gazetted holidays above specified.

HIGH COURT, APPELLATE SIDE: The 31st August, 1914. H. M. VEITCH, Offg. Registrar.

Collection of debts by alien enemy at the time of war.

Strictly speaking according to English practice an alien enemy subject or persons bearing alien enemy character are entitled to make contracts or collect money only for the purposes of subsistence and the necessaries for life. If more money is put into their hands, it would be putting a burden on the Government to watch its destination or appropriation. Therefore we think that the order that has been recently made by the Bombay High Court at the instance of the Advocate-General of Bombay is the proper order to make. All collections made by alien enemies during the war should be deposited with the Government-recognised Banks and when they wish to draw out any money they should apply to and satisfy the High Court as to the absolute necessity and lawful purposes for its withdrawal and appropriation.

The protection of merchant shipping under neutral flag.

The United States has declared from the very outset that she will allow the ships of the belligerent Powers not only to fly American flag for carrying merchandise but also to enter such ships in American registry. It should be stated here that transfer of a ship by one belligerent to any neutral Power by such means in view or after the declaration of war would not ordinarily be recognised by other belligerents. But in this case since similar privileges have been conceded to all the belligerents it is expected that none would contest the concession so granted by the United States. By observing impartiality in this respect the United States has in no way departed from the obligations of a neutral Power. But this concession does not preclude any of the belligerent Powers from searching such vessels and confiscating enemy cargo. As Great Britain is not only the largest ship-owning country but has also the largest navy in the world, the concession granted by the United States will surely accrue more to the benefit of Great Britain than of Germany.

Declaration of London, acceptance by Great Britain.

The acceptance of the Declaration of London by Great Britain and France will also ensure much greater degree of safety to the merchant shipping in the present war. Vessels flying neutral flags will be protected from capture and general merchandise other than contrabands of war may be transported in such vessels with greater safety. Of course any belligerent will be entitled to question the bonâ fides of such flags. Enemy goods in such vessels will also retain their enemy character and may be captured and confiscated by any of the belligerents. But in the high seas such scrutiny in respect of the cargoes sailing under neutral flag must presuppose the existence of a belligerent navy all over the world. It has been announced that the German navy has singularly failed to interfere with the other belligerents' shipping. The present dearth of shipping in India must not be attributed to any apprehended interference by the German navy with British shipping in the East but is chiefly due to the fact that even commerce at the time of war must give way to military necessity. Directly the requirements of military transport are adequately met, we are sure that merchant shipping will be gradually restored. The acceptance of the Declaration of London by Great Britain and France who are the paramount naval powers in the world ensures freedom of commercial intercourse with Italy, America, Spain, Portugal, Holland, Norway, Sweden and other neutral countries both in the Old and the New World.

International Law and International Code of Honour.

German jurists have contrary to the view of the jurists of the civilized world maintained that all rules of International Law must yield to military necessity. We no doubt admit that the rules of public International Law have not the same binding force as those of Municipal Law. We are further prepared to concede that it has no more binding force amongst nations than perhaps a Code of Honour has amongst gentlemen. We may state here that the Code of Honour that was evolved in ancient India and which used to be observed almost to the letter even in the deadliest and bitterest of wars, as we find from our ancient literature and history, will require the modern world to be reborn and its civilization retraced to appreciate and act up to its standard. What however has staggered the people of this country at the present moment is how Germany which in the region of philosopy and science has far surpassed the other nations of the world could set at naught the ordinary dictates of humanity and fair-play not to speak of culture and civilization. Maltreatment of non-combatants, wreckless damage of property, incendiarism are repugnant to both modern and ancient ideas of civilized warfare.

Devastation by an invading army.

According to the accepted doctrines of public International Law universities and buildings devoted to religion, art, science and charity, historic monuments as also hospitals are inviolable so long as they are not used for military purposes. But during the sack of Pekin, the famous library and other historic relics of our time-honoured neighbours were looted by the Germans and much valuable literary treasure was destroyed. In the eye of the so-called Western civilization any excesses are permissible in the East. But at Louvain, the university town in Belgium, the Prussian army is said to have burnt the library and the university town to wreak their vengeance on Belgians for defending their hearth and home. Women and children are also said to have been packed into railway trains and sent to an unknown destination. This seems to show that intellectual advancement in national life does not necessarily imply a corresponding moral advancement. The moral sense of the German people, or at any rate of the Prussian executive, seems to have gone down considerably since the Franco-Prussian war of 1870.

Breach of Belgian neutrality, past and present conduct of Prussians.

The accepted moral Code of Honour amongst the first class Powers in Europe has hitherto-fore regarded the neutrality and independence of the smaller States, like Belgium, as inviolable. After the phenomenal success of Prussian arms at Sedan on the 1st of September 1810 the question of the violation of the neutrality of Belgium arose between France and Germany in a very different way. The Prussians had to pay a heavy toll in killed and wounded at the battle of Sedan, and they proposed to the French that for the sake of humanity they may be allowed to remove the sick and wounded through Belgium. But France objected on the ground that it would amount to a violation of the neutrality of Belgium. For, the sick and wounded soldiers are always a burden on the army and to allow the Prussian army to send them back through a neutral country would much more lighten their military burden than if they had to do the same across the French frontier.

Sedan had practically decided the issue of the last Franco-Prussian war and if the Prussian army chose to violate the neutrality of Belgium through considerations of humanity no power on earth could have prevented it from doing so and very likely the act would not have been regarded by jurists and historians as quite reprehensible. But in the days of the present Kaiser's grandfather Germany's Code of Honour was much higher than in the present times. Then even the victorious Prussian army shrank from a technical violation of the neutrality of Belgium. But the Kaiser has not only provoked a war with Europe but from the very start has cast to the winds the Code of Honour that has so long governed civilized warfare. It is not surprising therefore that his army should maltreat non-combatants, wrecklessly damage private property, make bonfire of libraries, art treasures and universities and cause distress and misery amongst helpless women and children. The use of Dumdum bullets, and the dropping of prohibited explosives from air-crafts are also in a line with the other atrocities of the present war.

Review.

THE INDIAN ARMS ACT. By Iqbal Sing, Pleader, Chief Court, Punjab. Printed at the Mercantile Press, Lahore.

This is an annotated edition of the Indian Arms Act with a collection of Government Rules and Orders made under the Act. The text of the Act with notes thereon is followed by six bulky Appendices containing Rules framed by Government (1909), miscellaneous Orders of the Government of India, Rules relating to British soldiers' shooting passes, Rules for the export, import and transport of arms, Tariff duties, etc. Chapter II of Appendix 5 which deals with the relation of the Indian Arms Act with other connected Acts is important, but the general arrangement of matter in the book is such as to bring into prominence the importance due to it. The Notes are not merely collections of head-notes, but in some places are in the form of a commentary, and as a whole the book bears evidence of an earnest effort on the part of the author to collect all relevant and useful information on the subjects dealt with. But some defects are noticeable. Although the sections and the notes thereon are printed in different types the printing is not sufficiently distinctive to catch the eye. The setting out of full texts of long Government Notifications in the body of the commentary on a particular section is not commendable; for such an arrangement cannot but have a misleading effect. The index to the book should have been fuller. The table of contents given in the beginning of the book is defective and there is no table of cases cited in the notes. Although a large amount of matter has been collected in the book, we do not find a full and up-to-date list of persons exempted from the operation of the Arms Act. The book requires much improvement in many respects and we hope that the author will see to it when he brings out the next edition.

Notes of Cases.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before D. CHATTERJEE, J. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 933 OF 1912, SARDHAKAR PODH AND OTHERS, Defendants, Appellants, v. BISESWAR GAONTIA, Plaintiff, Respondent. Heard, 22nd and 23rd, July. Judgment, 5th August 1914.

Central Provinces Tenancy Act, secs. 31, 32, 33—Improvement by tenant—Compensation—Determination without aid of Assessor—Jurisdiction—Irregularity—Waiver.

One Traga who was either a Gaontia or thiccadar of some kind in a village in the Central Provinces gave to the Defendant a lease for all time in respect of some lands which were found to be Bhogra lands of the village, on receipt of a selami of Rs. 300 in 1893. Traga afterwards surrendered the Mauza to the zemindar who while in khas possession made an endorsement on the lease granted by Traga saying that he sanctioned the holding of the Defendant as a raiyat. The zemindar then settled the Mauza with the Plaintiff, the Gaontia. The lease by Traga was not by a registered document and no effect had been given to it in the Courts below. The Defendant, however, claimed compensation for improvements effected by him. There was no dispute in the First Court as to the fact of an improvement having been made. The dispute was as to the cost of the improvement, the Plaintiff putting it at Rs. 120, the Defendant at Rs. 400. The First Court awarded Rs. 300 as compensation. There was an appeal by the Defendant and a cross-appeal by the Plaintiff as to the amount of the compensation. The lower Appellate Court confirmed the decision of the first Court and there was a second appeal by the Defendant and a cross-appeal by the Plaintiff. The second appeal was dismissed.

In the cross-appeal it was contended, firstly, that the Defendant was not a tenant who could under the Central Provinces Tenancy Act effect an improvement and even if it be taken that he made the improvement he could not claim compensation and, secondly, that the Courts below had no jurisdiction to determine the amount of the compensation without the aid of assessors as required by sec. 33 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act and the rules made thereunder.

Held, that the tenant under the circumstances, was entitled to compensation.

Beni Ram v. Kundan Lal (I. L. R. 21 All. 496) referred to.

Sec. 32 of the Central Provinces Tenancy Act required the Court to determine the amount and the Rules directed the Court to associate assessors with it. Hence there was no want of initial jurisdiction in the Court and it was the manner in which that jurisdiction was to be exercised which had been defective in the case; this was a mere irregularity which had been waived.

Babu Satis Chunder Ghose for the Appellants.

Babu Ram Chandra Mozumdar for the Respondent.

A. T. M. Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before HOLMWOOD and CHAPMAN, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 1539 OF 1913. SM. AMINESSA, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. JINNATHALI & ORS., Defendants, Respondents. 29th July 1914.

Under-raiyati holding—Transferability—Custom.

In this case the Plaintiff-Appellant was the raiyat of a plot a land. She gave an under-raiyati lease to Defendant No. 2. Defendant No. 2 sold the lease to Defendant No. 1 Jinnat Ali.

The Plaintiff brought this suit for khas possession. The Defendant No. 2 alleged that the land was still in his possession, that he had not sold the land to Defendant No. 1 but had only made a benami in his favour to avoid creditors and he produced the kobala. Defendant No. 1 supported him and said there was no passing of the consideration money and Defendent No. 2 was in possession and paid rents to the raiyat-landlord.

The Munsif gave the Plaintiff a decree, holding that the sale of the holding was real and so there was an abandonment and the raiyat-landlord was entitled to khas possession and that Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were colluding. The District Judge of Noakhali, however, reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit, holding that in any view of the case the lease was transferable as there was nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act which invalidated the sale; it was transferable by the general law (Transfer of Property Act).

Babu Hit Lal Guha on behalf of Plaintiff-Appellant said that these leases were excepted from the operation of the general law by sec. 117 of the Transfer of Property Act. As there was no provision for such transfer in the Bengal Tenancy Act, they cannot be transferred without a custom to that effect. The onus of proving custom was on the Defendants and that they had failed to do. Referred to I. L. R. 4 Cal. 135 which was on all fours, though the ruling was based on the Rent Law of Bengal (Act X of 1869). The Bengal Tenancy Act could have changed the law but has not. Further the obiter dictum of Maclean, C. J., in 7. C. L. J. 553, supports the view taken in the above ruling. Further, the recent Full Bench ruling (reported in 18 C. W. N. 971) supported the view.

Babu Hem Chandra Sen for the Defendent No 2, Respondent, submitted that there was no real transfer, the whole transaction was a benami one. The Defendant claimed an occupancy right which was transferable and further as he had made ample provision for the due payment of rent there could be no abandonment. Further there was nothing in the Bengal Tenancy Act to make the transfer of an under-raiyati holding void or voidable.

Cites in support 1 C. W. N. 162.

Held, that an under-raiyati lease is not transferable without the consent of the landlord.

I. L. R. 4 Cal. 135, 7 C. L. J. 553 followed. 1 C. W. N. 162 distinguished.

H. L. G. Appeal decreed with costs.

THE EMPEROR v. DALU SARDAR.

that the woman was already dead. We have therefore to fall back on what happened at the earlier stage of the occurrence when the accused gave the deceased kicks, blows and slaps. No doubt the kicks were given below the navel, a place where it is most especially dangerous to kick a woman. She fell down and became unconscious. The offence, therefore, that the accused committed was an offence under sec. 325, I. P. C. Under the circumstances of the case we are of opinion that he cannot be convicted of murder, but of an offence under sec. 325, I. P. C., only. We, therefore, convict him under that section, and sentence him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for four years.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD DUNEDIN. LORD ATKINSON. LORD SUMNER. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. 1914, Heard, 18, 19 and 23, June. Judgment, 20, July.	MAHARAJA SURJA KANTA ACHARJYA BAHADUR, since deceased (now represented by Maharajkumar Sashi Kanta Acharjya), Appellant, v. SARAT CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURI, Respondent.

*Revenue Sale Law (Act XI of 1859)—Sale of entire estate—Persons holding portions of estate for over 12 years adversely to the then owners, if may maintain possession against purchaser—Limitation—*Thak survey—Dispute of owners of neighbouring mahals as to boundary—Determination by Survey authorities—Decisions, value of, as evidence, though not as estoppel—Acquiescence—Privy Council—Practice—Concurrent findings on issue of fact—Reg. II of 1819, resumption of alleged lakheraj and settlement with person other than zemindar—Dispute between grantee and zemindar as to whether specified plots zemindari or lakheraj – Onus.

On the failure of an owner to pay the Government assessment, his estate or interest in the land is forfeited or rather determined and the purchaser at a Revenue sale purchases not the interest of the defaulting owner but that of the Crown, subject to the payment of the Government assessment, and as against a person who claims title to any portion of the estate by adverse possession, the time limited by the Limitation Act commences to run from the date of the sale.

When there are concurrent findings of the Courts below on an issue of fact, the Judicial Committee accepts these findings unless it is established that the judgments of the Courts below are clearly wrong.

ALLEN v. QUEBEC WAREHOUSE COMPANY (1).

Where the question whether certain lands were included within a mahal was in 1849, in the course of a Thak survey, determined by the Survey authorities in a proceeding in which opportunity had been given to all parties interested of making their claims, raising their objections and producing their evidence :

Held—That though the parties were not estopped by the decisions arrived at, these were obviously of high authority and when acquiesced in by all the parties interested for a length of time and made the basis of important transactions should not be disturbed unless upon the clearest proof that they were erroneous.

Where certain lands within a permanently settled mahal were resumed under Reg. II of 1819 and settled along with other Government Khas Mahal lands with a person other than the zemindar, the onus of proving that lands within the ambit of the zemindari were part of such resumed land as against the zemindar did not lie on the person who claimed it as such in the sense that on his failure to discharge it, the lands must be taken to remain and be vested in the zemindar.

(1) 12 A. C. 101 (1886).

This was an Appeal from a Judgment of the Calcutta High Court (Stephen & Holmwood, JJ.), dated the 22nd May 1908. The action was brought by the Respondent as auction-purchaser at a revenue sale to recover possession of lands from the Appellant. The facts of the case sufficiently appear from their Lordships' Judgment. The Subordinate Judge of Rajshahi had allowed the Plaintiff's claim, and his decree was affirmed on appeal.

The learned Judges of the High Court concluded their Judgment in the following words :—

"We have already noticed the objections that were raised to the 1858 settlement on these very same grounds of wrongful inclusion of lands of the surrounding villages of the Sershabad estate, and it only remains to note that the final order of settlement to be found on page 486A lays down the boundaries as those villages up to the Panchatara tree of Shahbazpur (showing that that tree was a good deal north of the present Dhobra tree) together with the river Ganges. This order was passed on the spot in presence of the representatives of all parties, and is stated to be according to the Thak and Survey maps with which Enayetulla's map was compared. We have thus a clear history of the area in dispute down to the time of the permanent settlement, and there can be no doubt that the survey line is the boundary upon which the settlement of 1859 was made and that no one on behalf of the Defendants had any possession within that line until after the mahal had been made over to the minor in permanent settlement, and that there is no reason to suppose that the survey boundaries included any land not affected by the resumption proceedings in 1834.

"The whole of the arguments, therefore, based on subsequent possession, assumed land-marks, and hypothetical relaying of the tanabandis, falls to the ground, and we are left with the survey line as the sole basis of settlem nts.

"The fifth point is that a right to avoid incumbrances applies only to land settled in the permanent settlement of 1793 and not to land settled as part of a Government mahal. There seems to be a conclusive answer to this contention in the contents of the Settlement Rubokari of 1859, which show that that settlement was the first permanent settlement of the estate under the Regulation of 1793 and not a settlement of a Khas Mahal. The land escaped settlement originally, because an unjustifiable claim to have it treated as debottar was set up. This was adjudicated on, as we have already said, in the resumption proceedings in 1834, and the settlement of 1838 was a temporary one with an ijaradar, because the proprietor refused to take a permanent settlement.

"The sixth point is that the dispossession of the Plaintiff by the Defendant does not create an incumbrance which the Plaintiff as the purchaser at a land revenue sale is entitled to set aside under sec. 37 of Act XI of 1859; and, that, consequently, he is not entitled to the period of 12 years from the date when the sale became final, provided by Art. 121 of the Limitation Act, for the purpose of bringing his suit. In answer to this, we need only say that we are bound by a long series of decisions in this Court, where the law is laid down to the opposite effect. Of these we need only mention Karmi Khan v. Brojo Nath Das (2), and Nuffar Chandra Pal Chowdhuri v. Rajendra Lal Goswami (3).

MAHARAJA SURJA KANTA ACHARJYA BAHADUR v. SARAT CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURI.

"The seventh point is that accepting the law laid down by this Court, there is, in fact, still no incumbrance, and that the Plaintiff is, therefore, unable to claim the protection of Art. 121. For, the Plaintiff and his predecessors as owners of a permanently settled estate never had possession of the land, which was reduced into the possession of the Defendant as soon as it became capable of being possessed; they were never, therefore, dispossessed, and without dispossession there is no incumbrance.

"But since, as we have already found, the Defendants never commenced to take any possession till after 1859, when, as we have shown, they could acquire no right by accretion, and as the reformations that took place were on the Plaintiff's estate, the Defendants were mere trespassers admitted by the laches of the Plaintiff's predecessors, and their possession is an incumbrance liable to be set aside by the Plaintiff under sec. 30 of Act XI of 1859.

"Finding, therefore, as we do, that the Appellant fails in all his contentions, this Appeal is dismissed with costs."

Hence this Appeal.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dube, for the Appellant, submitted that the lands in dispute did not form any portion of the mahal purchased by the Respondent. Permanent settlement of the Pargana Serahabad was made with the Appellant's predecessor-in-title. Lands situate in 8 villages in that pargana were resumed under the provisions of Reg. 2 of 1819, by a decree of Court in 1834 and 1836. Neither the Government nor the Respondent was entitled to hold an area of land larger than what was resumed in execution of that resumption decree. The terms of the decree fixed the area as 7,889 odd bighas and the execution proceedings specified the boundaries. The area of land so resumed was the village of Taraf Shyampur Paharpur. The burden of proving that the lands in dispute formed a portion of the area resumed, rested upon the Respondent and he had failed to discharge it. The rights of the parties ought to be determined according to the terms of the resumption decree. The Survey map subsequent thereto, especially in 1848, could not possibly affect those rights. The Survey officer is not a Judicial officer and a Survey map is no evidence of title, it is only evidence of possession: Nobo Coomar Dass v. Gobind Chunder Roy (4). By means of the survey neither the Government nor the lessees from the Government could extend their title to more land than what was resumed under the decree. The permanent settlement of 1859, assuming that it was made on the basis of the Survey map of 1848, could not lawfully confer upon the lessee a better title than the Government had therein. There was no proof that any portion of the lands settled in 1859 was the bed of a navigable river and there was nothing to show that the Government settled the river-bed. What they really settled was the area of the land resumed. It was impossible that the area of the land resumed in 1836, which was 7,889, could amount to 20,254 bighas now claimed by the Respondent. There was no question of concurrent finding of fact. The real point to determine on the appeal was the extent and the boundaries of the area resumed in 1836. The decisions in the boundary disputes that took place between the parties were not res judicata and did not estop the Appellant from raising the question of the rights of the parties.

(2) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 244 (1894).
(3) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 167 (1897).

(4) 9 C. L. R. 305, 307 (1881).

Sir Erle Richards, K. C., and Mr. A. M. Dunne for the Respondent submitted that the case was concluded by concurrent findings of the Courts below. The findings were that the boundaries of the resumed land were definitely ascertained and fixed in 1848 when the Survey map was prepared, and that the permanent settlement of 1859 was made on the basis of that Survey map of 1848. The resumption decree specified the quantity of the area resumed only approximately. The correct extent and boundaries were fixed in 1848 in Survey proceedings, to which the Appellants were parties, and all parties had ever since acted upon the Survey map of 1848. The Appellant was estopped from denying the accuracy of the Survey map.

The Courts below have held that there was nothing to show that the lands in dispute were not included in the area resumed in 1836. Further, even if the lands in dispute were not included in the area resumed, the bed of a public navigable river vested in the Crown. The Ganges was a public navigable river and it ought not to be presumed that the river-bed was included in the lands permanently settled with the Appellant's predecessor in 1793. The presumption was that the Crown was the owner of the bed in 1859, and the burden of proving the contrary lay upon the Appellant: Jagadindra Nath Roy v. The Secretary of State for India in Council (5). There was evidence to show that in 1859 the river-bed was also settled as such and that would explain the increase in the area of the land.

Mr. L. DeGruyther replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD ATKINSON.—This is an Appeal from the Judgment and Decree, dated the 22nd May 1908, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal affirming a judgment and decree of the 27th March 1905 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Rajshahi.

The action out of which the appeal arises was brought by the Respondent as purchaser at a sale held under Act XI of 1859 in consequence of the non-payment by the owner of the Government assessment of the Khas Mahal Shyampur Paharpur situate within the Pargana Sershabad and No. 218 on the Tauzi of the Maldah Collectorate, to recover possession of about 2,720 bighas of the Mauza Nij Shampur alleged to form portion of the said Khas Mahal, the possession of which was withheld by the Appellant, and for damages, for mesne profits and further relief.

This sale was held on the 14th of January 1891 and duly confirmed on the 15th of March following.

The Appellant relied upon two defences :—First, that the land, the possession of which was sought to be recovered, styled for convenience the land in dispute, did not form any portion of the mahal so purchased by the Respondent, and, secondly, that even if it did, the

(5) L. R. 30 I. A. 44 at p. 52 : s. c. 7 C. W. N. 193 (1902).

Appellant and those through whom he claimed had held possession of this land adversely to all persons having claims upon it continuously since, if not before, the year 1859 up to the present time, and that the Respondent's claim was therefore barred by the Limitation Act. In anticipation of this second defence the Respondent, in his plaint, alleged that this adverse possession, even if proved, was, under the provisions of Act XI of 1859, only an incumbrance on the mahal purchased, that on sale this latter was vested in him free from all incumbrances, including the incumbrance thus created, and that consequently his right to recover possession was not barred by the Limitation Act.

It was admitted by Mr. DeGruyther, on behalf of the Appellants, that on the failure of an owner to pay the Government assessment, his estate or interest in the land is forfeited, or rather, determined, and that under such a sale as that which took place in this case, what was sold was not the interest of the defaulting owner, but the interest of the Crown, subject to the payment of the Government assessment, and that therefore the time limited by the Limitation Act only commenced to run from the date of the sale in this case, the 14th of January 1891. If this be so, then, as the action was instituted on the 23rd of December 1902, the statutory period of 12 years had not elapsed before the latter date, and the claim of the Respondent to recover was unaffected. This defence may be accordingly put aside. There remains the part-and-parcel question.

In order to appreciate the respective contentions of the parties litigant, and the rulings of the Courts below upon this question, it is necessary to refer shortly to the history of those properties of which the land in dispute is alleged to have formed part.

It was not, their Lordships think, disputed that at the time of the decennial settlement of Bengal one Chandra Narayan Roy was the zemindar of the Pargana Sershabad, and that the permanent settlement of 1793 was made with him in respect of that pargana. Neither was it disputed that at the time of this settlement Chandra Narayan Roy improperly returned as debottar lands, i.e., lands devoted to religious purposes, and therefore unassessable to Government revenue, portions of eight mauzas or villages forming portion of the pargana Sershabad. The Crown being misled by this untrue statement subsequently instituted proceedings, under Reg. 2 of 1819 dealing with such matters, to depirve, by way of resumption, Chandra Narayan Roy and his successor of the land so untruly described. The Crown represented by the Indian Government obtained a decree for resumption of this latter land on the 24th of December 1834, which was on appeal confirmed by the Special Commissioner on the 18th of June 1836. Possession of the misdescribed land having been thus obtained by the Government, they unified it and constituted it a Khas Mahal.

The main contention of the Appellant has been that as Chandra Narayan Roy was the owner under the permanent settlement of the entire pargana of which the land so resumed formed part, the burden of proving that the land in dispute formed portion of the land so resumed rested upon the Respondent, and that in so far as he failed to discharge that burden, the lands in dispute must be taken to remain and be vested in the Appellant, the successor-in-title to Chandra Narayan Roy, as his property. This contention, though in the main in their Lordships' view, sustainable enough, is in one respect mistaken, namely, this that it was competent for the Crown in the year 1859, when making the settlement, under which the Respondent in effect claims to have added to the resumed land other land then belonging to it and made a grant of both combined. Such difficulty as the case presents arises altogether from one's inability to identify by metes and bounds the land actually resumed, and it is to this point the Appellant's Counsel have directed their lengthy and ingenious arguments.

Three attempts have been made to fix the boundaries of this land and to definitely ascertain its position and extent, in 1838, in 1840 and in 1848, respectively. Both the Courts below have found that the last of the three, namely, that made in 1848, was so successful that the accuracy of the result then arrived at was not before them successfully impeached. It is embodied in the map of the Survey of the village of Shyampur Paharpur surveyed in April 1848, a copy of which numbered Map 2 was given in evidence. The conclusions of the Courts below on this point being concurrent findings on an issue of fact, the well established rule of this Board in such cases, as stated by Lord Herschell in Allen v. Quebec Warehouse Company (1), is this :—"Their Lordships do not consider that the question they have to determine is what conclusion they would have arrived at if the matter had for the first time come before them, but whether it has been established that the judgments of the Courts below were clearly wrong." It is vital to the Appellant's case that this should be shown on his behalf for this reason, that after the decree for resumption of the misdescribed debottar lands had been enforced, and the Government assessment upon them fixed, Chandra Narayan Roy declined to take grant of them offered to him by way of settlement, and thereupon a lease or ijara settlement, of them was made to one Shib Chandra Chatterji for a term of 20 years from the 1st of May 1838. On the expiration of this term, after some delay, a grant by way of final settlement of this Khas Mahal was, on the 27th of September 1859, made to Jogendra Narayan Roy, a younger son of Chandra Narayan Roy. By successive transfers made from time to time this mahal ultimately became vested in Udoy Chanda Bothra, the defaulting owner, upon whose failure to pay the Government revenue, it was, as already mentioned, sold to the Respondent on the 14th of January 1891.

Now the Subordinate Judge has found (p. 383) that the permanent settlement of this mahal (Tauzi No. 218) in September 1859 "was undoubtedly made upon the Thak and Revenue Survey of 1847, 1848." And the High Court have found as a fact (p. 410), that "the settlement of 1859 was made on the basis of the Survey map whether that map was right or wrong, and whether it differed from the tanabandi of 1840 and the settlement of 1838 or not. That it was wrong, there is not a particle of evidence to show. It was always acted upon, and must be taken to be the best evidence of what was settled in 1859.

It was contended before their Lordships, as before the Courts below, that on a comparison of this Survey map of

(1) 12 A. C., 101 (1886).

1848, with the proceedings in the Court of the Collector of Maldah on the 18th of June 1838, before Mr. Edward Latour, "in the matter of the settlement of Khas Mahal Taraf Shyampur Paharpur decreed under Reg. 2, 1819," and the Rubokari dated the 11th March 1840 of Mr. William Bell [Deputy Collector of the district of Maldah (p. 274, R.)] and with the map prepared by him entitled simanabandi map prepared by him, it would be found that the area of the land alleged to have been resumed according to the Revenue Survey was largely in excess of the 20,254 bighas which in the proceedings before Mr. Latour they are found to measure, that the survey was consequently plainly inaccurate, and the findings of both the Courts below as to its being unimpeachable were, therefore, clearly wrong. This contention is dealt with in the Courts below, and especially by the High Court in their judgment at pp. 410 and 411. The so called map prepared by Mr. Bell is in truth no map at all. It is a picture containing lineal measurements, made in different directions, estimated in rasis, from a peg identified as one of those placed by Mr. Latour. No superficial areas were measured or the contents ascertained. In the order made by Mr. Bell on the 11th of March 1840 it is recited, amongst other things, that the boundaries of the Khas Mahal were taken by Mr. Latour by fixing pegs in certain places, and measuring from these pegs in certain directions, but that several of these pegs had been swept away, that at the time of Mr. Latour's settlement the River Bhagirathi flowed below and to the west of a certain palm tree treated by Latour as a landmark for the purpose of his measurements, namely the Panchatara palm tree at Dhoka, that there was Majh Dearah to the west of this river, and to the west again of that Majh Dearah the River Ganges flowed, that all the lands of this Majh Dearah were diluviated, that the two rivers became united, and the former bed of the latter river became Dearah. The physical features of the Khas Mahal thus became altogether changed. In addition, the question of this alleged excess in the survey was elaborately dealt with in the proceedings instituted in the Court of the Thakbast Deputy Collector of the districts of Bhagalpur and Maldah in reference to disputes arising between the owners of the neighbouring Mauza of Sherpur Bhandar, and Ram Chandra Roy and others, as owners of this Mauza Shyampur Paharpur touching the boundaries between these mauzas. In the order made by the Deputy Collector on the 11th May 1848, the proceedings before Messrs. Latour and Bell, respectively, are cited at length, the alleged excess is dealt with, and it is ordered that the hadbast of the whole of this property in dispute should be made within the circuit of Shyampur Paharpur, that a parwana should be written to Syed Ata Hossein Peshkar, directing him to make the hadbast thereof, and that a copy of the proceedings shall be forwarded to the Superintendent of Thakbast for final orders with respect to the excess lands. In pursuance of this order the case came before the Superintendent of Surveys for re-trial, and by his order, dated the 6th of March 1849, reciting again at length the proceedings before Messrs. Latour and Bell, and stating the cause to which this excess was due, it was ordered that the Appellant's objections should be disallowed, and that the lands which the Deputy Collector considered to be excess lands should be held to be intrinsically the land of Shyampur Paharpur Government Khas Mahal belonging to Chandra Chatterji, the Respondent in that case, and that the Thak prepared by the said officer should be maintained and confirmed. These last proceedings, like those preceding them, are in truth determinations by public officials of the matters in dispute, all the parties interested being given the opportunity of making their claims, raising their objections, and producing their evidence. The parties to them are, no doubt, not estopped by the decisions arrived at, as they would be in regular proceedings in Courts of law, but these determinations are obviously of high authority, and when acquiesced in by all the parties interested for a length of time, and made the basis of important transactions, should not be disturbed unless upon the clearest proof that they are erroneous. Their Lordships have not found that the comparison of Bell's map with the Survey map is sufficient to lead them to the conclusion that the latter is, save possibly in one respect, erroneous, nor have they discovered anything in any of the proceedings subsequent to the year 1848 to lead them to think so. The bed of the Ganges is apparently included in the mahal according to the Survey map, but this does not form part of the lands in dispute, and if it belonged to the Crown, as it is contended it did, it would be vested in the purchaser by the settlement of the 27th of September 1859. The finding of both Courts that the survey formed the basis of the settlement has not been impeached and their Lordships, on full consideration of all the evidence, find themselves unable to come to the conclusion that the other concurrent finding of fact, namely, that the Survey map is accurate, was clearly wrong. They are, therefore, of opinion that the judgment and decree appealed from should stand, and that this Appeal should be dismissed with costs, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Solicitors: Messrs. T. L. Wilson & Co. for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Messrs. W. W. Box & Co. for Respondents.

B. D. Appeal dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER
No. 125 OF 1913.

FLETCHER, J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1914,
14, April.

JUGOL KISHORE, Decree-holder, Appellant,
v.
CHINTAMONEY, Judgment-debtor, Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182, cls. (5) and (6)—Step in aid of execution—Accompanying serving peon and identifying the judgment-debtor, if a step in aid of execution—Court deciding ex parte *and without notice to judgment-debtor—Application within time—Decision if binds judgment-debtor—*Ex parte decree.

One of the decree-holders accompanying the serving peon and identifying the judgment-debtor upon whom notice of the application for execution had been taken out for service does not by itself constitute a step taken by the decree-holders in aid of execution within cls. (5) and (6) of Art. 182 of the Limitation Act.

Where an application for execution which was reported by the office of the Executing Court to be time-barred was, without notice to the judgment-debtor, held by the Court to be within time, and registered and later on dismissed for default,

Held—That the decision that the application was not time-barred was not binding on the judgment-debtor.

Jugol Kishore v. Chintamoney.

An ex parte decree is a good decree, but if it is made in the absence of and without notice to the other party, it does not bind him, and does not prevent him from showing what the true facts of the case were.

This was an Appeal against an order of Babu Tarak Nath Dutt, Sub-Judge of Zilla Hooghly, dated the 8th January 1913, reversing an order of Babu Sarada Prosunno Banerjee, Munsif of Amta, dated the 21st June 1912.

The facts of the case will apoear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Krishna Roy for the Appellant.

Babu Jadu Nath Kanjilal for the Respondent.

The Judgment of the Court was as follows:—

Fletcher, J.—This is an Appeal against an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Hooghly dated the 8th January 1913. The sole question raised by the Appellant in this case is whether the application for execution of a certain decree is barred by limitation. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has held that it is barred and the present appeal has been preferred by the decree-holders against that order.

The decree-holders obtained the decree as long ago as the 14th April 1903 in the Court of the Munsif of Gobindpur in the district of Manbhum for Rs. 500. The first application for execution was made as long ago as the 23rd July 1903. That application was dismissed for default on the 5th September 1903.

The next application for execution was dated the 9th July 1906. Notice of that application was ordered to be issued on the 21st July 1906; and according to the Appellant, the notice was actually served on the 27th July 1906, one of the decree-holders identifying the judgment-debtors to the serving peon. It is essential for the Appellants in the present case to show that what took place on the 27th July 1906 comes under either cl. 5 or cl. 6 of Art. 182 of the Indian Limitation Act. How the Appellants can say that the mere fact that one of them went along with the serving peon to identify the judgment-debtors was itself a step in aid of execution, I do not understand. If a person goes along with the serving peon to identify a party, that would not be a step in aid of execution, but is one of the necessary preliminaries to enable the Court to deal with the matter when the party, if served, comes before it. In the present case, the learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the 21st July 1906 when notice was directed to be issued was the proper date from which he should calculate the time from which the period of limitation commenced to run. I think, the learned Judge rightly rejected the 27th July 1906 as being that date on the ground that one of the decree-holders went along with the serving peon to identify the judgment-debtors. That application was also dismissed for default on the 4th August 1906.

Then the third application was made on the 27th July 1909. The office reported on the next day that the application was barred by limitation. The learned Judge, on the 9th August 1909, without any notice to the judgment-debtors, held that the application for execution of the decree was not barred and directed notice to issue. On the same day the application was registered and nothing else having been done, on the 4th September 1909 the application was dismissed for default.

JUGOL KISHORE v. CHINTAMONEY.

Then the present application was made on the 24th April 1911 and the decree was transferred to the Court of the Munsif at Amta, in the district of Hooghly, for execution and the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that the decree became incapable of execution, because no steps in aid of execution had been taken between the 21st July 1906 and the 27th July 1909. It is said that the order of the Court dated the 9th August 1909 holding that the decree was not barred is binding on the judgment debtors until it is set aside. But this is not so. It is quite true that an ex-parte decree passed by a Court is a good decree; but, if the decree is made in the absence of and without notice to the other party, of course that decree does not bind the other party or does not stand in his way of showing what were the true facts of the case and it seems to me that the judgment-debtors not having had any notice of the order of the 9th August 1909 are entitled to show that the decree has become barred by limitation by reason of no steps having been taken between the 21st July 1906 and the 27th July 1909. I think, the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court came to a correct conclusion when he held that this decree was not capable of being executed. That being so, the present Appeal fails and must be dismissed. Having regard to the fact that the judgment-debtors have got rid of the liability under the decree, I think, there ought not to be any order as to the costs of this Appeal.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2740 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1914, Heard, 29 and 30, January. Judgment, 30, January.

AMULYA RATAN SIRCAR, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. TARINI NATH DEY and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Occupancy holding, non-transferable, if may be disposed of by Will—Title by estoppel—Testator or heir-at-law, if estopped—Statute, construction of—Right if may be taken to have been conferred by implication—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), secs. 26, 178 (3) (d).

Except under a local usage a raiyat is not competent to make a testamentary disposition of a non-transferable occupancy holding.

The heir-at-law of the raiyat is not estopped from questioning the validity of the devise.

HARIDAS v. UDOY CHARAN (2) dissented from.

Rights cannot be conferred by mere implication from the language used in a statute. There must be clear and unequivocal enactment.

ARNOLD v. MAYOR OF GRAVESEND (1) followed.

The doctrine of estoppel cannot be applied as between donor and donee in every case.

There is no estoppel in favour of the executor or legatee as against the testator.

There is no estoppel in favour of the executor or the legatee as against the heir-at-law of an occupancy raiyat so as to deprive him of what he is entitled to take by statute.

(1) 2 K. & J. 574, 591: s. c. 110 R. R. 327 (1856).

(2) 12 C. W. N. 1086 : s. c. 8 C. L. J. 261 (1908).

AMULYA RATAN SIRCAR v. TARINI NATH DEY.

This was an Appeal from a decision of J. C. K. Peterson, Esq., District Judge, 24-Parganas, dated the 26th July 1911, reversing that of Babu Khagendra Nath Bose, Munsif, Alipore, dated the 30th September 1910.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Girija Prosunna Roy Choudhuri for the Appellant.

Babu Jyotish Chandra Hazra for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The subject-matter of the litigation which has culminated in this Appeal is one-half share of an occupancy holding which admittedly belonged at one time to Tarapada Chatterjee. The right to this one-half share is claimed, on the one hand, by the transferee from the heir-at-law, who is the Plaintiff Appellant, and, on the other hand by the transferees from the executor, who are the Defendants-Respondents. The occupancy holding, it is not disputed, is not transferable by custom or local usage. In so far as the Plaintiff is concerned, his transfer from the heir-at-law has been recognised by the landlord, and no question can arise as to its validity on that ground. The substantial question in controversy is, whether the testamentary disposition was valid and operative so as to exclude the heir-at law, because if there was a valid testamentary devise, the property passed to the executor, and the heir-at-law consequently took nothing. On behalf of the Defendants-Respondents, it has been contended that the occupancy holding, though not transferable by custom or local usage, may be the subject of a valid testamentary disposition. The Bengal Tenancy Act admittedly does not contain any provision expressly applicable to this subject. But our attention has been drawn to section 26 which regulates the devolution of occupancy right when a raiyat dies intestate, and it has been argued that the legislature has herein, by implication, indicated that a raiyat is competent to make a testamentary disposition of his occupancy right. There is clearly no force in this contention. In the first place, if we were to accept the mode of interpretation of sec. 26 suggested by the Respondents, we would have to contravene the elementary rule of construction that right cannot be conferred by mere implication from the language used in a Statute; there must be a clear and unequivocal enactment [Arnold v. Mayor of Gravesend (1)]. In the second place, full effect would be given to the implication contained in sec. 26, if it were shown that a raiyat is competent to make a testamentary disposition of his right of occupancy in certain events. Now, sec. 178, sub-sec. (3), cl. (d), indicates that in this respect the right of an occupancy raiyat stands on the same footing as his right to transfer his holding. Cl. (d) provides that nothing in any contract made between a landlord and a tenant after the passing of the Act shall take away the right of a raiyat to transfer or bequeath his holding in accordance with local usage. In the case before us, no local usage has been proved and the Respondents are not in a position to support the validity of the bequest as made in accordance with a local usage. The Respondents have consequently been driven to take up a different position. Their contention is that the heir-at-law is estop-

(1) 2 K. & J. 574, 591 : S. C. 110 R. R. 327 (1856).

AMULYA RATAN SIRCAR v. TARINI NATH DEY.

ped from questioning the validity of the devise made by the testator, and in support of this view reliance has been placed upon the judgment of Mr. Justice Doss in the case of Haridas v. Udoy Charan (2). It may be conceded that the view taken by that learned Judge does support the argument for the Respondents. But it is worthy of note that when an appeal was preferred under the Letters Patent against the decision of Mr. Justice Doss, the decree was affirmed on a different ground: Udoy Charan Das v. Haridas Bairagee (3). It is consequently impossible for us to treat the matter as concluded by authority, although the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Doss must be deemed entitled to the highest consideration. On behalf of the Appellant, the correctness of the view taken by Mr. Justice Doss has, however, been controverted; and we have been invited to examine the grounds upon which that opinion is based.

Mr. Justice Doss points out, in the first place, that a transfer of an occupancy holding is not a void transaction that it is binding between the parties, namely, the transferor and the transferee and all persons claiming through them, and that it is voidable only at the option of the landlord or his representative-in-interest. This view is founded on the doctrine of estoppel, which was clearly recognised by Phear, J., when he observed in Bibee Suhodra v. Maxwell Smith (4) that the raiyat "certainly could not himself recover it (the holding) from the stranger to whom he had transferred it for valuable consideration," and by Couch, C. J., when he remarked in Nurendra v Ishan (5), that "the raiyat could not recover possession from the transferee as he would be bound by his act of transfer." To the same effect is the express decision in Bhagirath Changa v. Hafizuddin (6), where Stevens, J., pointed out that when the occupancy raiyat has transferred his holding on the representation that he had a transferable interest therein, he cannot, on principles of equity and good conscience, be permitted to prove against the transferee, who had paid consideration for the transfer, that he had no transferable interest to convey. This is an intelligible principle, recognised so long, and so firmly established that its soundness cannot now be successfully challenged. Mr. Justice Doss then concludes that if this is the character of the transaction, namely, the character of a voidable transfer, "it seems to follow that the heir of an occupancy raiyat ought to be held bound by a transfer of the holding made by a will." The learned Judge then proceeds to state the reasons for this inference, namely, that if the heir is bound by a transfer for valuable consideration or by a gift, there does not seem to be any reason why he ought not to be held bound by a transfer made by a Will. Before we test this reasoning, it is necessary to observe that the broad proposition that the heir of an occupancy raiyat is bound by a gift made by the raiyat himself may, when occasion arises, require examination. Cases are, no doubt, conceivable where the donee may, by the acceptance of the gift, have altered his position and may in such circumstances be entitled to rely upon the doctrine of estoppel

(2) 12 C. W. N. 1086: s. c. 8 C. L. J. 261 (1908).

(3) 10 C. L. J. 603 (1909).

(4) 20 W. R. 139 (1873).

(5) 13 B. L. R. 274 (2:5): 22 W. R. 22 (26) (1874).

(6) 4 C. W. N. 679 (1900).

AMULYA RATAN SIRCAR v. TARINI NATH DEY.

in support of his title. To take a concrete illustration: A is offered two gifts by two of his relations, on the condition that if he accepts one, he must renounce the other; he makes his election in favour of one of the gifts. His position would be altered if that donor were permitted thereafter to prove against him that the donor had no transferable title to convey. But, on the arguments addressed to us, we are not prepared at present to accept it as an invariable principle of law that, in every case of gift, the doctrine of estoppel may be applied as between donor and donee. Let it be assumed, however, for the purposes of the present argument—and for that purpose alone—that in all cases of transfer for valuable consideration as also in all cases of gift, the heir is bound by the same estoppel as the transferor or the donor himself; does it follow that this principle is applicable to cases of testamentary devise? In the case of transfer inter vivos, with or without consideration, there is, on the assumption made, an estoppel in favour of the transferee as against the transferor, and that estoppel is binding upon the heir of the transferor. In the case of a testamentary devise is there any estoppel as between the testator and the intended legatee or the executor? It cannot be disputed that it is open to the testator, up to the very last moment of his life, to change his mind, and to revoke the disposition made by him. His testament does not come into operation till the moment after his death. Consequently, as between the testator on the one hand and the legatee or executor on the other, there is no room for any possible application of the doctrine of estoppel. The position becomes plain when we recall to mind the nature of the estoppel applicable to cases of transfer for consideration. The principle is stated lucidly by Lord Denman in Pickard v. Sears (7), in the following terms:—"Where one, by his words or conduct, wilfully causes another to believe the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act on that belief, so as to alter his own previous position, the former is concluded from averring against the latter a different state of things as existing at the same time." The principle was amplified and re-stated by Lord Selborne in Bank of Lousiana v. The First National Bank of New Orleans (8) in these terms:—"The foundation of that doctrine, which is a very important one and certainly not one likely to be departed from, is this, that if a man dealing with another for value makes statements to him as to existing facts, which being stated affect the contract, and without reliance upon which or without the statement of which the party would not enter into the contract and which being otherwise than as they were stated would leave the situation after the contract different from what it would have been if the representations had not been made, then the person making those representations shall, so far as the powers of a Court of equity extend, be treated as if the representations were true and shall be compelled to make them good." Lord Selborne then procceeded to add a very important qualification, "but those must be representations concerning existing facts," and thereby emphasised the statement of Lord Cranworth in the case of Jordan v. Money (9), to the effect that in order to found an estoppel the representation must be of existing facts and not of mere

(7) 6 A. & E. 49; 45 R. R. 538 (1837).
(8) L. R. 6 H. L. 352 at 360 (1873).
(9) 5 H. L. C. 185 (1854).

AMULYA RATAN SIRCAR v. TARINI NATH DEY.

intentions. It is clear, therefore, that as between the testator on the one hand and the executor or legatee on the other, there is no estoppel. Consequently, so far as the heir-at-law is concerned, he cannot be deemed bound by any derivative estoppel traceable to an estoppel which bound his ancestor. If he is to be bound by any estoppel, it must be an independent estoppel against him; but on behalf of the Respondents no intelligible principle of justice, equity or good conscience has been suggested upon which any such independent estoppel can be reasonably founded. The truth is that the testament, if it takes effect, comes into operation immediately after the death of the testator; at the same moment, precisely, the statutory right of inheritance comes into operation, and there is no reason why an estoppel should be applied against the heir-at-law so as to deprive him of what he is entitled to take under the statute. We are thus constrained to hold that the view taken by Mr. Justice Doss cannot be supported on principle; and that in the case of a testamentary devise of non-transferable occupancy holding, the heir-at-law is not debarred by the doctrine of estoppel from questioning its validity. In the case before us, the result follows that there was no valid disposition in favour of the executors. The Plaintiff, as the transferee from the heir-at-law by successive devolution, is consequently entitled to the property claimed, in respect whereof the Defendants are trespassers in the eye of the law.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs both here and in the Court of appeal below.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 130 OF 1912.

FLETCHER, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1914, Heard, 14, July. Judgment, 21, July.	KUNJA LAL ROY and ors., Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. UMESH CHANDRA ROY and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Occupancy holding, if may be bequeathed by Will—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 26.

Except under local usage, an occupancy holding is not capable of being bequeathed by Will.

AMULYA RATAN SARCAR v. TARINI NATH DEY (2) followed.

DAYAMAYI v. ANANDA MOHAN ROY (3) referred to.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 6th of May 1912, against the decree of Babu Debendra Bejoy Basu, Subordinate Judge of Zilla Murshidabad, dated the 27th of January 1912.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar, Chandra Sekhar Banerjee and Atul Chandra Bose for the Appellant.

Babus Mohini Mohan Chatterjee, Peary Mohan Chatterjee and Probodh Chandra Dutt for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

FLETCHER, J.—This is an Appeal by the Plaintiffs from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge of Murshidabad, dated the 27th of January 1912.

The Plaintiffs as the executors of the Will of one Anandamoyee brought the

(2) 18 C. W. N 1231 (1914).
(3) 18 C. W. N. 971 (1914).

KUNJA LAL ROY v. UMESH CHANDRA ROY.

suit against the Defendants to recover certain moveable and immoveable property. The property in question formerly belonged to one Digambar Roy who by his Will, dated the 14th Bhadra 1304, bequeathed all his properties absolutely to his wife Anandamoyee. By her Will, dated the 29th of Bhadra 1314, Anandamoyee appointed the Plaintiff and one Atul Behary Roy (since deceased) to be her executors and gave the whole of her property for the maintenance of the worship of an idol to be established after her death. Anandamoyee died on the 2nd Aswin 1314, corresponding with the 19th of September 1907, and after her death her Will was duly proved.

The Defendants having dispossessed the Plaintiffs of the property, they brought the present suit to recover the same. The Defendants claimed as heirs of Digambar after the death of Anandamoyee. The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the suit in part, but dismissed it with respect to certain jotes held with a right of occupancy by Digambar holding that such jotes were not capable of being bequeathed by Will. Against this decision the Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Sec. 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, enacts, "If a raiyat dies intestate, in respect of a right of occupancy, it shall, subject to any custom to the contrary, descend in the same manner as other immoveable property."

This section standing alone no doubt suggests that a right of occupancy is immoveable property and, if it be so, I should have thought that the holder would have the right to bequeath it by his Will.

For, by sec. 46 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865 (which is incorporated in the Hindu Wills Act), it is provided that "every person of sound mind and not a minor may dispose of his property by Will."

It has not been argued before us, nor could it be, that in no circumstances can a raiyat make a Will in respect of a right of occupancy. Sec. 26 of the Bengal Tenancy Act speaks of a raiyat dying "intestate" in respect of a right of occupancy and must therefore contemplate that in such cases a raiyat should die "testate" in respect of a right of occupancy. It has been argued however that an occupancy raiyat can only dispose of his right by Will when there is a special custom enabling him to do so. In support of this argument reference was made to secs. 11 and 18 of the Act authorising a tenure-holder and a raiyat holding at fixed rates to dispose of their holdings by Will.

It is said therefore that as the Act is silent as to the power of an occupancy raiyat to dispose of his holding by Will, the only power that an occupancy raiyat has of disposing by Will of his holding under sec. 183 is in the even of there being a special custom in that respect. This principle of construction was applied by the Full Bench of this Court in the case of Lakhan Narain v. Jainath (1) with respect to the heritability of non-occupancy rights. In a recent case [Amulya Ratan Sarcar v. Tarini Nath Day (2)] it was held that an occupancy raiyat had no power to bequeath by Will his holding unless a special custom to do so was proved. This decision is binding on us unless it has been affected by the recent decision of the Full Bench reported in Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Ray (3). That decision however

(1) I. L. R. 34 Cal. 516 (1907).
(2) 18 C. W. N. 1290 (1914).
(3) 18 C. W. N. 971 (1914).

KUNJA LAL ROY v. UMESH CHANDRA ROY.

did not deal with the power of an occupancy raiyat to bequeath his holding.

The case appears to me to be concluded by the authorities I have cited above. The present Appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—The law is admittedly in an unsatisfactory condition, the question of transferability of occupancy rights having been dealt with in the Bengal Tenancy Act rather by way of suggestion than by way of positive legislation.

I agree that on the authorities as they stand, occupancy rights are not capable of being made the subject of testamentary disposition.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 3840 OF 1912.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 15, May. 1914, Judgment, 26, May.

JIBANANDA CHAKRABARTY and others, Defendants, Appellants, v. KALIDAS MALLIK and another, Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Easement—Right to take water from tank along defined route—Servient owner if may alter route—Dominant owner, if may insist on use of old route—Motive of servient owner, if material.

When the owner of a dominant tenement has acquired a prescriptive right to take water from a tank on the servient tenement and has for this purpose used a particular means of access for the statutory period, he has acquired a right to reach the water by means of such definite mode of access and the servient owner cannot at his discretion substitute for his use some other means of access, any more than the dominant owner himself can, at his discretion, take recourse to a different path. The dominant owner may insist on his right to use the old path, his motive in so doing being immaterial.

This was an Appeal from a decision of Babu Asutosh Banerjee, Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 2nd September 1912, affirming that of Babu Narayan Chandra Ghosh, Munsif, Burdwan, dated the 8th April 1911.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Bipin Behari Ghosh and Ramani Mohan Chatterjee for the Appellants.

Babu Gour Chandra Pal for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the Defendants in a suit for declaration of the prescriptive right of the Plaintiffs to take water from a tank, for removal of the obstruction erected by the Defendants to the exercise of such right, and for an injunction to restrain interference in future. The facts are not in controversy at this stage and may be briefly narrated. The Defendants are the owners of a tank which stands on their land. The Plaintiffs are neighbours and have their residence at some distance towards the east of the tank. They and the members of their family have, for more than 20 years, peaceably and openly, as of right and without interruption, used the water of the tank, claiming title thereto as an easement. They used to obtain access to the water by a path across the east bank and down a flight of steps on the eastern slope of the bank. In 1908, the Defendants re-excavated the tank, repaired the slope on all sides and built a flight of masonry steps on the northern slope. Since then, the Defendants have prevented the Plaintiffs from access to the water in the accustomed manner by what has been described as the eastern ghât. The Defendants, however, do not deny that the Plaintiffs have acquired a right of easement in the water of the tank, and they are agreeable to the use of the water by them by means of the new flight of steps built on the northern slope. But the Plaintiffs are not satisfied with this and insist on their right to reach the water by what formed the eastern ghât and has now been obliterated by the Defendants. The question consequently arises, whether when the owner of a dominant tenement has acquired a prescriptive right to take water from a tank on the servient tenement, and has for this purpose used a particular means of access for the statutory period, he has acquired a right to reach the water by means of such definite mode of access, or, may the servient owner, at his own discretion, substitute for his use some other means of access. No authority directly in point has been placed before us by either the Appellants or the Respondents in support of their respective contentions. But we are of opinion that on principle the question must be answered in favour of the dominant owner.

JIBANANDA CHAKRABARTY v. KALIDAS MALLIK.

It is plain, as was pointed out by Lord Campbell, C. J., in Race v. Ward (1), that water as it issues on excavation of a well or a tank, is not to be considered as produce of the soil and that a right to enter on land and to take such water may be acquired as an easement: Manning v. Wasdale (2), Constable v. Nicholson (3), Macnaghten v. Baird (4), Gardner v. Hodgson (5).

This right, it is obvious, may be analysed into two constituent elements, namely, a right to go on the land of the servient owner and a right to take the water which stands on his land and so long as it stands there is his property. The two constituent rights are acquired simultaneously, but each must nevertheless be acquired in conformity with the statute. Now, in so far as a right of way is concerned, it is clear that to establish a private right of way by prescription it is necessary that in going across the lands to any particular point or for any particular purpose, a particular route must be used. As Morton, J., puts it on behalf of the Full Bench in Hyot v. Kennedy (6), "to establish a way by prescription the use must be not only open, adverse, uninterrupted, peaceable, continuous and under a claim of right, but must be confined substantially to the same route and to substantially the same purpose for which the way was designed originally, unless the way is one for all purposes." This is plain, for a way imports of necessity a right of passing along a particular route between certain termini: Jones v. Percival (7), Holmes v. Seely (8), Rojers v. Duncan (9). On this principle it has been ruled that the owner of a private right of way is entitled to enter the way at one and the same place only, and not at any other; for instance, if a way to a field runs by the side of the field, the dominant owner is not entitled to alter the position of the gate through which he has been

(1) [1855] 4 E. and B. 702; 99 R. R. 702.
(2) 5 A. and E. 758; 44 R. R. 576 (1836).
(3) 14 C. B. N. S. 230 (1863).

(4) [1903] 2 I. R. 731.
(5) [1901] 2 Ch. 198.
(6) [1898] 170 Mass 54.
(7) 5 Pick 485.
(8) 19 Wendell 507.
(9) 18 Can. Sup Ct. 710.

JIBANANDA CHAKRABARTY v. KALIDAS MALLIK.

accustomed to pass from the field to the way and to make a new entrance at a fresh place: Woodeyer v. Haddon (10), Berridge v. Ward (11), Marshall v. Alluswater (12). The rule is based on obvious good sense, for though the servient owner may not object to a person entering his land at a particular spot, for that may not cause him any inconvenience, it may be very much against his inclination, and it may be detrimental to his property that the dominant owner should enter it at any other place. But the position is clearly mutual, and if the right of way has been acquired from one point to another in a particular direction, the servient owner cannot, at his choice, substitute another way between the same points, but by a different route, which might be less convenient to the dominant owner. It is for the protection as well of the dominant as of the servient owner that the right acquired should be limited to the part of the area of the servient tenement over which it has been actually exercised: Clifford v. Hoare (13), Wood v. Stourbridge Ry. Coy. (14), Strick & Coy. v. City Officers Coy. (15). To put the matter briefly, the extent of a right acquired by prescription is measured by the extent of the use and enjoyment thereof during the prescriptive period; or, as Lord Watson stated it in Mac Intyre Brothers v. Mac Gavin (16), a prescriptive right to take water in a particular way and at a particular place infers "no right to take the supply of water in any other way and at any other place: Blackburne v. Sommers (17), Hussain Rowther v. Abubakar (18). We are not here concerned with the question of the alteration of the mode of enjoyment of a right of easement by mutual consent of parties, nor are we called upon to examine the question of the right of the dominant owner to deviate from the way acquired by prescription, when such way has been obstructed by the servient owner himself: Selby v. Nettlefield (19), Hawkins v. Carbines (20). The general rule is that when a right of way by a particular track has been acquired by a dominant owner, the servient owner cannot force upon him, in lieu thereof, a different track, any more than the dominant owner himself can, at his discretion, take recourse to a different path. Tested in the light of this principle, the claim of the Plaintiffs is unanswerable. They have proved to the satisfaction of the Courts below that, for much longer than the statutory period they have had free access to the water of the tank of the Defendants by a track across the eastern bank and by a flight of steps down the eastern slope. The prescriptive right they have acquired has become indefeasible and the Defendants were not entitled to improve the tank so as to interrupt and make impossible the exercise of the right of the Defendants in the particular mode they had adopted for many years. The position might have been different if the Plaintiffs had merely proved that they had appropriated the water of the tank for the statutory period and had failed to show that they had used a definite means of access to reach

(10) 5 Taunton 126, 132 (1813).
(11) 2 F. and F. 208 [1860] affirmed 10 C. B. N. S. 400 (1861).
(12) L. R. 7 Q. B. 166 (1871).
(13) [1874] L. R. 9 C. P. 362.
(14) 16 C. B. N. S. 222 (1864).
(15) [1906] 22 T. L. R. 667.
(16) [1893] App. Cas. 268, 277.
(17) [1879] L. R. 5 Ir. 1.
(18) [1909] 20 Mad. L. J. 699.
(19) [1873] L. R. 9 Ch. App. 111, 114.
(20) [1857] 27 L. J. Ex. 44.

the water; in such a contingency, while the Plaintiffs would have acquired a prescriptive right to use the water, they could not have claimed access to the tank by a particular path; they would have had no ground for complaint so long as the Defendants allowed them reasonable facilities of approach to the tank. In the case before us, however, the Plaintiffs, as we have seen, stand in a position of much greater advantage; they have acquired a right to reach the water by a definite path and also a right to use the water. We may add that the conduct of the Plaintiffs is really not quite so unreasonable as has been characterised by the Defendants. The access to the water of the tank by way of the flight of new masonry steps on the northern slope involves the use of a longer and more circuitous way and, what is more important, a loss of privacy, to which so much importance is attached by females in this country. But it is immaterial what motive animates the Plaintiffs, for, as Lord Halsbury, L. C., said in Mayor of Bradford v. Pickles (21), no use of property, which would be legal if due to a proper motive, can become illegal, because it is prompted by a motive which is improper or even malicious. We are of opinion that as the Plaintiffs have acquired a right, not merely to the use of the water of the tank of the Defendants but also to have access to the water in a particular mode, the Court of first instance rightly decreed the suit; and as that decree has been confirmed by the Subodinate Judge, this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(21) [1895] A. C. 587.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE ORDERS

NOS. 149 AND 174 OF 1912.

IMAM, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1914,
Heard,
30, January and
2, February.
Judgment,
4, February.

S. M. AMIRANNESSA CHOWDHURANI, Decree-holder, Appellant,

v.

S. M. KURIMANNESSA CHOWDHURANI and ors., Judgment-debtors, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 144, 151—Execution sale set aside on ground of decree-holder and auction-purchaser's fraud—Auction-purchaser if may be directed to make over profits realised without suit—Restitution.

Where a sale in execution of a decree is set aside at the instance of the judgment-debtor on the ground of fraud on the part of the decree-holder as well as of the auction-purchaser,

Held—That the Court in setting aside the sale can in the exercise of its powers under sec. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code direct the auction-purchaser to make over to the judgment-debtor the profits he realised from the property, having got hold of the property by an abuse of the Court's process.

Quære:—Whether the case falls within sec. 144 of the Code.

BENI MADHO SINGH v. PRAN SINGH (1) followed.

SAFARADDI v. DURGA PROSAD SEN (2) referred to.

This was an Appeal from an order of A. H. Cumming, Esq., District Judge of Tipperah, dated the 21st of December 1911, reversing an order of M. Iradutulla, Munsif, 3rd Court of Comilla, dated the 11th of August 1911.

The facts of the case were as follows:—

Two tenures belonging to one Vilaya-

(1) 15 C. L. J. 187 (1911).
(2) 16 C. L. J. 83 (1912).

S. M. AMIRANNESSA CHOWDHURANI v. S. M. KURIMANNESSA CHOWDHURANI.

tunnessa, an adjudged lunatic, were sold for arrears of rent and purchased by her daughter-in-law one Kurimunnessa who after her auction-purchase took delivery of possession and continued to be in possession for 5 years from 1308 to 1313 B. S.

The judgment-debtor Vilayatunnessa through her certificated guardian applied to have the sale set aside on the ground of fraud and other allegations and succeeded; fraud was found also against the auction-purchaser Kurimunnessa; the sale was set aside, the said order was also confirmed in appeal and the decretal amount having been paid off on her application the judgment-debtor was restored to the possession of the properties.

The judgment-debtor through her certificated guardian Amirunnessa then presented the present two applications for recovery of mesne profits from the auction-purchaser Kurimunnessa for the period of dispossession, viz., 5 years. The applications purported to have been made under secs. 47 and 144 of the Civil Procedure Code and the claim was laid approximately at over Rs. 1,000 in one case and over Rs. 5,000 in the other.

The Munsif held that the applications were maintainable and directed an enquiry into the ascertainment of mesne profits overruling the objections of the auction-purchaser that the Petitioner could not bring the case within the provisions of secs. 47 and 144, Civil Procedure Code, and her remedy, if any, lay in a regular suit and that the claims being laid at beyond the Munsif's pecuniary jurisdiction the applications were incompetent.

On appeal by the auction-purchaser Kurimunnessa, the learned District Judge held that the proper remedy lay in a regular suit and that the present applications were incompetent as they did not come within the purview of secs. 47 and 144, Civil Procedure Code, and moreover, if allowed to be entertained by the Munsif, they would create serious anomalies as the claims were beyond the Munsif's jurisdiction and in this view he rejected the petitions and allowed the appeal.

Against the said decision of the District Judge these two appeals were preferred to this Court and two Rules nisi were also obtained by the Appellant to be heard, if necessary, along with the appeals.

Babu Upendra Kumar Roy for the Appellant submitted that the order for sale and the order confirming the possession of the properties of auction-purchaser, a stranger in this case, were orders which really came within the purview of sec. 47, C. P. C., although purported to have been passed under some other section of the Code, e.g., Or. 21, rr. 64, 95 and 96 inasmuch as they related to the execution of the decree and were passed between the parties to the suit or their representatives. Auction-purchaser has been held in some cases to be the representative of the judgment-creditor within the meaning of sec. 244 of the old Code: Manikya Odayan v. Rajagopala (3), Sandhu v. Hussain (4), Kasinatha v. Uthirmansa (5). The test to be applied was whether the question related to the execution, satisfaction and discharge of the decree as between the parties to the suit or their representatives and the presence of the auction-purchaser was immaterial: Prosunno Kumar v. Kali Das (6), Hira Lal v. Chunder Kanto (7).

(3) I. L. R. 30 Mad. 507 (1907).
(4) I. L. R. 28 Mad. 87 (1904).
(5) I. L. R. 25 Mad. 529 (1901).
(6) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 683 (1892).
(7) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 539 (1899).

S. M. AMIRANNESSA CHOWDHURANI v. S. M. KURIMANNESSA CHOWDHURANI.

These orders were not passed merely as a matter of routine and they did finally determine the rights of the parties. The auction-purchaser acquired a title in the properties and the judgment-debtor had nothing more to do with them. Looked at from this point of view this order for sale and that confirming the possession of the auction-purchaser were decrees within the meaning of sec. (2), cl. 2 of the Civil Procedure Code, though no appeal lay as from a decree as an appeal lay under Or. 43.

The subsequent order of the Court setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud, etc., had the effect of varying or reversing this decree, and the parties were entitled to be restored to status quo and the Petitioner was entitled to get back the properties and also to claim mesne profits under sec. 144, C. P. C.

[CHAPMAN, J.—Draws attention to the words "with or without interest" in Or. 21, r. 93.]

The wording of Or. 21, r. 93 did not imply that the auction-purchaser was to be exempted from making good the loss sustained by the judgment-debtor during the period of dispossession. This rather contemplates a set off as between the judgment-debtor's loss and what the auction-purchaser might recover by way of interest for the purchase money.

Even if sec. 144, C. P. C., was not applicable, the Appellant was entitled to relief under sec. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code and the Court in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction should have granted the petitions. Reliance was placed on Beni Madho Singh v. Pran Singh (1), Mookoond Lal v. Mahomed Sami (8), Raja Singh v. Kuldip Singh (9), Collector of Meerut v. Kalka Proshad (10). A separate suit was unnecessary: Garurdhaj v. Baiju Mal (11).

The objection as to the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif could not be entertained inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the Court trying the suit could not be ousted by the amount of mesne profits claimed in the Execution Department having been found in excess of the Court's pecuniary limit and in any case the decree could not be executed without paying full Court-fees. Reliance was placed on Viraraghava v. Venkata (12), Balavantarav Oze v. Sadruddin (13), Rameswar Mahton v. Dilu Mahton (14), Arogya v. Appachi (15), Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (16).

Babu Jatindra Mohan Ghose for the Respondents submitted, that the auction-purchaser could never have been the representative of the judgment-creditor or judgment debtor: Maganlal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji (17).

The claim of the Appellant for mesne profits against a bonâ fide purchaser at a Court-sale is not at all maintainable. The sale is not void but voidable and the purchaser cannot be regarded as a trespasser until the sale is avoided. Refers to the definition of "mesne profits."

[CHAPMAN, J.—Fraud has been found against the purchaser in this case.]

The Court's inherent jurisdiction cannot

(1) 15 C. L. J. 187 (1911).
(8) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 484 (1887).
(9) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 989 (1894).
(10) I. L. R. 28 All. 665 (1906).
(11) I. L. R. 28 All. 337 (1906)
(12) I. L. R. 16 Mad. 287 (1892).
(13) I. L. R. 13 Bom. 485 (1887).
(14) I. L. R. 21 Cal. 550 (1894).
(15) I. L. R. 25 Mad. 543 (1901).
(16) I. L. R. 16 All. 286 (1894).
(17) I. L. R. 25 Bom. 631 (1901).

S. M. AMIRANNESSA CHOWDHURANI v. S. M KURIMANNESSA CHOWDHURANI.

be invoked in a case like this: Safaradii v. Durga Prosad Sen (2), President, etc., Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts (18) per Lord Cairn. This jurisdiction has been styled vague and indistinct; Or. 21, r. 93 expressly safeguards the auction-purchaser.

Neither sec. 47 nor sec. 144 had any application to the case; the original decree had remained in-tact; it was not varied or reversed. The question did not relate to the execution or satisfaction of the original decree.

The order for sale and that of confirmation of possession cannot be decrees, because the auction-purchaser is not a party to the suit nor representative of either party, and, moreover, these orders did not finally determine any rights of the parties as contemplated by sec. 2, cl. 1, definition of "decree."

The cases referred to are cases in which the decree-holder himself is the auction-purchaser, but in the present case the purchaser is a stranger and all those cases refer to suits relating to possession of immoveable properties and the present case is quite different.

The case of Beni Madho Singh v. Pran Singh (1) is also a case in which the decree-holder purchased in the name of a third party who was his benamdar.

The purchaser cannot be liable for mesne profits.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

One Syed Hossain Hydar Chowdhury obtained two decrees for rent against one Vilayatunnessa. Vilayatunnessa is a lunatic and was represented by her husband

(1) 15 C. L. J. 187 (1911).
(2) 16 C. L. J. 83, 84 (1912).
(18) 4 A. C. 324 at p. 334 (1878).

as her guardian. The tenures were sold in execution and were purchased by Vilayatunnessa's son's wife Kurimunnessa. Subsequently Vilayatunnessa's daughter Amirunnessa applied on behalf of Vilayatunnessa to have the sales set aside on the ground of fraud. She alleged that the former guardian, the decree-holder and the auction-purchaser were parties to the fraud. The applications were successful and the sales were set aside. Amirunnessa then applied on behalf of the luantic for mesne profits from the auction-purchaser during the period the latter was in possession. The first Court granted the application. These orders were set aside in appeal by the District Judge. The Applicant now appeals to this Court.

In support of the appeals, it has first been contended that sec. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies. That section is to the effect that "where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of first instance" may cause restitution to be made to any party entitled to the benefit of restitution as the result of the variation or reversal. It is contended that having regard to the definition of the word "decree" in sec. 2 (2) of the Code an order for sale is a decree. We are not satisfied that the case falls within the terms of sec. 144. What was set aside was the sale itself—the transfer of the property. It is difficult to say that a transfer is a decree.

It is not, however, necessary to decide this point, for we are of opinion that the case falls within the provisions of sec. 151 of the Code. The auction-purchaser was held to be privy to the fraud. He was guilty of an abuse of the process of the Court. Sec. 151 says that the Court has an inherent power to prevent abuse of its processes. It has already been held in the case of Beni Madho Singh v. Pran Singh (1) that a Court has power under sec. 151 to order restitution in a case of this kind when a sale in execution is set aside. It is true that the correctness of the decision has been rendered open to doubt by the decision in the case of Safaraddi v. Durga Prosad Sen (2), but the present case is indistinguishable from the case of Beni Madho Singh v. Pran Singh (1) and we are bound by the latter decision.

S. M. AMIRANNESSA CHOWDHURANI v. S. M. KURIMANNESSA CHOWDHURANI.

It is true that it is not strictly correct to use the term mesne profits in this connection. The sale was not void. It was only voidable. The auction-purchaser was not in wrongful possession. But clearly the Applicant is entitled to be restored to the position in which he would have been if the fraud had not been perpetrated. He is entitled to an order to that effect. The amount of compensation will be assessed accordingly in the subsequent proceedings in the Court of first instance.

The appeals are allowed. The orders of the District Judge are set aside. The Appellant is entitled to orders for compensation to be assessed upon the principles set forth.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs in all Courts. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at three gold mohurs—a single fee for the two appeals.

[At the conclusion of the arguments and after judgment had been pronounced but not signed, an objection was taken that in the view their Lordship took a second appeal was incompetent. Their Lordships intimated that they would consider the point and when the judgment was signed were pleased to hold that the appeals were competent.]

Appeals allowed with costs.

(1) 15 C. L. J. 187 (1911).
(2) 16 C. L. J. 83 (1912).

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1169 OF 1911.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1913, Heard, 7, May. 1914. Judgment, 26, May.	DINANATH GHOSH and another, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. HRISHIKESH PAL and anr., Defendants, Respondents.

Hindu widow—Pilgrimage to Gaya—Feast given after return from Gaya, whether legal necessity—Reversioner—Suit for declaration that alienation was without legal necessity—No offer to reimburse money spent on legal necessity—Suit whether maintainable.

A Hindu widow is competent to alienate her husband's estate for expenses in connection with a feast given to Brahmins, etc., after return from pilgrimage to Gaya.

MAKHAN LAL v. GYAN SING (1) not followed.

Quære.—Whether a declaratory suit can be maintained by a reversioner who does not offer in the plaint to reimburse the purchaser to the extent that the sale was for necessity.

This was an Appeal from a decision of R. N. Dutta, Esq., District Judge, Birbhum, dated the 20 h March 1911, modifying that of Babu Kunja Behari Biswas, Munsif, Dubrajpur, dated the 21st December 1909.

The facts of the case so far as they are material for the purpose of this report are shortly as follows:—

One Issur Chandra Pal died in the year 1896 leaving behind a widow Felumony,

(1) I. L. R. 33 All. 255 (1910).

DINANATH GHOSH v. HRISHIKESH PAL.

Defendant No. 2 in the present case, and his nephews (sister's sons) Dinanath Ghosh and Girish Chandra Ghosh, the Plaintiffs in the present case. Felumony went to Gaya in 1908 for the performance of the sradh ceremony of her husband After returning from Gaya she could not defray the expenses of the feast to Brahmins and her relations from the income of the property and sold a portion of it to Defendant No. 1 for a consideration of Rs. 500 for the feast aforesaid and other necessary expenses. Plaintiffs instituted this suit for a declaration that the sale was inoperative beyond the lifetime of the widow. The learned Munsif found that Rs. 200 at least was spent in the feast, but he decreed the suit and gave the Plaintiffs the declaration sought on the ground that the widow could not spend such a large amount for the feast and that there was nothing in the Shastras to enjoin the performance of Gaya-feast at considerable expense. The Defendant No. 1 appealed before the District Judge of Birbhum who modified the decree and gave the Plaintiffs a declaration that they would be entitled to set aside the kobala after the death of Felumony on payment of a sum of rupees two hundred which was spent on legal necessity. Against this decision the Plaintiffs appealed.

Babu Khetra Mohan Sen for the Appellants.—Expenses for pilgrimage to Gaya and performing the sradh ceremony of the husband of the widow may be a legal necessity, but expenses incurred for a feast to Brahmins two years after return from Gaya cannot be legal necessity: Makhan Lal v. Gyan Sing (1).

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukerjee for the Respondents.—I submit that money spent for feast after return from Gaya is money spent for legal necessity and the widow is authorised to alienate a reasonable portion of the property for meeting such expenses. It is conceded that pilgrimage to Gaya for performing the sradh ceremony of the husband is a legal necessity. I submit that anything inseparably connected with the Gaya sradh is equally a legal necessity. In Raghunandan's Sraddhatattwa there is a passage relating to pilgrimage where it is laid down that on return from pilgrimage as also before one starts on pilgrimage, the Brahmins, the ancestors and the gods must be worshipped. See Raghunandan's Sraddhatattwa, pp. 641-642 (Bangabasi Edition). See also passages from शब्दकल्पद्रुम under heading तीर्थश्राद्ध where the same thing is to be found.

In Yogini-Tantra (pp. 206-209) it is stated that it is after giving a feast after return from Gaya that one reaps the full benefit of a Gaya sradh. Having regard to the texts cited above, I submit that the ruling in Makhan Lal v. Gyan Sing (1) should not be followed. Even assuming that the above point is decided against my client, I submit that it is customary to give such feasts on return from Gaya and hence if it be held that Gaya sradh is a legal necessity, money spent for a feast is also legal necessity. Compare Churaman v. Gopi (20).

Babu Khetra Mohan Sen was heard.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit for declaration that an alienation of part of the estate of their maternal uncle

(1) I. L. R. 33 All. 255 (1910).

(1) I. L. R. 33 All. 255 (1910).
(20) 10 C. L. J. 554 : s. c. 13 C. W. N. 994 (1909).

DINANATH GHOSE v. HRISHIKESH PAL.

by their maternal aunt is without legal necessity and will not bind them when the estate falls into their hands as reversionary heirs. Iswar Chandra Pal, the admitted owner of the property, died in 1896 and left a childless widow Felumony who is the second Defendant in this litigation. The reversionary heirs of Iswar Chandra Pal are the present Plaintiffs who are the sons of his sister. In 1908, the widow made a pilgrimage to Gaya to perform the sradh cremony of her husband, and on return home gave a feast to Brahmins. For this purpose, she had to raise money, as her husband had left only 29 bighas of rent-paying land, the income of which was just sufficient to enable her to maintain herself, to carry on the worship of a family idol and to pay the dues of the superior landlord. On the 2nd April 1909 she sold 9 bighas of land to her brother's son, the first Defendant in this suit, for Rs. 500, on the allegation that money was needed to meet the expenses of the Gaya sradh and feast and also to pay the rent which has fallen into arrears on account of bad years. This is the sale now impeached by the Plaintiffs. The Courts below have concurrently found that the conveyance represented a real transaction and that the purchaser paid the consideration in full. No question also arises as to the value of the property, because the purchaser paid Rs. 500 while the market value is stated in the plaint to be Rs. 299. The Court of first instance, however, held that the expenses of the feast following the sradh at Gaya did not constitute legal necessity such as could justify an alienation by the widow, and in this view decreed the suit. Upon appeal by the purchaser Defendant, the District Judge has reversed this decision. He has held that the expenses of the feast, which amounted to Rs. 200, constituted a legal necessity, that the sum spent was not unreasonable or excessive, but that the existence of arrears of rent had not been proved. The District Judge has accordingly modified the decree of the primary Court, and has given the Plaintiffs declaration that if they survive their maternal aunt and succeed to the estate of their maternal uncle as reversionary heirs, they will be entitled to recover the disputed property on payment of Rs. 200 to the purchaser. The Plaintiffs have appealed to this Court and have contended that the unconditional decree of the original Court should be restored, inasmuch as the expenses of the feast following the sradh at Gaya did not constitute legal necessity justifying alienation. In support of this view, reliance has been placed on a dictum in Makhan Lal v. Gyan (1) to the effect that a feast given on the return of a pilgrim cannot be said to be so intimately connected with the pilgrimage as to justify its allowance as money expended for legal necessity. In our opinion, the view taken by the District Judge in the Court below is correct.

In Makhanlal v. Gyan Singh (1), it does not appear that the pilgrimage had been undertaken for the performance of the sradh of the deceased owner, and it is well settled that a pilgrimage made for the widow's own spiritual benefit is not a necessary purpose [Huro v. Auluck (2), Rama v. Ranga (3), Sambhu v. Sankar (4)]. The learned Judges further stated, no authority had been cited to show that a feast given on return from pilgrimage

(1) I. L. R. 33 All. 255 (1910).
(2) 1 W. R. 252 (1864).
(3) I. L. R. 8 Mad. 552 (1885).
(4) [1885] P. R. 76.

DINANATH GHOSH v. HRISHIKESH PAL.

might be regarded as an integral element in the performance of the sradh. This circumstance takes away from the value of the opinion expressed, to which we would otherwise be disposed to attach considerable weight. It is well settled that the expenses incurred by a widow for a pilgrimage to Gaya and for the performance of sradh of her husband are legitimate expenses, for which she can alienate her husband's property: Mahamed Ashraf v. Brojeswari (5), Muteeram Kowar v. Gopal Sahu (6), Chaudhuri Janmajoy Mallik v. Rasamayi (7), Rukhma v. Kamanrao (8). As was observed by Chandravarkar, J., in Ganpat v. Tulsiram (9), the question in this class of cases is, whether the pilgrimage was for the spiritual benefit of the husband of the widow, undertaken in the performance of her duty to his soul, and whether the expenses incurred are reasonable and were made honestly, having regard to the estate, the status of the family and other considerations which it is customary for Hindus to take into account in accordance with their religious beliefs and usages. A widow must be allowed a reasonable latitude in the exercise of her powers, provided she does not act unfairly to the reversionary heirs. The only question is, whether the feast to the Brahmins, after the performance of the sradh ceremony at Gaya, is an essential incident which justifies reasonable expenditure. The question must be answered in the affirmative. In the Sraddhatattwa of Raghunandan, he quotes a passage from the Brahma-Purana :—

(1) योय: कश्चित् तीर्थ-यात्रां तु गच्छेत्, सुसंयत: स च पूर्व्वं गृहे स्वे ।
कृतोपवास: शुचिरप्रमत्त:
संपूजयेद् भक्तिनम्रो गणेशम् ॥
देवान् पितॄन् ब्राह्मणांश्च साधून्
धीमान् प्रीणयम् भक्तिनम्रो यथेष्टम् ।
प्रत्यागतश्चापि पुनस्तथैव देवान्
पितॄन् ब्राह्मणां पूजयेच्च ॥ in which it is laid down that on return from pilgrimage, as before one starts on pilgrimage, the gods, the ancestors, and the Brahmins must be worshipped. Another passage

(2) तीर्थयात्रा-समारम्भे,
तीर्थात् प्रत्यागमेऽपि च ।
वृद्धि श्राद्धं प्रकुर्व्वीत, बहुसर्पि समन्वितं ॥

is quoted from the Kurma-Purana, extracted by Halayuadha, that on return from pilgrimage as at the commencement thereof Vriddhi Sraddha must be performed accompained by hom with a large quantity of clarified butter. (For a description of the rules for the performance of this sradh, reference may be made to Sarbadhikari on Inheritance, p. 88.) This necessarily implies that the Brahmins have to be fed. To the same effect is a passage in the Aditya-Purana, quoted by Hemadri

(3) प्रत्यागतश्चात्म-गृहं पुनस्तु देवान्
पितॄन् ब्राह्मणान् पूजयेच्च ।
एवं कुर्व्वितस्तस्य तीर्थाद् यदुक्तं फलं
तत् स्यान्नात्र सन्देहकोऽस्ति ॥ in his Sraddha Khanda (Asiatic Society's Edition, page 1581), and a similar view is expounded in the Yogini-Tantra (pages 206, 209). The texts are also collected in the treatise on Gaya sraddha called Gaya-Sraddhadi-Paddhati by Professor Tara-

(5) 19 W. R. 426; 11 B. L. R. 118 (1873).
(6) 20 W. R. 187; 11 B. L. R. 416 (1873).
(7) 10 W. R. 309; 11 B. L. R. 418 (1868).
(8) [1889] 3 C. P. L. R. 74.
(9) I. L. R. 36 Bom. 88 (1911).

DINANATH GHOSH v. HRISHIKESH PAL.

Nath Tarkabachaspati of the Calcutta Sanskrit College, in the concluding portion of which it is pointed out that on return from pilgrimage from Gaya, sradh ceremony must be performed and the Brahmins fed and small presents given to them for the full realization of the spiritual benefit resulting from the pilgrimage. We hold accordingly that the feast which is given to Brahmins according to well established custom on return from Gaya after performance of the sradh there, must be deemed an essential part of the ceremony, and the widow is entitled to spend a reasonable amount on that account. We observe that in Muteeram Kowar v. Gopal Sahu (6) a sum of Rs. 1,800 was considered not unreasonable, while in Rukhma v. Kamanrao (8) Rs. 500 was deemed reasonable. In the case before us, the District Judge has held that the sum of Rs. 200 which was spent was not excessive, and we see no reason to differ from him on this point. The District Judge has consequently rightly held that the reversioners cannot claim to set aside the alienation except on repayment of this sum to the purchaser [Deputy Commissioner v. Khanjan (10), Harikissen v. Bajrang (11)].

We may add that we are not in a position to consider the form of the decree, as no cross-appeal has been preferred by the purchaser-Defendant. But there is a divergence of judicial opinion upon the question, whether in the event of a sale by a widow, partly for necessity and partly without necessity, a declaratory suit can be maintained by a reversioner who does not offer in the plaint to re-imburse the purchaser to the extent that the sale was for necessity. The cases of Phoolchand v. Raghubons (12), Sugeram v. Juddoobans (13), Muteeram v. Gopal Sahu (6), Gobinda Singh v. Baldeo Singha (14), Singam v. Draupadi (15), Subramania v. Ponnuswami (16) and Gauri v. Tirumaya (17) maintain the view that the suit for a declaratory decree should fail if offer of re-imbursement has not been made in the plaint. But the cases of Garikipati v. Garikipati (18) and Vithu v. Mendri (19) support the view that the omission of the reversioner to offer equitable restitution to the purchaser does not disentitle him to a decree. The view which has been taken by this Court in the cases mentioned is that inasmuch as the grant of relief by way of a declaratory decree is in the discretion of the Court, where a Plaintiff seeks an unqualified declaration which, upon the facts proved, cannot be granted to him, and does not offer in his plaint to make restitution to the Defendant, the Court may very well refuse to assist him by grant of a declaration which he has not sought.

The result is that as the Appeal of the reversioners fails, the decree of the District Judge will stand affirmed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

(6) 20 W. R. 187; 11 B. L. R. 416 (1873).
(8) [1889] 3 C. P. L. R. 74.
(10) L. R. 34 I. A. 72: s. c. I. L. R. 29 All. 331; 5 C. L. J. 344 (1907).
(11) 9 C. L. J. 453 (1909).
(12) 9 W. R. 108 (1868).
(13) 9 W. R. 284 (1868).
(14) I. L. R. 25 All. 330 (1903).
(15) I. L. R. 31 Mad. 153 (1907).
(16) I. L. R. 8 Mad. 92 (1884).
(17) 18 M. L. J. 17 (1907).
(18) [1912] M. W. N. 1176.
(19) 5 N. L. R. 172.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]
APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 1798 OF 1910.

MOOKERJEE, J. BEACHCROFT, J. 1914, 28, January.	SATYA BHUSAN BANERJEE and others, Plaintiffs, Appellants, v. KRISHNA KALI BANERJEE and others, Defendants, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 102, 115—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), Art. 41, Sch. II—Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), secs. 69, 70—Contribution, meaning of—Suit for contribution, what is—Suit of the value of less than Rs. 500 cognisable by a Court of Small Causes, appeal in—Decree for rent obtained by co-sharer landlord against tenants—Deposit of decretal amount by purchaser from one of the tenants to prevent sale—Right of such depositor to be reimbursed.

The Plaintiffs purchased the interest of one of the Defendants in a tenancy held by them all. Some out of the entire body of landlords who claimed a half share in the superior tenancy obtained a decree for rent and in execution thereof were about to bring the property to sale when the Plaintiffs deposited in Court the necessary amount in satisfaction of the decree. The Plaintiffs brought an action for declaration that the Defendants were liable to pay the judgment-debt and they themselves had paid the money under circumstances which entitled them in equity to recover the same from the Defendants. The suit was described as one for contribution. The lower Courts dismissed the Plaintiffs' claim on the ground that as the decree had been obtained by co-sharer landlords, the interest of the Plaintiffs in the tenancy was not in jeopardy and the payment made by them must consequently be deemed voluntary. The Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court.

Held—That contribution signifies payment by each of the parties interested of his share in any common liability. Consequently an action for contribution is a suit brought by one of such parties who has discharged the liability common to them all to compel the others to make good their shares.

That the suit, as framed could not be deemed a suit for contribution: it was really a suit by the Plaintiffs for recovery of money paid by them for the benefit of the Defendants.

That Art. 41 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act does not cover the present case. The suit was clearly one of a nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and as the sum claimed was less than Rs. 500, the appeal was incompetent under sec. 102, C. P. C., and must be dismissed.

That the view taken by the lower Courts that the payment made by the Plaintiffs was voluntary, as the decree for rent was obtained by co-sharer landlords who could not have executed it so as to prejudice the interest of the Plaintiffs, was erroneous. The question of the precise effect of a sale in these circumstances would at any rate be a matter for controversy and the party liable to be affected would consequently be entitled to satisfy the decree to protect himself from the apprehended injury to his right; he would also be entitled if he made the payment to be reimbursed under sec. 69 or sec. 70 of the Indian Contract Act.

Held, however, as to the application of the Plaintiffs for the memorandum of appeal being treated as an application for revision, that the error committed by the lower Court being one of law and not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court, the High Court could not interfere in the exercise of its revisional powers.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 14th July 1911, against a decree of S. C. Mallik, Esq., District Judge of Zilla

SATYA BHUSAN BANERJEE v. KRISHNA KALI BANERJEE.

Nadia, dated the 21st April 1911, affirming a decree of Babu Ashutosh Goswami, Munsif at Ranaghat, dated the 18th July 1910.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babu Dwijendra Nath Mookerjee for the Appellant.

No one for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiffs in what is described as a suit for contribution. The circumstances antecedent to the litigation are not in dispute and may be briefly narrated. The case for the Plaintiffs is that the Defendants held a tenancy under Chandra Nath Ray and another person. In November 1907, the Plaintiffs purchased the interest of the first Defendant in that tenancy. The landlords sued the Defendants for rent due on account of the years 1311 to 1313 and obtained a decree. This decree was obtained by some out of the entire body of landlords who claimed a half share in the superior tenancy. The landlords took out execution of this decree and were about to bring the property to sale. The Plaintiffs thereupon deposited in Court the sum of Rs. 135-13 6 to satisfy the decree. The Plaintiffs then commenced this action for declaration that the Defendants were liable to pay the judgment-debt and that they themselves had paid the money under circumstances which entitled them in equity to recover the same from the Defendants. The suit, however, was described as one for contribution, though, according to the Plaintiffs, they themselves were not liable to bear any portion of the liability under the decree. The Defendants resisted the claim on various grounds which need not be stated for our present purpose. The Court of first instance found on the merits in favour of the Plaintiffs, but dismissed their claim on the ground that as the decree had been obtained by co-sharer landlords, the interest of the Plaintiffs in the tenancy was not in jeopardy, and that the payment made by them must consequently be deemed voluntary. Upon appeal this view has been accepted by the District Judge and the decree of dismissal has been affirmed by him. The Plaintiffs have now appealed to this Court.

The first question which requires consideration is, whether this Appeal is competent in view of the provisions of sec. 102 of the Civil Procedure Code. On behalf of the Appellants, it has been argued that the suit falls within the scope of Art. 41 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act which excludes from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts all suits for contribution by a sharer in joint property in respect of a payment made by him of money due from a co-sharer. It has been contended that this is a suit for contribution of the description mentioned in Art. 41, because it has been commenced by the Plaintiffs who are co-sharers in a joint property and is in respect of a payment made by them of money due from the Defendants who are co-sharers of the Plaintiffs. In our opinion, this contention is manifestly fallacious. As is pointed out in the Oxford Dictionary (Vol. II, p. 923), contribution signifies payment by each of the parties interested of his share in any common liability. Consequently an action for contribution is a suit brought by one of such parties who has discharged the liability common to them all to compel the others to make good their shares :

SATYA BHUSAN BANERJEE v. KRISHNA KALI BANERJEE.

Moti Chand v. Bajrang (1), Jognarain v. Badri Das (2). Mutuality is thus the test of contribution. If A and B are jointly liable for a sum of money and A alone satisfied the whole debt, he is entitled to call upon B to contribute to the extent of his proportionate shares; and, conversely, if B alone pays the whole debt, he is entitled to call upon A to contribute. Judged by these tests, the present suit cannot correctly be described as a suit for contribution. In the case before us, the Plaintiffs deny that they were to any extent liable to satisfy the judgment-debt. Their case is that the money payable under the decree was justly recoverable from the Defendants alone. It is not a case of satisfaction of a joint liability, nor does the test of mutuality apply. The Plaintiffs do not admit that they could have been called upon to contribute, if the Defendants had paid the money; their theory on the other hand is that if the Defendants had made the payment, it would have been in satisfaction of an exclusive liability of the Defendants. The suit as framed cannot be deemed a suit for contribution: it is really a suit by the Plaintiffs for recovery of money paid by them for the benefit of the Defendants. A suit of that character is, under certain circumstances, maintainable in law; but it cannot properly be described as a suit for contribution. Consequently Art. 41 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act does not cover the present case. The suit is clearly one of a nature cognisable by a Court of Small Causes, and as the sum claimed is less than Rs. 500, the Appeal is incompetent under sec. 102, C. P. C., and must accordingly be dismissed.

(1) 16 C. L. J. 148, 151 (1911).
(2) 16 C. L. J. 156 (1912).

It has finally been contended on behalf of the Plaintiffs that if the appeal is incompetent, the Court may treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision, and give the Plaintiffs such reliefs as they may deserve under all the circumstances. This prayer raises the question of the nature of the errors, if any, which we are invited to rectify. The Courts below have refused relief to the Plaintiffs, because the payment made by them was voluntary, as the decree for rent was obtained by co-sharer landlords who could not have executed it so as to prejudice the interest of the Plaintiffs. This view is clearly erroneous and is opposed to the decisions of this Court in Suchand Ghoshal v. Baloram Mordana (3), Pankhábati Chowdhurani v. Nani Lal Singh (4), Prosunno Kumar Bose v. Jamaluddin (5) and Khettranath v. Mohamed Uzer (6). The fact that the decree had been obtained by co-sharer landlords did not necessarily lead to the inference that the sale of the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtors would not have affected the interest of the present Plaintiffs, because, as was pointed out in the case of Netai Behary v. Hari Gobind (7), a sale of the right title and interest of the judgment-debtors in execution of a decree for rent obtained by a co-sharer landlord may, in certain circumstances, pass the entire tenancy. The question of the precise effect of a sale in these circumstances would at any rate be a matter for controversy and the party liable to be affected would consequently be entitled to satisfy the decree to protect himself from the apprehended injury to his right; he would also be en-

(3) I. L. R. 38 Cal. 1 (1910).
(4) 19 C. L. J. 72 (1913).
(5) 18 C. W. N. 327 (1912).
(6) 21 I. C. 102.
(7) I. L. R. 26 Cal. 677 (1899).

titled, if he made the payment, to be reimbursed under sec. 69 or sec. 70 of the Indian Contract Act: Pankhabati v. Nani Lal (4). The view taken by the Courts below must accordingly be deemed erroneous in law. But the error they have committed is one of law, and as it has not affected the jurisdiction of the Court, we cannot interfere in the exercise of our revisional powers: Amir Hasan v. Sheo Baksh (8), Yusf Khan v. Abdul Rahman (9).

The prayer of the Plaintiffs that the memorandum of appeal be treated as an application for revision must consequently fail.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 1140 OF 1913.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
Heard, 24 and 25, November.
Judgment, 25, November.

BYOMKESH CHACKRABARTTY, Petitioner,
v.
JATINDRA NATH ROY, and ors., Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 90—Sale of immoveable property in execution of money-decree—Holder of another decree against the same judgment-debtor whose application for execution had been dismissed for non-prosecution prior to sale, if entitled to apply for setting aside the sale.

In execution of a decree for money the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors were sold and purchased by the Opposite Party on 9th April 1912. The Petitioner who also held a decree for money against the same judgment-debtors had applied on the 13th March 1912 for execution of his decree; but his application was dismissed for non-prosecution on the 13th May 1912, and on the 20th May 1912, the Petitioner applied to the Court to have the sale set aside under r. 90, Or. 21, C. P. C., on the ground of fraud and material irregularity. The lower Court rejected this application holding that he was not entitled to make it.

Held—That the dismissal of the Petitioner's application for execution of his decree on the 13th May for non-prosecution did not affect the right of the Petitioner to a share in a rateable distribution of the assets and on the date on which the application to set aside the sale was made under r. 90, it was made by a person entitled to a share in the rateable distribution of the assets and consequently should have been entertained by the Court.

This was a Rule granted against an order of Babu Panna Lal Bose, Munsif, Jessore, dated the 6th January 1913, confirmed on appeal by H. C. Liddell, Esq., District Judge, Jessore, by his order dated the 3rd May 1913.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from the judgment.

Babus Provash Chandra Mitter and Susil Madhab Mullick for the Petitioner.

Babu Monmohan Dutt for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order by which the Court of first instance has refused to entertain an application to set aside an execution sale under r. 90 of Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. The order was subsequently affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

(4) 18 C. L. J. 72 (1913).
(8) I. L. R. 11 Cal. 6: s. c. L. R. 11 I. A. 237 (1884).
(9) I. L. R. 16 Cal. 749: s. c. L. R. 16 I. A. 104 (1889).

It appears that one Jatindra Nath Roy held a decree for money against Hiranmoyee Dasi and others. In execution of that decree the immoveable properties of the judgment-debtors were sold on the 19th April 1912 and purchased by the Opposite Party, Hemanta Kumar Das. Before the sale, the Petitioner who also held a decree for money against the same judgment debtors had on the 13th March 1912 applied for execution of his decree. On the 20th May 1912 he applied to the Court to have the sale set aside under r. 90 on the ground of fraud and material irregularity. This application was resisted by the auction-purchaser on the ground, amongst others, that as the application for execution made by the Petitioner had been dismissed for non-prosecution on the 13th May 1912, he was not entitled on the 20th May 1912 to make an application under r. 20. The Courts below have given effect to this objection, and the question for decision is whether the view taken by them is well founded in law.

R. 90 provides that where any immoveable property has been sold in execution of a decree, the decree-holder or any person, entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it. The Petitioner claims to be a person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the assets. To determine whether he is a person of this description, we must examine the provisions of sec. 73. That section lays down that where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made applications to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons. In the case before us, the assets are held by the Court. It is also undisputed that more persons than one had before the receipt of the assets made application to the Court for execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtors. The assets were received on the 19th April 1912 and the 29th April 1912. On the date first mentioned, the auction-purchaser brought into Court one-fourth of the purchase-money and the balance was deposited on the date last mentioned. Consequently, it is clear that before the receipt of the assets, application for execution had been made by the Petitioner as also by the person at whose instance the sale had taken place. As these conditions were fulfilled, it became the duty of the Court to distribute the assets rateably between the persons mentioned. It has been contended, however, on behalf of the Opposite Party that inasmuch as the application of the Petitioner for execution had been dismissed for non-prosecution on the 13th may 1912, he was not, on the 20th May 1912, when he applied to set aside the sale, a person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the assets within the meaning of r. 90. In our opinion, this contention is unsound. The dismissal of the application on the 13th May 1912 for non-prosecution did not affect the right of the Petitioner to share in a rateable distribution of the assets. It was the duty of the Court to grant him relief on the basis of his right which had accrued previously, for there is no suggestion that he had waived or abandoned his claim against the judgment-debtors. In our

THE

Calcutta Weekly Notes.

Vol. XVIII.] MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 14, 1914. [No. 44

Contents.

NOTES.

Recent Privy Council Judgments.

The judgments of the Privy Council which for some time past have regularly appeared in this journal will satisfy even the most critically disposed of our readers that India is receiving her due share of attention from the Judicial Committee of His Majesty's Council. We recently noticed one of them, viz., in the appeal of Mrs. Annie Besant v. G. Narayaniah, 18 C. W. N. 1089, but there have been other pronouncements of equal importance though not of the same dramatic character in their settings. Take for instance the case of Maha Prosad Singh v. Ramani Mohan Singh, 18 C. W. N. 994, a decision of the greatest importance to people in the Sonthal Parganas, which contrary to the views expressed by the High Court sets bounds to the jurisdiction of Civil Courts to entertain suits relating to immoveable property (including mortgage suits) in respect of which Settlement operations have not been concluded. Lord Moulton in arriving at this conclusion went through the Acts and Regulations affecting the administration of justice in the Sonthal Parganas with a degree of thoroughness and care which are a guarantee that the decision of the High Court has not been lightly set aside.

Sir John Edge in Bhaiaji Thakur v. Jharula Das, 18 C. W. N. 1029, makes it plain that to deprive a shebait of his share of surplus income from offerings is not necessarily to deprive him of his office. It must, when the wrong-doer is an outsider not competent according to Hindu law to perform the duties of a shebait, be regarded as an individual act of trespass giving rise to an action for damages. Lord Parker's judgment in Raghunath Das v. Sundar Das Khetri (18 C. W. N. 1058) affirms what has been the settled law of the Province, viz., that an attaching creditor does not merely by reason of his prior attachment secure precedence over the Official Assignee in whom since the attachment the property has vested by reason of the judgment-debtor's insolvency. But the decision is important for laying down generally that attachment prevents private alienation but does not invalidate alienations by operation of law, and also for indicating in one direction at least the limits beyond which that much-misunderstood judgment of Lord Hobhouse in Malkarjun v. Narahari, L. R. 27 I. A. 216, must not be pushed. It is not clear whether in his Lordship's view non-service of notice makes the sale void or voidable only, though the approval expressed in respect of Gopal Chunder v. Sunamoni, I. L. R. 20 Cal. 370, would seem to favour the former alternative. It is clear, however, that an attaching creditor who knowingly pursues an irregular course should not according to their Lordships be allowed to take shelter behind the occasionally cryptic utterances of Lord Hobhouse in Malkarjun's case.

In Ma Nhin Bwin v. U. Shwe Gone, 18 C. W. N. 1121, Lord Shaw not merely decides a disputed question of succession under Burmese Buddhist law, but in order to do so satisfactorily examines the political history of Burma for over a century and ascertains the value as sources of law of the Dhammathats—a matter of supreme importance to Burmese Buddhists. The recital of facts in the judgment also throws interesting sidelights into social conditions in Burma—the existence side by side of a patriarchal system of society which yet does not prevent daughters of the family freeing themselves from its trammels at will and setting up as independent traders. The truth appears to be that the patriarchal system exists in Burma in theory or in tradition only and has in practice, (in its main essentials) broken down. Nowhere in British India, do females enjoy the position of independence that they do in Burma, and nowhere, in consequence, outside Burma, are females more self-reliant.

The Rt. Hon'ble Mr. Ameer Ali's judgment in Ram Chandra v. Vinayak, 18 C. W. N. 1154, setting out the limitations under which bhinna-gotra sapindas or bandhus succeed to property under the Mitakshara Law coincides with the generally accepted opinion of scholars in this country. The assumption upon which the judgment of the Calcutta High Court in Babu Lal v. Nankaram, I. L. R. 22 Cal. 339, proceeded, viz., that the rule of the Mitakshara enunciated in the Achara-kanda relative to sapinda-relationship in respect of marriage applies to inheritance as well is now accepted by the Privy Council as correct in law—notwithstanding the criticisms of Shastri Golap Chandra Sarkar that that decision and the earlier one in Umaid Bahadur v. Udoi Chand, I. L. R. 6 Cal. 119, represents Dayabhaga views rather than the doctrines of the Mitakshara. His Lordship who had been a colleague of Mr. Justice Gurudas Banerjee (one of the Judges who interpreted the law in Babu Lal's case) is absolutely right in saying that this "distinguished Judge and erudite Sanskrit scholar" "was not likely to allow his mind to be confused by Dayabhaga conceptions in determining a case under the Mitakshara Law."

Of the very greatest importance is the elaborate and erudite judgment of Lord Sumner in Raja Srinath Ray v. Dinabandhu Sen, 18 C. W. N. 1217. The question in the case was one which has long troubled Judges and writers of text-books in this country imbued with the learning of the English law of waters. The Crown which owns the bed of a navigable river and necessarily also the fishery rights in its waters to-day grants the exclusive fishery rights by way of permanent settlement to a private individual. To-morrow the river shifts its course so that the river now passes over the zemindari of another private individual. According to English law, if the river is a navigable river, the right of the public to use the river for purposes of navigation would continue in the new channel, but the grantee's fishery rights which are part and parcel of the freehold in the bed terminates to the extent to which the river has shifted on to the land of a riparian owner. The Indian cases have, however, as a rule allowed the grantee of fishery rights to "follow the river" along its new course and Lord Sumner holds that the departure is fully justified by the circumstances of Lower Bengal.

"In England," his Lordship observes, "the bed of a stream is for the most part unchanging during generations, and alters, if it alters at all, gradually and by slow processes. In the deltaic area of Lower Bengal change is almost normal in the river system and changes occur rarely by slow degrees and often with an almost cataclysmal suddenness." Lord Sumner in the course of his judgment has drawn a picture of the river which will be appreciated not only as a remarkable specimen of descriptive and literary art but will appeal to those who have seen the river as eminently realistic. In describing the condition of the river system of Lower Bengal his Lordship says: "The streams in the Gangetic delta are capricious and powerful. In the course of ages the land itself has been deposited by the river, which always carries a prodigious quantity of mud in suspension. The river comes down in flood with resistless force and throughout its various branches is constantly eroding its banks and building them up again. It crawls or races through a shifting network of streams. Sometimes its course changes by imperceptible degrees, sometimes a broad channel will shift and a new one open in a single night." To the argument that it would be unjust that a landowner should not only lose the use of his land but also the right to fish over his own acres his Lordship's reply is: "The waters are not his waters, nor is the change confined to the flooding of his fields. It is the river that has made his land its own. . . . . In physical fact the landowner enjoys his land by the precarious grace of the river whose identity is so persistent, and whose character is so predominating, as almost to amount to a personality." In other words, it is kismut. So it is. Those who know the country will feel assured that his Lordship has not missed the local colouring without which administration of law according to pure logic becomes sheer pedantry.

CURRENT INDIAN CASES.

(CIVIL.)

Mortgage.

TOTA RAM v. KISHORE SINGH, I. L. R. 36 All. 141.

A second mortgagee purchased the property at a sale in execution of a decree obtained by himself. A prior mortgagee then brought a suit making the second mortgagee a party.

Held—That the second mortgagee could not contest the suit on the ground that the mortgagor was incompetent to execute the mortgage.

(CRIMINAL.)

Confession—Sec. 30 of the Evidence Act.

EMPEROR v. GANGAPPA, I. L. R. 38 Bom. 156.

When a confession made by a co-accused affecting himself and the other accused is proved, the Court is entitled to take it into consideration as against the other accused.

"Confession" in sec. 30 cannot be restricted to an unretracted confession.

The High Courts in India have laid down the rule of practice that a conviction should not be based only on an uncorroborated confession. This rule deserves all the reverence of law so that it ought to be observed by Judges when exercising their discretion under sec. 30.

Criminal Procedure Code—Dismissal of complaint—Revival—Jurisdiction of Magistrate.

RAUR BHORAS, I. L. R. 36 All. 129.

A complaint of assault on one B was lodged by B's brother and was dismissed under sec. 203. B lodged a fresh complaint before the same Magistrate who ordered the Police papers and the papers on the former complaint to be put on a certain date before which he was succeeded in his post by another officer.

Held—That the succeeding Magistrate had jurisdiction to deal with the complaint.

Criminal Procedure Code, sec. 250—Compensation.

GHURBIN KOERI, I. L. R. 36 All. 132.

The Magistrate in discharging an accused person called upon the complainant in the order of discharge to show cause against an order for compensation and four days later on hearing the complainant made the order under sec. 250.

Held—That the proceedings were not without jurisdiction.

Allahabad High Court—Letters Patent.

EMPEROR v. GHURE, I. L. R. 36 All. 168.

In an appeal preferred by the Local Covernment against an order of acquittal a preliminary objection to the hearing of the appeal was taken on behalf of the accused on the ground that there was no legally constituted High Court in the North-Western Provinces, the appointment of a sixth Judge to that Court being ultra vires.

Held—There is no force in the contention under 24 and 25 Vict. Chap. 104, sec. 16; the sovereign was authorised by Letters Patent to establish at any time thereafter a High Court of Judicature in the territories of India other than those comprised within the jurisdiction of the other High Courts. The only limit as to the number and qualifications of the Judges was as therein stated. By Letters Patent dated the 17th day of March of the twenty-ninth year of the reign of Queen Victoria Her Majesty was pleased to constitute a High Court for the North-Western Provinces. Sec. 2 of the Letters Patent was in these words:—

"And we do hereby appoint and ordain that the said High Court shall until further or other provision shall be made by us or our heirs and successors in that behalf in accordance with the said recited Act consist of a Chief Justice and five Judges."

Transfer of case by District Magistrate to Subordinate Magistrate.

BASHIR HUSSEIN v. ALI HUSSEIN, I. L. R. 36 All. 166.

Where a District Magistrate has referred a case for trial to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate the latter has no power to transfer it to any other Magistrate who may happen to be subordinate to him.

Cr. P. C., sec. 437.

EMPEROR v. KHARGA, I. L. R. 36 All. 147.

An order of further enquiry can be made under sec. 437, Cr. P. C., in a case in which an accused person has been discharged under sec. 119, Cr. P. C., in a proceeding under sec. 110, Cr. P. C.

Sec. 145, Cr. P. C.

EMPEROR v. RAM LOCHAN, I. L. R. 36 All. 143.

The Police reported that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace between some of the servants of a lady who was the proprietor of a market and another person who had been appointed Chaudhuri of the market about the collection of certain dues. Proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C., were drawn up and the Magistrate made an order to the effect that the Chaudhuri was in possession of the market dues in his capacity as Chaudhuri and the servants of the proprietor should not disturb his possession unless he was evicted therefrom in due course of law.

Held—That the dispute in this case admittedly does not concern any tangible immoveable property. It can only come within the scope of the section if cl. 2 of sec. 145 covers the case. Land is said to include "markets" and "the rents or profits of any such property." It would be unduly stretching the definition to make it cover this case.

Notes of Cases.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before MOOKERJEE and BEACHCROFT, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2601 OF 1912. RAJA DURGA PROSAD SING, Defendant, Appellant, v. HARI RAM MAHATO, Plaintiff, Respondent. 28th August 1914.

Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, secs. 20 (3), 139 (6)—Rent-collector, if may acquire occupancy right—Suit by headman to recover land, if lies in Civil Court, when wrongfully dispossessed.

The Plaintiff's case was that he with his father has been in possession of the disputed land over 35 years. This suit was brought for declaration of his paternal jamai right to and recovery of the khas possession of the land in dispute. The land was originally jore danga and was reclaimed on or about 1876. On the Plaintiff's refusal to pay increased rent, the Plaintiff was dispossessed by the Defendant. It was argued, first, that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit in view of cl. (6) of sec. 139, Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, as the Plaintiff was the headman of the village; secondly, that the Plaintiff could not acquire occupancy rights as he was the ijaradar of the village under cl. (3), sec. 20, Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act; and thirdly, that the District Judge had imported personal knowledge into the case and therefore the case ought to be remanded; and fourthly, the onus was wrongly thrown upon the landlord-Defendant to prove the character of the holding. The cases in 13 C. L. J. 250, 38 Cal. 153, 9 C. W. N. 144, were referred to.

The Respondent was not called upon.

Held—That the cl. (6) of sec. 139, Ch. N. T. Act, contemplates suits brought by Plaintiff in his character of a headman; that under sec. 6 of the Rent Law of 1859, the Plaintiff who was a rent-collector and not an ijaradar as contemplated in the Ch. N. T. Act could acquire occupancy rights and (without expressing any opinion on the case in 38 Cal. 153) the principle of that case was not applicable in the present case.

Babus Karunamay Ghose and Lalit Mohan Ghose for the Appellant.

Babu Dwarka Nath Chakerbutty for the Defendant.

K. M. G.

[END OF VOL. XVIII.]

BYOMKESH CHACKRABARTTY v. JATINDRA NATH ROY.

opinion, on the date on which the application to set aside the sale was made under r. 90, it was made by a person entitled to share in the rateable distribution of the assets and consequently should have been entertained by the Court.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the orders of the Courts below discharged. The record will be transmitted to the Court of first instance in order that the application under r. 90 may be investigated. The Petitioner is entitled to his costs both here and in the Court of appeal below; the costs in the Court of first instance will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee in this Court at two gold mohurs.

Rule made absolute.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

LORD DUNEDIN.	BIRAJ NOPANI, since
LORD MOULTON.	deceased (now repre-
SIR JOHN EDGE.	sented by MALIRAM
MR. AMEER ALI.	NOPANI), and another,
1914,	Appellants,
Heard, 21 and	v.
22, April.	SREEMUTTY PURA
Judgment,	SUNDARI DASSEE,
11, May.	Respondent.

Deed, interpretation of—Conveyance by executor who also erroneously believes himself to be beneficiary—Conveyance purporting to be of all his right and title, if would pass title as executor.

P bequeathed a house absolutely to his daughter K and appointed three persons executors, of whom the only surviving executor in 1900, H (who was a son of K), conveyed the house to the Defendants in order to find money to pay off mortgage-debts for which as executor he was liable, and on discharging which he would have the right to be indemnified out of the estate. At the date of the conveyance K had died leaving, besides H and two other sons, two unmarried daughters who would according to Hindu Law succeed to her stridhan properties to the exclusion of their brothers. H and his brothers however believed at the date of the conveyance that they and not their sisters were the heirs of K and joined in the conveyance as beneficial owners. All the vendors, moreover, purported to convey all the title and right that they possessed in the property. It was urged by the Plaintiff, one of the daughters of K, that although H was in a position validly to convey the house to the Defendants as executor and did purport to convey the property, he did not effectively do so, because the deed showed that he intended only to convey as a beneficial owner of the property, being under the erroneous impression that he and his brothers, his co-vendors, were beneficially entitled to it as heirs to their mother to the exclusion of their sisters:

Held—That as it appeared from the deed that all the vendors conveyed all the title and right that they possessed in the property, that would undoubtedly include the right and title which one of them possessed as executor, even if there were no direct evidence (such as there was in this case) that the conveyance was by him in his capacity as executor as well as beneficial owner.

It is a settled rule that the meaning of a deed is to be decided by the language used interpreted in its natural sense.

It would be contrary to settled principles of law as well as most unjust to bonâ fide purchasers if the Courts were to allow the plain legal interpretation of a conveyance to be affected by speculations as to what particular rights existing in the various vendors were present to the minds of some or all of the parties to the conveyance at the date of its execution.

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

This was an appeal against an appellate judgment of the Calcutta High Court.

The facts of the case will sufficiently appear from their Lordships' judgment.

The appeal turned upon the interpretation of a deed of conveyance and the question was whether by it one of the executants merely purported to transfer his supposed beneficial interest only in the property conveyed or also his title as executor. The conveyance was in the following terms :

This Indenture made this 12th day of December in the year of Christ one thousand and nine hundred between Hemendra Nath Bysack, Makhan Lal Bysack and Noni Lal Bysack of No. 7 Roy's Lane in the town of Calcutta by caste Tantubay sons of Sambhoo Nath Bysack deceased landholders hereinafter called the Vendors of the first part Baroda Sundary Dassee of No. 20/1 Boseparah Lane in Calcutta aforesaid widow of Kristo Lall Bysack deceased by caste Tantubay of the second part and Bijraj and Dawlatram both of No. 45 Strand Road in Calcutta aforesaid sons of Hriseycase deceased by caste Agarwalla Bania traders hereinafter called the purchasers of the third part Whereas one Prem Chand Bysack was seised or otherwise well and sufficiently possessed free from incumbrances of the messuage land hereditaments hereinafter described and intended to be hereby conveyed and whereas the said Prem Chand Bysack died on the 23rd day of June one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six possessed of amongst other things the said messuage land and hereditaments and leaving a Will in the English language and character bearing date the twenty-fourth day of October one thousand eight hundred and eighty-four whereby he gave and devised amongst other things the house No. 8 Sobharam Bysack's Street being the said messuage land and hereditaments to his surviving daughter Sreemutty Katyani Dassee and her heirs absolutely subject to the charges therein mentioned to be paid by her and her heirs executors and administrators out of the monthly rent and profits of the said house No. 8 Sobharam Bysack's Street and also bequeathed the sum of Rupees twenty a month to her daughter-in-law Baroda Sundary Dassee and his grandson Hiralal Bysack the widow and infant son respectively of his second son Kristo Lal Bysack deceased and their heirs for maintenance for sixteen years and (also) Rupees twenty per month to his first daughter-in-law Sonamoni Dassee for the term of her natural life and after that to such of her sons as should not then have attained their full age till they have all passed an age of twenty-one years and he declared that the said sums of Rupees twenty and twenty or altogether Rupees forty should form a charge on the said house No. 8 Sobharam Bysack's Street and he thereby appointed the said Sambhoo Nath Bysack Hemendra Nath Bysack and Ratan Lal Bysack his executors and whereas on the thirty-first day of August one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six the said executors applied to the High Court Calcutta for probate of the said Will but the said Sonamoni Dassee and Baroda Sundary Dassee having filed caveat the application was set down as a contentious suit (being suit No. 15 of 1887) and on the twelfth day of July one thousand eight hundred and eighty-seven probate was finally granted to the said executors and whereas the said Katyani Dassee died on the eighth day of April one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one leaving her surviving five sons namely the said Hemendra Nath Bysack, Ratan Lal Bysack, Makhan Lal Bysack, Noni Lal Bysack and Mihir Lal Bysack and three daughters Maya Sundary Dassee, Kanak Munjury Dassee and Pooroo Sundary Dassee (the latter two of whom were born after the death of the said Prem Chand Bysack) and whereas the said Ratan Lal Bysack also died on the seventh day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one unmarried and whereas the said Mihir Lal Bysack also died on the twelfth day of September one thousand eight hundred and ninety-five unmarried and whereas the said Sambhu Nath Bysack also died on the ninth day of January one thousand eight hundred and ninety-nine and whereas on the fourth day of September one thousand and nine hundred the said Hemendranath Bysack obtained an order whereby amongst other things referred to the Registrar of the said High Court to enquire and report whether there was any necessity for the sale of the said house No. 8 Sobharam Bysack's

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

Street and what provisions should be made to secure the payment of the legacies mentioned in the said Will out of the rents and profits of the said house No. 8 Sobharam Bysack's Street and whereas the said Hemendra Nath Bysack the sole surviving executor of the said Will has since paid all the debts liabilities and legacies mentioned in the said Will and whereas the said Sonamoni Dassee has filed a suit against the said Hemendra Nath Bysack for amongst other things a declaration of her rights under the said Will of the said Prem Chand Bysack and whereas the vendors have taken upon themselves the responsibility of entering satisfaction in the said suit so brought by the said Sonamoni Dassee as also of satisfying the claim (if any) of their sisters the said Sreemutty Maya Sundary Dassee and Kanak Munjury Dassee who are both married and of the infant Pooroo Sundary Dassee who is still unmarried (and the latter two of whom are precluded from succession being born after the death of the testator as aforesaid and with that view has abandoned and will not proceed with the reference contemplated by the said order of the fourth day of September one thousand and nine hundred) and whereas the vendors have contracted with the purchasers for a sale to them of the messuage land and hereditaments for the sum of Rupees thirty-five thousand on the treaty of such sale it has been agreed by and between the parties hereto that Rupees ten thousand shall remain with the purchasers to secure the sum of Rupees twenty a month to the said Sonamoni Dassee and her heirs being one set of annuitants mentioned in the said Will after which or after the settlement with the said Sonamoni Dassee for principal and costs (or deposit into Court) the said sum of Rupees ten thousand (or the balance thereon) shall be paid back to the vendors or their heirs and representatives by the purchasers their heirs and representatives and that the other annuitant Baroda Sundary Dassee shall be paid off on her joining in the conveyance hereinafter appearing and whereas the vendors have paid off the said Baroda Sundary Dassee the sum of Rupees seven hundred and eight in full satisfaction of the balance of her claim against the said land messuage and hereditaments and have produced her receipt to the purchasers and have also deposited with them the sum of Rupees ten thousand to secure the annuity of the said Sonamoni Dassee and her heirs Now this Indenture witnesseth that in pursuance of the said contract and in consideration of the said sum of Rupees twenty-five thousand at or before the execution of these presents paid to the vendors by the purchasers and in further consideration of Rupees ten thousand so deposited with the purchasers by the vendors as aforesaid (the two sums making together the said purchase-money of Rupees thirty-five thousand) the receipt whereof they the vendors do and each of them doth hereby admit and acknowledge and of and from the same and every part thereof do and doth acquit release and for ever discharge the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns as well as the said messuage land and hereditaments they the vendors do and each of them doth hereby with the privity and consent of the said Baroda Sundary Dassee testified by her being a party and executing these presents grant sell and convey unto the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns all that partly two-storeyed and partly three-storeyed messuage tenement or dwelling-house together with the piece or parcel of land whereon the same is erected and built containing by estimation six cottahs and eleven chittacks situate lying and being North Division Block No. XIII Holding No 14 and premises No. 8 Sobharam Bysack's Street in the town of Calcutta and butted and bounded in manner following that is to say on the north by Sobharam Bysack's Street on the east by a passage separating this property from No. 9 Sobharam Bysack's Street belonging to the Debutter Estate of Bhagabati Dasi deceased (the said passage being joint to both the houses) on the south by the house of Shedmall Gomtia and on the west by a public lane and the Government Revenue whereof is Rupees two per annum or howsoever otherwise the same may be butted bounded known or described together with all erections paths passages privileges water-courses and appurtenances whatsoever to the said messuage land and hereditaments or premises hereby granted belonging or in any wise appertaining or usually held or occupied therewith or reputed to belong or to be appurtenant thereto and all the estate right title interest claim and demand whatsoever of the vendors unto and upon the said messuage land hereditaments and premises and every part thereof and also all deeds papers and writings solely relating to the said premises or any part thereof now in the custody of the vendors or which they can procure without suit to have and to hold the said messuage land and hereditaments and premises hereby granted or otherwise conveyed and assured or intended so to be with their and every of their rights members and appurtenances unto and to the use of the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns for ever and the vendors do for themselves and himself their and his heirs and representatives do and each of them doth hereby covenant with the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns in manner following that is to say that the vendors at the time of sealing and delivery of these presents are lawfully rightfully and absolutely possessed of and in the said messuage land and hereditaments hereinbefore granted and conveyed as an estate equivalent to fee simple in possession free from incumbrances and that the vendors now have in themselves full power and absolute right title and authority by these presents to grant and convey the said messuage land hereditaments and premises unto and to the use and behoof of the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns in manner aforesaid according to the true intent and meaning of these presents and that it shall be lawful for the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns from time to time and at all times hereafter peaceably and quietly to enter into and upon and hold occupy possess and enjoy all and singular the said messuage land hereditaments and premises hereinbefore granted and conveyed or intended so to be with its rights members and appurtenances receive and retain the rents issues and profits thereof to and for their own use and benefit without any let suit eviction or any manner of hindrance claim and demand whatsoever of or by the vendors their heirs and representatives or any person or persons now or hereafter lawfully claiming any estate right title charge and interest at law or equity into out of or upon or concerning the said messuage land hereditaments and premises or any part thereof through under or in trust for them or any of them and that the vendors have not at any time done or executed or knowingly suffered or been party or privy to any act deed matter or thing whereby or by means whereof the said messuage land hereditaments and premises hereby granted or assured or expressed so to be or any part thereof are can or may be incumbered or prejudicially affected in title estate or otherwise howsoever or whereby the vendors are in any way hindered from granting conveying or assuring the same or any part thereof in manner aforesaid and the vendors their heirs and representatives shall and will at all times hereafter save defend and keep the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns harmless and indemnified against all actions suits proceedings costs damages claims and demands or losses and specially of the said Sonamoni Dasi and her heirs and the said three sisters Mayasundari Dasi, Kanak Munjury Dasi and Pooroo Sundari Dasi and their heirs respectively which may be incurred or sustained by the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns by or by reason of the defect if any in the title of the vendors to the said messuage land hereditaments and premises or any part thereof and moreover that the vendors, their heirs and representatives shall and will from time to time and at all times hereafter upon every reasonable request and at the costs and expenses of the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns make do acknowledge execute and perfect or cause and procure to be made done acknowledged executed or perfected with all proper despatch all such further and other lawful and reasonable acts deeds conveyances matters and things whatsoever for the better and more perfectly and absolutely granting conveying and assuring the said messuage land hereditaments and premises with its rights members and appurtenances unto and to the use of the purchasers their heirs representatives and assigns as by him or them shall be reasonably required. In witness whereof the vendors have hereunto set and subscribed their respective hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Stephen, J., before whom the case was heard in the first instance found in favour of the purchasers. In the course of his judgment, his Lordship observed as follows :—

"Under these circumstances I have to consider whether there is anything in this case to prevent the application of the general rule summarized in Norton on Deeds (1906 Ed.), p. 271 : 'A conveyance * * * * of all the estate, right, title or interest of the grantor in property to a purchaser for value passes every interest of the grantor, although not vested in him in the character in which he is made a party to the conveyance.' The case of Drew v. The Earl of Norbury (1) is authority for the proposition that when a person having several estates and interest in a denomination of land joins in conveying all his estate and interest in the lands to a purchaser, every estate or interest vested in him will pass by that conveyance, although not vested in him in the character in which he became a party to the conveyance. The case of Taylor v. The London and County Banking Co. (2) goes to show that A fortiori the same rule must be applied where the vendor had only one estate or interest in the property in question and made out that he was entitled to a larger interest than he was entitled to in the conveyance to the purchaser. In Rooper v. Harrison (3), the application of the rule to persons holding in autre droit is considered and the opinion of the Court was expressed that an exception to the general rule occurred in the case of persons holding estates per autre droit; and that an assignment by a person of all his goods and chattels would not pass those he held as executor unless he had none of his own, a limitation on the exception to the general rule that seems applicable to the present case, if we substitute for all his goods and chattels his right, title and interest in the premises affected. The facts before the Court were the converse of those in the present case, the conveyance being by executors and the question being whether this included the estate which one of them held for his own purposes and in his own right; but this does not seem to affect the application of the principle on which the opinion of the Court was expressed.

"It has been argued before me that the general rule is not applicable to the present case, because the vendor purports to act as absolute heir and (the deed) contains recita's which constitute a denial of his character of executor. In the cases I have mentioned however I find nothing to support this contention. The vendors made out a title as did the vendor in the present case, but that did not prevent their being considered to have exercised rights which were not disclosed. In this case it is true that the title they acted on is inconsistent with that under which it is sought to enforce their action and which is in fact denied; but the question cannot be decided on their representations made in the recitals, but on the rights which they must in fact be held to have exercised. If the evidence shewed that the purchasers were in any way cognisant of the existence of the mortgage which I have taken as evidence of the continuance of the executorship, I might be able to treat the conveyance as a collusive act; but the only evidence of this is the close connection between the conveyance and the mortgage and though this is suspicious, I cannot take it as conclusive. It may be argued that in the present case the vendor does not make out a good title, because the facts recited disclose the absolute rights of the Plaintiff to what she claims. The covenant to protect the purchasers against the claim of the Plaintiff also goes to show that the purchasers were aware of a defect in the title put forward. But the fact that the purchasers were content with a defective title does not of itself

(1) [1846] 3 J. & L. at p. 267.
(2) [1901] 2 Ch. 231.
(3) [1855] 2 K. & J. 86 at p. 112.

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

affect the question of the capacity in which the vendors acted."

The decision of Stephen, J., was reversed, on appeal, by Jenkins, C. J. (Woodroffe, J, concurring). In the course of his judgment his Lordship observed as follows :—

"The deed proceeded on the assumption that Hemendranath and his brothers were absolutely entitled to the property: it is however now admitted that this was not so, but that on Katyani's death it devolved, as her stridhan property, on the unmarried daughters, so that the present Plaintiff became entitled to the moiety she now claims in this suit. It is however urged by way of defence to her claim that Hemendranath as the surviving executor of Prem Chand's will was in that capacity enabled to create a title that would defeat the Plaintiff's and in this connection special reliance was placed on the general words whereby the vendors purported to convey all their estate, right, title, interest, claim and demand in the property. Cases were cited to us in support of this contention, but the law is clear: it is the true interpretation of the deed that has to be ascertained. Hemendranath is not expressed to be a party to the deed as executor, on the contrary he was made a party of the first part together with his surviving brothers, and they were together described as vendors, and the recitals point to the theory that he and his brothers were regarded as together absolutely and beneficially entitled to the property. Then the consideration-money is expressed to be paid not to him alone, as would have been the case had he been selling as executor, but to him and his co-vendors. And finally not only are the covenants for title such as are appropriate to a conveyance by absolute owners, but the vendors undertook to keep the purchasers and their heirs indemnified against all claims and demands by Sonamoni, an annuitant under the will, or by their sisters, of whom the present Plaintiff was one. This all goes to show that Hemendranath and his brothers joined in the transfer as beneficial owners. But matters do not rest there, for there are indications in the deed which go to negative the theory that Hemendranath was conveying as executor. Thus it is recited that all debts and legacies mentioned in the will had been paid and, as I have already said, the consideration-money is expressed to be paid to the three vendors. If Hemendranath was selling as executor, his hand alone should have received the purchase-money, and it was the purchaser's duty to have paid it to him and him alone. And this is more than a technical objection, for the money having been paid as it was to the three vendors, as though it was their own it is not unreasonable to assume that they dealt with it as such, and what has now become of it does not appear. Certainly there is nothing to suggest the inference that any part of it has reached the Plaintiff, so that it might be a serious detriment to her to regard the transaction as one carried out by Hemendranath as executor.

"It comes then to this that not only is the Defendants' contention opposed to the natural meaning of the document but it involves a payment of the purchase money in a mode not sanctioned by the relationship that this contention assumes. It in no way helps the solution of this case to cite decisions in which it has been held that by virtue of general words an interest may pass that is not specifically mentioned in a deed, as they merely proceed on the principle that a document should be so interpreted as to carry into effect the intention of the parties. But from a general consideration of the present conveyance it is to my mind clear that Hemendranath did not intend to join and did not in fact join in it as an executor.

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

"It follows from this that the Defendants' title cannot prevail against the Plaintiff and that her suit should not have been dismissed."

Hence this appeal.

Sir R. Finlay, K. C., and Mr. Bhugwandin Dube for the Appellant submitted that the trial Judge was right. The Appellants were bonâ fide purchasers for value. The title to the premises on the 12th December 1900 was in the sole surviving executor. The purchase price went to discharge the mortgage and the annuities which the executor was bound to pay and for which the premises were liable. Between the three of the vendors, they intended to convey a complete title. Reliance was placed on Preonath v. Surja Coomar (4).

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., and Mr. Dunne for the Respondents contended that all executorship and administration of the estate had come to an end by 1900. The terms of the conveyance shewed that the vendors sold as beneficial owners—as heirs of Katyani—but they were not her heirs under the Dayabhaga Law. The title of the Respondents must prevail unless it was defeated by the conveyance. The conveyance does not purport to be made as an executor. There were circumstances which shewed that Katyani was recognized as the owner of the premises. The executor had no title in December 1900 as he had apparently assented to the legacy long before. Even the trial Judge thought that the vendors seemed to sell as heirs. The general clause was not sufficient to convey the executor's interest when he purported to sell as beneficial owner or heir only.

Sir. R. Finlay, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD MOULTON.—This is an Appeal in a suit brought by the Respondent against the Appellants for a declaration of her title to an equal undivided half part or share in a certain house and premises known as 8, Sobharam Bysack's Street, Calcutta, and for recovery of the premises from the Appellants, in whose possession they were at the commencement of the suit, with an inquiry as to mesne profits. The facts of the case, so far as they are material, are not now in dispute, and are as follows :—

The house and premises originally belonged to Prem Chand Bysack, who died on the 13th June 1886, leaving a Will dated 25th October 1884. By his Will the said testator devised and bequeathed the said house and premises "to his daughter Katyani Dassee and her heirs absolutely," subject to two charges of 20 rupees per month, payable to two of his daughters-in-law and their children as and for periods specified in the Will. He appointed as executors Shambhoo Nath Bysack (the husband of his daughter Katyani Dassee), and two of her sons, Hemendra Nath Bysack and Ratanlal Bysack. On application for probate of this Will, the executors found that a caveat had been entered by some of the relations of the deceased testator, who alleged that the Will was a forgery. This led to a suit, where, after a prolonged inquiry, the Court, on the 16th May 1887, pronounced the Will to be genuine and granted probate of it, and directed that the costs of the executors should be paid out of the testator's estate.

(4) I. L. R. 19 Cal. 26 (34) (1891).

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

It would appear that the executors had no funds in hand out of which they could meet the costs of this litigation, and they therefore mortgaged the property for a sum of Rs. 3,950 to Dwarka Nath Dutt, who had been their attorney in the probate suit, in order to secure the payment of his costs, which amounted to Rs. 3,400, the balance, Rs. 550, being treated as a loan to them. Katyani Dassee was made a party to the mortgage bond apparently to put on record her wish that no portion of the estate should be sold to defray these costs. The term of the mortgage was 10 years.

Shambhoo Nath Bysack died in 1889, and Ratanlal Bysack died in 1891, leaving his brother Hemendra Nath Bysack surviving executor. In 1891 Katyani Dassee also died, leaving four sons and two unmarried daughters, of whom the Respondent was one.

In 1900 the heirs of Dwarka Nath Dutt, who had died in the meanwhile, instituted a suit against Hemendra Nath Bysack as sole surviving executor for sale of the property under their mortgage, and at the same time the two annuitants brought suits against him for arrears of their annuities. To meet these demands it was determined to sell the property, and accordingly by a deed dated the 12th of December 1900 the property was sold to the Appellant Bijraj Nopani, one of the Appellants, and Dowlatram, since deceased. The other Appellants are sued as the executors of his last Will and testament, one of them being Bijraj Nopani himself. It is on the interpretation of this deed of conveyance that the question now in issue depends, and in order to make clear the contentions of the two parties it is necessary to explain its form and to state how the dispute has arisen before discussing the construction of the deed.

The deed is made between Hemendra Nath Bysack and his two surviving brothers of the first part, Baroda Sundary Dassee, one of the annuitants of the second part, and Bijraj and Dowlatram of the third part. It recites that the property originally belonged to Prem Chand Bysack, that he devised it to his daughter Katyani Dassee and her heirs absolutely, subject to a charge for annuities of Rs. 20 per month, to Baroda Sundary Dassee and Sonamoni Dassee, respectively, and that he appointed Shambhoo Nath Bysack, Hemendra Nath Bysack and Ratanlal Bysack executors of such Will. It then recites the obtaining of probate of the Will after suit. It then recites the death of Katyani Dassee on the 8th day of April 1891, leaving five sons and three daughters, and the death of two of the sons unmarried, and also the death of Shambhoo Nath Bysack on 9th January 1899.

There next comes a recital that Hemendra Nath Bysack on the 4th day of September 1900 obtained an order whereby it was referred to the Registrar of the High Court to enquire whether there was any necessity for the sale of the said house, and what provision should be made to secure the payment of the legacies mentioned in the said Will out of the rents and profits of the house. It next recites that—

"the said Hemendra Nath Bysack, the sole surviving executor of the said Will, has since paid all the debts, liabilities and legacies mentioned in the said Will."

Then follows a recital that Sonamoni Dassee has filed a suit against the said Hemendra Nath Bysack for, amongst other things, a declaration of her rights under the said Will, and that the vendors have taken upon themselves the responsibility of entering satisfaction in the said suit, as also of satisfying the claims of any of their sisters, and that therefore the petition will not be proceeded with. There next comes a recital that the vendors have agreed with the purchasers that Rs. 10,000 shall remain with the purchasers as security for the annuity to Sonamoni Dassee, and that the other annuitant has been paid off by a sum of Rs. 708 in full satisfaction of her claim against the property.

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

Here the recitals terminate and the Indenture goes on to witness that the vendors have sold the property to the purchasers for Rs. 35,000, of which Rs. 10,000 are to be retained by them as security as aforesaid. The vendors grant, sell and convey the property to the purchasers in ordinary form, together with "all the estate, right, title, interest, claim and demand whatsoever of the vendors unto and upon the said messuage, land, hereditaments and premises and every part thereof, and also all deeds, papers and writings solely relating to the said premises or any part thereof now in the custody of the vendors or which they can procure without suit."

Then follows a covenant in the following words:—

"The vendors do for themselves and himself, their and his heirs and representatives do, and each of them doth hereby covenant with the purchasers, their heirs, representatives and assigns in manner following, that is to say, that the vendors at the time of sealing and delivery of these presents are lawfully, rightfully and absolutely possessed of and in the said messuage, land and hereditaments hereinbefore granted and conveyed as an estate equivalent to fee simple in possession, free from encumbrances, and that the vendors now have in themselves full power and absolute right, title and authority by these presents to grant and convey the said messuage, land, hereditaments and premises unto and to the use and behoof of the purchasers, their heirs, representatives and assigns from time to time."

Finally there is a covenant to indemnify the purchasers against any loss at the suit of the annuitant, Sonamoni Dassee, or the three sisters (of whom the Respondent is one), which may be incurred by them by or by reason of the defect, if any, in the title of the vendors to the property.

The Appellants paid the purchase-money and took possession of the property under the conveyance, and remained in possession until the 22nd June 1897, when the Respondent brought the present suit, claiming that she was entitled to one-half share in the said house, because as she and her sister Kanak Manjuri Dassee were unmarried daughters, they were entitled to share equally her property, inasmuch as it was stridhan. She claimed that she was not bound by the said sale.

The Respondent's claim to a moiety of her mother's stridhan is admitted to be good in law, so that the only question in the suit is whether the conveyance was valid. It is plain that at the date of this conveyance the property was still in the hands of the sole surviving executor Hemendra Nath Bysack, and therefore he was competent as executor to sell it to the Appellants, who were bonâ fide purchasers for value. But the Respondent contends that although Hemendra Nath Bysack was in a position validly to convey it to the Appellants as such executor, and did purport to convey it, he did not effectively do so, because the deed shows that he intended only to convey as a beneficial owner of the property, being under the impression that he and his two brothers, the co-vendors, were beneficially entitled to it as heirs to their mother, and being ignorant or forgetful of the right of the sisters to inherit in preference to them. It is on this ground alone that the High Court decided in favour of the Respondent, reversing the decision of the Judge of the Court below, who had held that Hemendra Nath Bysack had by the deed conveyed all the right and title he possessed in every capacity, including that of sole surviving executor of the Will of Prem Chand Bysack.

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the Judge of first instance was right and ought to have been affirmed by the Court of Appeal. In the first place, the deed itself gives abundant evidence that the position of Hemendra Nath Bysack as sole surviving executor was viewed as material by the parties to the conveyance, inasmuch as there are careful recitals as to the original appointment of executors and as to the death of his co-executors. His position as sole surviving executor could have no bearing on the conveyance if it were not that it affected, or might affect, his title to convey. But even in the absence of such direct evidence that the conveyance was by him in his capacity as executor as well as beneficial owner (if and to the extent that he was such owner), the deed makes it clear that all the vendors convey all the title and right that they possessed in the property, and that would undoubtedly include the right and title which one of them possessed as executor. That this would be the ordinary rule is admitted by the Judges of the Court of Appeal, who base their judgment on what they consider to be indications in the deed and in the conduct of the parties that the intention was that only the beneficial interest possessed by the vendors should be conveyed. Their Lordships are of opinion that this would be to contradict the deed itself; and moreover they are of opinion that the matters referred to would not support the conclusion drawn therefrom by the Judges of the High Court even if it was permissible to permit such considerations to affect the interpretation of the deed.

If the deed be considered from the point of view of the Appellants who were the purchasers and who were not otherwise concerned with the property or its history, the transaction as well as the deed which carries it out, become perfectly clear and intelligible. The property was by the Will charged with two annuities, and in order that the executor might procure the funds necessary to pay the costs of past litigation the property was under mortgage. This mortgage was being called in and the sale was to enable the mortgage money to be raised. The purchasers naturally desired a clear title free from entanglements. They therefore required that the mortgage should be paid off and the annuitants settled with or security given against their claims. For both these purposes it was necessary that Hemendra Nath Bysack as executor should be a party to the deed, because the original mortgage was effected by him for the purpose of securing the costs for which he was of course liable, and on his discharging the indebtedness as to costs he would become entitled to claim for the same as against the estate including the house in question. Moreover, it is abundantly clear from the executor's accounts and from all the facts appearing in the record that the house still fromed part of the undivided estate and that therefore he would be liable to pay the annuitants the amount of their annuities from time to time, as he had been doing for years past. The purchasers would not be likely to trouble themselves as to the question of whether or not the property would ultimately go to the sons or daughters, but would take care that all the persons in whom title could in any wise exist should join in the conveyance, and that they should be guaranteed against claims from those who did not do so. This is what the deed shows to have been done, and it would be entirely contrary to settled principles of law as well as most unjust to bonâ fide purchasers if the Courts were to allow its plain legal interpretation to be affected by speculations as to what particular rights existing in the various vendors were present to the minds of some or all of the parties to the conveyance at the date of its execution. The deed states plainly that whatever right or title the vendors possess is to go to support the conveyance, and it is a settled rule that the meaning of a deed is to be decided by the language used interpreted in its natural sense. From this wholesome rule their Lordships see no reason for departing in the present case.

BIRAJ NOPANI v. SREEMUTTY PURA SUNDARI DASSEE.

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this Appeal should be allowed and that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be set aside, with costs, and the judgment of the Judge of first instance restored. The Respondents will pay the costs of this Appeal.

Solicitors: Barrow, Rogers and Nevill for the Appellants.

Solicitors: Burton, Yeates and Hart for the Respondents.

B. D. Appeal allowed with costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

CHAUDHURI, J. 1914, 19, June. | BALCHAND and another v. TARAK NATH SADHU.

Oaths Act (X of 1873), sec. 13—Omission to record deposition as on solemn oath or affirmation—Presidency Court of Small Causes, enquiry by Registrar, as to proper service of summons, if judicial proceedings—Sanction to prosecute for false personation in service of summons—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 195.

Before the Registrar of the Presidency Court of Small Causes at Calcutta whose duty it is to enquire into the proper service of summons and to take evidence in this behalf, it transpired that the Petitioners in this case by false representation had returned the summons as properly served and the Public Prosecutor at the instance of the Chief Judge made an application for sanction to prosecute the Petitioner under sec. 205 of the Indian Penal Code, which was granted by the said Registrar under sec. 195 of the Criminal Procedure Code and upon a Rule being obtained to question the propriety of the sanction,

Held—That the proceedings before the Registrar were judicial proceedings and he was a judicial officer, that the sanction given by him to prosecute was properly given and the fact that it was not stated in the depositions recorded by the Registrar that they were taken on solemn oath or affirmation was a matter covered by sec. 13 of the Oaths Act.

THE QUEEN v. SEWA BHOGTA (1) and QUEEN-EMPRESS v. SHAVA (3) referred to.

On the 17th April 1914, Counsel applied on behalf of the Petitioners for a rule upon the Public Prosecutor to show cause why sanction for the prosecution

(1) 14 B. L. R. 294 F. B. (1874).
(3) I. L. R. 16 Bom. 359 (1891).

BALCHAND v. TARAK NATH SADHU.

of Bal Chand under sec. 205, I. P. C., and Talim Chand under secs. 205 and 205 read with sec. 114, I. P. C., granted by the Registrar of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes on the 13th of January 1914 should not be set aside.

The material facts of this case are that on the 9th April 1913 the firm of Thermull Thurmull filed a suit in the Small Cause Court being suit No. 7019 of 1913 against the firm of Kaluram Chogmull for the recovery of Rs. 1,059-13-6. The Defendant firm consisted of 11 persons as partners. On the 3rd January 1914, the suit against the Defendants Nos. 1, 5, 9, 10 and 11 was allowed to be withdrawn and the summonses on the other Defendants were found to have been duly served. All these proceedings took place before the Registrar.

It is alleged tbat Bal Chand falsely personated Talim Chand in the said suit No. 7019 of 1913 and received the summons intended for Talim Chand and Talim Chand had falsely pointed out Bal Chand as Talim Chand on the occasion of service of the summons.

The rule came on for hearing on the 15th May 1914.

Mr. Jackson (with Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri) appeared for the Petitioners in support of the rule and contended that the Registrar, being only a ministerial officer, had no jurisdiction to grant a sanction under sec. 195, Cr. P. C, and that the Public Prosecutor could not legally make an application at the request of the Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court for the grant of sanction. The Registrar was wrong in acting on an unverified petition put in by the Public Prosecutor.

Mr. B. C. Mitter for the Public Prosecutor showed cause and argued that the Registrar is not merely a ministerial officer; he has judicial powers (see secs. 59 and 14 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act). Because the Public Prosecutor applied at the request of the Chief Judge, that cannot vitiate the proceedings. As regards the unverified petition on which the Public Prosecutor applied, he contended that no omission to take any oath or make any affirmation could invalidate any proceeding and referred to sec. 13 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHAUDHURI, J.—I have taken some time to consider this matter, having regard to the way in which the matter was placed before me by the accused persons. Under the rules of the Small Cause Court the Registrar of that Court is the officer who is entitled to decide the question of service of summons, and in so doing, he is entitled to take evidence, and these proceedings are certainly in the nature of judicial proceedings, and therefore the matter strictly arises within his jurisdiction. It cannot be said that he was acting in a ministerial capacity, and I find from the petition itself that, so far as the proceedings relating to the services of summons are concerned, the whole of such proceedings were carried on before him. He makes out a list after the service is ready and the cases then go before the Judges.

In this matter he granted the sanction upon an application made by the Public Prosecutor who was apparently moved by the Chief Judge of the Court to make such an application. An objection was taken that in granting such sanction the persons upon whose statements the Registrar relied were not examined on oath. No doubt the statements as taken down do not shew that they were examined on oath. The words "S. O" or "S. A" are not to be found there, but yet under the Indian Oaths Act, sec. 13, if there was an omission to administer the oath, or affirmation, the irregularity, if any, is cured. There is ample authority for that proposition; amongst others see The Queen v. Sewa Bhogta (1) which was referred to in Nundo Lal Bose v. Nistarini Dasi (2)—but the point was not dealt with —and Queen-Empress v. Shava (3), it having been held that accidental or negligent omission in taking oath is saved by sec. 13 of the Oaths Act. It seems to me that there was no irregularity in granting such sanction, and under the circumstances, I must discharge the rule. In such matter, the application being of a quasi-criminal nature, I discharge the rule, but do not make any order for costs as against the Applicants.

ALCHAND v. TARAK NATH SADHU.

Messrs. Fox & Mondal, Attorneys for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor for the Opposite Party.

Rule discharged without costs.

(1) 14 B. L. R. 294 F. B. (1874).
(2) I. L. R. 27 Cal. 428, 434 (1900).
(3) I. L. R. 16 Bom. 359 (1891).

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 656 OF 1912.

CHITTY, J. 1914, 8, July.

SRI LAL v. ARJUN DAS and others.

Arbitration—Award filed out of time—Agreement of parties not to dispute award—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 148, Sch. II, cls. 8, 15 and Or. XXIII, r. 3.

Where the Court granted time till the 28th of February 1914 for "filing" the award, and the arbitrators made an award in the Hindi language on that date and also signed the same, but instead of filing it on that day had the same rendered into English and filed the same on the 2nd of March following:

Held, that the word "filing" in the Court's order was a clerical error and since the Hindi award was "made" within the time fixed by Court, it did not matter that the award rendered into English was prepared and filed two days later; the requirements of the law had been satisfied and the award was a good one.

Quære—Whether SHIB KRISHNA v. SATISH CHANDRA, (1) had been rightly decided having regard to the change in the law made by the wordings of sec. 148 and Sch. II, cls. 8 and 15 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908), which would seem to give the Court discretion to extend time even after the original time for making the award has expired.

Whether having regard to the above changes in the law the decision of the Privy Council in RAJAH HAR NARAIN v. BHAGWUNT (2) is of the same binding authority as before.

Semble:—As in this case while the award was being rendered into English the parties entered into a written agreement not to dispute the award, the Plaintiff was precluded from questioning the award. The agreement might be regarded as amounting to a fresh submission and acceptance of the English award as an award binding on all the parties to the agreement, or it might be regarded as a lawful adjustment of the suit which might be enforced as a decree under Or. XXIII, r. 3.

In this case the original award was made by the arbitrators in Hindi on the

(1) I. L. R. 38 Cal. 522 (1911).
(2) I. L. R. 13 All. 300; s. c. L. R. 18 I. A. 55 (1891).

SRI LAL v. ARJUN DAS.

last day, fixed by Court, viz., the 28th February 1914, which was a Saturday. It was also signed by them, but it was not filed on that day. On Sunday and Monday the Hindi award was rendered into English and on the latter day, i. e., on the 2nd of March 1914, it was filed. Before filing, the parties subscribed to an agreement that they would not dispute the award in any way. But subsequently Plaintiff took exception to the award. Thereupon followed three applications—one by the Plaintiff to set aside the award of the arbitrators in the above suit, on the ground that the award was filed after the expiration of the time, the two others made by the Defendants for enlarging the time, if necessary, for the filing of award, and for judgment on the award.

The material facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. Sarkar with Mr. S. Ghosh for the Plaintiff.

Mr. H. D. Bose with Mr. A. N. Chaudhuri for the Defendants.

Mr. Sarkar.—The only award we have is the English award filed in this Court on the 2nd of March. The arbitrators were functi officio after the 28th of February [Shib Krishna v. Satish Chandra (1) and Shib Krishna v. Satish Chhndra (3) referred to]. Refers to Digambari v. Joy Narayan (4). Cl. 8 of Sch. II, C. P. C., 1908, corresponds with sec. 514 of the old Code. Therefore the ruling in Rajah Har Narain v. Bhagwant (2) has not in any way been affected by this new Code.

The time having expired on the 28th of February, the consent of the parties under the agreement of the 2nd of March could not give the arbitrators jurisdiction: Ledgard v. Bull (5), Chuha Mal v. Hari Ram (6).

Mr. Bose.—So far as Shib Krishna v. Satish Chandra (1) is concerned, it was wrongly decided.'

The award was made and signed in Nagri on the 28th of February which was Saturday and was afterwards rendered into English and filed on Monday the 2nd of March.

There is difference between r. 8 of Sch II of the present Code and sec. 514 of the old Code as also between r. 15, Sch. II, and sec. 521 of the old Code. The later was necessary because of the rulings in Kali Prasanna v. Rajani Kanta (7), so that it cannot be said that this Code has not affected the Privy Council ruling in Rajah Har Narain v. Bhagwant (2). The agreement at any rate amounted to a waiver.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

CHITTY, J.—This suit was filed by Sri Lal on the 26th June 1912 against Arjun Das and his brothers for a declaration that he was entitled to a half share in several businesses, that the businesses should be dissolved and accounts taken. On 14th July 1913 all matters in dispute in the suit were referred to the arbitration of Daulatram Chokhani and Shib Prosad Garodia, and they were directed to make their award within ten weeks from the date of the delivery to them of the said order. The arbitrators were unable to

(1) I. L. R. 38 Cal. 522 (1911).
(2) I. L. R. 13 All. 300: s. c. L. R. 18 I. A. 55 (1891).
(3) I. L. R. 39 Cal. 822 (1912).
(4) 16 C. L. J. 573 (1912).
(5) L. R. 13 I. A. 134 (1886).
(6) I. L. R. 8 All. 548 (1886).
(7) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 141 (1897).

SRI LAL v. ARJUN DAS.

proceed with the matter at once and so the ten weeks elapsed without an award being made.

On the 5th January 1914 I made an order allowing the arbitrators until 28th February 1914 within which to make their award. By a slip in the said order, instead of the word "make" the word "file" was used, but that appears to me to be a matter of little importance. The order purported to be one under Sch. II, para. 8, of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, and the word should undoubtedly have been "make." The arbitrators held numerous meetings and eventually on 28th February 1914, the last day for making their award, they drew up and signed an award in Hindi. The 28th was a Saturday, and the award could not be filed on that afternoon. Accordingly on the Sunday the arbitrators saw Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan and asked him whether it would not be better that the award should be submitted to the Court in English. Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan accordingly put into formal English the Hindi award, which was read out to him by Shib Prosad Garodia. He did this partly on the Sunday and partly on Monday the 2nd March 1914. Though not a literal translation, the English award reproduces the Hindi award clause for clause and term for term. On 2nd March 1914 the arbitrators and the parties were all present in Babu Debi Prasad Khaitan's office when the English award prepared by Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan was signed by the arbitrators, as was also the letter from the arbitrators to the Registrar forwarding the award. In that letter they stated, "we met and signed our award on the said 28th day of February, but the same could not be filed in Court on the said day being a Saturday. We understand that the time to file the award having thus expired, the parties are going to apply to the Court for leave to file the same." On the advice of Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan an agreement was drawn up on an eight-anna stamp paper and signed by the parties on that day. It was to this effect—"We agree on and to the terms set forth in the award made by Babus Daulatram Chokhani and Shib Prosad Garodia which has been 'fully' explained us, and further agree not to raise any objections thereto as to its validity whether on the grounds of expiry of time or otherwise howsoever." The Plaintiff Sri Lal being dissatisfied with the award at first took up the position that he signed that agreement without knowing its contents and without understanding to what he was putting his name. That contention has been expressly withdrawn by his counsel and the Plaintiff now admits that when he signed that document, which was explained to him by Babu Debi Prosad Khaitan, he knew its contents and understood what he was doing. This, however, did not prevent him from taking steps at once to object to the award as having been filed out of time. I have before me three matters—(1) a petition now by the Plaintiff that the award may be set aside as having been filed out of time, (2) a petition by the Defendants that, if necessary, the time may be extended and that the Plaintiff may be at liberty to file the award, and (3) the Defendants' application that judgment be passed in accordance with the award. Plaintiff's counsel admits that there are no merits whatsoever in his client's contention. He could hardly do otherwise, as a more shameless attempt to get out of his agreement on a highly technical point can hardly be conceived. The Plaintiff relies upon the case of Shib Krishna v. Satish

SRI LAL v. ARJUN DAS.

Chandra (1) in which Mr. Justice Harington held that the Court had no power to extend the time for filing an award, which had already been made before the application was presented. The learned Judge relied upon the case of Har Narain Singh v. Bhugwant Kuar (2), but that was a case decided under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that an award made out of time was invalid and that the arbitrators by such effluxion of time were functi officio. In so doing they followed the express words of sec. 521, which ran that "no award shall be valid unless made within the period allowed by the Court." With all respect to the learned Judge who decided the case in Shib Krishna v. Satish Chandra (1) it appears to me that he did not give sufficient weight to the change which was made in the wording of sec. 521 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, in enacting para. 15 of the Second Schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. As para. 15 runs, it appears to me to leave a discretion to the Court in deciding whether an award shall be set aside on the ground of its having been made after the expiration of the period allowed by the Court. I feel some doubt, therefore, whether the decision in Shib Krishna v. Satish Chandra (1) is correct in law. Sec. 148 of the present Code is in no way restricted, nor indeed is paragraph 8 of the second schedule. It might, therefore, be argued not without reason that they ought not to be restricted in the manner there held. It is, however, unnecessary to decide that point, because I am unable to see how in the face of his agreement of 2nd March 1914 the Plaintiff can possibly contend that he is not bound by this award. His objection is highly technical and it may be met in various ways. It may be said that that agreement operated as a fresh submission to arbitration and acceptance of the award as signed on that day by the arbitrators. It might also be said that it was a lawful adjustment of the suit which might be enforced by a decree against the Plaintiff under the provisions of Or. XXIII, r. 3. It might further be said that the Plaintiff is precluded from putting forward his present objection by the concluding words of his agreement not to raise any objection to the award or to its validity whether on the ground of expiry of time or otherwise howsoever. The difficulty might again be got over by directing that not the English award but the Hindi award which is in identically the same terms though not in the same language should be filed as the award of the arbitrators. It appears to me quite unnecessary to go through these formalities. It is abundantly clear that an award was made within time. The arbitrators decided to have the award drawn up in English, but before doing so they took an agreement from the parties not to raise any objection to this being done. I must, therefore, dismiss the application of the Plaintiff Sri Lal with costs and pass a decree in terms of the award.

Messrs. Dey and Kshetri, Attorneys for the Plaintiff.

Mr. S. C. Mukerjee, Attorney for the Defendants.

Decree upon award.

(1) I. L. R. 38 Cal. 522 (1911)

(2) I. L. R. 13 All. 300 : s. c. L. R. 18 I. A. 55 (1891).

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION]
APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 3004 OF 1911.

HOLMWOOD, J.
CHAPMAN, J.
1914,
Heard, 6 and 7, May.
Judgment, 7, May.

HAKIMULLA and another, Defendants, Appellants,
v.
NABIN CHANDRA BARUA, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Lunatic, suit against—Ex parte decree against unrepresented lunatic—Ignorance of Court as to fact of lunacy—Jurisdiction of Court—Fraudulent purchase by de facto manager of lunatic—Rights of purchasers from such fraudulent purchaser.

One N was a lunatic not adjudged as such. During his lunacy a suit for rent was brought by the landlord for two plots of land belonging to the lunatic and two rent decrees were obtained ex parte against the lunatic who was not at all represented in the suit. The fact of the lunacy was not brought to the notice of the Court. At the auction-sales in execution of the decrees the properties were purchased by a person who was the lunatic's de facto manager who again sold them to other persons who purchased with full knowledge of the lunacy:

Held—That as the lunatic or his estate was not represented in the rent-suit, the sales under the decrees of the Court therein obtained were nullities and the purchaser acquired no title by his purchase. The purchaser, being besides a fraudulent purchaser who had acted deliberately in breach of his trust as de facto manager of the lunatic, could not in any case be allowed to take advantage of the Court-sales even if they had been made with jurisdiction.

As he had no title whatever the purchasers from him also acquired no title.

RASIK LAL DATTA v. BIDHUMUKHI DASSI (1) relied on.

KHAIRAJ MAL v. DAIM (2) doubted.

This was an Appeal from a decree of Babu Jagan Mohan Sarkar, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Zilla Chittagong, dated the 26th of July 1911, confirming a decree of Babu Ananda Kishore Dutta Roy, Munsif, 2nd Court of Chittatong, dated the 31st May 1910.

The facts of the case material to this report will appear from the Judgment.

Mr. Z. R. Zahid and Babu Khitish Chandra Sen for the Appellants.

Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta and Babu Sahai Ram Basu for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

HOLMWOOD, J.—This Second Appeal arises out of a suit, brought by a lunatic, named Nabin Chandra Barua, through his next friend, guardian and sister, Sreemutty Shantim, against several Defendants, of whom the Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are the only Defendants with whom we are concerned in this appeal. It appears that the Defendant No. 2 was another sister of the lunatic and the wife of the Defendant No. 1, Isap Ali. During the lunacy of the Plaintiff (which is found as a fact notorious and known in the neighbourhood where he lived and had his property) a suit was brought by the landlord, for the rent of two plots, Nos. 1 and 2 in the schedule of the present plaint, and two rent-decrees were obtained, ex parte, against the lunatic, who was not at all represented in the suit. Both the Courts below have held that as in the decrees and auction-sales Nobin was not properly represented, his right was not affected by the sales; that, as the Defendant No. 1 was the de facto manager of Nobin, he acquired no title by his purchase as against Nobin; and that, as the sales were

(1) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 1094 (1906).

(2) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 296, at p. 315 (1904).

HAKIMULLA v. NABIN CHANDRA BARUA.

nullities and inoperative, so far as Nobin was concerned, the other Defendants, who are purchasers from Isap Ali with full knowledge of the lunacy and knowing everything about the family affairs, have also acquired no title.

We think that the judgments and decrees of the lower Courts must be supported.

It has been argued in appeal before us that the Plaintiff not having been adjudged a lunatic and the case falling under the provisions of the former Code of Civil Procedure by reason of the provisions of sec. 463 of that Code, the Court trying the rent suit had jurisdiction to pass a decree and to sell the property; and it is sought to be argued that the Court has such jurisdiction in every case, except the case mentioned in sec. 463 (the case of adjudged lunatics). Now that that is not the case has been clearly shown in the case of Rasik Lal Datta v. Bidhumukhi Dassi (1) where Mookerjee, J. (at page 1084) says :—"The Code therefore makes no provision for representation of lunatics, who may be Plaintiffs or Defendants, but who have not been adjudged as persons of unsound mind. Under such circumstances I must hold that the Court in which a suit has been instituted by or against such a person, has an inherent power to determine whether the party who is alleged to be a lunatic is really so, and if he is found to be a lunatic, to make an order for the appointment of a next friend or guardian ad litem. If any other view were maintained, the consequences might be extremely inconvenient and there might be a failure of justice; for instance, during the pendency of the proceedings under Act XXXV of 1858, the right to sue of the lunatic may become barred by limitation; or if the lunatic is proposed to be made a Defendant, the intending Plaintiff would be obliged to take recourse to proceedings under the Lunacy Act before he could be permitted to institute his action." Where, therefore, through the ignorance of the Court, the Court assumes jurisdiction over a lunatic, it appears to us that that proceeding is a nullity; and that is what had been laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Khairaj Mal v. Daim (2). It is true that was a case of minors; but their Lordships deal with the observations of Lord Hobhouse, who laid down the rule which was pressed before us in this appeal, that where the Court in exercising its jurisdiction had made a mistake, the wronged party can only take the course prescribed for setting matters right, and that if that course is not taken, the decision, however wrong, cannot be disturbed. But the Privy Council say that the case where the Judge accepted, without question, the statement on the record that the minor was legally represented and Alahnawaz was his guardian and never applied his mind to the matter, where the proceedings were cut short by the agreement for reference and other matters, and where, therefore, there was no adjudication on the question of whether the estate was represented or not —was not the case of an erroneous decision, ruling or exercise of discretion of the Judge in a matter in which the Court had jurisdiction. They held that the estate of Nauras was not represented in law or in fact in either of the suits and that the sale of his property was therefore without jurisdiction and null and void, and that is precisely the case here. The fact that it was not brought to the notice of the

(1) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 1094 (1906).

(2) I. L. R. 32 Cal. 296 at p. 315 (1904).

HAKIMULLA v. NABIN CHANDRA BARUA.

Court that the Defendant was a lunatic left the Court entirely without jurisdiction. The lunatic was never represented at all; and his estate certainly was not represented in the rent-suits. The sales under the decree of that Court were nullities. The Defendant No. 1 therefore, in any case, acquired no title by his purchase, he being, in fact, found to be a fraudulent purchaser, who had acted deliberately in breach of his trust as de facto manager of Nobin. He could not, in any case, have been allowed to take any advantage whatever of the Court-sale, even if it had been made with jurisdiction. As he had no title whatever, the purchasers from him have also acquired no title. The lower Appellate Court has gone so far as to hold, as a fact, that the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4 were aware throughout of the lunacy of the Plaintiff and of the family affairs; and it has held that it was not a bonâ fide purchase for value. So that, in any case, they would have to make restoration by reconveyance, had anything passed to them. But we hold, on the principles we have already enunciated, that the sales were nullities and inoperative, and that nothing passed.

Nothing has been said to us regarding the right of the Defendants Nos. 3 to 8 to plot No. 1 in schedule 3, as tenants of the Plaintiff; nor does anything appear to have been said in the lower Appellate Court. We must therefore take it that the originial decretal order of the Munsif is the order in the suit which has been affirmed by the lower Appellate Court; and, as we are of opinion that both the lower Courts are correct in their decision, this appeal must be dismissed, with costs and the decrees of the lower Courts affirmed.

CHAPMAN, J.—I agree. A sale in execution of a decree obtained against a lunatic, who has not been properly represented is in my opinion a void sale, not merely voidable. In so far as the case of Uma Sundari Dasi v. Ramji Haldar (3) lays down any general rule to the contrary, I must respectfully dissent from it. The English cases there cited are no authority for any such general rule as that stated in the judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]
APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE
No. 2910 OF 1909.

MOOKERJEE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1913,
Heard, 15 and 16, May.
Judgment, 16, May.

AKHIL PRODHAN, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
MANMATHA NATH KAR and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Suit for declaration that certain proceedings in Court held at Plaintiff's instance were fictitious and of no effect—Circumstances disentitling Plaintiff to protection in Court of equity—Circumstances entitling fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud—Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), sec. 317, if applies where suit fictitious—Agreement by fictitious decree-holder-purchaser to restore land—Suit if for specific performance—Limitation.

The Plaintiff as tenant held some lands under one K who in 1894 unsuccessfully sued to eject him as a trespasser. In this litigation the Plaintiff was assisted by one J in whose favour he executed a fictitious conveyance in 1898. In 1899 finding that J was unfaithful, Plaintiff induced K to institute a fictitious suit for rent which was decreed on the 7th November 1899. K took out execution of this decree and at the sale which followed purchased the holding on the 19th March 1900. According to

(3) I. L. R. 7 Cal. 242: s. c. 9 C. L. R. 18 (1881).

AKHIL PRODHAN v. MANMATHA NATH KAR.

Plaintiff's allegation K had agreed to execute a release of the holding in his favour, and although possession was formally delivered to K on 5th June 1900, Plaintiff continued in occupation of the land. In November 1906 K with the help of the Police took away the crops raised by the Plaintiff and on the 15th March 1907 Plaintiff brought a suit for declaration that the entire proceedings in the rent-suit of 1899 were fictitious and also for confirmation of his possession of the land:

Held—That the suit was not one for specific performance of a contract and was not barred by limitation.

That the case fell within the principle of the decision of the High Court in JADU NATH PODDAR v. RUP LAL PODDAR (1) and of the Judicial Committee in PETHERPERMAL CHETTY v. MUNIANDY SERVAI (2), namely, that to enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud the contemplated fraud must be effected, when and when alone does the fraudulent grantor or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with and the Plaintiff was not disentitled to protection in a Court of equity.

That sec. 317 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 did not apply to the present case.

Sec. 317, C. P. C., contemplates a real sale in execution of a real decree in a real suit.

This was an Appeal preferred on the 6th of December 1909 against the decree of E. E. Forester, Esq., District Judge of Zilla Midnapur, dated the 3rd of September 1909, reversing the decree of Babu Ambica Charan Mukherjee, Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of that District, dated the 31st of July 1908.

(1) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 967 (1906).
(2) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 551 (1908).

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Manmatho Nath Mukherjee for the Appellant.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakravartty, Surendra Nath Das-Gupta and Sasadhar Roy for Babu Surendra Nath Roy for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an Appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for declaration that the proceedings in a rent-suit brought against him by the first and second Defendants were fictitious and have not affected his title to the lands mentioned in the schedule to the plaint, and also for confirmation of possession of those lands. The circumstances under which the Plaintiff seeks relief are not now in controversy. The subject matter of litigation was held by the Plaintiff under the Kar Defendants as a tenant. In 1894, his landlord sued to eject him, on the allegation that he was a trespasser. This suit was dismissed by the Court of first instance and that decree was ultimately affirmed, on appeal, by this Court on the 20th July 1897. In this litigation, the Plaintiff was assisted by the Jana Defendants. Accordingly in 1898 he executed fictitious conveyances in their favour with a view to protect himself from further aggression on the part of the Kars. In 1899, he found that the Janas were unfaithful, and so to protect himself against the Janas, he induced his landlord to institute a fictitious suit for rent. That suit was decreed on the 7th November 1899. The Kars took out execution of this decree, the Janas thereupon preferred a claim which was disallowed on the 20th January 1900. The decree was subsequently executed and at the sale which followed, the Kars purchased the holding on the 29th March 1900. The Plaintiff alleges that possession was formally delivered to the Kars on the 5th June 1900, as a matter of fact he himself has ever since continued in occupation of the land. On the 10th April 1900, the Janas sued the Plaintiff and the Kars for declaration of their title on the basis of their conveyances; but on the 23rd July 1900 this suit was withdrawn. In 1906 the Kars turned against the Plaintiff, and with the help of the Police took away by force the crops raised by him. On the 15th March 1907, the Plaintiff commenced this suit for declaration that the entire proceedings in the rent suit of 1899 were fictitious and that the Kars did not acquire any title on the basis of their purchase at the execution sale. The Court of first instance found in favour of the Plaintiff and made a decree in accordance with the prayer in the plaint. Upon appeal that decree has been set aside by the District Judge on the ground that as the Plaintiff entered into this fraudulent arrangement with the Kars with a view to defraud the Janas, he is not entitled to any relief in a Court of equity. The District Judge has further found that the suit is in essence a suit for specific performance of a contract and is consequently barred by limitation. On the present appeal the decision of the District Judge has been assailed on two grounds, namely, first, that the suit is not barred by limitation and, secondly, that the conduct of the Plaintiff has not been such as to disentitle him to relief in a Court of equity. These points have been controverted on behalf of the Kar Defendants who have further urged that the suit is barred under sec. 317 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882. In our opinion, the decree of the District Judge cannot be supported.

AKHIL PRODHAN v. MANMATHA NATH KAR.

In so far as the first ground is concerned, no question of limitation arises in this case. The suit is not one for specific performance of a contract. No doubt, the Plaintiff alleged that the Kar Defendants had agreed to execute a release and in the prayer clause of the plaint he asked for a decree for execution of such release by the Kars. But the suit is in essence one for declaration of title to land and for confirmation of possession. The Plaintiff seeks a declaration that the proceedings in the rent-suit were fictitious and did not operate to affect his title in any manner; he also prays for confirmation of possession. As the Kars turned against the Plaintiff and took away the crops grown by him in November 1906, and the suit was commenced on the 15th March 1907, it is amply in time. We hold accordingly that the suit is not barred by limitation.

In so far as the second ground is concerned, it is clear that the Plaintiff is not disentitled to relief in a Court of equity. It may be conceded that the fictitious suit for rent was instituted against him by the Kars at his instance with a view to make it impossible for the Janas to assert their claim under the conveyances. But the Janas cannot be said to have been defrauded unless it is established that they had a valid title. Upon this point, the Court of first instance found that the Janas who are said to have been defrauded paid no consideration for the conveyances in their favour; in other words, that the conveyances were fictitious documents which had been executed by the Plaintiff with a view to protect himself from any invasion of his right by the Kars. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to maintain the view that the Janas were defrauded. On behalf of the Kars, we have been pressed to remand the case for consideration of the question whether the Janas had any subsisting title; but we cannot accede to this request. It is plain from the grounds of appeal taken by the Kars before the District Judge that the findings of the Court of first instance upon this question were not specifically assailed and it is clear that if the point had been argued before the District Judge, there would have been a discussion of the evidence on this point in the judgment. It appears to have been assumed before the District Judge that the Janas were defrauded, because the effect of the execution sale was to make it impossible for the Janas to assert their title. But it appears to have been overlooked that if they had no real title to the property, they could not be defrauded. The case thus falls within the principle of the decision of this Court in Jadunath Poddar v. Ruplal Poddar (1), and of the Judicial Committee in Petherpermal Chetty v. Muniandy Servai (2), namely, that to enable a fraudulent confederate to retain property transferred to him in order to effect a fraud, the contemplated fraud must be effected, when and when alone does the fraudulent grantor or giver lose the right to claim the aid of the law to recover the property he has parted with. The Plaintiff is consequently not disentitled to protection in a Court of equity.

AKHIL PRODHAN v. MANMATHA NATH KAR.

The only other point which requires consideration is whether the suit is barred under the provisions of sec. 317 of the Code of 1882. That section provides that no suit shall be maintained against a certified purchaser on the ground that the purchase was made on behalf of any other person or on behalf of a man through whom such other person claims. The case before us is not a suit of this description; sec. 317 contemplates a real sale in execution of a real decree in a real suit. Here we find a fictitious suit for rent in which there was no controversy between the parties. In that fictitious suit a fictitious decree was made and the sale held in execution of that decree was equally fictitious. To a suit of this description the observation of Lord Brougham in Bandon v. Becher (3) applies: "A sentence is a Judicial determination of a cause agitated between real parties, upon which a real interest has been settled. In order to make a sentence, there must be a real interest, a real argument, a real prosecution, a real defence, a real decision. Of all these qualities, not one takes place in the case of a fraudulent and collusive suit; there is no Judge but a person invested with the ensigns of a Judicial office, is misemployed in listening to a fictitious cause proposed to him; there is no party litigating, there is no party Defendant, no real interest brought into question" [see Radhamadhab v. Kalpataru (4)]. To a suit of this description sec. 317 cannot possibly have any application.

The result is that this Appeal is allowed, the decree of the District Judge set aside, and the suit decreed with costs in all the Courts in the manner following:

(1) I. L. R. 33 Cal. 967 (978) (1906).
(2) I. L. R. 35 Cal. 551 (1908).
(3) 3 Cl. and F. 479 (1835).
(4) 17 C. L. J. 209 (212) (1912).

AKHIL PRODHAN v. MANMATHA NATH KAR.

The decree will declare that the suit for rent (No. 369 of 1899) instituted against the Plaintiff by the Kar Defendants in 1899 and all proceedings based thereon were fictitious and have not affected his title in any manner; his possession will further be confirmed, or if he has meanwhile been dispossessed, he will be restored to possession in execution of this decree.

Appeal allowed.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULES NOS. 41, 42, 43, 376 AND 144 OF 1914.

FLETCHER, J. RICHARDSON, J. 1914, Heard, 11, May. Judgment, 20, May.

ESHANI DASI, Decree-holder, Petitioner;
v.
GOPAL CHANDRA DEY and ors., Judgment-debtors, Opposite Party.

Married Women's Property Act (III of 1874), secs. 2, 4, 6—Hindu effecting a policy of life insurance for benefit of wife and children—Policy money if available for his debts on death—Statute, application of, leading to anomaly—Interpretation.

A policy of life insurance effected by a Hindu for the benefit of his wife and children is not governed by the provisions of sec. 6 of the Married Women's Property Act of 1874.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—Although sec. 2 of the Act expressly provides that nothing in the Act applies to any married woman who at the time of her marriage professed the Hindu amongst other religions, or whose husband at the time of such marriage professed that religion and does not expressly exempt their children from the operation of the Act, the intention of the Legislature, taking the Act as a whole, is to exclude the children also from the benefits of sec. 6 of the Act.

If the words of an Act are so plain that no other construction is reasonably possible, the anomaly must be accepted and effect must be given to the language which the Legislature has chosen to employ. But if the language is of doubtful import, the most reasonable construction of which it is fairly capable ought to be adopted:

Held—PER CURIAM—That the money due under the policy in question formed part of the estate of the assured and was available for payment of his debts after his death.

This was a Rule granted on the 12th January 1914 against an order of Babu Baroda Proshad Roy, Subordinate Judge of Hooghly, dated the 23rd Decemb r 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the Judgment.

Babus Jadu Nath Kunjilal and Jogendra Kumar De for the Petitioner in Nos. 41, 42, 43 and 376.

Babus Sasi Sekhar Roy and Rishendra Nath Sirkar for the Petitioner in No. 144

Babus Ram Chandra Majumdar and Guru Das Sinha for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

FLETCHER, J.—The only questions raised by these 5 Rules is whether a sum of Rs 2,000, payable by the Oriental Government Security Life Assurance Co, Ltd., under or by virtue of a policy of assurance on the life of one Radha Kishore De, numbered 24003, is available for the payment of the debts of Radha Kishore De. Radha Kishore De was a Hindu. He died in the month of January 1913. The Opposite Parties to these Rules are his heirs.

Radha Kishore in his life-time effected the policy in question on his own life for the benefit of his wife and children. The policy purports to be issued under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1874. The question for our determination is—does sec. 6 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1874, apply to a policy of assurance effected by a Hindu on his own life for the benefit of his wife and children? In the present case the assured has not purported to create any trust in respect of the money payable under the policy. Unless, therefore, sec. 6 of the Act applies, the contract of assurance being with Radha Kishore, the right to call for payment is vested in his representatives and forms a portion of his estate: Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association (1). Different views have been taken in the High Courts in India as to whether sec. 6 of the Act authorises a married Hindu man to effect a policy of assurance in accordance with the provisions of the section.

ESHANI DASI v. GOPAL CHANDRA DEY.

The High Court at Bombay in the case of Shankar v. Umabai (2) take the broad view that the Act of 1874 does not apply to Hindus and therefore that a policy effected by a Hindu for the benefit of his wife and children is not governed by the provisions of sec. 6.

On the other hand, the High Court at Madras in the case of Balamba v. Krishnayya (3) have held that the provisions of sec. 6 of the Act apply to a policy effected by a Hindu on his own life for the benefit of his wife and children.

Now sec. 2 of the Act provides that—"Nothing herein contained applies to any married woman who at the time of her marriage professed the Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion or whose husband at the time of such marriage professed any of those religions.' And sec. 6 of the Act is in these terms—"A policy of assurance effected by any married man on his own life and expressed on the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife or his wife and children or any of them shall enure and be deemed to be a trust for the benefit of his wife or of his wife and children or any of them according to the interest so expressed and shall not as long as any object of the trust remains, be subject to the control of the husband or to his creditors or form part of his estate." A policy effected under the terms of the section by a married man coming within the terms of the section for the benefit of "his wife or his wife and children or any of them" if they come within the terms of the section is a complete settlement as from the date of the policy on the wife and children.

Thus although there is no obligation on the husband to pay the premiums becoming due on the policy, the husband could not surrender the policy to the office and receive the surrender value thereof.

Now a wife of a Hindu married man seems to me to be obviously a married woman who or whose husband professes the Hindu religion. And in that view, in my opinion, sec. 2 of the Act, prohibits a Hindu married man from effecting a policy under sec. 6 for the benefit of his wife. I am unable to adopt the view that seems to have been expressed by Tyabji, J., that the policy would be a valid settlement on the children in case of a policy effected by a Hindu, although the wife is excluded by the terms of sec. 2 of the Act.

That view would involve reading into sec. 6 after the words "for the

(1) [1892] 1 Q. B. 147.
(2) I. L. R. 37 Bom. 471 (1913).
(3) 25 M. L. J. 65.

ESHANI DASI v. GOPAL CHANDRA DEY.

benefit of his wife or his wife and children or any of them" the words "in case of a Hindu, etc., for the benefit of his children or any of them." But taking as I do the view that sec. 6 does not authorise a Hindu married man to effect a policy under the terms of the section for the benefit of his wife, it seems clear that sec. 6 does not apply to Hindus and that section stands on the same footing as the other sections of the Act. The view that the Act of 1874 does not apply to Hindus has been laid down more than once in judicial decisions in this country.

I agree with the view expressed by Scott, C. J., in the case of Shankar v. Umabai (2). These 5 Rules ought therefore to be made absolute with costs. We assess the costs in each case at one gold mohur. Let the records be sent down at once.

RICHARDSON, J.—I have come, upon consideration, to the same conclusion.

Section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act (III of 1874) contains the following saving clause :—

"Nothing herein contained applies to any married woman who at the time of her marriage professed the Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist and Sikh or Jaina religion, or whose husband, at the time of such marriage, professed any of these religions."

Sec. 6, so far as it need be quoted, provides that "a policy of insurance effected by any married man on his own life and expressed on the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife or of his wife and children, or any of them, shall enure and be deemed to be a trust for the benefit of his wife, or of his wife and children, or any of them, according to the interest so expressed, and shall not, so long as any object of the trust remains, be subject to the control of the husband or to his creditors, or form part of his estate."

Of the operative sections from 4 to 9 it is admitted that no section with the exception of sec. 6 can possibly apply to a married woman who at the date of her marriage professed the Hindu or any of the other religions specified in the saving clause. Sec. 6 is in Part III and, as already indicated, the only other section in that Part is sec. 5 which relates to policies of insurance effected by married women. That section clearly and admittedly does not apply to a policy taken out by a Hindu wife. It seems very unlikely therefore that sec. 6 should apply to Hindu wives or Hindu marriages or families. The scheme as a whole (including sec. 4 of the Succession Act) appears to be applicable only to marriages between persons governed by the Succession Act. At almost every step the Legislature is thinking of disabilities and inabilities imposed by English law at the time on married women subject to that law—disabilities and inabilities unknown to married women subject to the principal systems of family law prevalent in India. Such women may have their own disabilities and inabilities, but they were never subject to the rules peculiar to the English law on this topic.

But the argument can be carried further. As the Succession Act was passed, its sec. 4 was apparently of universal application. It was not subject to that part of sec. 331, quoted above, regarding the non-applicability of the Act to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist. As the Act stood, sec. 4 applied to all married persons whatever might be their religion. The only restriction was one of time. As already mentioned, it did not "apply to any marriage contracted before" the 1st January 1866. This restriction is also contained in sec. 331 and the form in which it is expressed should be noticed.

(2) I. L. R. 37 Bom. 471 (1913).

ESHANI DASI v. GOPAL CHANDRA DEY.

Now sec. 2 of the Married Women's Property Act (the extent and application section) contains not only the saving clause which has caused the difficulty, but certain other clauses or paragraphs. The last paragraph enacts positively that "the fourth section of the said Indian Succession Act shall not apply, and shall be deemed never to have applied to any marriage, one or both of the parties to which professed at the time of the marriage the Hindu, Muhammadan, Buddhist, Sikh or Jaina religion." This provision, important though it at first sight appears, is not mentioned in the somewhat elaborate preamble. The reason why it was not mentioned is probably that sec. 4 was never intended to apply to Hindu, Muhammadan and Buddhist marriages and had never been treated in practice as applicable to such marriages. It is the only section in a long Act which purports to affect Hindus, Muhammadans and Buddhits. If this result was due to some accidental error or omission in the framing of the saving clauses in sec. 331, it was very natural that the matter should be put right in the Married Women's Property Act. However that may be, if sec. 4 of the Succession Act had continued to be applicable to all married women, there might have been some ground for supposing that one or other of the sections of the Married Women's Property Act would or might have a similar extended application. But when we find Hindu, Muhammadan and Buddhist marriages expressly excluded from the operation of the principal enactment, it is unlikely that any of the supplementary and complementary provisions of the Married Women's Property Act should apply to such marriages. The suggestion that the benefit of sec. 6 of the latter Act was conferred by way of compensation for exclusion from sec. 4 of the former Act is hardly tenable. Reading sec. 6 with all the other provisions, it seems to me clear at least that it does not apply to married women of the specified denominations.

The question is whether this section applies to a policy taken out by a Hindu husband for the benefit of his wife and children.

It is argued that the section refers in terms to a "married man and not to a married woman" which is the expression used in the saving clause in section 2. This is a narrow foundation for the inference that the intention of the Legislature was to exclude sec. 6 from the scope of the saving clause and make it generally applicable to all married women whatever might be their religion. The section speaks not only of a "married man," but of his wife, and a wife is a "married woman." But then it is said, the saving clause at any rate does not extend to children and it would be attributing caprice to the Legislature to suppose that sec. 6 is applicable to the children, but not to the wife of a Hindu husband. It is urged that even at the cost of doing some violence to the language, a construction which has this capricious result must be rejected.

The argument of course, cuts both ways and the better opinion seems to be that when the wife or the husband was a Hindu at the date of the marriage, sec. 6 applies neither to the wife nor to her children.

ESHANI DASI v. GOPAL CHANDRA DEY.

No doubt the peculiar form given to the saving clause creates a difficulty. Nothing in the Act is to apply to a married woman who, or whose husband, at the time of the marriage professed one or other of the religions specified. The saving clause in sec. 331 of the Indian Succession Act is in regard to its actual terms more widely expressed: "The provisions of this Act shall not apply to intestate or testamentary succession to the property of any Hindu, Muhammadan, or Buddhist, the term Hindu including as is now recognised Jainas and Sikhs." It may be that the title of Act III of 1874, the Married Women's Property Act, has something to do with the way in which the saving clause is drawn. But apart from that, the Act must be read with reference to the object which it had in view and it must be read as a whole. It must also be read with sec. 4 of the Indian Succession Act. That section is the principal enactment to which the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act are supplementary and subsidiary.

Sec. 4 of the Indian Succession Act runs thus :—"No person shall by marriage acquire any interest in the property of the person whom he or she marries, nor become incapable of doing any act in respect of his or her own property which he or she could have done if unmarried."

Now, as appears from the preamble, the purpose of the Married Women's Property Act was two-fold. It aimed, firstly, at extending the protection afforded to women by sec. 4 of the Succession Act and, secondly, to put it briefly, at extending in certain ways the liability of married women for their debts incurred before or after marriage. The extension of their liabilities was a necessary or reasonable complement to their enlarged rights of property. The first of these two objects which the Legislature had in view was carried out in Parts II and III of the Act, headed respectively "Married Women's Wages and Earnings" and "Insurances by Wives and Husbands." Part II consists of one section, sec. 4, which in effect extends the protection of sec. 4 of the Succession Act which applied only to marriages contracted on or after the 1st January 1866 to the Wages and Earnings of women married before the 1st January 1866. Part III comprises secs. 5 and 6 which make provisions for insurances on lives by persons married before or after the same date. The second object is carried out by Part IV containing secs. 7 and 8 and headed "Legal Proceedings by and against Married Women" and by Part V containing sec. 9 and headed "Husband's Liability for Wife's Debts."

This is the whole of the Act with the exception of certain paragraphs in sec. 2 to which I have not yet referred. Sec. 1 gives the short title, and sec. 3, a commencement clause, has been repealed.

As to the power given by sec. 2 to the Governor-General in Council to exempt the members of any race, sect or tribe from the operation of all or any of the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, it has been suggested that the existence of that power enables the Governor-General in Council, if necessary, to take Hindus, Muhammadans and Buddhists out of the operation of sec. 6 and is therefore an indication that primâ facie they come within the section. It is obvious however that this provision, like the corresponding provision in sec. 332 of the Succession Act, was never intended to apply to members of the Hindu, Muhammadan and Buddhist communities

ESHANI DASI v. GOPAL CHANDRA DEY.

In both Acts these communities are specially dealt with by special saving clauses and the Governor-General in Council has in regard to them no power either of exemption or inclusion. The terms "race," "sect" and "tribe" are used with reference to communities which cannot be described as Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist, such as communities of Indian Christians, the Jewish community in Aden, hill tribes and others. No argument either way can therefore be drawn from the existence of this power of exemption. The extent to which Hindus, Muhammadans and Buddhists are affected or excluded depends on the special clauses relating to them and not on the power given to the Governor-General in Council in regard to other communities.

If it be taken as established that sec. 6 of the Married Women's Property Act does not apply to wives who come within the words of the saving clause, it would be an anomalous state of things if the sections were found to apply to the children of such wives. If the words of the Act are so plain that no other construction is reasonably possible, the anomaly must be accepted and effect must be given to the language which the Legislature has chosen to employ. But if that language is of doubtful import, the most reasonable construction of which it is fairly capable ought to be adopted. No doubt, children are not mentioned in the saving clause, but in the case of the exempted religions both parents are excluded from the operation of the principal enactment. With the possible exception of sec. 6 neither parent is affected by anything in the Married Women's Property Act and sec. 6 does not apply to the mother. Regard being had to the whole scope of the legislation it is evident that the Legislature was dealing with the legal aspects of marriage of a particular kind, namely, marriages between persons subject to the Succession Act. The reference to children in sec. 6 is quite incidental and in my opinion the only children contemplated by sec. 6 are children born of marriages of the kind to which the rest of the Act relates. This conclusion is strengthened by the difficulties which would attend the application of the section to the children of Hindu, Buddhist, or Muhammadan marriages. Take the case of the married daughter. She is a married woman and would come within the words of the saving clause. Take the case of a policy effected by a Hindu for the benefit of children unborn at the date of the policy.

The result in my opinion is that sec. 6 does not apply to the policy before us and the money due upon it forms part of the estate of the assured : Oriental v. Vanteddu (4), Shankar v. Umabai (2). I concur in the order proposed.

Rule made absolute.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE NO. 284 OF 1914.

COXE, J.
BEACHCROFT, J.
1914,
28, May.

RATAN CHAND DHARAM CHAND Plaintiff, Petitioner,
v.
THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, and another, Defendants, Opposite Parties.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 80, Or. 7, r. 11 (d)—Secretary of State for India in Council, suit against—Notice to "Collector" means notice to Collector of District in which suit instituted—Suit for damages for breach of

(2) I. L. R. 37 Bom. 471 (1913).
(4) I. L. R. 35 Mad. 162 (1911).

RATAN CHAND DHARAM CHAND v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

contract, notice if necessary of—Defective notice, suit if to be dismissed or plaint only to be rejected —Appearance of Defendant if precludes latter—Defendant taking exception to Court's jurisdiction if acquiesces in trial if he does not apply for transfer.

The notice contemplated in sec. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code must be served on the Collector or one of the Collectors of the District in which the suit is to be brought.

A suit brought in the Court at Sealdah, after notice served on the Collector of Purneah, is not in compliance with sec. 80, C. P. C.

Such a notice is required even in a case arising out of a contract.

MANINDRA CHANDRA NANDI v SECRETARY OF STATE (1) followed.

SECRETARY OF STATE v. RAJLUKCI (2) referred to.

Where it was stated in the plaint that notice under sec. 80, C. P. C, had been duly served, but after Defendant had entered appearance it was discovered that the notice had not been duly served

Held—That it was too late to reject the plaint under Or. 7, r. 11; and that there was also no statement in the plaint which suggested that the suit was barred.

A Defendant who takes exception to the jurisdiction of the Court is not bound to apply for a transfer of the suit to the proper Court, and does not acquiesce in the trial of the suit by not so applying.

This was a Rule granted on the 2nd of March 1914 against an order of the Small Cause Court Judge of Sealdah, dated the 15th December 1913.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

(1) 5 C. L. J. 148 (1907).
(2) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 239 (1897).

Babu Probodh Chandra Roy, for the Petitioner.

Babus Ram Charan Mitter, Mohendra Nath Roy and Ambika Pada Chowdhury for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

COXE, J.—The Plaintiff in this case sued for damages on the allegation that he had booked 44 bales of cotton at a station in the E. B. S. Ry. in the Purneah district for transmission to Howrah and that 40 bales only were delivered. He made the Secretary of State the first Defendant as representative of the E. B. S. Ry. and the E. I. R. Co. the second Defendant. The suit has been dismissed. The Plaintiff has obtained this Rule on the Defendants to show cause why the order of dismissal should not be set aside.

The Rule must, I think, be discharged. The suit was brought at Sealdah, though the cause of action arose partly in Purneah but mainly at Howrah, and the place of business of the second Defendant is at Howrah. The Small Cause Court Judge has held that the suit must fail against the 1st Defendant, because no notice was served in accordance with sec. 80 of the Code. A notice was served on the Collector of Purneah, but the suit was not instituted at Purneah and reading sec. 80 as a whole I think the term "district" must mean the district in which the suit is instituted and that the notice must be given to the Collector or to one of the Collectors of that district.

It has been argued that no notice is necessary in cases arising out of contract and reference has been made to the case of Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secretary of State (1).

(1) 5 C. L. J. 148 (1907).

The terms of the section, however, as they stand seem to me to show that notice is necessary in every case and this is the view taken in Secretary of State v. Rajlucki (2) from which the decision in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Secretary of State (1) does not dissent.

Then finally it was argued that the suit ought not to have been dismissed, but the plaint should have been rejected under O. 7, r. 11 (d). That Rule obviously has no application, for there was no statement in the plaint which suggested that the suit was barred. On the contrary it was specifically stated that notice under sec. 80 had been served on the "Collector" without specifying the district. The defect was not discovered till after the Defendants had entered appearance and it was then too late to reject the plaint.

As against the 2nd Defendant the suit has been dismissed on the ground that the Court had no jurisdiction. This view is evidently right. The 2nd Defendant objected at once to the jurisdiction. It is argued that as he did not apply for a transfer, he must be taken to have acquiesced in the trial of the suit at Sealdah. I dissent altogether from this contention. So it was the duty of the Plaintiff when this substantial objection was taken to take the necessary steps to meet it and the Defendant was not in any way bound to have the defect that he had pointed out cured for the Plaintiff's benefit.

A suit at Sealdah based on a notice to the Collector of Purneah and on a cause of action arising mainly at Howrah against Defendants one of whom carries on business at Howrah seems to me wholly untenable. I think, this suit was rightly dismissed and would discharge the Rule with costs. I assess the hearing fee at 1 gold mohur for each Defendant.

BEACHCROFT, J.—I agree.

Rule made absolute.

(1) 5 C. L. J. 148 (1907).
(2) I. L. R. 25 Cal. 289 (1897).

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.

REV. No. 1156 OF 1914.

SHARFUDDIN, J. TEUNON, J. 1914, 12, August.	BIRENDRA NATH DAS-GUPTA, Petitioner, v. THE EMPEROR, Opposite Party.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 193—Order to prosecute—Case pending before Court of Session—Alleged perjury—Propriety of prosecution by Committing Magistrate.

Where a Committing Magistrate had ordered the prosecution of a witness under sec. 193, Indian Penal Code, while the case in which he had deposed was pending before the Court of Sessions, the High Court set aside the order.

The impropriety of taking proceedings against a witness while the case is still pending commented on.

This was a Rule granted on the 6th July 1914 against an order of Babu Hara Chandra Ghose, Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail, Jessore, dated the 15th June 1914, directing the prosecution of the Petitioner for perjury.

The facts of the case appearing from the petition to the High Court were as follows:—

The Petitioner who lived with his father and brothers had a dispute with certain co-sharers. On the night of the 12th March 1914 there was a fight between the two parties. Later on the same night, the Police raided the Petitioner's house and gave a severe beating to him and to his father. In the early hours of the morning the Petitioner laid an information at the thana, and as his father was lying mortally wounded, he came away without reading over the statement recorded by the Police-officer. His father died the same day. Subsequently, the Petitioner came to learn that in the statement as recorded by the Police, it had been made to appear that his father had been wounded by the co-sharers and not by the Police. He thereupon made two petitions before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate pointing out the error and he was examined on oath by the Magistrate. Subsequently, the Police treating the statement of the Petitioner as recorded by the Police as the first information started a case of culpable homicide against the co-sharers. In that case, the Petitioner was examined as a witness before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 18th May 1914. After the deposition had been taken down, while other witnesses were being examined, the Petitioner was taken to another room by the Peshkar of the Court who read over the statement to the Petitioner. Subsequently the Magistrate committed the case to the Sessions and on the 15th June 1914 purporting to act under sec. 476, Cr. P. C., he ordered the prosecution of the Petitioner for perjury inasmuch as his statements in Court were inconsistent with those taken down in the first information. Thereupon the Petitioner moved the High Court and obtained the present Rule on the grounds—(vi) that the deposition not having been lawfully read over to him, no prosecution under sec. 193, I. P. C., could be had and (ix) that no prosecution could be ordered till the disposal of the case in the Court of Session.

BIRENDRA NATH DAS-GUPTA v. THE EMPEROR.

The District Magistrate, Mr. R. C. Hamilton, submitted an explanation in the course of which he stated as follows :—

"The object of petitioner's making such deliberately false allegation is obvious; his legal advisers wishing to make his case appear to be on all fours with the case of Kamatchinathan Chetty v. Emperor (1), put him up to make, at no risk to himself or them, an intentionally false affidavit alleging that the same circumstances or events took place in this particular case as in that case."

Babu Narendra Kumar Basu for the Petitioner.—The District Magistrate in his explanation has permitted himself to use language which no one in his position ought to use. He has made an attack on members of the profession in a document which he knows cannot be used against him. He has made a statement which is not supported by facts.

[TEUNON, J.—Has the case terminated at the Sessions?]

Yes. The Petitioner virtually repeated the statements there and the jury in accordance therewith has found the accused persons "not guilty" and the Judge agreeing has acquitted them.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this case it appears that one Birendra Nath Das-Gupta, the Petitioner before us, was examined as a witness in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Narail on the prosecution of one Rasiklal Das-Gupta and others on charges relating to the death of the Petitioner's father Parbati Nath Das-Gupta. The accused in that case were committed to take their trial before the Court of the Sessions Judge. While the case was still pending in the Court of Session the Sub-

(1) I. L. R. 28 Mad. 308 (1904).

BIRENDRA NATH DAS-GUPTA v. THE EMPEROR.

Divisional Magistrate of Narail directed the prosecution of the Petitioner under sec 193, I. P. C., with reference to a certain statement made by him in the course of his deposition. These statements refer to the first information which he had lodged before the Police in the case and in them he alleged that the Sub-Inspector who took his first information recorded it incorrectly. He thereupon moved this Court and obtained the present Rule calling upon the District Magistrate of Jessore to show cause why the order directing his prosecution should not be set aside. We granted the Rule mainly on the ground that the case in which he had deposed was still pending in the Sessions Court. No one appears to show cause, but the District Magistrate has submitted an explanation in which he says that the point at issue, namely, whether the substance of the information has been correctly recorded by the Sub-Inspector is comparatively so little connected with the charge of causing death now before the Court of Session that it is unnecessary to await the result of the trial. We are unable to take this view. It is clear that the question whether the first information in the case has been correctly recorded is necessarily one of great importance at the trial and in any case the impropriety of taking proceedings against a witness while the case is still pending cannot be too strongly insisted upon.

For these reasons we make the Rule absolute and set aside the order directing the prosecution of the Petitioner. If he repeated the statements alleged to be false before the Sessions Judge it will be for the Sessions Judge to consider whether or no his prosecution is advisable.

In conclusion we have further to observe with regret that in his explanation in dealing with the 6th ground set out in the Petitioner's application the District Magistrate has used language of unnecessary and unbecoming violence, and that his aspersions on the legal advisers of the Petitioner, obviously made on no material, are highly improper. We trust that we shall have no occasion to repeat this censure.

C. C. B. Rule made absolute.

[END OF VOL. XVIII.